"Most of the civilian population in this section of the country knows who those bandits are and where they live; I myself know most of them and we all know that the authorities know, yet there is no real attempt made to punish them.

"I have lost altogether 24 horses and 9 cows, together with growing crops and household goods, hogs, and chickens. But my greatest loss is in being deprived of the privilege of living at home and farming my land."

The following is a synopsis of a statement made to me by Mr. P., an American citizen born at Waring, Tex., who has lived in Mexico over three years, most of the time farming.

For the past three years has farmed near Isasi, Tamaulipas. There are several thousand acres in the hacienda, 600 acres of which are in cultivation and under irrigation. Crops have been very good during most of the time Mr. P. has farmed the hacienda and he has raised an average of five carloads of corn for the market over the amount required to feed the stock on the ranch; in addition to which he had been raising a few hogs and cattle.

On October 29, 1918, bandits numbering about 40 came to the ranch and robbed Mr. P. of 812 pesos in money, took all household goods and provisions—even taking the blankets covering three corpses of Mexicans on the ranch who had died of the "flu"—took the clothing away from those sick at that time, took 21 mules and 1 horse, some corn. These bandits were led by Francisco Medrano and Hilario Medina.

At other times Mr. P. has lost small amounts of corn by Mexican tenants of adjoining ranches coming boldly into his field in daylight and loading his corn on burros and carrying it away. On his complaining to the local authorities in one instance four of these thieves were arrested and taken to Victoria, Tamaulipas, for trial, but the man whose tenants they were happened to be a friend of Gov. Osuna, and he had them released and they came back to the ranch and have openly threatened revenge for his having them arrested. Mr. P. is one of the Americans between Tampico and Victoria, Tamaulipas, where at the beginning of the revolution there were several prosperous colonies of Americans. Mr. P. says that it is impossible to get cars to ship produce in by freight but the Government will furnish the cars if ordered at express rates. It costs 150 pesos to ship by freight as against 300 pesos for express to Tampico, from Isasi.

Mr. P. states that the Carrancista soldiers will not tender the Americans any protection against bandits for when appealed to, they say that their duty is to guard the railway stations. And occasionally when the Carrancistas hear of the bandits having a lot of cattle and horses which they have stolen of the various ranchers both foreign and Mexican, they will make up an expedition against the bandits who are usually easily separated from their booty, which then becomes the property of the Carrancistas as the spoils of war they call it. If the rightful owner demands his mule or horse or cow he may have the same by buying it back from the Carrancistas.

Owing to the bandits making threats against the farmers that they will be made to suffer if they complain to the authorities, and if they do not furnish money in many instances when it has been demanded of them, Mr. P. said that he thought he would leave the hacienda at once.

Mr. Q. made the following statement to me:

"I was born in West Virginia, and am an American citizen, 68 years of age. Have been in Mexico since 1901, and with the exception of a few months have lived on my farm of about 65 acres, one-half of which is in oranges. Some of my Mexican employees have been in my employ for many years, which indicates that my treatment of them has been kind and just and satisfactory to them. On December 20, while returning from town in my buggy to my ranch at about 4 p. m., I was halted by a Mexican, armed with a revolver and a knife. The bandit surprised me by appearing suddenly out of the brush which fringes the road, and halted me with the word 'Expedite.' I stopped the mule and inquired what he wanted. He replied, 'Your money,' which demand I complied with as quickly as possible because of the fact that he had his revolver pointed at me and was so close that he could reach his hand out and receive the money which I tendered him. I never argued the question of giving up my money or gave him the least cause for injuring me. Nevertheless he threatened me with his knife repeatedly and appeared about to stab me. While I was being robbed the mule had entangled one of the lines, and as soon as the Mexican stepped away from the buggy and ordered me to drive on I stepped from the buggy; the bandit fired one shot at me, while my back was turned from him, the bullet striking me in the fleshy part of the calf of my leg. I judged the revolver to be of .38 caliber, and as the bullet did not disable me at once, I scrambled into the buggy as the bandit ordered me, to drive on toward home.

"When I had driven about 25 yards I noticed that the wound was bleeding so freely that I turned across the road and looked back to where the bandit was standing and called to him, saying in Spanish, 'Man, you have killed me. Permit me to go back to town to see a doctor.' He ran toward me calling me vile names and brandishing his knife at the same time, threatening to kill me if I did not go on toward home. I made haste to comply before he reached the buggy again and drove slowly up the road for about 300 yards until I felt sure that the bandit had left the road for the brush which grows heavily on both sides. As soon as I estimated that he had returned far enough into the brush to make it reasonably sure that I could pass without being mistreated, I turned the mule back toward town and drove as quickly as possible to secure medical attention. As soon as I reached town I took a launch for Tampico, and arriving at the fiscal wharf at Tampico I was carried ashore by two United States sailors by the name of Floyd and Elmore from the United States ship Niagara, which is stationed in the Panuco River. The sailors carried me to a carriage, as my leg had become so stiff from the wound that I could not use it. I drove to the hotel where I summoned a doctor who gave me treatment and made me as comfortable as possible.

"About two hours after my arrival at the hotel, at about 8 o'clock, to be exact, the judge of the first instance and his secretary came and asked me for a detailed statement of the robbery, which I gave him, with the request that no mention be made of it by the newspapers, and he assured me that my wishes would be respected. It is here noted that the detailed account of the holdup was published in the local press the following day, which article placed the blame on me by saying that I should have been armed, which as all Americans know is not possible unless you secure a special permit, which special permit is not always recognized by the Carranza soldiers, as they frequently disarm foreigners who have permits to carry weapons. The paper went on to say that I was to blame in that I should have had a revolver and should have fired it twice in the air to frighten the bandit so he would not have robbed me. The press did not charge any blame to the bandit nor to the Carranza soldiers, who made no effort to apprehend him. In response to my request the American consul, Claude I. Dawson, sent a young man from his office to get a statement of my adventure. In conclusion, I would say that the suffering and indignities we American colonists are enduring is far harder to bear than the loss of property. The amount of money secured from me by the bandit was only about $30. We have enough property, if we were unmolested, to support us very comfortably here in Mexico; but owing to the troublesome state of affairs we would not be able to dispose of our property for anything near its value, and if we return to the States to live we feel sure that our property would soon be entirely destroyed, as it is only by constant effort that we have prevented it from being devastated so far."

Mr. Don D. Morehead made the following statement to me:

"I was born in Boise, Idaho, October 20, 1895, and came to Mexico in 1908, and have been in Mexico ever since except for two trips to the United States. The first five years in Mexico were in peace and we were getting along finely and we were respected and thought well of by the Mexicans, but in 1914, when the revolution was at its worst, the Mexican Federals treated us just as usual, but the Carrancista soldiers were robbing houses and stealing our property so we decided to go to Panuco to work with our mules on the new railroad which was being built there. We reached Ebano on the day that the United States troops captured Vera Cruz. There the Federal troops confiscated our outfit and we went by train from Ebano to Tampico, being shanghaied out of Tampico with other Americans and landed at Galveston.

"We returned to Mexico after three months and found our ranch of the Atascader in very bad shape, owing to the depredations committed by the Carrancistas in our absence. Through many difficulties we remained on our ranch until the Pershing expedition entered Mexico, when we were told by friendly natives that the United States was at war with Mexico and that all Americans would be killed. We organized a force of Americans from the colony and hid out in the mountains for about six weeks, during which time the Carrancistas robbed the property of the Americans of all that they desired. Several times we were fired upon by the Carrancistas when we were passing back and forth from the settlement to the mountains. We were told by friendly Mexicans that the object of Carrancista soldiers was to run all of the Americans out of Mexico and confiscate their property. In this they were very successful, for a great many of the colonists had been so robbed and mistreated that they had returned to the United States, deserting all their property to the Mexicans.

"Gen. Manuel Larraga has been the commander of the Carrancista forces at Guerrero, State of San Luis Potosi, for several years and, while not actively participating in the robberies of the Americans in the colonies between San Luis Potosi and Tampico, has been responsible for the execution of the majority of the deeds of violence which have been committed on the colonists in that vicinity. Men under his command would steal cattle from the colonists on the Atascador and sell them to Gen. Larraga, who in turn would ship them to market, knowing all the time that they were the cattle of the colonists in the Atascador and other American settlements. He was also responsible for the murder of Lincoln Weider and Peter Catron, for the men who committed these murders were under his protection and it was due to his influence that they were not apprehended and punished for their crimes. One night in November, 1917, Lincoln Weider was returning from Guerrero to his ranch and he was killed from ambush, as was also a Mexican employee with him. Both were shot in the back and their persons robbed of all valuables. The primary object of the murder of Lincoln Weider was to put him out of the way, so that they could steal his cattle. We found the bodies of Weider and his Mexican employee the day after they were murdered and gave them burial. We found out later that the murder was committed by cow-punchers, in the employe of Manuel Larraga, whose names are Cecilio Roque, Inez Baron, Camilo Martinez, Alberto Rodriguez, Masema Nava, and Eulalio Nava. They were the employees of Manuel Larraga, and had made repeated threats that they were going to kill all the Americans on the Atascador.

"At that time, November, 1917, a few American friends and I were about the only Americans left on the Atascador and we gathered what cattle belonging to us that we could find and left them in charge of a Mexican by the name of Torivio Ordonez who was very trustworthy. Torivio Ordonez had lived on our place about six months when the same bunch of bandits aforementioned as having killed Lincoln Weider came and took our cattle by order of General Larraga, they said, and then returned again about two weeks later and executed the Mexican whom we had left in charge of our stock, also robbing the place of everything we had left in charge of our employee. Our property is now being occupied by Carranza soldiers under orders of Maj. Pedro Sumideo, who is said to have ordered the killing of our Mexican employe, Torivio Ordonez.

"After leaving our property in 1917, a friend and myself went to work for Jones and Cowan, American ranchers of San Luis Potosi, working on their sugar plantation. Here we were unmolested for a time, but in 1918, bandits under Cedilio Brothers came and robbed the place. The first occasion they did not commit many outrages, but on the second event they killed seven Mexican workmen and one woman, and outraged many of the Mexican women on the plantation. They burned the houses and stripped the clothes from the dead as well as the living. They also took every other article of property which could be carried away with them and burned many of the houses and improvements. My friend and I were shot at several times but luckily escaped to the mountains. The situation had become so perilous here that we went to Tampico and sought employment.

"Since taking employment in the oil fields at Tepetate I have experienced very good treatment from the forces of Manuel Pelaez, the revolutionist who controls part of the country in which the oil wells are located. I have worked two years in the Tepetate and Chinampa fields and find that the forces of Pelaez treat foreigners very well, while the Carranza soldiers who are stationed in and about the fields in the same place, are very impudent and insulting. The officers of the Carrancista soldiers often get drunk and commit many offenses against Americans and other foreigners, and there is no power to restrain their unlawful acts. I still own property in the Atascador colony but the land itself is practically all that is left, most of the improvements having been burned and all the personal property carried away."

Since making this statement Mr. Moorehead died of typhoid fever and is therefore safe from reprisal.

Mr. R. made the following statement to me:

"I am an American citizen: born in Coryell County, Tex., May 27, 1886; come to Mexico in December, 1904; locating in the Chamal Colony, State of Tamaulipas. From 1904 until 1912 the colony lived in a state of peace and grew very prosperous until the revolution broke out in the State of Tamaulipas, as it had already been raging in other parts of Mexico. After the United States entered Vera Cruz a number of American women and children were taken to the mountains and hidden by the men of Chamal Colony to protect them from the hordes of Carrancista soldiers who were pillaging the settlements in our vicinity and committing many atrocities on Mexicans and foreigners alike.

"I was among others of the American colonists who did not have time to reach the United States after conditions became bad, so about the middle of May, 1914, a number of us hid out in the mountains for about 20 days, until the American consul sent a messenger to locate us and insist that we bring the women and children to Tampico to be removed from Mexico or get them out of danger of execution by the Mexicans.

Foreigners were being arrested by the Carrancistas wherever they could be found and their property confiscated, and in many cases the Americans were threatened with death in order to make them give up their property willingly.

"After most of the other American colonists had left Chamal Colony I went to work in Tamaulipas. During the time I worked the above ranch it was raided by bandits, who looted the property and robbed us of all clothing and other valuables which they could carry away. These same bandits surrendered to the Carranza forces at Tampico shortly after the robbery and looting of the above property and their chief, Fabion Aguilar, was granted amnesty for the entire band by the Carranza Government and Aguilar was commissioned a colonel in the Carrancista army and is now located at Tampico, where he is in possession of many cattle, horses, and mules, and other property stolen from the colonists of Chamal Colony and other colonies in that vicinity. When asked for the return of the property stolen by him the Carrancista general in charge at Tampico has told several Americans that the property in question could not be returned because Aguilar had been granted amnesty for all of his acts. Therefore they could not prosecute him or get the property returned.

"In August, 1919, I was taken prisoner by a bunch of bandits about three miles from the ranch and held prisoner for about half a day, during which time the bandits stood me up to shoot me several times, and once selected a tree from which to hang me. They robbed me of my horse and forced me to lead them to the ranch so they could enter the property without giving alarm to the other employees there. They then robbed the property of all provisions and clothing, harness, and saddles, and took five horses to carry away their loot.

"In October, 1919, I was sent to Victoria, Tamaulipas, to receive a bunch of mules. In the road we met a number of Carrancista soldiers, who intercepted some of my Mexican helpers, beat them with their guns and lariat ropes, and scattered the mules into the woods. One of them also attempted to beat me with his rope, but I told him not to, and caught his rope when he struck at me and pulled it away from him. The Carrancista officer, for this is what he proved to be, then drew his sword to strike me. I caught his hand holding the sword and dragged him from his horse and finally dropped him on the ground and, spurring my mule, escaped from him. When I encountered the balance of the band of soldiers, who were a little farther along the road, I asked for their commanding officer and they told me that this was a bad place for an American and that I had better go. We escaped from their hands, gathered up the mules again, and finally arrived safely at the ranch, but the above incident shows how much ill-treated Americans suffer at the hands of the Carranza soldiers even though they give no offense and are going about their business peaceably and lawfully.

"Owing to having been through so many scrapes like the one recited on the ranch, I have finally decided to quit working as I find it too dangerous to remain longer in that part of the country. Conditions since 1913 have been such that I have risked my life many times at the hands of both the Carranza soldiers and other bandits not operating directly under their command."

Mr. S. made the following statement to me:

"In writing this article on the taking and looting of the city of Valles, State of San Luis Potosi, and the horrible deeds which were perpetrated on that day and for several months thereafter, nothing that occurred will be exaggerated or set down in malice. The incidents that will be narrated passed under the personal observation of the writer, or were related to him by reliable witnesses.

"The conditions described herein are not peculiar to the District of Valles, being in fact general all over the Republic, for almost every hamlet, town, and city has passed and is passing through the same experience, many villages having a population of several hundred people having been entirely blotted from the face of the earth during the past six years.

"The writer has left Mexico with the intention of not returning until the reign of anarchy now prevalent over practically the whole of Mexico is a thing of the past.

"In order to get the right perspective it is necessary to state that Valles is one of the oldest established towns in Mexico, existing long before the Spanish conquest, for it is a matter of record that when the Spaniards arrived there they found an Indian town of considerable importance, and when Don Joseph de Escandon, described in the old records as 'Count of the Sierra Gorda, Knight of the Order of St. James, Colonel of the Regiment of Queretaro, Lieutenant of the Captain General of the Sierra Gorda,' arrived there in 1748 he established a mission and had constructed there a church in order to convert the Indians from their pagan gods to the Christian religion.

"At the outbreak of the Madero revolution in 1910 the city had about 2,500 people and had the distinction of containing on its tax list the largest number of names of American property holders of any city in the Republic of Mexico, there being located within its limits the American colonies of Atascador, San Dieguito, and Los Platanos.

"Lands in this district, with but few exceptions, were not held in large tracts, and it was indeed a rarity to find in the city itself anyone living in a house not owned by the occupant.

"The people were law-abiding and prosperous. Politics did not trouble them and the authorities were elected annually from among the best people in the town and surrounding country, the only difficulty experienced being the reluctance of the best men to take office.

"The Madero revolution attracted but little attention, and did no damage to the city or any of the outlying villages.

"In February, 1913, Severo Oyarvide, a well-to-do cattleman, while traveling on the public highway accompanied by Roman Larraga, encountered one Manuel Larraga, nephew of the aforementioned Roman, and in a shooting scrape which occurred Oyarvide was killed and Roman Larraga wounded. This quarrel had its origin in politics, Manuel Larraga having been an adherent of Madero during the political campaign of 1910, and the other two favoring the reelection of Porfirio Diaz. After the killing of Oyarvide, Manuel Larraga hid out in the brush, and the downfall of the Madero government occurring a few days afterwards, he was enabled to collect together a few adherents, and in order to avoid standing trial for the killing of Oyarvide, rose in arms against the government of Huerta. His following, however, was so scant that outside of making traveling hazardous some 20 miles from the city and compelling the payment of tribute from a few sugar plantations, no damage was done until late in the year, when the burning of ranches belonging to those of other political faiths became general.

"Political conditions in the surrounding country in the early part of 1914 became unsettled, largely on account of the work of propagandists of the Carrancista revolutionists among the Huasteco Indians, of whom several thousand lived in the mountains some distance from the city.

"In March, 1914, the town was alarmed by reports that a large body of revolutionists were within a few miles of the city, but the citizens were reassured in a day or two by the news that they had passed going towards the North.

"On Easter Sunday, April 12, at 4 o'clock in the morning, the city was rudely awakened by the firing of thousands of rifles, the rattle of machine guns and by yells bursting from thousands of throats of Viva Carranza, Viva Villa, Viva Zapata, Viva la Revolucion, and the alarmed citizens jumped from their beds and saw with horror that the outskirts of the town were in flames.

"The small garrison consisting of some 30 Federal troops, put up some resistance, but seeing that they were outnumbered 100 to 1, sought safety in flight.

"The everadvancing path of the revolutionists was plainly evidenced by the burning of more and more houses, the occupants in most cases having taken to the gardens surrounding their houses.

"The dismay of these industrious citizens as lying on the ground surrounded by screaming women, and crying children and momentarily expecting death, they saw the destruction of their homes, built by the toil of many years, and in many cases the houses laboriously erected by their own hands, may be better imagined than described.

"By daylight the Carrancistas were in undisputed possession of the city, the only point held by the Federals being the railroad station, some 2 miles from the city proper. Here there were some 20 Jucheteco Indians from the State of Oaxaca, who had been stationed there to protect the building and neighboring bridges. These 20 Indians defended the station from 4 o'clock until 10 o'clock in the morning and then retired in good order, their ammunition having become exhausted. This was the only place where the revolutionists suffered any casualties. As soon as the Indians retired the Carrancistas set fire to the station and all surrounding houses, including the cottage built in modern style and owned by an American, the owner barely escaping being shot on account of having been accused of giving one of the Indian soldiers a glass of water a few days previously.

"In the meantime the city of Valles had been given up to pillage. Stores, large and small, irrespective of the political affiliations of the owners, were broken into and the shelves left bare.

"Neither were private residences respected, for orders had been given to the soldiers to burst open the doors of any residence found closed, and anything found therein was to be considered common property.

"The working classes of the city were invited to take part in the looting, refusal to do so being considered as evidence of nonsympathy with the revolution.

"The judge of the county court, Lawyer Estevan Ruiz, was taken from his home, marched to the church square, and shot without any semblance of trial. This man had a wife and four children, who followed him to the place of execution, begging and pleading for the life of their husband and father. But all in vain. Just before the execution the wife broke through the cordon of soldiers, and threw herself into the arms of her husband for a last embrace, but a voice of command rang out: 'Take away that woman!' then a brief silence broken by a volley, a woman's scream, and again silence for the newly made widow had fainted. Then again a voice rang out: 'There lies a man who lived like a pig and has died like a hog. He served the usurper. When Huerta, the man he loved to serve, killed Madero, his widow wept over the dead body. Let this widow now weep over the corpse of her husband.'

"A few hours afterwards two boys, neither of whom had passed the age of 18 years, were marched to the same spot and executed. Their offense was that they had been policemen in Valles.

"When the town was attacked several citizens attempted to escape to the surrounding country, some succeeding and others not. Among the latter was a man of the name of Manuel Rodriguez, who owned a small ranch in the neighborhood. This man a few days previous had written a letter to his nephew in Tampico, stating that it was rumored that an attack would soon be made on Valles, but that he did not believe it would take place, as he doubted that the Carrancistas had the courage. This letter was found in his possession when captured, and he was thrown into prison. Some of his friends learning of his plight went to see Gens. Milan and Galindo, commanding the Carrancista herds, and were told that Rodriguez would be shot at sundown, but on their plea for clemency it was finally decided that he should be tried by court-martial the next day. The next morning after several of his friends had interceded for him, testifying to his good character, his aloofness from politics, and the fact that he was the principal support of two widowed sisters and of a nephew of tender age, it was decreed that his life should be spared if he would join the Carrancista forces. This man was physically unfit to be a soldier, being almost blind, but the so-called military judges were inexorable, and Rodriguez signified his assent as the only alternative to save his life.

"The sheriff of the county, an old man of over 60 years of age, was discovered in hiding on Monday, and his case was tried immediately after that of Rodriguez. This man had several witnesses to prove that he had often befriended men of well-known Carrancista tendencies and had in effect often done so to his own detriment. He was given the same alternative as Rodriguez—join the revolutionists or be shot. He also signified his assent to impressment into the ranks.

"These two men were taken next day to the town of Guerrero, some 20 miles distant, and both shot, it having been discovered that the one was too blind, and the other too old, to be soldiers. Their graves are on the banks of the River Tamuin, the man ordering their execution, Gen. Augustin Milan, is now governor of the State of Mexico.

"One of the first acts of the Carrancistas after the capture of the town was setting free the prisoners found in the jail. This was the settled policy of these people, as thereby they gained many adherents among the criminal class, as thugs, murderers, and thieves were valuable adjuncts and especially suited for the work in hand.

"At this time there was a man in jail of the name of Venustiano Gonzalez. This man in his early manhood had been sentenced to death for robbing and murdering a messenger carrying money from Valles to Tancanhuitz, but his sentence had been commuted to seven years' hard labor in the penitentiary, which he had served. In 1910 he had been accused of the murder of an old man, who opposed his marrying his daughter. When the Madero revolution triumphed Gonzalez had been set at liberty by the Maderistas, but the case had never been definitely tried and legally was still pending. This man having friends in the Madero government decided that it was a good time to bring the case up and consequently came to Valles from San Luis Potosi, where he had been set at liberty, and with a good deal of braggadocio asked to be tried. But the plans of men and mice aft gang a-gee, for before the trial came off the Madero government fell, and he found himself again in jail, with an excellent prospect of justice being done, which of course was the last thing he desired, there being no doubt of his guilt, in fact one of his accomplices before the act having turned State's evidence. This man, upon the taking of the town, was set at liberty and was very insistent upon the necessity of the execution of the judge. He was made a captain in recognition of his zeal for the cause.

"Lieut. Defoe, of the Federal army, was wounded during the attack on the town, but managed to get into the brush, where he stayed all that day and the following night, but being delirious with fever from his wound, on Monday he crawled out upon the roadway, and was discovered by Capt. Lucio Blanco of the Carrancista army, who challenged him with the usual cry of "Quien Vive?" The young lieutenant, in his delirium, answered Huerta, and without more ado Blanco placed his revolver against Defoe's temple and scattered his brains over the greensward. Blanco afterwards boasted of this act as a great deed. The fact that he did so shoot Defoe was corroborated by an American who happened to be present when the murder was committed.

"On Monday the Carrancista officials ordered all records of the courthouse, including criminal and civil cases, records of deeds, etc., brought out in front of the court and burned.

"While the town was being looted the generals in command called a meeting of the most prominent citizens, and told them they had to deliver to him by 4 o'clock that afternoon 16,000 pesos, as their contribution for the furtherance of the cause. By 2 o'clock that afternoon 10,000 pesos had been collected, and the committee then waited upon Gen. Galindo who had charge of this particular branch, to inform him that they could not collect any more. Gen. Galindo replied that before taking the town he had been under the impression it was a much larger place than it really was, and he had thought of levying a forced loan of 100,000 pesos, and he considered he was doing the town a special favor by only demanding 16,000 pesos.

"He had secured a list of all the well-to-do people, and asked why a certain widow lady whose name was on his list had not subscribed. Upon being told that she had not been solicited on account of her widowed state he replied, 'Put her down for 1,000 pesos, and tell her that if she does not pay by 4 o'clock I will turn her over to my soldiers.' The widow paid, thus saving herself from a fate which would have been worse than death. He also informed the committee that if the whole sum was not delivered by the specified time, those private residences which had escaped looting would no longer be exempted. The 16,000 pesos were collected and delivered.

"One of the things that struck observers was the utter lack of discipline among the officers and the soldiers. The officers, on their arrival in town, had ordered the doors of the courthouse broken down, and had brought from the looted stores cases of wine and boxes of beer, which were piled four or five cases high in front of the court building, and held high revel therein. The soldiers soon broke up into small groups each one having a bottle in his hand, which, when half emptied, was dashed to the ground and a fresh one tried. Soldiers claspng each other around the necks and maintaining their equilibrium by leaning against each other were a common sight. Others would fire indiscriminately in the air, and yell their war whoops.

"Another thing that attracted attention was the fact that nearly all the soldiers had brand new rifles.

"The church, the schoolhouses, and in many cases, private residences were converted into stables or something worse.

"The shrubbery on the Plaza which for years had been well cared for, was trampled under the feet of men and horses, the streets of the city were literally covered with corn, as there was plenty of it, and it was shoveled out on the sidewalks and streets for the horses to eat and trample on. Fields planted near town with corn were entered into, the corn cut down and fed to horses, the owners, in many cases poor men, being afraid to make any remonstrance. Wanton destruction, in fact, was the order of the day.

"The forces of Larraga, mentioned in the first part of this article, had not taken part in the attack, but arrived in the afternoon. It is not the policy of revolutionists to allow an officer well known in a town to capture it, because having many friends and possibly relatives therein, he is liable to use his influence, or at least be requested to, to save them from having their property looted, or to aid them in contributing heavily to a forced loan. Such an officer is allowed his opportunity in another region where he is unknown.

"Who then were these men who had come, as their leader stated, over the body of the murdered judge, to bring justice (sic) to Valles?

"They were the same party, augmented by new recruits, who had passed a few miles distant from the town a month previous. They had gone to Matamoros, on the Texas-Mexican frontier, which was in the hands of the Carrancistas, where they had been supplied with brand new rifles from the United States, and were now on their way back to the State of Vera Cruz, from whence they came, looting every village and ranch on their way back.

"The town remained in the hands of the Carrancistas for three days and the revelry of drinking and looting continued, when suddenly an outpost came into town shouting the Federals are coming, and in a few minutes the whistle of an engine was heard, and then the booming of cannon.

"Then pandemonium broke out among the officers and soldiers of the Carrancista forces, and each man made for his horse, but not to meet and defeat the Federals. Oh, no; only for the purpose of getting away without firing a shot, each man for himself, but each one carrying on his person and strapped on his horse all the loot that he could carry. A great many found that they were overloaded, and for miles out of town, in every direction except that along which the Federals were advancing, the roads were littered with bolts of calico, silks, canned goods, etc., discarded by the 'patriots' who had come to give justice to Valles. The town of Valles was like a sucked orange, why attempt to retain it, while other towns only a few miles away were still unscathed and had not yet been 'redeemed'?

"The Federals only stayed a few days, having been called to Tampico on account of the famous 'Tampico incident,' which led to the taking of Vera Cruz by the American forces on April 21, 1914.

"Upon the retirement of the Federals the forces of Manuel Larraga took possession, they having only retreated to their old lairs, about 20 miles from the city.

"One of the first acts of this general was to order the arrest of Herminio Perez, a young man of about 25 years of age, his offense being that he had run for the State legislature under the Huerta régime, although not successful in the campaign. He was delivered to the Indians and was tortured for several days before he was put to death by hanging.

"A brother of this unfortunate man, who was a stockman in a small way, fearing for his life, left town and joined another band of Carrancistas who were operating a few miles away. After a few months' service with this band, he applied for and obtained a passport from his commanding officer to visit Monterey, but on his way he was detained by forces of Gen. Larraga, brought to Valles, and also turned over to the Indians, and suffered the same fate as his brother. This man, Fortunato Perez, was married and had four little children, whom they left destitute. This man had never had anything to do with politics.

"Another brother, Santos Perez, and the only remaining one, escaped from the town, and reached the United States, but having learned of the terrible fate that had overtaken his brothers, on the outbreak of hostilities between Carranza and Villa, returned to Mexico, and joined the Villista forces, and when the Villista wave swept down to Ebano, he was in the force that occupied Valles on the retirement of the troops of Larraga. The Carrancista officers became aware that Santos Perez was with the Villistas, and on their retirement, left several letters where they were bound to be found, purporting to be in answer to letters received from him offering to betray the Villista forces. Upon the discovery of these bogus letters Perez was taken to the graveyard and there put to death.

"Pedro Castillo was delivered to the Indians to be tortured and killed, his offense being that he was the tax collector of a neighboring town.

"Augustin Lucero, a poor boy, who earned his living as a peddler, suffered the same fate. His offense being that he was considered lukewarm toward the revolutionary cause.

"Ricardo Palenzuelos lived in the town of Tancanhuitz, which also fell under the sway of Gen. Larraga. This man Palenzuelos had the misfortune of having a good horse, which the commander of the Federal troops stationed there some few months previously, wished to buy. Palenzuelos refused to sell, but upon the commander insisting, stated that, while he would not sell the horse, as it was a gift from a friend, he, in his turn, would give it to the commander, which he did. Upon the occupation of the town of Tancanhuitz, Palenzuelos had been assessed 1,000 pesos as his quota to the forced loan placed upon the town by the Carrancista forces. This he paid, but it having arrived to the knowledge of Gen. Larraga that he had given his horse to the Federal commander, the former sent soldiers to arrest him. Palenzuelos was brought to the presence of the general and accused of his offense, which he admitted, stating the circumstances. He was ordered taken to the village of Tanlajas. Upon hearing this, Palenzuelos, who knew it meant death, pleaded with the general to allow him to remain with his wife, who was laboring in child birth, and who had been in terrible pain for several days, being unable to deliver the child, until his wife should be relieved, or until she died, as it was only a matter of a few hours. The general replied that he had nothing to do with his (Palenzuelos) family affairs, and ordered him taken away by force. He was shot the same day and his wife died that afternoon."

The accepted principles of law and justice not only of Mexico but of the entire civilized world, have been inverted by the revolutionists of that country. The people of Mexico had been taught that stealing was wrong, but we have seen in the above narrative that the lower classes were invited, and in many cases, forced to take from stores and private residences, anything they could lay hands upon. They had been taught that the taking of human life was a heinous crime, they saw defenseless men, innocent of crime, shot without compassion, while murderers, thugs, and thieves were set at liberty and honored; they had been taught to respect the sanctity of churches irrespective of creeds; they saw the old church, hoary with age, turned into a stable and a brothel. They had been taught to construct; the revolutionists showed them how to destroy.

Is it then any wonder that five years after the events above related, the country is still being ravaged, from the Gulf to the Pacific, from the Rio Grande to the Guatemalan border, by bands of more or less strength, largely composed of offshoots from their own organization? Can the leopard change his spots?

These dissolvent groups, having only one object in common, that of loot, succeeded in establishing themselves in the seat of power, and with its tentacles reaching out to every State capital, and from there again to every municipality in the country, the monstrosity, which is known as the Government, has devoted itself to the problem of devising means of sucking the last drop of blood from industry, while other tentacles severed from the main body, but animated by the same unworthy motives, prey upon the same industries, each in its own peculiar way demanding its pound of flesh. The Government, by the enactment of unjust and arbitrary and retroactive laws, attempts to throttle by confiscation, and exorbitant taxes, the revolutionists with arms in their hands, take what they find, and levy tribute. The parentage of both branches is the same, having their common origin in anarchy, communism, disorder, class hatred, atheism, and assassination, which of late years we have come to know under the general term of bolshevism.

What a pity that this unnatural production was not allowed to die aborning, as it would have, but for the solicitous care of the man who acted as accoucheur, and who afterwards stood sponsor for it at the baptismal font—President Wilson.

This concludes the statement of atrocities and outrages on colonists, and I will now take up the outrages and robberies directly connected with the operation of the oil companies in the vicinity of Tampico. For the years 1917 and 1918 I will merely give the date, name of company, location and nature of the event, and the summing up of the situation as given me by a man prominent in the oil business in Tampico who has been intimately conversant with the situation for the past several years.

"During the last year or more the conditions in the Tampico district have become steadily worse, due to the state of lawlessness and lack of authority. During the second half of 1917 the oil companies operating in this district suffered considerable monetary losses, due to robberies, but only one Mexican employee was wounded. During the first six months of the present year, however, five Americans and three Mexican employees were brutally and cowardly murdered; six Americans and three Mexicans similarly wounded, and one Hollander abducted by an armed force and held for ransom. All of this has resulted from the banditry and brigandage due to the entire absence of efficient and proper police or other protection and the absolutely uncontrolled condition of affairs now existing. Comparison of the events for the periods mentioned indicates clearly the progressiveness and malignancy of the situation. Many, if not a majority, of these occurrences have taken place within 25 miles of Tampico, and the most notable and outrageous, viz, the robbing and killing of the Texas Co.'s paymaster, with the wounding of his companions; the robbing of the Mexican Gulf Terminal, with the killing of the assistant cashier and four others and the wounding of several; and the abduction of the superintendent of the Corona, occurred within a few miles of this city, the first two being just outside of the city limits. These occurrences, together with innumerable instances of insult, abuse, robbery, and mistreatment of individual employees in the various camps of these companies or while going to and fro, have already caused many American employees to leave the country during the last three months and to dissatisfy and disturb the field operatives, and there is among them a strong and growing conviction that they are entirely without protection or guaranty of any character and that the conditions under which they work are unjustifiably and inexcusably dangerous. The occurrences mentioned are in no way connected with or incident to armed conflict or military campaign, but result wholly from lack of order and control of a protective character and prosecution and punishment of a curative nature.

"We are convinced that if this condition of affairs continues and that if protection of some character is not speedily furnished, more Americans and other foreign employees will either individually or en masse decline to further unnecessarily imperil their lives and persons and will seek a livelihood elsewhere, and this will probably curtail operations and in time interfere with the movement of oil as under present conditions it is extremely difficult to replace the employees leaving.

"In consequence, the representatives of the companies mentioned, after full conference, have agreed to lay this situation before their respective home offices and to strongly urge that those home offices jointly request the State Department to secure such remedy as may be proper and effective through such channels as it may deem wise, and to do this with all possible dispatch.

Date.	Company.	Casu- alties.	Money lost.	Nature of event.	Men hurt or wounded.
1917.
Aug. 15	East Coast Oil Co., Panuro.		$745.44	Camp robbed.	2
Sept. 1	East Coast Oil Co., pipe line.		101.20	do.
4	Aguila Co., Bustos.		199.60	do.
29	Aguila Co., Chijol Canal.		23,406.00	Paymaster robbed.
Oct. 6	Aguila Co., Los Naranjos.		109.52	do.
6	Aguila Co., Potrero.		246.95	do.
Nov. 10	Aguila Co., Los Naranjos.		245.23	do.
17	East Coast Oil Co., Panuro.		587.00	Camp robbed.
24	Mex. Gulf Oil Co., pipe line.		1,402.92	do.
Dec. 27	Aguila Co., Chijol Canal.		40,710.66	Paymaster robbed.	1
1918.
Jan. 23	East Coast Oil Co., Territas Blancas.				3
Feb. 6	Aguila Co., Los Naranjos.		3,700.00	Paymaster robbed.
8	East Coast Oil Co., Panuro.		10,000.00	do.
12	Texas Co., Chijol Canal.			Held up.	1
15	Freepport Mex., Camalote.			Held for ransom.
19	Metropolitan, Chijol Canal.			Launch attacked.
21	do.			do.	2
21	Mexican Gulf, Horconitos.		329.08	Camp robbed.
21	Texas Co., Chijol Canal.	1	14,000.00	Paymaster robbed.	2
22	Texas Co., Olando Camp.		2,500.00	do.
Mar. 1	Aguila Co., Tierra Amarilla.		175.00	do.
1	Aguila Co., Potrero.		853.08	do.
5	Metropolitan, Tepetate.		1,341.70	do.
7	Aguila Co., Potrero.		1,700.35	do.
15	Freepport Mex., Camalote.	2	1,000.00	do.
16	Texas Co., Topilla.			Robbed on train.
28	Cortez Co., Chijol Canal.		12,007.60	Paymaster robbed.	1
28	Aguila Co., Potrero.		959.31	do.
28	do.		2,748.00	do.
Apr. 4	Corona Co., Santa Fe.		705.50	do.
6	Texas Co., Tepetate.			Camp robbed.
7	do.			do.
12	Metropolitan, Tepetate.		324.00	Paymaster robbed.	2
13	International, Tepetate.		936.00	do.	5
14	Cortez, Tepetate.			Camp robbed.
16	Mex-Gulf Oil Co., Tepetate.			Camp shut down.
18	do.		259.47	Camp robbed.
16	Texas Co., Tepetate.			do.
18	Texas Co., Chijol Canal.			Several thousand pesos.
19	Corona Co., Topilla.			Camp robbed.
23	Aguila Co., San Pedro.		1,359.50	Paymaster robbed.
24	East Coast Oil Co., Topilla.			Camp robbed.
25	Aguila Co., Bustos.			do.
26	Corona Co., Santa Fe.		475.00	do.
27	do.		475.00	do.	1
May 6	Mex-Gulf Oil Co., Tepetate.			do.	1
6	Aguila Co., Santo Tomas.		512.00	Paymaster imprisoned.
12	Corona Co., San Jose.		300.00	do.
12	Cortez Co., Tepetate.			Paymaster robbed.	1
16	Cortez Co., Lagoon.		10,547.50	do.
16	Texas Co., Lagoon.		10,000.00	do.	1
17	Mex-Gulf Oil Co., pipe line.			Paymaster escaped.
18	Mex-Gulf Oil Co., Tepetate.		193.30	Camp robbed.
22	Metropolitan, Tepetate.		103.00	Paymaster robbed.
22	Mex-Gulf Oil Co., pipe line.		1,040.50	do.
23	Corona Co., Santa Fe.		456.50	do.
23	Corona Co., Topilla.		300.00	do.
26	Corona Co., Santa Fe.		552.00	do.
27	do.		158.00	do.
June 1	Corona Co., Rodeo.			Camp robbed.
8	do.		2,000.00	Paymaster robbed.
8	East Coast Oil Co., Torres.		1,542.65	do.
9	Aguila Co., Tepetate.		967.00	do.
12	Metropolitan, Palo Blanco.		1,100.80	do.
24	Mex-Gulf Oil Co., Tepetate.			Reservoir fired.
26	Texas Co., Topilla.			Employee robbed.
27	Metropolitan, Palo Blanco.			Camp robbed.
29	Aguila Co., Cucillos.	1		Assault.	1
29	Mex-Gulf Oil Co., Prieto.	5	5,562.40	do.	1
30	Corona Co., Topilla.			Superintendent of camp held for ransom.

An oil company which I shall designate as A B suffered the following losses during the year of 1919:

On March 2 armed forces robbed our camp at Tierra Amarilla of all the personal belongings of the employees and camping material to the value of $4,000.

On March 4 one of our employees was held up and robbed of $8,300, ora nacional, by four armed men near Tumbadero.

March 11 our pump station at La Cerba was robbed of stores to the value of $34.

Armed forces on March 18 commandeered two horses and one mule near Tempoal.

March 24 armed forces entered our camp at Tanquilar demanding 2,000 pesos and all arms. As neither could be furnished, they threatened the engineer, looted the employees' quarters of what personal belongings and food they could carry off.

On March 25 the armed forces entered Las Lomas camp and commandeered one horse.

On March 27 armed forces entered the same camp and demanded arms and 500 pesos. Failing to get what they demanded, they robbed the men and the employees of their personal belongings.

March 22 our camp superintendent near Palma Sola was held up and robbed by six armed men, the robbery netting them 3,169 pesos.

On April 3 armed forces commandeered provisions to the extent of $552 from Naranjos camp.

On May 20 the armed forces visited our camp at Tempoal and commandeered a horse.

On June 9 our paymaster from Tanhuijo was robbed of 1,200 pesos.

On June 30 armed forces visited our Tumbadero camp and commandeered supplies worth $96.

On June 28 armed forces entered our Tanhuijo camp and commandeered provisions and animals to the value of $2,000.

On July 5 armed forces entered our camp at Tempoal and took material to the value of 210 pesos.

On July 7 armed forces visited our Minatitlan camp and robbed it of supplies to the value of $20,000, besides stealing personal belongings of employees to the value of about $800.

On July 9 armed forces entered our camp at Tempoal and commandeered supplies valued at $135.

On the 6th of September our paymaster was robbed by bandits near Naranjos camp of 72,000 pesos.

The company which I shall designate as C D suffered during the months of November and December, 1918, and the year of 1919 as follows:

During the month of November, 1918, soldiers of Carranzista forces stationed at Palo Blanco consumed meals at our mess house to the value of 4,500 pesos. A captain of the Carranzista forces stationed at Palo Blanco abused and threatened our camp superintendent on several occasions, and it is believed, but for the intervention of some of our Mexican employees, this captain would have murdered our superintendent. After this trouble, complaint was made to Gen. Lopez De Lara, the Carranzista commander in that district, who had the troublesome captain removed to another post.

During the month of November and December one of our launches was held for 28 days by Gen. Lopez De Lara for his exclusive service, costing us, as expense for labor, gasoline, and repairs, 3,000 pesos without counting the loss to the company through not having the service of the launch.

During the month of January Carranzista soldiers consumed meals at our mess house at Palo Blanco to the value of $964.

On the 4th of December, 1918, our Tepetate camp was robbed of 4,175 pesos.

On March 21 our towboat was commandeered by a Carrancista colonel for transporting his troops to Tampico from San Geronimo and kept in his service until March 29, costing us a total of 1,325 pesos. A second barge was commandeered for the same length of time, which cost us about 1,000 pesos.

On April 1 the Carrancista forces commandeered our barges for a few days for movement of troops, costing us 788 pesos.

On August 16 three armed bandits robbed our paymaster of $4,000 while en route from Tampico to Tepetate. Gen. Pablo Gonzales, whose headquarters were then at Juan Casiano, was immediately notified and he gave assurance that the bandits would be apprehended if possible.

On July 4 the six armed men attempted to hold up our paymaster near Soledad, but he escaped without being injured or without losing the pay roll.

In the latter part of August one of our fast launches was commandeered by a paymaster of the Carrancista army, who loaded the craft with tortilla and beer and used the boat for over 10 days, during which time it was greatly damaged, in addition to depriving us of the use of our own property.

On September 23 our Comales camp was visited by several hundred Carranzista soldiers who entered the camp, in spite of the protests of our boys, and carried off nearly all of the clothing and personal belongings of our employees, in addition to which they gave our employees orders to cut all of the brush around the camp, which we feared to do because the Villista forces had threatened our employees with theft should they cut the brush as ordered by the Carrancista forces.

A company, referred to as E. F., made the following statement:

During the month of December, 1918, Carrancista officers commandeered launches from our marine department, returning them in a damaged condition, causing a loss of $750.

On the evening of January 15, 1919, bandits visited our camp at Panuco and hung one watchman until he was almost dead, robbing the Chinaman, who was the only other person there, causing us to abandon the camp temporarily.

During the month of April, the Carrancista forces commandeered supplies and transportation to the value of $3,588. During the month of May, Carrancista forces commandeered food and supplies and transportation of troops to the extent of $3,105.

During the month of June, Carrancista forces commandeered material supplies and food to the amount of $3,869, in addition to which our camp at Zapatan was held up on August 1 and our camp superintendent threatened with death unless he gave the bandits $5,000. He gave them all the money he had, which amounted to $200, after which they left him, threatening him with death if he reported to the authorities.

On August 14, a group of armed men—seven, as near as we can ascertain—entered the company's property at Alvarez and, after sacking the house occupied by the cashier and others, in search for money and valuables, they forced the superintendent to accompany them to the office building, where, by threatening his life, they forced him to open the company's safe, from which they obtained 23,416 pesos. In addition to the cash taken, personal effects taken from the employees amounted to about $350, United States currency. The bandits were heavily armed with Mausers, pistols, and carrying ammunition belts, having very much the appearance of the ordinary Mexican soldier. They commandeered the company's launch and compelled the launchman to take them some distance up the Tuxpan River where they disembarked. Complaint was immediately made to the Carrancista military authorities at Tuxpan, who showed the disposition to apprehend the guilty parties, and soon afterwards three suspects were arrested who confessed to the crime, and two of them were executed on August 17. The confession of the first three captured also implicated Lieut. Col. Barnebe Rodriguez, of the Carrancista army. He was also detained. Four of the principal offenders are still at large. The amount of money recovered is about $2,000. The military authorities advise us that the persons remaining on their hands, together with the record of their investigation, will be delivered to the civil authorities for future action.

A company which I shall designate as G. H. reports as follows:

A bunch of soldiers belonging to Gen. Laraga's troops killed a man living at our camp without any provocation and carried his daughter away.

Another man living just across the river was killed by Carrancista soldiers without any semblance of trial in the month of February, 1919.

At San Jose de las Rusias, Carrancista soldiers to the number of 120 visited camp and asked for food and fodder for their horses. Also, one of our barges was commandeered by Gen. Lopez de Lara for a period of six days, transporting government troops.

On the 14th of March bandits attacked camp at Camelote which was defended by Carrancista soldiers and five of the soldiers were killed, and all of the stores in camp robbed. Our work was greatly delayed because of the refusal of the Carrancista forces to allow our peons to leave camp for some days following this attack.

During the month of March, camp at San Jose de las Rusias was visited by a band of Villistas who robbed the camp of 200 pesos, and returned again in a week, when they demanded and received 200 pesos more. Also, our wagons were encountered on the road and robbed of corn to feed the animals the bandits were riding.

On the 14th of March a party of bandits robbed the Panuco railroad station of 200 pesos, also destroying the track and telegraph line for a short distance. Following this, Carrancista soldiers were sent to the scene of the trouble and communication was restored.

On the 30th of April, 20 bandits attacked our camp at Topila and robbed it of $217 in cash, besides destroying the telegraph and telephone apparatus before they were driven away by an armed guard from a nearby camp.

On May 28, one of our geologists was held up by drunken soldiers on the Tamesi River who robbed him of his money and supplies even taking his clothing and shoes. He is not positive whether they were Carrancista soldiers or bandits.

Another of our geologists reports the following incident which occurred near Zacamixtle on July 20. "I was doing some geological work in the canton of Ozuluama, Vera Cruz. At about 1 o'clock July 20, I saw two soldiers wearing the uniform of the Carrancista army standing on the railroad about 75 or 100 meters north of where I emerged from the brush on the Zacamixtle Tan Coco road. They signalled to me, spreading out their arms horizontally. Not understanding the meaning of this I halted and remained standing in the middle of the railroad, facing the soldiers who drew back the bolts of their rifles making ready to shoot, and one of them signalled again as before. I now thought perhaps they wanted me to put up my hands to show that I was unarmed so I raised my hands. The next instant they fired two shots at me, fortunately without hitting me. I am not quite sure whether they fired while I was still standing with my hands up, or a fraction of a second later, but I jumped back into the Zacamixtle Tan Coco ruin and ran as soon as I realized that they were firing at me. I ran back along the Zacamixtle road as fast as I could without looking back, and I do not know if the soldiers ran after me or not. I could not have seen this anyway, as the road is winding and leads through thick jungle and I had a start of nearly 100 meters of which I made the most. I suppose that they followed, however, as no more shots were fired and, if the soldiers had not been running, trying to catch me, they would very probably have fired more shots after me into the brush. Knowing the trails around Zacamixtle very well, I soon switched off from the road into a small brooklet which I followed for a while, making a detour through the brush and got safely back in Zacamixtle. The next day I went to see the major who commanded the troops in that vicinity and told him the above-mentioned facts. He seemed to consider the occurrence as rather a good practical joke and laughed when I told him of it, but said the soldiers could not belong to his command, as none of his men had left camp on the previous day. He said the soldiers must have come from Juan Casiano. I must make mention of the fact that I carried no arms and, in my opinion, at so short a distance the soldiers could not possibly have mistaken me for a rebel. Neither did they challenge me with the usual, Quien viene?

"I am told that on the morning of the same day a band of soldiers robbed one of the camps near the Huasteca railroad and threatened to shoot the superintendent, according to the story given me by our peons, and again, a week before these events happened a band of soldiers murdered some peaceful Indians, not rebels, going from Monte Grande to the market in Anono.

"This is the second time the Carrancista soldiers have shot at me without warning or reason. The first shooting occurred in December, 1918, in the San Jose de las Rusias. I was accompanied by another geologist and on that occasion, we were standing in the middle of the road observing a band of soldiers who were coming toward us, when suddenly, without any warning, they started to shoot at us. We sprang back into the brush where they sent about 20 shots after us, some of the bullets striking the sand quite near.

"It would therefore appear that the Carrancista soldiers had acquired the habit and considered it a regular pastime to shoot a peaceful stranger without any apparent reason, and so I offer to bring these happenings to the knowledge of our consular representatives."

On September 12 the camp at Panuco was robbed during the night. The doors and windows were broken open and contents of the storehouse were in disorder. Seventy-two dollars in gold had been taken from the safe, which was not locked at night because it is very hard to open, and, in case they are visited by bandits, they prefer to have it open easily rather than suffer bad treatment for not being able to open the same. On September 20 the pump man at their pump station was kidnapped by three armed horsemen and did not return. They did not even give him time to stop the pumps he had been attending. His body was found near Panuco a few days later.

The camp at San Jose de las Rusias has been visited several times during the month of September; each time they commandeered supplies for the men and fodder for their animals.

The company referred to as "I. J." sustained the following losses and injuries to employees during the year 1919:

On the night of July 19 three bandits entered the camp at Topila and robbed our foreman of personal effects and money to the value of $163.

On the night of January 24 three bandits robbed our Topila camp of automobile supplies valued at $100. The next morning our watchman tracked the bandits to a house near Topila, captured one of them and turned him over to the civil authorities who promised to have him punished.

On March 14, about noon, 106 armed men, claiming to be of the Pelaez forces, came into our camp at Panuco and required our Chinaman to give them food for themselves and horses, and they commandeered supplies to the extent of $50 worth. They also demanded that we send 2,000 pesos next day to Tantoyuca and 2,000 pesos per month thereafter for protection.

The company referred to as "L. M." states:

Our launch was held up in the Chijol Canal on the 8th of April by five armed men, the leader armed with automatic pistol and the others with Mauser rifles. They demanded the pay roll, and when told that there was none they thoroughly searched the boat. They took $20 and a watch from one of our employees and $12 from another employee and allowed the boat to proceed.

On Saturday morning one of our employees, while taking 5,000 pesos gold to Tepetate, was held up and robbed about 10 miles from Las Matillas. Our employee was in an automobile, and after giving up the pay roll was allowed to proceed uninjured.

On May 2 two of our employees were held up by armed men about 10 miles from Las Matillas and robbed of all their money and personal effects, approximately $250 in cash.

On the morning of August 11 our launch was held up in the Chijol Canal. The bandits asked if there was any money on board and on being answered in the negative they examined the mail and after opening one or two letters returned the mail to the launch and allowed the boat to proceed.

On the morning of August 11 one of our employees at Tepetate was attacked by a Mexican peon, a former employee, who wounded him severely with a knife. The attacking Mexican escaped. The attack was caused by a refusal on the part of our foreman to pay the Mexican extra wages demanded.

The company referred to as "N. O." states that three of their employees were held up by bandits on April 10, 1919, near Garrapatas. Two of the employees were severely wounded by being shot. The bandits secured about $9,000 in money and left the wounded men lying in the road. These men afterwards recovered.

On August 11 two bandits with rifles entered the camp near El Tigre and after killing the boss carpenter robbed the camp of everything of value. As near as can be determined, the bandits secured about 200 pesos in addition to personal belongings taken from the camp. Authorities at Ozuluama were notified of the robbery as soon as possible.

August 19, three bandits armed with rifles entered Garrapatas. They demanded 5,000 pesos. They made a search of the house and took whatever they fancied, but only took such small articles as could be easily carried on their person. The value of the personal property taken amounts to about $600 United States currency.

The company which I shall designate as "P. Q." report the following incidents:

"On May 4 one of our employees en route to Tepetate in an automobile was held up and searched by bandits. He was questioned as to whether he had any money, and to which he replied in the negative, and was also questioned as to what cars had gone ahead of him. When he told the leader that a car belonging to another company had gone out about daylight, the leader cursed his men for their negligence, saying to our employee that the car they were after (as they understood that it carried a pay roll) was the one which had gone out earlier in the day. They then permitted him to continue his journey.

"On May 16 our mail car en route to Tepetate was held up by six armed bandits. They searched the car and driver, opening all mail packages, but finding no money permitted the mail carrier to proceed.

"On the morning of June 23, 1919, one of our office employees was attacked by a Mexican with a machete and seriously wounded in defending himself. The employee stated that he did nothing to provoke the assault and had no idea as to how he had incurred the enmity of the Mexican. The Mexican was only prevented from murdering him by being overpowered and disarmed.

"On July 1, 1919, one of our employees at Tepetate was brutally murdered without any provocation whatsoever by a band of five armed men who came to our camp for the purpose of robbery. (This incident is very fully covered elsewhere, so it is unnecessary to go into details.)

"On June 24, 1919, one of our employees was robbed of the company's pay roll by armed bandits, the bandits securing 11,000 pesos and also $1,500 United States currency.

The company referred to as "R. S." report that on May 15, their launch was held up by eight armed bandits who suspected it of having a large sum of money destined for paying employees at one of the camps. They took the paymaster ashore and searched and threatened him, robbing him of all his clothing and $31.50 in money, after which they permitted the launch to proceed.

On July 7 one of their employees was stopped by six armed men near the village of Tampeche and robbed of 2,200 pesos oro nacional, and about $500 United States currency. These bandits were dressed in the uniform of the Carrancista soldiers and were armed with 30-30 rifles and Mausers.

On June 30 an employee was halted by three armed men who appeared to be Carrancista soldiers and who robbed him of his money and personal effects and then allowed him to proceed. This robbery occurred near the village of Las Milpas.

On September 7, Gen. Gerozabi of the Villista forces with about 100 men entered our camp south of Tampico and searched the camp for a Carrancista officer on whom they wished to wreak vengeance, but not finding him after a thorough search of the camp they were furnished with food and supplies from our commissary depot, without doing any serious injury.

The company which I will refer to as "T. U." reports that on July 17, 1919, their camp at Palo Blanco was held up and robbed by six Mexicans armed with rifles. The amount secured by the bandits was about 12,000 pesos. The company states that the bandits were with Carrancista soldiers (or ex-soldiers for certainty) inasmuch as they were frequently seen in company with Carrancista officers previous to the robbery and were known to some of the employees of the company who recognized them on the occasion of the robbery.

On July 1, Carrancista soldiers commandeered an automobile from the same company which they showed no intentions of returning; also supplies amounting to about $400.

I will attach hereto the story of the hold up of an individual employee of one of the oil companies in the field at Tepetate:

"My name is _____. I am an American citizen, age 24 years, and have resided for the past three years in Mexico, during which time I have been in the employ of different oil companies.

"On July 30, 1919, at 10 p. m., I was at the Chinampa Plaza, which is about half a mile from camp at Tepetate, State of Vera Cruz, Mexico. I was then in the employ of a company, and in returning to their camp in company with another employee at a dark place in the road, we were suddenly confronted by five armed men, who accosted us in Spanish and at the same time threatened us with their rifles. I had a revolver on my person at the time, but the attack was so sudden I had no opportunity to use it and hastily threw it into the brush as I feared it would cause them to handle me more roughly if they found that I was armed. The robbers demanded our money and emphasized their demands by striking us about the head and shoulders with their rifles and by poking the muzzles of their guns in our stomachs and threatening to shoot us. I gave them all the money I had on my person, which was about $25. They also took my gold watch and what little change _____ had. This was not as much money as they expected to get from us and they became more threatening and abusive, one of them striking me on the head back of my left ear, cutting a gash in my scalp and almost rendering me unconscious.

"Meantime _____ was begging them not to injure us and offering as inducement for them not to injure us further that if they would conduct us to the plaza, we would get more money for them. They hesitated about returning with us to the plaza, saying that they were going to kill us right there, because they feared that we had recognized them, and that if we returned to the plaza it might complicate matters for them in the future. After much pleading on our part, they returned with us to the plaza, where I procured $50 more and gave it to the leader, who proved to be a captain of the Carrancista army stationed at the camp Juan Casiano, which is near Tepetate. The other four members were soldiers stationed at the same place. After threatening our lives if we ever attempted to identify them, they left us at the plaza and we made our way back to the Metropolitan camp at about 2 a. m. the following morning.

"At about 10 o'clock the morning after the robbery, we went to the Juan Casiano camp of the Carrancista soldiers and told Gen. Pablo Gonzales, who was in command there, that some of his soldiers had robbed us the night previous. He asked us if we could identify them and if we were positive that it was Carrancista soldiers who had robbed us. We told him that we were positive as to identity of the robbers because we had seen the same soldiers and the captain, who led them in the robbery, at the Chinampa Plaza on several occasions previous to the robbery. He then caused the soldiers to be lined up and told us to pick out the ones who had robbed us. This we had no difficulty in doing and on searching the captain, whom I had identified as the leader of the robbers, Gen. Gonzales found my watch and about $25 of the money taken from me. The watch and money were restored to me by Gen. Gonzales, who said he would place both the captain and soldiers under arrest and send them to Mexico City, where he assured us they would be properly punished. Gen. Gonzales said he would put a stop to the trouble his men were raising around the camp, and he said he knew they committed many abuses during his absence. I have no means of knowing what punishment, if any, was given the robbers in question, but I do know that my life was greatly endangered when they were holding me up because of the fact that they knew I recognized them as being Carrancista soldiers and might make complaint against them if they did not put me permanently out of the way.

I wish to say in conclusion regarding the relation of the oil companies to the Mexican Government, that report of drilling operations for the latter part of November, 1919, showed that the Mexican Eagle Oil Co., an English company, had nine wells drilling, none of which were closed because of no permit.

The Mexican Gulf Oil Co. had three wells being drilled, two of which were stopped by the Carrancista authorities because of no drilling permit.

The Trans-continental Petroleum Co. had two wells being drilled both of which were stopped because of no drilling permit.

The Texas Co. had two wells drilling both of which drilling had been stopped because of no permit.

The Cia Pet. La Azteca had one well being drilled which was stopped because of having no permit.

Mexican-Sinclair Petroleum Corporation had one well being drilled which was stopped because of no permit.

Huasteca Petroleum Co. had two wells projected and two located, two of which were stopped because of no permit.

Cortez Oil Corporation had three wells being drilled two of which were stopped for reason of no permit.

Union Oil Co. had two wells being drilled both of which were stopped because of no permit.

Empire Gas and Fuel Co.—one well in progress which was stopped because of no permit.

La Atlantica had one well being drilled which was stopped because of no permit.

The Segura Miguel had one well drilling which was stopped drilling temporarily.

The National Oil Co.—one well; drilling stopped because of no permit.

At this time (the 1st of December) it was reported to the managers of oil companies at Tampico that legal representatives of the Carrancista Government were preparing to bring suit in Tuxpam against all managers who had attempted to drill without permits. Penalties, according to competent legal authorities, involved a maximum of two years in prison, and, at the court's discretion, fines ranging from 1,000 to 100,000 pesos, or, in the case of foreigners, the option, in the case of conviction, of article 33.

Respectfully submitted.

S. D. LESTER.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF S. D. LESTER.

APRIL 28, 1920.

Senator A. B. FALL,

*Chairman Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations Investigating Mexican Affairs,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR SIR: I beg to submit a report on my negotiations looking toward having Americans living in the vicinity of Tampico, Mexico, appear as witnesses before your committee.

About October 1 of last year I proceeded to Tampico, Mexico, with credentials from your committee, for the purpose of making a preliminary investigation of conditions there with a view to ascertaining the names of witnesses who had a first-hand knowledge of such conditions and of events that had transpired in that vicinity within the last few years. In a separate report, which I have submitted to-day, I endeavored to give to the committee an accurate account of conditions in that district, and have incorporated therein statements of men who would have made most valuable witnesses, but who, unfortunately, could not be induced to testify under the circumstances.

I spent over three months in Tampico and worked most industriously in interviewing Americans, and altogether interviewed between two and three hundred men, making full notes of what they were in a position to testify, and then selected from this number about 60 employees of oil companies and about 40 colonists and business men, mostly of small means, who I thought would be able to give the committee information of value. You have undoubtedly noted from the report in question that the personal testimony of these witnesses would have been most instructive.

I take great pleasure in recording in the beginning that the Americans I called on were uniformly courteous to me and most anxious that information depicting the real conditions reach the committee, and that, with the exception of the managers of the oil companies, they did everything in their power to aid me in my efforts to secure witnesses for the committee. I found the employees of oil companies and colonists and business men almost universally desirous of testifying, but possessed of a strong conviction that they would not be justified in giving isolated testimony before the committee, owing partly to the manner in which they had been neglected by the American Government, and to the fact that in some instances the complaints they had made to the State Department had been communicated to Mexican officials who had visited reprisals on them; in addition, the employees of the oil companies were of the opinion that it was the fixed policy of their companies not to do anything that might displease the Carranza Government, and felt that if they should testify they would be disloyal to the interests of their employers. Almost without exception these men stated that they would willingly testify if the managers of the companies approved of their doing so. The independent Americans—that is, Americans not employed by oil companies—were willing to testify if it could be arranged for a number of Americans to come to the States for that purpose, and especially if arrangements could be made for the employees of oil companies to testify, for they felt that not only would the Carranza Government refrain from persecuting 40 or 50 men who testified, but also, that the oil companies would intervene to protect their employees from reprisals by that Government, and in so doing would protect the men of independent means.

Upon completing the preliminary investigation above referred to, I interceded with the managers of several oil companies in Tampico, and was informed that they were in no way opposed to their men giving testimony before the committee, but that they had no discretion in such matters, and if instructed to do so by their principals in the States, they would not only cooperate in having their men testify, but would also gladly testify themselves. With this assurance, I communicated the facts to Judge F. J. Kearful, counsel for your committee, and not hearing from him within a reasonable time, and realizing that nothing could be done until such arrangements suggested by the managers were completed, I returned to New York about the 6th day of January and reported personally to Judge Kearful.

I was informed by Judge Kearful that he and Mr. W. F. Buckley had conferred with the executive committee of the Oil Association about the 20th of December, and that these gentlemen had concurred unanimously in the suggestion of Judge Kearful and Mr. Buckley that they advise the managers of the oil companies in Tampico individually, or the managers' association in that city, that the officials of these companies would pay their expenses in excess of those paid by the American Government and would do all in their power to return these men to Mexico to their positions and, in the event of failing to do so, would give them employment in the States or otherwise compensate them for their sacrifice. Messrs. Kearful and Buckley stated that since the executive committee of the oil association had promised to immediately telegraph instructions to this effect to Tampico, they were under the impression that the managers in Tampico had communicated with me and for this reason had not communicated directly with me.

Since nothing had been heard from the managers of the oil companies in Tampico, it was deemed advisable to take the matter up again with their principals in the States, and for this purpose Mr. Buckley attended a meeting of the Oil Association held in New York on the 10th day of last January. Mr. Buckley reported to Judge Kearful and to me that he advised these gentlemen that it would be useless for me to return to Mexico unless the oil companies took the position that their men would be permitted and encouraged to testify, and that a definite decision should be reached at once. Mr. Buckley stated that he asked the association to advise the managers in Tampico not only of the decision that the executive committee had made in December, which was now ratified by the association, but also that a tanker or tankers would be furnished to transport these men in a body to the States and take them back in a body to Tampico, and that the association would endeavor to have the State Department instruct the American consul at Tampico to give these men emergency passports. Mr. Buckley further stated that he laid particular emphasis on the fact that the oil association must leave nothing to the discretion of the managers in Tampico, and that the latter gentlemen should be given definite instructions. Mr. Buckley reported to us that the oil association had agreed to all of these proposals. He explained to the association that the reason he suggested that the men be brought up in a body and returned in a body to Tampico was prompted by the general feeling and current reports that the Carranza government would endeavor to prevent these men from returning to Mexico; it was thought that this Government would hardly stop 50 or 60 men who might endeavor to return.

While at this meeting Mr. Buckley advised me by telephone that the Oil Association desired to see me for the purpose of hearing a synopsis of the testimony that their employees and colonists would give and of learning the names of their employees who were to be called. I went down immediately to the meeting of the Oil Association and explained the entire matter in detail to these gentlemen. At the request of the members of the association I gave them the names of the employees who were to serve as witnesses, and each member made a note of the names of those employees working for his particular company. These gentlemen agreed that they would transmit the names of these men to their respective managers and instructed Mr. Pat Logan, the manager in Tampico of the International Petroleum Co., who was present at the meeting, to convey the decision of the oil association to the next meeting of the managers' association in Tampico.

In view of the agreement set out above, I left New York for Tampico a day or two later for the purpose of arranging, in conjunction with the managers, to bring the witnesses to Washington to testify. On my return to Tampico I found that two circumstances had intervened which undoubtedly had some influence on the situation. The Carranza Government had published a notice in the press to the effect that it had instructed its consuls in the United States not to visé the passports of Americans testifying before the committee, and the oil companies had begun negotiations with the Carranza Government which resulted later in the issuance of temporary permits by the Government to the oil companies to drill their own properties, but without prejudice to the contention of the Government that title to these properties now rested in the Government, and not in the oil companies. In this connection, one must not lose sight of the fact that it had been known generally for many weeks that the Carranza Government would endeavor to prevent any American who told the truth about conditions in Mexico to the committee from returning to that country, and also that the oil companies had been most active in urging that your committee proceed vigorously with its investigation in conducting an extensive propaganda in the American papers with regard to Mexico, and in protesting that their interest in conditions in Mexico was not limited to the oil situation, but that, in so far as their interest was centered in this situation it arose from a determination based on principle not to permit the confiscation of their properties.

I wish you would also bear in mind that neither of these matters was ever referred to by the managers of the oil companies in their conferences with me.

On January 27 I attended a meeting of the Managers' Association in Tampico, in which Mr. Logan advised these gentlemen of the agreement that had been made in New York by the Oil Association, and of the instructions that he had been charged to deliver to them, whereupon the managers appointed a committee of American attorneys representing the oil companies to cooperate with me in arranging the details for bringing witnesses to the States. On the following day, January 28, I met this committee, but when I suggested a consideration of the details of bringing witnesses to the States, these gentlemen advised me that they had not been instructed just how far to cooperate with me. I immediately reported this development to Mr. Logan, who offered to take the matter up again at the next meeting of the Managers' Association to be held on February 3. After this meeting I was advised by Mr. Logan that he felt sure that something had transpired to modify the determination of the oil companies, but that he was unable to ascertain just what had happened. In this connection I will state, parenthetically, that Mr. Logan gave me his hearty cooperation in this matter, and did everything in his power to carry through the agreement that the Oil Association had entered into with the representatives of your committee. I continued to call on the managers and their attorneys, but while none of these gentlemen volunteered to inform me that their determination had been modified, and although they all continued to assure me of their desire to cooperate, they laid stress on obstacles and extraneous matters, and I soon perceived that it would be a loss of time to expect any aid from them, and left Tampico for the States on February 6.

I still felt that if the men in question were actually subpoenaed they would be able to induce the oil companies to agree to their testifying before the committee and being averse to losing the fruits of work engaged in for a period of several months, I returned to Tampico on April 3 for the purpose of summoning managers and employees of oil companies and independent Americans not connected with these companies. When I returned to Tampico I bore the following letter from you, dated in Los Angeles, Calif., March 17, 1920:

DEAR SIR: I beg to advise you that I have listened with great interest to your report on the investigation you made in the Tampico district for this committee, and entirely approve of the manner in which you have carried out your mission. I have no doubt that the witnesses whose names appear in the list you have compiled will be able to give testimony that will be most valuable to the committee in its work.

You are hereby directed and authorized to proceed to Tampico and summon American citizens to appear before the Senate subcommittee in Washington; and you are further authorized, where witnesses are for any reason unable to appear in Washington, to take their testimony, assuring such witnesses as desire it that their names will not be divulged in connection with their testimony.

You will please bear in mind that the committee desires the testimony of only such witnesses as are entirely willing to testify, and that no measures of coercion will be employed by the committee, and you will please so advise those whom you summon.

Yours very truly,

ALBERT B. FALL, Chairman.

I proceeded to summon Americans in Tampico and read to each person the above letter as my authority, and regret to report to you that, with the exception of Mr. Pat Longan and Hon. Claude I. Dawson, all of these gentlemen felt impelled to decline to testify. In order that my report to you might be as accurate as circumstances would permit, I made it my practice invariably, after summoning a man, to write in my notebook his comments. I will now proceed to give you a list of the gentlemen I summoned, together with a record of their statements on being summoned:

Erby E. Swift, secretary of the American Chamber of Commerce in Tampico, summoned on April 9, 1920, at 11.30 a. m. In reply to his summons, he stated: "I would like to give my testimony if sure that it would never be made public."

R. F. Moats, property owner, summoned on April 15, 1920, at 11.10 a. m., asked, "Have you anyone to go from here?"

K. L. Merrem, colonist, summoned April 9, 1920, at 1.55 p. m. In answer to his summons, he replied, "If my country needed me I would go, but it does not, and it would be useless for me to jeopardize myself here when, either right or wrong, my country has permitted others of my countrymen to suffer." (Mr. Merrem referred to the fact that the American Government had permitted the Carranza government to refuse entry to other Americans who had testified before your committee.)

Ed Williams, banker, summoned on April 9, 1920, at 3.45 p. m. In reply to his summons, he stated, "I am going to Mexico City in the morning and will let you know what I decide. Will be back before you leave."

A. E. Graham, colonist, summoned on April 9, 1920, at 2.55 p. m. In reply to his summons he stated that he felt that, since the United States has not and can not do anything to relieve those who have suffered more than he, or even guarantee the return to this country of those who testify, he could not feel justified in going before the committee, as he received very much better treatment than even the Mexican citizens in the neighborhood in which he is located. In view of these facts, he said that he would be very ungrateful to the Government if he took any other course.

Mr. Jones, of Cowan & Jones, owners of a sugar plantation near Micos, San Luis Potosi, summoned April 9, 1920, at 4 p. m. In answer to his summons Mr. Jones replied that his partner, Mr. Cowan, would be in the latter part of the week, and they would undoubtedly have some information to give me, since they had recently been raided again.

Alec Smith, property owner, summoned on April 9, 1920, at 4.10 p. m. In answer to his summons Mr. Smith replied, after hesitating a long time, "Excuse me, I am going to see the Texas Co."

John I. Newell, property owner, summoned on April 9, 1920, at 4.15 p. m. In reply to his summons, he stated, "I can not go. I am just now getting in a position to make a little money to pay my debts. I would not hesitate to sacrifice my own interests if my country needed me, but all that I can tell has already been told. I am sure that, in view of the fact that we are given no protection if we fall under the ban of displeasure of this Government, whether right or wrong, we are left by the United States to work out our own salvation, and so I must decline at this time."

Claude I. Dawson, United States consul, summoned on April 10, 1920, at 11.45 a. m. In answer to his summons, Mr. Dawson replied, "I know of no reason why I should not go, except that as an official I am entirely at the orders of the State Department and can not appear except with their approval."

Frank Engle, colonist, summoned on April 10, 1920, at 5.20 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "There is nothing I could say to the committee. Of course, I have been robbed, just as have many other Americans, but not to such an extent that I could not continue on. If I could have any assurance that by going before the committee I could do any real good I would do so."

J. E. Barron, leaser, summoned on April 12, 1920, at 11 a. m. In reply to his summons, he stated, "There is a great deal I ought to tell the committee, for I have been here long enough to know of many events, but unless assured of absolute secrecy I could not go. I will see you again."

A. W. Beckley, colonist, summoned April 12, 1920, at 12 m. In reply to his summons, he stated, "The thing that keeps me from going before the committee is that the Mexicans have always been so much smarter than the Americans in these things."

I could not go up there and expect to return here, and it is vital to my interests now that I be able to come down here and look after my property."

A. G. Mason, merchant, summoned April 12, 1920, at 9 p. m. In answer to his summons, he replied, "It is impossible for me to go. I am too busy and also there is risk of jeopardizing my business if it should become known."

A. R. Bushnell, independent oil operator, summoned April 19, 1920, at 4.05 p. m. In answer to his summons, he replied, "What are the points the committee wishes to bring out? I do not think it possible to get away at this time to go up there, but I do think it would be important to have some one give the committee the reason why the unrest is so widespread here and why the disorder grows."

M. C. Moorehead, colonist, summoned April 14, 1920, at 1.15 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "A man who has lost all he has in the world but his job has to guard against losing that. I have a farm on the Atascador which I do not dare even go to see. Carranza soldiers have possession of it and are running cattle on it."

W. W. Hopps, hardware merchant, summoned April 15, 1920, at 11.45 a. m. In answer to his summons, he stated that while the Carranzistas were what everybody said they were, still he had some friends among them.

E. J. Kimball, mining man from Mexico City, summoned April 16, 1920, at 10 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "If I thought they would keep my name out of the record, I would appear."

James A. Carpenter, broker, summoned on April 17, 1920, at 9 a. m. In answer to his summons, he inquired, "Will they pay my expenses?"

P. M. Longan, manager of the International Petroleum Co., summoned on April 10, 1920, at 9.30 a. m. In answer to his summons, he replied, "I accept the summons."

Barrett Jones, assistant manager of the International Petroleum Co., summoned on April 13, 1920, at 3.15 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "It is up to my chief. I think he intends going, so that ties me here."

Wm. J. Stork, with the International Petroleum Co., summoned on April 15, 1920, at 7.15 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "Well, you know how it is. It soon developed that if a man went before the committee he could not come back here, and while Pat Longan was perfectly willing that I should go, I figure that I could not make a living in the States, so I changed my mind about going."

J. A. Brown, manager Trans-continental Petroleum Co., summoned on April 10, 1920, at 4.30 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "There is nothing I know of that would be of benefit to the committee."

H. B. Duncan, attorney, Trans-continental Petroleum Co., summoned on April 10, at 12 noon. In answer to his summons, he stated, "I have no information of sufficient value to the committee to justify me in going before them."

J. B. S. Mennett, with Island Oil Corporation, summoned on April 10, 1920, at 10 a. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "It is possible that I may find time and would be entirely willing if my testimony could be entirely confidential, but I do not feel that I could add anything that is not already at their disposal in the records of the State Department."

William Nuenhoeffer, manager, Richmond Levering Co., summoned on April 10 1920, at 10 a. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "I haven't time."

Charles W. Hamilton, manager, Mexican Gulf Oil Co., summoned on April 10, 1920, at 2.30 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "There is nothing that I can say that I know of my own experience, as most of my information is from reports coming second and even third hand. If I were a rich man like Mr. Buckley I might do so, but my livelihood is dependent on my position here which I can not afford to jeopardize."

P. J. Oliver, head of the transportation department, Mexican Gulf Oil Co., summoned April 10, 1920, at 3 p. m. F. C. Greer, pipe line superintendent, summoned at same time. These two gentlemen did not say a word, but appeared to look to their chief, Mr. Hamilton, who was present, for instructions.

Mr. ——— [name not given for obvious reasons], official of the Mexican Gulf Oil Co., summoned on April 10, 1920, at 2.15 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I would have no objection to testifying before the committee if I could be assured of absolute secrecy, but you understand that if it became known to the Carranza Government, my job would be at an end. I could not remain here and my means of livelihood would stop. I am perfectly willing, and in fact have been very active in giving confidential information to the United States consul for years, and have submitted a stack of evidence to him. Wait until I consult Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Lee" (manager and attorney respectively for the Mexican Gulf). "I am just as anxious to have the matter succeed as you, but feel like I owe a duty to the company also." After consulting these gentlemen, Mr. ——— declined to testify.

Oscar B. Franks, accounting department, Mexican Gulf Oil Co., summoned on April 12, 1920, at 7.30 a. m. In answer to my statement that I summoned him to appear before the committee he said, "No; you don't." Upon my assurance that I did and was authorized to summon him, he said, "Oh, yes; I know you can, but I won't go."

Thomas J. Lee, attorney, Mexican Gulf Oil Co., summoned on April 12, 1920, at 10 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I am disposed to accept all regular summons." Mr. Lee was evidently inclined to interpose technical objections to the summons, and since there was no disposition to compel involuntary witnesses to come, I did not press the point.

N. D. Jeffries, with Mexican Gulf Oil Co., summoned on April 14, 1920, at 1.10 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I will go and see the company at once and see if I can get off. I asked them when you were here before, and they said it would be at least 10 days before they could get a man to take my place, and that is the only answer I ever got from them." He continued, referring to a demand for 3,000 pesos made on him by the bandit leader Aguilar in August, 1919. "When I told the American consul last August about the demand for the money, he said, 'The only thing you can do is to pay it or leave (that is, leave your farm). If you can afford to pay, all right. If not, get off.' I had 300 acres of land plowed for crop, and rented it to a Mexican, but later he refused to pay any rent. I went to see the presidente municipal. He said they had orders from the Government that they could occupy, rent free, any vacant property of foreigners. I protested, but he refused to show me his authority, and I had to submit, since the consul said he could do nothing for me. I asked the man who occupied my land if he would even pay the taxes and this he refused to do. I have wanted all the time to go before the committee, but my company would not make any arrangement to release me. I will go at once to see the manager again and if they will let me off I will go before the committee at once." Mr. Jeffries did not return.

Pete Wilson, with Mexican Gulf Oil Co., summoned on April 15, 1920, at 2 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I will go see the manager and if he says that my job holds good and my expenses and salary will be paid I will go. They told me that they would do that before, but they also said that the Mexicans were watching and no one who went before the committee would be able to return, so I backed out." Mr. Wilson did not return.

Mordelo Vincent, assistant manager, Agwii Petroleum Co., summoned on April 12, 1920, at 10.15 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I don't wish to appear as a slacker or one who does not do his duty to his country, but I feel that there is nothing I can tell the committee which would justify the sacrifice I should have to make in view of the attitude of the Mexican Government."

F. X. Anglin, manager Agwii Petroleum Co., summoned on April 14, 1920, at 10 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "It is up to Mr. Vincent, as I have only been here about six weeks and have been very busy during that time."

William E. Green, general superintendent Huasteca (Mexican) Petroleum Co., summoned on April 10, 1920, at 4 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "Come in Monday about 9 or 10 a. m., and I will talk with you. I am so busy with company affairs that I do not know what to do. Such a large company as this, and only one man to handle the work." On Monday, April 14, 1920, I went to see him at 9.40 a. m., and he stated, "I do not know of a thing I could tell you. We have had so little trouble. Only two of our men have had anything out of the ordinary happen to them that would be of interest to the committee, and they can not come."

M. H. Willis, engineering department, Huasteca Petroleum Co., summoned at Tampico on April 13, 1920, at 9.15 a. m. In answer to his summons he first stated "I have no passport and Dr. Paddleford and William Green told me that any man who went before the committee was a fool. They also told me that any man who went must consider his trip as his annual vacation. Mr. Green and Dr. Paddleford further told me that the man who had been there in January had misrepresented them [in stating that the company was willing that their employees testify], and that they opposed any man going because it would destroy his usefulness to the company, and that the company had too much money at stake here to risk the reprisal that would surely be their lot if it were known that their employees testified against the Mexican Government."

I. B. Flick, field superintendent Huasteca Petroleum Co., summoned at Tampico on April 13, 1920, at 9.30 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "Of course, I would not object to going if I knew it would be absolutely secret, but at present it is impossible on account of having too much work on hand."

George de Hay, pipe-line superintendent Huasteca Petroleum Co., summoned on April 15, 1920, at 11.30 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I could not give you any answer without consulting Mr. Green, as that is a matter which involves the company, and if they approve I am sure I know some things which the committee ought to know. I will let you know later." The next day, at 2 p. m., he stated to me, "I am going down to the office now to see Bill Green and if he will agree I am going to give what I know to the committee." Mr. de Hay did not return.

Wm. L. Steed, field manager Huasteca Petroleum Co., summoned on April 16, 1920, at 5 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "That last clause lets me out. I am an unwilling witness. The United States has never done anything for me, and when we were run out of here in 1914 we had to go on German and English boats owing to the country we belong to failing us in our hour of need."

I. F. Taylor, station superintendent Huasteca Petroleum Co., Esperanza Camp, summoned on April 12, 1920, at 9 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I should like to go if I can get leave from the company, and I will go immediately to see if I can arrange for a leave. Having been diplomatic agent for the company in many of its dealings I have some interesting things I could relate to the committee" Mr. Taylor did not return.

W. E. Livingstone, manager Penn-Mex Fuel Oil Co., summoned at Tampico on April 13, 1920, at 6 p. m. I summoned Mr. Livingstone in the presence of the attorney of the company, Mr. Lipscomb, and his reply, addressed partly to me and partly to the attorney, was, "I don't know; we might take a vacation."

J. A. Lipscomb, attorney Penn-Mex Fuel Oil Co., summoned on April 10, 1920, at 5.20 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "I would not object to doing all I can for the general good. Perhaps I may be able to get to the States in time to appear before the committee."

Harry Kipp, representing an oil company whose name I do not remember, summoned on April 10, 1920, at 12.30 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "I could not do any good by appearing before the committee."

Dan Moran, manager The Texas Co. of Mexico, summoned on April 12, 1920, at 10.45 a. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "I am not as bitter as some toward the Mexicans. Too many Americans come down here and invite trouble by their attitude and by misunderstanding the Latin mind. Bonillas is a very highly educated engineer, much smarter than the average American." He added that he thought Bonillas would be the next president and that conditions would be all right under him. Referring back to the matter in hand again, he said, "I thought Bill Buckley told the committee all they wanted to know."

I. S. Broun, agent Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, summoned on April 12, 1920, at 3.30 p. m. In answer to his summons, he stated, "Our activities here are confined to a small refinery and so our own experiences are not worth mentioning. Although I have been here eight years, my knowledge is all second-hand regarding affairs in general."

H. A. Ellis, manager Atlantic Refining Co., summoned at Tampico on April 12, 1920, at 5 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I do not think anything I could tell the committee would be of any consequence, but I want to assure you that my inclination is to wish that I could. My company has suffered very little compared with some."

H. M. Wilson, manager of the InterOcean Oil Co., summoned on April 14, 1920, at 10.30 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I have been here 2½ years but have experienced nothing worth mentioning."

O. C. Hasbrouck, manager Pierce Oil Corporation, summoned on April 14, 1920, at 11.45 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I have been in this country about 2½ years, 2 years in the vicinity of Tepetate, and I should like to appear before the committee if I can get away. My sympathy and inclination are for the cause."

George G. Hunt, manager of the Union Oil Co., summoned on April 14, 1920, at 4.45 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I don't think there is one of the Americans connected with the oil industry here who would not be pleased and immensely gratified if they could assist in every way possible, but we have to consult the interests of our principals, and the moral duty we owe them, and keep up the work which guarantees against loss large sums of money invested in plants, and the entire fabric of the industry would be destroyed if we deserted, as we surely would if we knowingly exiled ourselves from our work by appearing before the committee."

H. J. Kidder, superintendent Pierce Oil Corporation, summoned on April 14, 1920, at 5.15 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "There is nothing our company would care to lay before the committee, as we have very little to relate."

W. H. Sharp, manager of the Freeport Mexican Fuel Oil Co., summoned on April 15, 1920, at 10 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "Am very busy and do not think it will be possible for me to get away, but will be glad to appear before the committee if it is possible."

Walter Tschuden, assistant manager, Freeport Mexican Fuel Oil Co., summoned on April 15, 1920, at 9.45 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "No, don't subpoena me; I don't know anything."

Benjamin Buchanan, National Petroleum Corporation, summoned on April 15, 1920, at 11.30 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "Our operations in the field are very limited and as a consequence we have very little of interest to relate. I have been reading the reports of the findings of the committee and think they are doing great work."

Mr. Posey, with Continental-Mexican Petroleum Co., summoned on April 15, 1920, at 11 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "We have no information of importance. Have been held up and robbed, but that might have happened anywhere. What I know would appear very trivial."

R. B. Keys, assistant manager, National Oil Co., summoned on April 15, 1920, at 1.45 p. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "It is not a case of unwillingness to appear, but rather we are too busy to attend to any matters outside of our company."

William Stevens, field superintendent, New England Fuel Oil Co., summoned on April 16, 1920, at 11 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I am perfectly willing to go if Capt. Blackmon gets back in time. He is away for a month."

W. O. Fitch, with New England Fuel Oil Co., summoned on April 10, 1920, at 9.30 a. m. In answer to his summons he stated, "I would like to appear before the committee if it is possible to do so."

You will perceive from the above answers that almost without exception the subordinate employees of the oil companies and independent Americans of small means were desirous of testifying, but that, in view of the threat of the Carranza government not to permit them to return to Mexico if they should tell the truth about conditions in that country, and the attitude of the oil companies in not only refusing to protect such men as might testify but also in actively opposing the desire of their employees to appear before the committee, they felt that they were not justified in making the individual sacrifice involved in testifying; they had long ago lost faith in their Government, and when the only hope that remained—the influence of the oil companies—was denied them, they declined to testify.

During my last trip to Tampico I received the impression from a number of sources that while I was negotiating with the managers during the latter part of January a definite decision had been reached not to cooperate with your committee. In order to ascertain the truth I applied to the secretary of the Managers' Association, Mr. J. A. Brown, but was unable to receive any satisfaction. I also called on Mr. Thomas J. Lee, Mr. D. C. McCuen and Mr. H. B. Duncan, the attorneys constituting the committee to cooperate with me, who insisted that the companies were most anxious to cooperate with me. I arrived in New York on the 26th of this month, and yesterday, the 27th, called on Mr. Chester O. Swain, the president of the Oil Association, and asked him for copies of the telegrams which I understood had been exchanged between him and the secretary of the managers association in Tampico. Mr. Swain gave me these copies. In this connection I wish again to call your attention to the fact that the meeting of the managers' association that Mr. Longan and I attended occurred on the 27th of January; that my meeting with the committee appointed by that association to cooperate with me occurred on the 28th of January, and that Mr. Longan's subsequent meeting with the managers' association occurred on the 3d day of February.

From the copies handed to me by Mr. Swain, it develops that, on January 13, three days after I attended the meeting of the oil association in New York, Mr. Swain sent Mr. Brown the following telegram:

"Pat returning Tampico important message. All managers authorized to cooperate fully in matter."

On January 28, the day after I met with the Managers' Association in Tampico, and the same day I met with the committee of attorneys appointed by that association for the purpose of cooperating with me, the secretary of this association, Mr. J. A. Brown, wired Mr. Chester O. Swain as follows:

"Referring to special message brought by Pat, we find individual who talked with you in New York wants to make sensational publicity by taking nearly 120 (?) employees of oil companies and colonists from here to testify. He asks for three landmen and a camp cashier from the Transcontinental Oil Co. We think his methods are sensational, political, advertising, and will hurt relation of oil companies to Government of this country at a time when this is particularly undesirable. Records of occurrences in oil country are on file and can be obtained by committee by request to Department of State. If you approve and instruct us to give to him everything required will do so. Please wire."

On January 31, three days before Mr. Longan again met the Managers' Association, and seven days before I left Tampico, Mr. Swain telegraphed Mr. Brown as follows: "Replying your telegram January 28, association accepts judgment of local managers in matter and withdraws instructions sent through Pat."

Comments on these interesting telegrams would be superfluous. Although the decision not to cooperate was made on January 31, three months ago, the oil companies had not communicated this decision to Judge Kearful, Mr. Buckley, or myself.

I wish to call your attention to the statement in the telegram of the 28th of January that "the individual who talked with you wants to make sensational publicity by taking nearly 120 employees of oil companies and colonists from here to testify," and the further statement that "we think his methods are sensational, political, advertising, and will hurt relations of oil companies to Government of this country at a time when this is particularly undesirable," and that "records of occurrences in the oil country are on file and can be obtained by the committee by request to Department of State." The Oil Association had been apprised by Mr. Buckley and by me of the object in bringing a large group of witnesses at one time, since it was thought that such action would preclude the possibility of political persecution, and certainly the object of bringing witnesses was to inform your committee and the American people of conditions in Mexico—there could be no other object—and the more publicity given to the truth, the more desirable it would seem that these witnesses come. The oil companies had been engaged for many months in extensive propaganda having for its ostensible purpose the giving of publicity to conditions in Mexico; but from the above telegrams, it would seem that while they desire such publicity they shrink from accepting the responsibility for the same. I presume that the relations of the oil companies with the Carranza government which might be affected at this time referred to the fact that the oil companies were about to secure provisional permits to do temporary drilling, and that they feared that further publicity adverse to the Carranza Government might injure their prospects. As to the allegation that the records of such occurrences could be found in the files of the State Department, it certainly could not have escaped the observation of the managers that, in the first place, these files are not available, and in the second place, if this were the objection to cooperating, it should have been alleged in the beginning.

In view of the above, it is with great regret that I have to report to you that my mission to Tampico has failed to result in testimony before your committee of the most vital nature with regard to the critical situation in the oil fields, due to the refusal of the oil companies to cooperate with your committee, and that my mission was rendered more difficult and the time and money expended were in excess of what they should have been because of the unfortunate breach of faith on the part of the oil companies. It had been my understanding that the oil companies were desirous of having the facts with regard to Mexico, and especially with regard to their persecution and the maltreatment and assassination of their own men, presented to the committee, and I had proceeded on this theory. I found that the managers were anxious to shift responsibility to their principals in the States, and that the latter were equally determined to shift the responsibility to the managers, and that all desired to profit by the endeavors of your committee without assuming the risk of cooperation in so far as my work was concerned.

The failure of the oil companies to present their case to the American people and to inform the legislative branch of their government of a situation concerning which they have complained so bitterly for the last few years, was so incomprehensible to me that I endeavored to ascertain if there were any motives that prompted this unusual conduct outside of their unfortunate timidity, and developed the opinion of several managers that may to some extent explain this attitude, and which I believe will be interesting to the committee. Several of these gentlemen charged that the work of this committee was purely political and that the committee was not endeavoring in good faith to alleviate conditions in Mexico. This impression was confirmed in a conversation recently with a high official of the Oil Association, in which this gentleman stated that he had never had much confidence that the investigation would accomplish any ultimate good, since he believed that certain members of the committee were actuated by personal, political motives instead of a desire for the amelioration of conditions in Mexico.

Respectfully yours,

S. D. LESTER.

216 f

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS

HEARING

BEFORE A

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS UNITED STATES SENATE

SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS

SECOND SESSION

PURSUANT TO

S. Res. 106

DIRECTING THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS TO INVESTIGATE THE MATTER OF OUTRAGES ON CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES IN MEXICO

PART 17

Printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1920

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, Massachusetts, Chairman.

PORTER J. McCUMBER, North Dakota.

WILLIAM E. BORAH, Idaho.

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE, Connecticut.

ALBERT B. FALL, New Mexico.

PHILANDER C. KNOX, Pennsylvania.

WARREN G. HARDING, Ohio.

HIRAM W. JOHNSON, California.

HARRY S. NEW, Indiana.

GEORGE H. MOSES, New Hampshire.

GILBERT H. HITCHCOCK, Nebraska.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, Mississippi.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON, Virginia.

ATLEE POMERENE, Ohio.

MARCUS A. SMITH, Arizona.

KEY PITTMAN, Nevada.

JOHN K. SHIELDS, Tennessee.

C. F. REDMOND, Clerk.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

ALBERT B. FALL, Chairman.

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE

MARCUS A. SMITH.

DAN M. JACKSON, Clerk.

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

FRIDAY, MAY 14, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, at 11 o'clock a. m., in room 128, Senate Office Building, Senator Albert B. Fall presiding.

Present: Senators Fall (chairman) and Brandegee.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

The chairman made the following statement:

Under Senate resolution 335, Sixty-second Congress, second session, a subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate was directed to make an investigation of Mexican affairs. The subcommittee was composed of the following Senators: William Alden Smith, Michigan, chairman; Porter J. McCumber, North Dakota; William E. Borah, Idaho; Benjamin F. Shively, Indiana; Gilbert M. Hitchcock, Nebraska.

Later, by the adoption of a resolution to that effect, offered by Senator Cullom, the then chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Albert B. Fall, of New Mexico, was designated as a member of said committee.

The resolution under which the committee was constituted and directed to act is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations or a subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized and directed to inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report whether any persons, associations, or corporations, domiciled in or owing allegiance to the United States, have heretofore been or are now engaged in fomenting, inciting, encouraging, or financing rebellion, insurrection, or other flagrant disorder in Cuba or Mexico against the lawful, organized Governments of those countries.

Resolved further, That said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to summon witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to take and secure whatever testimony and evidence may be required to ascertain and report upon the matters aforesaid; and said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized for the purposes aforesaid to sit wherever necessary and act as well when Congress is not in session as when in session.

Resolved further, That the said committee is hereby directed to report the result of its said investigation and inquiry to the Senate during the first month of the next session of Congress; and the expenses incurred by such investigation and inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

The committee opened its hearings on September 7, 1912, at El Paso, Tex., and continued same at various points along the border and in the United States until the latter part of December, 1912.

The evidence, documentary and otherwise, taken by this committee was printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but no report of the committee upon the subject of its investigations was ever filed either with the Foreign Relations Committee or with the Senate.

Senator Fall, chairman of the subcommittee conducting the present hearings, prepared a report upon certain phases of the investigation: that is to say, particularly upon the question as to funds used by the Madero and other revolutionary factions in the overthrow of the Diaz government. This typewritten report was prepared about March 1, 1913, and submitted to Senator Smith, chairman of the subcommittee conducting the 1912 hearings.

Later, that is to say, on or about June 1, 1913, having ascertained that this report had not been presented to the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Fall presented a copy of the typewritten report to the then chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate, Augustus O. Bacon, of Georgia.

This report apparently was never considered by the Foreign Relations Committee, nor by the Senate, nor was same printed for the use of the Senate or otherwise.

In conducting the present hearings this committee would have sought and taken testimony in addition to that which it has secured had some portions of such testimony not been covered by the work of the committee in 1912, and had it not been for the fact that such testimony is embraced in the printed report of hearings of 1912, a copy of which printed report, consisting of 918 pages of printed matter, is in the possession of the present committee, the greater portion of the evidence, documentary and otherwise, embraced in the report referred to having been taken by or in the presence of Mr. Fall, chairman of the present committee.

Certain portions of the evidence taken in the 1912 hearings and included or set forth in the printed document referred to are, in the opinion of this committee, material in the present hearings, and same are ordered printed and will be considered as a portion of the hearings and evidence taken in the present proceedings. Such portions will be printed as the hearings and as of the proceedings of this day, and follow this statement.

The report submitted by the chairman of this committee to the Foreign Relations Committee in June, 1913, will also be printed, following the evidence now submitted.

EVIDENCE TAKEN BY THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE IN 1912, UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 335, SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., September 18, 1912.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senator Smith of Michigan (chairman) and Senator Fall.

Present also: Mr. A. I. McCormick, United States attorney for the southern district of California, and Mr. Dudley W. Robinson, assistant United States attorney for the southern district of California.

STATEMENTS OF DUDLEY W. ROBINSON AND A. I. McCORMICK.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am the assistant United States attorney for the southern district of California. I first became interested in any way in the Mexican situation when preparing to prosecute the case of the United States against Ricardo Flores Magon and others upon a charge of violating the neutrality law by forming a conspiracy to enlist men to go to Mexico to fight as soldiers against the Mexican Government.

In the inception of the case our officers seized the plant of a paper known as El Regeneracion, which was the official organ of the so-called Mexican Liberal Party and of the Mexican junta of which Ricardo Flores Magon was the head in Los Angeles and which was conducted at the headquarters of the Mexican junta in Los Angeles.

At the same time we seized all the correspondence we could find, both of the junta and the newspaper.

In looking through this correspondence we found that the junta had sent broadcast throughout the country——

Senator FALL. Throughout which country?

Mr. ROBINSON. Throughout the United States copies of this paper; sent them out freely whenever anyone requested that they be sent to any place where they might be distributed.

In answer to the pamphlets and papers and articles in this newspaper the junta and the Magons individually received replies from all over the United States.

From my acquaintance with the localities in New York City and elsewhere from which a great many of these replies came, and from my acquaintance with some of the families, and I might say also that from responses that they received from some people in Los Angeles and vicinity, I became convinced that a great many very respectable people and a great many respectable women were responding to their requests for assistance in furthering the cause of the Mexican Liberal Party. These donations or subscriptions were very small——

Senator FALL. You mean the individual subscriptions?

Mr. ROBINSON. The individual subscriptions were very trifling amounts, none running to more than $25 that I can remember and most of them being in amounts of $2, $3, or $5 apiece; but there were apparently a great number of them, from the number that we found covering the limited period of the correspondence which we seized.

Senator SMITH. Can you give an estimate of the total amount of money that they took in?

Mr. ROBINSON. It would be practicable impossible to do that. We never did set them out or attempt to tabulate them.

Senator SMITH. Do you think they would run into the thousands of dollars?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should say probably up to $1,000 a month any way and sometimes possibly more than that. There were subscriptions sent from various socialists throughout the country and there were contributions sent from socialistic and anarchistic organizations. Apparently small bodies would hold receptions or entertainments or take collections among themselves and send them in to the Magons for the purpose of helping along their work.

The correspondence also disclosed the fact that the Magons had agents whom they sent around to make speeches to groups of their friends, either of their own nationality or of the socialistic persuasion, and to get up receptions and entertainments and make collections for the cause.

We had a large amount of their correspondence, and a few specimens of it, selected at random, will show its character. Here are some of them:

CHICAGO, March 31, 1911.

MR. ANSELMO L. FIGUEROA,
Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR SIR: I have distributed many of the copies of Regeneracion which you have sent me, and shall distribute more. I inclose a letter from a teacher of Spanish in this city to whom I sent a bundle of the papers. My custom is to watch the ads. of teachers in the "Instruction" column of the Sunday Tribune, and, if the names and addresses are given of Spanish teachers, to send them bundles of your paper. I am also studying Spanish, and a Mr. R. L. Terwilliger, of the Hayes Hotel, Sixty-third Street and Lexington Avenue, this city, who is in my class and to whom I gave a copy of Regeneracion, said he should subscribe for it. If he has not done so, you might send him a sample copy or two and jog his memory. I find, however, that I have more papers sometimes than I can distribute, and thought perhaps you had better cut down my allowance, sending me a bundle once a month, or at most twice a month.

I do not think there are many Spanish people here and few who are studying the language.

With best wishes for your success, I am,

Very truly, yours,

IDA CROSS,
6242 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, November 19, 1910.

MR. ANSELMO L. FIGUEROA, Ed.,
Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR COMRADE: I see your appeal in the Daily Socialist and herewith inclose check for $10. I should like $2 of it to apply on a year's subscription for me, although if the money is worth more to you as a donation you are welcome to all of it without a subscription to myself. Also, if you desire to give me sub cards for the rest or any part of it, I will give to Spanish people, in which way you may increase your circulation. Of course, I presume three or six month subs. are better than a year's as in that way the paper becomes more extensively known. However, please do as you wish, as I desire it as a gift to do with as you think best to advance the interests of your paper.

Fraternally,

IDA CROSS.

P. S.—Please send correspondence to my business address, care of The Public, room 205, No. 357 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., but send the paper to me at 6242 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago, third flat, as papers get mixed with exchanges when they come to this office.

Check Central Trust Co. of Illinois, No. 192, $10.

CHICAGO, June 3, 1911.

DEAR COMRADE MAGON: To-day St. John spoke to me of a man that can give any general representing Madero a grand reception providing they cross the border to attack Lower California. I understand he can also get help to consummate his work.

This may interest you. I am writing it therefore, that you may if you wish avail yourself of his service. He likewise is being notified of this and may be of some assistance to you.

Trusting that the boys in Lower California will be aided much more in the future than in the past,

I remain yours sincerely, for the revolution,

J. MENKE.

P. S.—This man's address in Dan Dawson, 606 and 608 Second Street, El Paso, Tex.

If I can be of more service to you in Los Angeles than here please let me know.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF., June 5, 1911.

R. F. MAGON, Esq.,
Los Angeles.

COMRADE: You will remember me as I had several lengthy talks with Comrade Figueroa in regard to the establishment of a grocery among the Mexicans about Los Angeles. But I don't want to talk about that. Yesterday noon when I arrived here from "Los" I went into Kaspar Bauer's curio store to have a little talk with him. He showed me a letter which he had just finished writing you, and in which he resigned as member of the local junta. He said war in Lower California ought to be discontinued and Madero be given a chance as to show what he would do for the people of Mexico. I talked against this policy and he in its favor. We had quite an argument. I did not tell him all I thought though, but I will tell you. Bauer has been bought off, and so has Pryce if he does not return. The former told me that Turner also was for quitting. I don't know whether this is true or not, but if it is true then he also has been bought off.

Better appoint some of your own countrymen as members of the junta, and on with the revolution.

Yours, fraternally,

OTTO KAPPLIN,
Rural Delivery No. 3.

We, undersigned old soldiers, having fought 50 years ago against slavery, send this as an encouragement for the Mexicans who now fight against beurocrat-capitalist tyranny.

S. B. Kyle.....	Cents. 25
J. C. Cole.....	25
D. W. Lindeday.....	25
R. A. Kennedy.....	25
H. T. Engle.....	25
A. J. Helmuth.....	25

SOLDIER'S HOME, CALIF., March 19, 1911.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 13, 1911.

420 WEST FOURTH STREET,
Los Angeles, Calif.

GENTLEMEN: Since I should like to offer to the Mexican insurgents the services of a friend and myself, I herewith beg of you to kindly inform me how to do so.

I am a European by birth, and have received my education in a military academy of one of the world powers, and have seen actual Army service in the same country.

My friend, Mr. Thurber, of Chicago, Ill., also has seen service.

We are both of the same age—23 years—and both of good health.

I understand there is a special demand for men who understand how to operate machine guns, and both of us are fully competent to do so.

Please inform us also as to what outfit we should need and the pay we may expect and under what conditions.

In the hope that you will have the kindness to answer at your earliest possible convenience and give us the desired information,

We are, respectfully yours,

GEO. A. RODEL,
TOM E. THURBER,
558 West Van Buren Street, Chicago, Ill.

HOPE, N. MEX., February 7, 1911.

ANSELMO L. FIGUEROA,
Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR SIR: I see by the daily papers that there is a lack of surgical care for the wounded revolutionists. If such be the case, kindly put me in communication with the proper ones, that I may get into their hospital service, where I can be of assistance to them.

Respectfully,

H. A. CRECELIUS.

HOPE, N. MEX., February 7, 1911.

JOHN KENNETH OR
EDITH L. TURNER,
Los Angeles.

DEAR COMRADES: A physician and surgeon of this town, Dr. Crecelius, aged about 30 and trained in New York, is willing to give hospital service to the cause. Write him or us as to his usefulness and where most needed.

Yours, an appeal for liberty,

S. PARKS.

Lista de gastos del dinero recibido del Sr. F. Frezleres:
Para Viage á el Cajon, Cal (Costo de Viages redondos):
De Los Angeles á San Diego..... $5. 00
De San Diego á el Cajon..... .75
De el Cajon á Flores Ranch..... 6. 00
De San Diego á Lake Side..... 3. 00
Para pagar Hotel desde el 27 de Marzo ál 30 de Abril ($3 diarios)..... 119. 75
Recibido del Sr. Fiezleres..... 120. 00
Resto 00025
Los Angeles, Calif., 5/1 de 1912.

JULIO MANCILLAS.

SEATTLE, WASH., May 29, 1911.

R. FLORES MAGON,
Organ of the Mexican Liberal Party, Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find $1, contributed in the cause of human liberty.

Yours, truly,

SADIE L. BERNSTEN.

Sottoscrizione pro-rivoluzionari Messicani:

G. Ambrosetti.....	$0. 15
G. Zanollis.....	.50
L. Rossi.....	.15
E. Bettini.....	.25
N. Caputi.....	.25
F. Caputi.....	.25
A. Scarpentì.....	.50
F. Guerrieri.....	.25
F. Cordini.....	.15
T. Minetti.....	.25
G. Marasco.....	1. 00
A. Bellettini.....	.20
P. Toce.....	.15
G. Borghi.....	.15
G. Franculli.....	.20
S. Milani.....	.15
B. Lambertì.....	.20
A. Lapento.....	.15
R. Bagnaschi.....	.25
L. Zamberletti.....	.10
A. Sabatelli.....	.10
P. Montani.....	.10
A. Giuliani.....	.10
Totale.....	5. 55
Deolotto spese postali.....	.10
Totale netto.....	5. 45

Per la sez. soc. ital. di Torrington Ct.

ANTONIO GIULIANI, Segretari.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 18, 1911.

Mr. TURNER, Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR SIR: I got your address from the Liberal Legion of S. F. and want to know if you can put me in communication with Francisco Madero, jr., or what you can do about it. I am in possession of a secret to manufacture smokeless powder at a cost of 7 to 10 cents per pound, ready for use in 30 hours. Can be used in guns, rifles, and made stronger for blasting purposes. Can make it anywhere, on the desert, mountain, and on ships. By inquiry here the cost is 30 to 40 cents per pound. As you will not be here in two weeks, I send this letter for a speedy reply. It would be a good idea to go into Mexico and manufacture it right on the spot, but I have no knowledge how to make cartridges, only the powder. This is reliable information; no American humbug.

Yours, respectfully,

M. A. REDDING,
1117 McAllister Street. City.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., May 16, 1911.

Received from Messrs. A. P. Cherback and P. H. Lefferts, members of the international committee, Mexican Liberal Party, junta, the amount of $16.10 (sixteen dollars and ten cents). This money has been used for the purchase of one rifle and cartridges and rail passage from Los Angeles to San Diego for one Russian fellow.

JOHN KOLODY.

OFFICES OF THE JUNTA OF THE MEXICAN LIBERAL PARTY, 519½ EAST FOURTH STREET,
Los Angeles, Calif., May 10, 1911.

FELLOW WORKERS: The Mexican revolution is labor's revolution, for the Mexicans have been stripped to the bone by the very powers which labor is organized to fight. It is a war of men versus money, the workers versus alien landlords and financial leeches, the people versus Wall Street.

The profits wrung from American labor have been taken across the Mexican border and used to grind out even vaster fortunes by slavery of the grossest type and the fraudulent appropriation of huge landed estates, literally given away to foreign millionaires and corporations by the corrupt financial ring that has ruled Mexico.

Forced from the land, driven into exile, and compelled to work at starvation wages, the Mexicans have been used by capital as a club. Now the Mexicans have revolted and the club is turned against the oppressor. Help us to use it effectively, striking off our chains and yours.

Help the Mexican revolution! It is your revolution, and its triumphant issue will mean your redemption, for American labor will not remain enslaved when Mexicans, just across the border, have won their economic freedom.

Help the Mexicans to win! Help them with your dollars, as they, less fortunately situated, are helping you by giving up their lives—their all.

Don't let Wall Street plunge your country into civil war by forcing on it armed intervention. Don't be Wall Street's cat's-paw. It is not Wall Street, but you, that will have to pay the awful bill. Not the Morgans and the Rockefellers, but you will be the food for powder.

Capital is straining every nerve to win this fight. Defeat it; score a victory for labor that will be decisive throughout the world.

We Mexican revolutionists have suffered everything—exile, imprisonment, the gallows. We have not flinched; we are not flinching. We are fighting, laying down our lives, living as only those who have a great cause at stake can live. Every cent you contribute will be used, and used economically, to win this fight. If we wished it, we should not dare to be false to our financial trust.

We send you copies of our manifesto, since we wish you to know where we stand. You can assist greatly by urging your trade and labor papers to publish or comment on it, for publicity is the life of every movement. We have nothing to conceal. Moreover, we beg you to correspond with us that we may give you information on any points respecting which you may be in doubt.

Unless requested not to do so, we shall publish in our official organ, Regeneración, the names of contributors, with the amounts contributed or pledged.

ORGANIZING JUNTA, MEXICAN LIBERAL PARTY,
Per R. FLORES MAGÓN.

(Stamped:) Junta Organizadora del Partido Liberal Mexicano.

Subscription List.

C. H. Axelson, 2839 Grand Avenue, Minneapolis (amount pledged weekly, 25 cents)	$1.00
C. A. Miller, 27 North Eighth Street, Minneapolis	1.00
Sam Toblin25
A. Pion25
Geo. Plish25
Social Science Club	1.00
<hr/>
Weekly pledges by Axelson, two weeks	3.75
	.50
<hr/>
	4.25

P. S.—If you can, drop me a line about what is going on on the battle field. Send me one more list and I will do what I can.

C. H. A.

Name of circulator of petition and receiver of money, C. H. Axelson, 2839 Grand Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., June 4, 1911.

MR. R. F. MAGON.

DEAR COMRADE: I was at the meeting to-day of the international committee of the Liberal junta.

I wrote J. M. Barnes, national secretary of the Socialist Party, to come to your rescue with $500 at once.

If, however, all your efforts seem destined to failure in raising money, allow me to suggest that you might be able to make a pretense of selling out the Lower California movement to Dick Ferris and the plutes that are after it. Then turn right around and use their own money against all of the plutocracy for the Mexican cause.

All is fair in war, and I would do anything to defeat the capitalist class.

Yours, fraternally,

ALEX. T. WILSON.

LIBERAL CLUB,
1876 MISSION STREET,
San Francisco.

J. K. TURNER AND EDITORS OF REGENERACION.

FRIENDS: As secretary of the Liberal Club, which was organized here last night, it is my duty to inform you that our object is to aid the revolution in every way that the laws allow us.

Boone and Morris are here from Mexicali, and are with us. We have arranged a big meeting for Friday, March 17, in conjunction with the Socialist Party and the unions.

We want you to communicate with us so that we may be able to act intelligently and effectively. We have several attorneys in our membership, and they keep us on the right side of the law.

We are getting in touch with liberal-minded people all over the country, and we will have a nation-wide protest with the aid of the Socialist Party and the unions. The people of San Francisco are waking up to the real significance of the revolution. You people want to get after the State office of the Socialist Party, and get them to start agitation. If the American people are aroused, Taft will keep his hands off. The Bulletin, local evening paper here, is strong for the revolution. Fremont Older is the editor's name.

Send 300 copies of Regeneracion at once, as we want them for Friday's meeting.

Inclosed find $10; we will have a substantial sum to send you soon. More news later.

Yours, for the cause,

JOS. MOORE,
Secretary pro tem.
M. H. MORRIS.

CARMEL, CALIF., June 12, 1911.

Mr. W. C. OWEN,
Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR MR. OWEN: Last night I wrote Magon a letter in regard to your criticism, or rather your condemnation—as you put it that way—of my latest Pacific Monthly article. I thought first of writing only to you, but reflected that probably he had not read my article himself, and perhaps not even your criticism, so that he might be deceived both as to what I said and what you said.

As I said to Magon, I do not object to honest criticism from the best of friends. However, I can not see how you could have read into my article praise of Madero. I have just gone over the article again and sincerely believe that, instead of being impressed favorably, the average reader will decidedly get an unfavorable impression of Madero from what I wrote. Of course, I did not strongly condemn him, as you would have done under the same circumstances. But that does not mean that I praised him. I wish you would go over the article again and see if you can find anything that can fairly be called praise. I said that Madero had (the article was written over two months ago) so far been a great strength to the revolution; but I immediately went on to point out that it was his money that had been the strength rather than he; that he was a prominent figure in the revolution rather because of his money than because of his personality or his program. Certainly this is far from praise.

This seems important to me, because I know there will be a good many readers of Regeneration who will not read my article, people who will misunderstand what I said by reading what you said, who will think I have written an indorsement of Madero. Some of these will feel less friendly to me; some, perhaps, will feel less friendly to Magon—believing that I have written against Magon. This I have not done. I have tried to do a work that need not take sides between any party fighting against Diaz, but you can not but agree with me that in my writings I have given the Liberal Party more than a shade the better of it, and in what other things I have done all has been done for the Liberal Party.

I have never attempted or desired to make friends with Madero. I do not wish to be thought of as having praised Madero. I have not praised him. I will therefore ask you, in all fairness to me, in your next issue either to print an article in which you say on a second reading you went too far in saying that I praised Madero or print all that I said about Madero and the Liberal Party—there is not much of it—or at least print such a part as will cause no misunderstanding of me in the minds of your readers.

Trusting that you will set me right in this, I remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

JOHN KENNETH TURNER.

LOS ANGELES, June 1, 1911.

JAMES DUNN, Point Loma.

DEAR FRIEND: I am writing these few lines to give you the facts of my case. I was unable to call on you when I passed through San Diego. I just received your letter the last evening in Tijuana. Pryce and I left there to confer with the junta. The officers all knew that Pryce was coming up. We did not think it advisable to inform the boys. I decided to come at the last minute. Neither one of us took a cent from the funds. I had a few dollars which I made by selling a plant of curios, etc., which I had discovered. On account of the junta not assisting us, we have had a hard time to get ammunition, etc. We raked in about $850 from license fees, etc., and were holding it with the intention of getting fieldpieces and machine guns, expecting the junta to come through with rs. and amm. They have been receiving contributions right along and never came through with a gun or a cartridge. But that was not the worst. They did not send anyone down to transact the official business of the town, excepting toward the last they sent one down to handle the customs. All they ever did was to write letters of congratulation. Mayol got away from us on account of lack of ammunition. When we marched from Little's ranch Pryce sent a letter to the junta asking that 20,000 rounds be sent to Tijuana to be ready for us when we arrived. They did not do this, nor did they even reply to the letter. If this had been sent we could have marched directly on Ensenada before Mayol could have started from Bee River. To make a long story short, it disgusted us so much that we decided to quit. Even after Madero had won out and declared us to be filibusters, etc., the junta did not visit us. Only through the papers we learned of their intentions. J. K. T. visited us while at the fort and said that we could not fight both the feds. and Maderists, as the junta wanted us to do. We had a meeting of the officers when we got back and practically decided to throw it up. We were leary of the Mexicans and did not know how to go about it for the best. We were afraid that on account of the junta still ordering us to continue the fight that if we had a meeting of the boys and declared it all off the Mexs. would call us all filibusters, etc., and start a young civil war amongst us. On the other hand, we figured that if Pryce blew, the bunch would disappear. Your gun was stolen by some one. It was in Schmidt's company, and I showed him your letter, but he did not appear to be very eager to return it; next I heard it was gone. He was out of town when I left or I would have seen him about Nolan, though he would not have moved in the matter, I know. He was all for B Company. He caused lots of ill feeling amongst the boys. If a saddle or horse was stolen, B Company had it. Pryce had already sent $10 up to you when I spoke to him about your letter. I wanted to send you another 20, but it was too late.

June 3.

Just saw James; he tells me you are down there. I did not think you were ready to leave the hospital so soon. I was hoping that this letter would reach you in time to prevent you from going down. As far as I can see, the game is up—that is, the financial end of it—and I do not feel like risking my life for nothing. However, you may look at it in a different light. Would like to see you and have a long talk with you. My next move will be either South America or the South Seas. James says you are all right except for the bullet in the shoulder. Hope you get it out soon.

Well, this is all now. If you wish to keep in touch with me, address me care of Dick Ferris; he is a good fellow and can be trusted. Am looking forward to a letter from you. Au revoir.

Ever, your friend,

MELBOURNE

Address: C. W. Hopkins, care of Dick Ferris, U. S. Grant Hotel, San Diego.

P. S.—When you have read this, burn it.

P. P. S.—Will write further when I receive an answer from you. Am working on the "Pearl" proposition.

1876 MISSION STREET, April 5, 1911.

R. F. MAGON:

Yours of 4th and night letter just received. All is ready here. Araujo wrote a few days ago saying that he could not bring slides and that Turner could not come. That made things bad for a while, but we will do the best we can, and all will be well.

I appreciate the harsh conditions under which you work in the office. The same is true of the situation here. Lots of froth and sympathy, but dam little actual work.

After I see Turner and A. I may be able to do something in regard to helping you in the office. I have been working hard on the unions but have had to carry the fight practically alone. I succeeded in getting the hall free for the meeting—a matter of $25—and may secure other support.

Let me assure you once more of the sincere friendship and high esteem in which I hold such men and women as yourself and the others who are giving your lives for humanity.

Yours, for the cause,

JOE MOON,
Secretary Liberal League.

BRAWLEY, CALIF., June 7, 1911.

EDITOR REGENERACION, Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR SIR: A number of young men of this place, principally members of the Industrial Workers of the World, are ready and willing to give their services and lives, if necessary, to the cause of the liberals and to freedom in Lower California. Should we go at once to Tijuana, is the general in command in a position to equip us for duty in the field? Hoping to hear from you immediately in regard to this matter.

I remain yours, for industrial freedom,

THOS. M. DODSON,
Care of I. W. W. Local,
Box 485, Brawley, Calif.

Money order 549279, $1.50.

SACRAMENTO, April 23, 1911.

Mr. A. L. FIGUEROA,
Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed will find money order to amount of $1.50, for which send 50 copies of Regeneracion. This will be a standing order every week until further notice. The paper goes very well, and the 25 I received from you last week sold like hot cakes. It is the real dope all right.

Yours, for the revolution,

G. C. KRAAL,
Secretary, Independent Workers of the World,
320 M Street, Sacramento, Calif.

Check, branch of Bank of Arizona, No. 1008, $8.
Recib. y Anotado.

JEROME, ARIZ., April 20, 1911.

REGENERACION: Kindly send us four copies of your paper, for which I am herewith sending you a check for $8, and kindly send me a receipt for same.

Respectfully,

JEROME MINERS' UNION (box 786).
WOLF HOLM, Secretary.

Se le mandan, 4 Ej del, No. 34.

American Express Co. money order 2168928, $8. Pd.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 1, 1911.

MEXICAN LIBERAL PARTY,
RICARDO FLORES MAGON, Secretary,
Los Angeles, Calif.

COMRADE: In reply to your appeal for assistance, I am glad to inform you that the Socialist Party of Marion County heartily indorses the attempt of the workers of Mexico to at least wrest concessions from the new ruler, and we pledge ourselves to give every aid possible, although we have no large treasury to draw from. The total amount on hand at last meeting was voted to your assistance, amounting to $8. [Anotado.] This amount will be added to on further appeal if possible. All the requests asked for in your communication were complied with.

Best wishes for the successful conclusion of our cause.

I am, fraternally, yours,

MARCUS C. GREULING,
2541 East Fifteenth Street, Indianapolis.

Money order 631795, $5. Rds.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, 29/V/1911.

CARO COMPAGNO FIGUEROA,
Los Angeles, Calif.:

Spedisco $5.00 a pró rivoluzione Mexicana $1.00 da L. Martino ed $4.00 da is sottoscritto (Anotados).

To qui potrei avere dei fucili del governo, a buon mercato ossia da $1.50 a $2.00, per la prossima volta ti pare più conveniente che ti mando dei fucili ossia è meglio i danari?

To sono da poco tempo in questa Città perciò non ho nessuna conoscenza, ma con tutto ciò qual' cosa prometto di fare. Desidererei avere il giornale "Regeneration."

Per ora ti saluto, tuo.

P. CHIEREGO, Gen. Del., Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. ROBINSON. The literature, of which I have one specimen here in Spanish and English, a manifesto to the Workers of the World, shows by its composition that these people are of superior intelligence.

Senator SMITH. Will you give us a copy of that manifesto?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the copy of it printed in English is as follows:

MANIFESTO TO THE WORKERS OF THE WORLD.

COMRADES: For more than four months the red flag has flamed on the battle fields of Mexico, carried aloft by emancipated workers, whose aspirations are epitomized in this sublime war cry, "Land and Liberty."

The people of Mexico are right now in open rebellion against their oppressors, and taking part in the general insurrection are found the supporters of modern ideas, those convinced of the fallacy of political panaceas in the redemption of the proletariat from economic slavery, those who do not believe in the goodness of paternal governments nor in the impartiality of laws fashioned by the bourgeoisie, those who know that the emancipation of the workers ought to be accomplished by the workers themselves, those convinced of direct action, those who deny the "sacred" right of property, those who do not take up arms for the purpose of raising any master to power, but to destroy the chains of wage slavery. Those revolutionists are represented by the organizing junta of the Mexican Liberal Party (519½ East Fourth Street, Los Angeles, Calif., U. S. A.), whose official organ, Regeneracion, clearly explains its tendencies.

The Mexican Liberal Party is not fighting to destroy the dictator, Porfirio Diaz, in order to put in his place a new tyrant. The Mexican Liberal Party is taking part in the actual insurrection with the deliberate and firm purpose of expropriating the land and the means of production and handing them over to the people—that is, to each and every one of the inhabitants of Mexico, without distinction of sex. This act we consider essential to open the gates for the effective emancipation of the Mexican people.

There is also another party in arms, the anti-Reelectionist Party, whose leader, Francisco I. Madero, is a millionaire, who has seen his fabulous fortune grow with the sweat and the tears of the peons of his haciendas. This party is fighting to make "effective" the right to vote, and to found, in short, a bourgeois republic like that of the United States. This purely political and capitalist party is naturally an enemy of the Mexican Liberal Party, because it sees in the activity of the Liberals a menace to the survival of the bourgeois republic, which guarantees to politicians, to seekers for jobs, to the rich, to all the ambitious, those who would like to live at the cost of the suffering and the slavery of the proletariat, the continuance of social inequality, the capitalist system, the division of the human family into two classes—that of the exploiters and that of the exploited.

The dictatorship of Porfirio Diaz is about to fall; but the revolution will not end by this act alone. Upon the tomb of this infamous dictatorship there will stand, face to face, with arms in the hand, two social classes, that of the well fed and that of the hungry, the first upholding the interests of its caste and the second the abolition of those privileges by means of the installation of a system which guarantees to every human being bread, land, and liberty.

This formidable fight of the two social classes in Mexico is the first act of the great universal tragedy which will soon have for its stage the surface of the whole planet, and whose final act will be the triumph of the noble formula, liberty, equality, and fraternity, that the political revolutions of the bourgeoisie have not been able to crystallize into fact because they have not dared to break the backbone of tyranny, capitalism, and authority.

Comrades of all the world, the solution of the social problem is in the hands of the disinherited of the whole earth, for they only require the practice of one great virtue, solidarity. Your brothers in Mexico have had the courage to raise on high the red flag, but not to make a puerile boast with it in inoffensive manifestations through streets and plazas, which almost always terminate with the arrest and the wounding of the participators by the cossacks of the tyrant, but to sustain it firmly in the battle fields as a spirited challenge to the old society which it is trying to crush in order to build on the solid earth the new society of justice and of love.

Comrades, comply with your duty.

Signed by the Organizing Junta of the Mexican Liberal Party in the city of Los Angeles, Cal., U. S. A., on April 3, 1911.

RICARDO FLORES MAGON.
ANSELMO L. FIGUEROA.
ANTONIO DE P. ARAUJO.
LIBRADO RIVERA.
ENRIQUE FLORES MAGON.

Mr. ROBINSON. The general tone of their literature is that which is adopted by two classes of people with whom we have had a great deal to do in this section of country. One class is what is known as the Socialist Party of the more radical type and the other class is known as the I. W. W., or Industrial Workers of the World. Both of those, the radical Socialists and the I. W. W.'s, make a particular point of the contention that political action is no longer of any use to the working classes, and that direct action is the only thing which will bring about the condition which they desire; that is, that the workman shall own and control the machinery of manufacture and the product of his labor, and also have the benefits of the profits of the industry.

Senator SMITH. I heard a woman talking that on the street corner here the other night.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Robinson might call attention to the positive, unequivocal statement in their constitution and by-laws to the effect that the only thing they recognize as in any matter whatever deterring them from accomplishing their object is the power to accomplish it. In other words, they say, "We will use force if we can. The only thing that will prevent us using force is overpowering force against us."

* * * * *

You will notice in that manifesto to the Workers of the World in the second paragraph it says:

The people of Mexico are right now in open rebellion against their oppressors, and taking part in the general insurrection are found the supporters of modern ideas, those convinced of the fallacy of political panaceas in the redemption of the proletariat from economic slavery, those who do not believe in the goodness of paternal governments nor in the impartiality of laws fashioned by the bourgeoisie, those who know that the emancipation of the workers ought to be accomplished by the workers themselves, those convinced of DIRECT ACTION—

Those words "direct action" are printed in capitals.

Senator SMITH. That is revolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; in this case it means revolution.

It continues:

Those who deny the "sacred" right of property, those who do not take up arms for the purpose of raising any master to power, but to destroy the chains of wage slavery.

In other words, in this part of their propaganda they put their revolutionary movement upon the basis of a movement for what Mr. McCreary defined yesterday in our talk as a socialistic Utopia.

Senator FALL. To be brought about by force?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; to be brought about by force, and to find its base in Lower California; in Mexico if they could accomplish it throughout Mexico, but in Lower California if they could not get the main body of the country.

Senator FALL. As a matter of interest I call attention to the fact that during the Madero revolution Ricardo Flores Magon had a party of armed men in the State of Chihuahua, numbering, as nearly as I could ascertain, approximately 100, who were taking part in the revolution, and who refused to acknowledge Mr. Madero or any other one man as a leader, and who were driven out of Orozco's camp because they were purely socialists. Orozco finally ran them out of Chihuahua and was denounced by Ricardo Flores Magon for not being a true socialist and patriot.

Senator SMITH. When was this?

Senator FALL. This was before the capture of Juarez in the original revolution. Those Magonistas, as they were called, were driven out of the State of Chihuahua by the insurrectos in that State and were not allowed to affiliate with them at all, and the Magonistas in turn denounced the revolution as it was being carried on there because it did not meet with their approval, and they were trying to carry it into Lower California.

Mr. ROBINSON. The manifesto to which I have referred is worth reading on account of the clear exposition of exactly the same sort of doctrines as are contended for by the Socialists, and which find place in the literature of the Industrial Workers of the World.

Mr. ROBINSON. The appeal made by the Magons to the men in Mexico and the appeal to those who were sent from the United States to fight in Mexico was placed upon another basis. The men who were enlisted were not always exactly volunteers. Of course, they went voluntarily, but they were persuaded by agents of the Magons. These volunteers were given their bare expenses to get to the Mexican line. There was no money consideration given to them.

Senator FALL. They were armed, were they?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; not always here. They were told where they could go and get the arms on the other side.

Mr. McCORMICK. The difficult thing in our prosecution was to prove that the expedition was of a military character, and in that connection I may state that the Magonistas were constantly advised by the best attorneys, who posted them on the neutrality laws, and for that reason they kept everything absolutely secret which had anything of a military character attached to it at all. In other words, their idea was, "You go down to the Mexican line and do not be a soldier or indicate in any way that you are a soldier until after you get across the line. Then you will find so and so and will immediately receive your gun and ammunition." That is correct, is it not, Mr. Robinson?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. They clearly thought in their operations, since the trial at Tombstone three or four years ago, that they had now found a way to get around the law, so that if they sent these men down there and did not give them arms but just told them, "Go down there, if you will, and we will pay your fare, because it is a favor to you; you are friends of humanity," they thought it would be all right; and they had a form of enlistment blank which appeared upon its face to be merely a certificate of membership in the Mexican Liberal Party, a political organization, but which really enrolled them as a part of their army down there.

Senator SMITH. What proportion of these volunteers were Mexicans?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should say something over half of those who went down there, probably, were Mexicans.

Senator SMITH. Were there any other nationalities represented besides Americans and Mexicans?

Mr. ROBINSON. There was every nationality. We had a Russian who was a star witness for the Government and a very intelligent man, but he had evidently had nihilistic or anarchistic principles instilled into him. He went down there and they found him very useful in the hospital on account of his intelligence, and he was made a sort of superior nurse. There were Germans. One of their generals was Gen. Pryce, formerly of the South African mounted police. I believe they called it, who served in the Boer War.

Senator SMITH. On the British side or on the Boer side?

Mr. ROBINSON. On the British side. He became a general there; but according to his story, and I believe he told the truth, he went of his own accord and was not sent there by the Magons.

Senator SMITH. A soldier of fortune?

Mr. ROBINSON. He was purely a soldier of fortune.

Mr. McCORMICK. There was an attempt made to extradite him by the Mexican Government for alleged crimes of arson, robbery, and murder, involving his operations at Tia Juana. He was in command of the rebel army which took Tia Juana, in charge of the custom-house, and I believe the evidence in the extradition case showed that he took charge of the various stores and attempted to sell off the goods and everything else. They charged him also with killing a number of people. They charged him with the murder of those individual people who were killed in the fight, and also charged that his actions in taking the goods from those stores was robbery or larceny or whatever it may be under the treaty.

But the point I desire to bring out is that he being a British subject, the British Government took an active interest in this case. The Secretary of State wrote me a personal letter about it, informing me or instructing me, through the Attorney General, to keep them advised right along, and not to let him be finally extradited until I told them of it.

Senator SMITH. Was this an expedition which started from the United States?

Mr. McCORMICK. It started from the United States. They denied the extradition on the ground that the evidence showed that everything was political in character, and that is not extraditable.

Senator FALL. The British Government interfered in his behalf?

Senator SMITH. Was he ever extradited?

Mr. McCORMICK. He was not.

Senator FALL. Our State Department did not interfere with reference to the extradition of the American citizens, did it?

Mr. McCORMICK. No.

Senator SMITH. Go ahead.

Mr. ROBINSON. The main part of their promise to these enlisted men was that on the successful termination of the war each man would receive 160 acres of land in Mexico and probably in Lower California, but at any rate in whatever part of Mexico the army of the Mexican Liberal Party could succeed in acquiring.

Some of the volunteers of other nationalities were promised more than that. One colored man who was a valiant fighter said he was promised two horses and a couple of guns and some revolvers, and he was given the privilege of always carrying two revolvers. He was formerly a soldier in the American Army.

Senator SMITH. He was not very high priced at that, was he?

Mr. ROBINSON. That was a part of their arrangement with the volunteers.

Now, I will try to get back to the question of how they got the money to send them down there, and where the money came from, as far as I can state it, and connect that with the use of the money by the junta—by the Magons.

In their manifesto, as well as in articles in their newspaper, and in the teaching of their prophets who went about and addressed the people here and in San Diego and along the Mexican border, in fact all over this part of the country, they sent out the same message that is found in the manifesto to the Workers of the World, in this language:

Agitation— That is the supreme recourse of the present time. Individual agitation of the class-conscious workers; collective agitation of labor organizations and of groups organized for liberal propaganda; systematic agitation of the labor press and of free thought; agitation in the street, in the theater, in the street cars, in meetings, in the bosom of the home, in every place where you can find ears disposed to listen, consciences capable of indignation, hearts which are not calloused by the injustice and brutality of their environment; agitation by means of letters, manifestos, leaflets, of conferences, of meetings, by whatever means it may be possible, making clear the necessity of working at once and with vigor in favor of the radical revolutionists of Mexico, who need three important things: A world-wide protest against the interference of the powers in Mexican affairs, class-conscious workers determined to propagate the doctrines of social emancipation among those not class conscious, and money, money, and more money for the support of the social revolution in Mexico.

Then it goes on to say:

Comrades, reprint this manifesto, translate it into every language, and circulate it in every corner of the world. Ask the labor press to insert it in its columns. Read Regeneracion, and send your piece of money to the organizing junta of the Mexican Liberal Party, 519½ East Fourth Street, Los Angeles, Cal., United States of America.

So that their story came down to a question of money—contributions, small or large, any kind that they could get—but they spent very little of that money in the fight, in supplying anything to the army in Mexico or in Lower California. They spent almost nothing for ammunition. They were niggardly when they were asked to send hospital supplies. Here is a letter which illustrates that:

CALEXICO, CALIF., May 12, 1911.

ST. FLORES MAGON,
Pres. Junta Liberal, Los Angeles, Calif.

SIR: Some time ago I wrote to you on the subject of payment for medical services to wounded insurgents at Mexicali, but as yet I have received no reply. Allow me to repeat that each and every leader of the troops there, Berthold, Leyna, and Salinas, and also Capt. McDonald, whose leg I was able to save, gave me their personal guarantee that I would be paid. You know the value of these guarantees as well as I do. My attendance included several night calls and much time, and in addition there was a sum of several dollars for surgical dressings and medicines which I paid out. At that time there was absolutely nothing in the way of supplies for wounded. It seems to me grossly unjust to expect such service from a stranger and not pay him, and I therefore request to be informed if there is any responsible authority to whom I can apply for settlement of a just claim. The amount of my bill is $31.50.

Yours, respectfully,

WM. FAWCETT SMITH, M. D.

Senator SMITH. Proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Money was collected from the spoils taken by various of the men down there. The foreign legion, as you might call them, were sent up here for the purpose of buying a machine gun, and there was quite a dispute between the generals in Lower California and the Magons up here as to what became of the money for the machine gun, because the machine gun never materialized, and yet the money went into the treasury. So they spent practically nothing down there. On the other hand, as soon as the town of Mexicali was taken by their forces, and as soon as Tia Juana was taken by their forces, and two or three other small places were taken, the junta immediately sent one of its representatives down to become collector of customs, and he promptly sent the money that he collected, and whatever he could get out of it, up here to the junta.

Senator SMITH. Have you any idea how much that aggregated?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it would be hard to say exactly, but we did have a figure given on the trial of from $300 to $500 or more a month being taken at Tia Juana. Of course there is not very much traffic across there.

* * * * *

Mr. ROBINSON. On that same point, in the supplying of arms and ammunition, there was a very illuminating incident. It was brought out during the testimony of a man named A. G. Rogers, a printer, who printed socialistic papers at that time in Los Angeles and who is now engaged in printing Socialist papers in San Diego and who was there during the I. W. W. free-speech campaign. He told how John Kenneth Turner, the author of Barbarous Mexico, gave him some money to go and buy a lot of old guns. I think they were condemned United States Army Springfield rifles. The big dry-goods store of Hamburger had them and was evidently selling them as cozy-corner ornaments, and Turner had the idea that he wanted to get them, and he sent Rogers down there and Rogers bought them, something like 50 of them, for $1.98 apiece. Those were sent down to Lower California as equipment for the army of the Mexican Liberal Party.

Senator SMITH. Those were probably the guns that the ammunition would not fit.

Mr. ROBINSON. That seems to me to show that they did not have any great source of supply, and it also shows the lavishness of their own contributions to the cause in Mexico.

Senator FALL. I do not think these people over here had any particular backing, but they were picking up subscriptions and calling on the Industrial Workers of the World and the radical, militant Socialists for help to establish a purely communistic commonwealth, and they declare in their manifesto against Madero and against anyone else for President of Mexico.

Mr. McCORMICK. Right after Madero had been victorious they came out with a long article in El Regeneracion to the effect that they did not recognize Madero at all.

Senator SMITH. Did they select that territory as the base of their propaganda because of its general chaotic condition?

Mr. McCORMICK. I think that undoubtedly had something to do with it.

Senator FALL. And, further, its geographical position.

Mr. McCORMICK. And the further fact that there was no Mexican army or navy to interfere with them. The Government once in a while ran a gunboat up and down the coast to protect the former fishing concessions, but there was practically nobody on the peninsula of Lower California to protect the Mexican interests, and never has been.

Senator FALL. This literature which they were using in this particular revolution is the same as that which Ricardo Flores Magon and his associates have been disseminating industriously in Mexico for a great many years. I think they had a paper in San Antonio at one time, but their headquarters were here and have been in St. Louis, Mo., where they published this paper. We received copies of practically the same manifestos at Cananea over four years ago. We found there they were calling for people to join the Socialist Party and to unite themselves with it. In fact, the Western Federation of Miners sent some men down there; and they asked them to co-operate. One of the Western Federation of Miners took part in the riots and was finally killed. These people were working all over Mexico, and the effect of their work has been very much more far-reaching than anyone would imagine. Then this revolution occurred in Mexico, with which they had nothing to do directly, so far as it was captained by Madero and Orozco. They took for their part Lower California, which they imagined could be more easily overcome, and where they thought they could go in and establish their government without any difficulty. That is the way I understand it.

Senator SMITH. Have you found any connection between any leading revolutionists in Mexico and these people?

Mr. ROBINSON. Not in the main part of Mexico.

Senator SMITH. Or in any one of these States?

Mr. ROBINSON. None except Bahan, Cal., and I was going to explain about what is going on there at the present time.

We were on the question of the extent of their propaganda work throughout Mexico as well as throughout the United States. In the extradition case we obtained the statement of Ricardo Flores Magon, who, under the impression that he was safe in doing it, went upon the stand and explained how they were maintaining this army in Mexico. Later on in the trial of the case we made his statement Exhibit 1 and quoted Ricardo against himself, and in that statement he tells how the organization began in St. Louis—I think it was in about 1903 or 1904. It gives the officers.

I have a translation of it, as follows (in part) :

49. To establish bonds of union with the Latin-American countries.

50. Upon the Liberal Party becoming victorious the properties of the enriched functionaries under the dictatorship shall be confiscated and the proceeds shall be applied to the compliance of the dispositions pertaining to lands, especially to restitute the Yaquis, Mayas, and other tribes, communities, or individuals, the lands which were taken away from them, and to the amortization of the national debt.

51. The first national congress to function after the fall of the dictatorship shall annul all the modifications made to our constitution by the government of Porfirio Diaz; shall reform our "Carta Magna" as may be necessary to make this program effective, creating the necessary laws for this purpose; shall regulate such articles of the constitution and other laws as may be required, and shall study all such questions as may be considered of interest for the country, whether announced in this program or not, strengthening the points herein set forth, especially with regard to labor and lands.

ESPECIAL CLAUSE.

52. It remains, on the part of the organizing committee of the Liberal Party, to notify the foreign Governments at the earliest possible moment and in the name of the party that the Mexican people do not want any more debts on the nation, and therefore they will not recognize any new debt which, under any form or pretext, the dictatorship may throw upon the nation, whether by contracting any new loans or by recognizing past obligations of no legal value. Reform, liberty, and justice.

St. Louis, Mo., July 1, 1906.

RICARDO FLORES MAGON, President.

JUAN SARABIA, Vice President.

ANTONIO I. VILLARREAL, Secretary.

ENRIQUE FLORES MAGON, Treasurer.

Prof. LIBRADO RIVERA, First Vocal.

MANUEL SARABIA, Second Vocal.

Senator SMITH. Do you find that there is sufficient strength to this movement which you have been describing for it to have been responsible for that chaotic and revolutionary movement that exists in Mexico?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that undoubtedly the propagation of that bunch of ideas throughout practically all of Mexico for a number of years, most of it coming from the United States, has placed the Mexicans in such a state of mind, considering their mental development and the peculiar appeal of the one note that these propagandists constantly strike—of ease and personal profit—that undoubtedly the great mass of them will continue to revolt until they get to the point where there are a large enough class of intelligent people there to support a strong Government, or until some arrangement is made by which they divide up the land and go through a period when they realize that they can not hold on to it.

Senator SMITH. Do you share that view, Mr. McCormick?

Mr. McCORMICK. I think so. That is my opinion.

Senator FALL. In connection with the question that Senator Smith has asked, I call attention to a translation into English of the manifesto of this junta, a part of which reads as follows:

The Mexican Liberal Party is not fighting to destroy the dictator, Porfirio Diaz, in order to put in his place a new tyrant. The Mexican Liberal Party is taking part in the actual insurrection with the deliberate and firm purpose of expropriating the land and the means of production and handing them over to the people; that is, to each and every one of the inhabitants of Mexico, without distinction of sex. This act we consider essential to open the gates for the effective emancipation of the Mexican people.

Then it goes on to say:

There is also another party in arms, the Antireelectionist Party, whose leader, Francisco I. Madero, is a millionaire, who has seen his fabulous fortune grow with the sweat and the tears of the peons of his haciendas. This party is fighting to make "effective" the right to vote and to found, in short, a bourgeois republic like that of the United States. This purely political and capitalist party is, naturally, an enemy of the Mexican Liberal Party, because it sees in the activity of the Liberals a menace to the survival of the bourgeois republic, which guarantees to politicians, to seekers for jobs, to the rich, to all the ambitious, to those who would like to live at the cost of the suffering and the slavery of the proletariat, the continuance of social inequality, the capitalist system, the division of the human family into two classes—that of the exploiters and that of the exploited.

Mr. McCORMICK. You notice that they do not hold up the American Government as a model.

Senator FALL. They say that the Madero party is endeavoring to establish such a government as that of the United States, which they are absolutely against.

Mr. McCORMICK. A statement was made in one copy of El Regeneracion to the effect that Roosevelt, who was then President, was standing in with Diaz, protecting him, and that they would finish Diaz and then take care of Roosevelt afterwards.

Senator FALL. I have among my papers a letter from an American who was present at one of the Mormon colonies, stating that Salazar, who was just leaving Chihuahua, was going through the colonies on his way to Sonora, where he now is, and stating that he and Rojas and others were coming west for the reason that they were going to receive all the assistance they needed from the Socialists of the United States; that they were themselves Socialists, and that they would get all the assistance they needed over here; that there was going to be a socialistic revolution in the United States itself which would be contemporaneous with theirs.

Mr. ROBINSON. It appears by this statement of Ricardo Flores Magon that the Mexican Liberal junta was organized in St. Louis on the 28th of September, 1905. In answer to the question, "Who is helping you—what other men?" he answered, "My brother, Enrique, Juan Serabia, Antonio Villareal, Librado Rivera, Rosalio Bustamente, and Manuel Serabia," and he says: "We agreed between ourselves, by suggestions received from some of our companions, that I should be the president of the junta, Juan Serabia vice president of it, Antonia I. Villareal secretary, and Enrique Flores Magon president, and Librado Rivera, Rosalio Bustamente, and Manuel Serabia members of the junta." He was asked in his examination:

How many divisions of men in the Mexican Army have you issued concessions to commanders?

Answer. In Lower California or in all of the country?

Question. All over the country.

Answer. I don't remember how many.

Question. In what States were those divisions?

Answer. Sonora, Chihuahua, Coahuila, Tamaulipas, Sinaloa, Durango, San Luis Potosi, La Honda, Tlaxcala, Vera Cruz, Yucatan, Tabasco, and Jalisco.

Senator FALL. That was his statement in the extradition case of Pryce?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. It served as Exhibit 1 in our prosecution of Magon and the others.

Now, there is another matter that I think I ought to tell you about. There was a set of people whom their activities touched, whom I mentioned before, the Industrial Workers of the World. A great many of them have contributed to the cause, where they took up collections among themselves. Apparently they are an irresponsible lot of people, but they manage to gather small sums together and find money when they need it for their leaders, and a great number of them went to Lower California. A number of them joined individually at Mexicali, and then quite a crowd of them went to Packard Station and formed a separate division under a man named Stanley, called Gen. Stanley.

Senator FALL. Did they not go through Arizona?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; they went through Arizona from Calexico, and through to Mexicali, and then deserted or withdrew from the main body, which was under Gen. Leyva and Berthold and Salinas at Mexicali. These three men and some others alternated in command under instructions from the junta which designated who should be in command at Mexicali. This body of men, consisting of white men and negroes, many of them Industrial Workers of the World, went to Packard Station and formed a separate battalion. Later on that battalion was under the leadership of Rhys Pryce. He became known as Gen. Pryce, and he was in command at Tia Juana at the time of the first battle of Tia Juana. Later on a greater number of the I. W. W. slipped over the line from San Diego.

Senator SMITH. What was the date of that battle?

Mr. ROBSON. I think about the 8th or 9th of May, 1910, two years ago.

Senator FALL. That was fought in the Madero revolution against Diaz?

Mr. ROBSON. Yes. I think it was along about the 8th or 9th of May.

Along toward the early or middle part of July of that same year there was another battle at Tia Juana, and in the meantime the I. W. W. had gathered a great force there and joined the army, and they chose a commander by ballot. The I. W. W. outvoted the fighting men, and put the so-called Gen. Jack Mosby, who was an I. W. W. and a ne'er-do-well, in command. He was a deserter from the United States Navy, and he told me he was a soldier of fortune by profession. I think he learned his soldiering out of yellow-backed dime novels.

Senator FALL. They deposed Pryce in favor of Mosby?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and Pryce and several of the real fighting men withdrew and came over to the United States.

Senator SMITH. Did they ally themselves with either Diaz or Madero?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; they were distinctly under Magon.

Senator SMITH. And they have no connection at all with either of the others?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; because by the time the second battle of Tia Juana took place Madero was in control, and his forces came up and fought these men and whipped them, and drove them out of Lower California.

Mr. McCORMICK. In fact, it is the Madero government that has insisted on this vigorous prosecution that we have had here.

Senator FALL. They were against Diaz, but they refused to affiliate with Madero?

Mr. ROBINSON. They were against the Government.

Senator SMITH. They had a propaganda of ideas of their own?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Then there was a great deal of activity of the I. W. W. back of them there, and that has continued since the cessation of actual fighting around San Diego right up to the present time, and the I. W. W. have cast languishing glances at Lower California, and in their ostensible fight for free speech, which the private communications of their own leaders have indicated to us was not a real free-speech fight at all, they have really been fighting to establish a center for some sort of a revolution—either to take place in this country, if an outbreak could be brought about through the outcome of the Lawrence strike, and the troubles north in the lumber regions, and the troubles in San Diego—to break out in a general uprising of the unemployed and the laboring classes of the United States, or else they would make their own sally into Lower California and there establish a separate government of their own.

With the defeat of this army at Tia Juana, the Mexican junta here had practically nothing left to fight with, and they were almost immediately arrested on this charge, on which we have recently convicted them.

Senator FALL. Magon and how many others were convicted of a violation of the neutrality laws?

Mr. ROBINSON. Four altogether—the two Magons, Librado Rivera and Anselmo L. Figueroa. They were convicted in June, 1912, in the United States district court, on the charge of conspiracy to violate the neutrality law and were sentenced to 23 months each at McNeils Island.

Mr. McCORMICK. There was another man indicted, but we were unable to apprehend him. He was Antonio de P. Araujo. He had served a term at Leavenworth Penitentiary upon a similar charge, and he was the secretary of the junta. He acted as collector of customs at Tia Juana and other places wherever the opportunity offered, and he disappeared. He has lately been reported in Canada, and sometimes reported in various other parts of the continent; sometimes in this country; but we have not been able to get him.

Mr. ROBINSON. We have now got down to the point where the army of the Magons was defeated, and shortly before the date of their arrest, when there was a new general came into the field. His name is Tirzo or Tirza de la Toba. Tirza de la Toba received a commission as general from the Magons, and a letter was written to him, which we obtained, signed by R. Flores Magon, and I think it would be very valuable for your records. I have obtained the letter from our court files and will have to return it, but I can read it. This is the letter:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., June 26, 1911.

Esteemed companion TOBA: Greetings.

I received your esteemed letter of the 23d instant. The companion who brought it informed me of the situation in which you are in. We believe that the best thing you can do at this time is not to think of recovering Tia Juana, but to march toward the southern peninsula, where there are rich towns which can give us good food and in quantity.

Your number is very small, but you can raise people in your march toward the south, and when you arrive at Santa Rosalia you will have a large number. Everything rests on the fact that you do not make an attack before you are of sufficient force. Keep yourselves out of sight as much as possible and only attack small forts.

In your march to the south, tell the brother Indians that if they unite with us they will be given lands. Take everything necessary and invite the poor to supply themselves from the granaries and warehouses of the rich. Do not molest the poor; tell them that you are fighting for the benefit of the poor class. Invite the populace to take all they need from the stores and warehouses; in this manner you will have all the poor people in your favor, who will see clearly that this fight is in their favor and against the landowners.

Invite the laborers to possess themselves of the lands and work them on their own account without recognizing the right of the rich. If the owners of the land wish to eat, let them work as the poor do. The movement continues all over the country. The press of the United States is silent on all that occurs in the interior and in the south of Mexico and tries to cause the belief that there is only revolutionary activity in Lower California. But the press in the City of Mexico speaks very clearly of the actual situation of the country. Everywhere there are mutinies; everywhere the Madero forces are disgusted, because Madero does not wish to give land. They are separating in small groups and making companies of skirmishers which very soon will be quite strong.

The important thing is not to fight superior forces for the present; and if you undertake the march by the south, we will hope that you will make a good war.

The assembly is in a desperate condition financially at this time. Unfortunately, Pryce has not sent money to this city for the support of the revolution, and, as you know, he went with the funds. If it were not for this, we would aid the assembly. However, you can secure protection so that you will lack nothing.

Do not be discouraged. We hope that soon we will have the news that you have captured a place of importance. You are a very small number, but on your road you can go raising fights until you reach Santa Rosalia, which is the most important place.

I am your esteemed companion in social revolution,

R. FLORES MAGON.

I neglected to say that the members of the Junta were arrested. I went in liberty under caution, however. They want to take the rest of the companies, but the persecutions are of no importance to us as long as there are always brave companions who are ready to continue the fight.

That is the translation of his letter to de la Toba.

De la Toba went into the mountains along the border of the neighborhood of El Campo, and has been dodging back and forth across the line. Sometimes he has been reported in the neighborhood of El Cajon, San Diego County, Calif., and at other times has been reported as having gone back across the Mexican line. Recently we have been informed that the forces of de la Toba, which were originally only about a dozen or so more men, have increased to somewhere between 100 and 200 men. Within a month an arrest was made and a prosecution started in our office on a charge against seven men of conspiracy to violate the joint resolution of Congress passed on March 14, 1912, and the President's proclamation following that joint resolution, forbidding the exportation of arms and ammunition to Mexico.

These seven men were apprehended in the neighborhood of El Cajon, near the city of San Diego, with rifles and ammunition and several empty dynamite-bomb cases in their possession. The bomb cases were pipes fixed and formed for use as dynamite bombs, with a place for a fuse, but not loaded with dynamite. These men were traveling toward the Mexican line under pretense of being engineers and surveyors. But on their way they stopped and saw a Mexican who has always been known to us to be pretty closely associated with these revolutionary movements and who lives at El Cajon, and he furnished them with a map of the water holes in that vicinity, and one of their number has confessed that they were on their way to meet de la Toba, and that this map was given to them so that they could subsist while they were hunting for de la Toba.

Senator FALL. Did that map show the water holes in Mexico?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; along the border and in Mexico. Also it showed the small towns along there, and the settlements, houses, and so on.

I have stated about the situation that we have here. I think that covers pretty nearly all of it. The paper El Regeneracion still lives and is being published. We still have the propagandist who stand in the plaza or in the street and preach on antipatriotism and the folly of obeying law.

Mr. McCORMICK. Did you tell the committee about the demonstration that took place the other day?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I did not tell them that.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think you ought to tell them that, because they want to know about the action of any corporation or association in America in connection with the revolution. The I. W. W.'s were responsible for that demonstration which occurred at the time of the sentence. In view of the sentence, and what occurred during the trial, connecting the two propositions together; I wish you would tell them about it.

Mr. ROBINSON. During the trial of the Magon case, which lasted about three weeks, the court room, or that part of it set aside for spectators, was constantly filled at first by followers of the Mexican Liberal Party.

Senator FALL. Principally Mexicans?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mostly Mexicans. In fact, at first they apparently were all Mexicans, the men and women alike wearing the red badge of the Mexican Liberal Party in the court room. Every morning as we began the trial we would turn around toward the back of the room and face a solid phalanx of the wearers of the red.

As the trial progressed, the corridors in the morning and at the noon intermission, and as we came out in the afternoon, became more and more crowded, and known members of the I. W. W. were seen mingling with the crowd—numerous men who were identified by our officers and investigators as having participated in the rioting at San Diego. Some of them were men who had been in Lower California in the revolution, and one whom I personally recognized was a member of the gang that was prosecuted here for an attempt to dynamite the Hall of Records, and among them were more dangerous labor union agitators, the "wrecking crew" of the labor union gang here in Los Angeles. The I. W. W.'s and the labor union men became more and more numerous, and toward the end of the trial they just about equally balanced the Mexicans who were in the court room and in the corridors.

EL PASO, TEX., Tuesday, October 8, 1912.

The committee met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senator Fall.

STATEMENT OF BRAULIO HERNANDEZ.

Authoritatively and in unmistakable terms I state the following: The political campaign against Gen. Diaz was expensed by the leader and the Vazquez Gomez brothers, but in Chihuahua we did the campaigning without their aid.

From Mr. Madero we got only $100 for stock sold to him by the printing company, publisher of The Cry of the People, official organ of the party in the State of Chihuahua.

In October, 1910, I went to San Antonio to tell the leader that if he was not going to proclaim the war that we would. He gave me $100 to start the revolution.

The money that I left to my family when we went to the front ($100) was from a collection that Mr. Abraham Gonzalez had raised in Chihuahua from among some wealthy men. Said collection amounted to not over $400, $200 being from Don Alberto Madero, who, after having promised that help, had to be hunted up all around for four days to collect the money.

In November, the 14th, Alfonso Madero sent to Mr. Perfecto Lomelin the amount of $2,500, plus $1,600 two days afterwards.

The 20th of the last-named month I received from Mr. Alfonso Madero's hands $1,800. I had to wait four days for the money, which was sent from New York. I knew, for about that time that Alfonso had to pawn his ring to send a party away with a message.

In January, the first week, Mr. Gonzalez obtained a few hundred dollars from the Maderos, but very soon we were again in dire need, and Jose de la Luz Sota went to see Madero, sr., to plead for some money; succeeding in moving his heart; he gave $2,000.

Mr. Gonzalez again wrote to the leader, and he sent us $200. That we did not dare to use, because he said that they were of his particular and private expenses.

When the leader came to El Paso from Dallas he had to exchange one of two golden pieces that his mother had presented him as a memento when he undertook to enter into Mexico at the beginning of the revolution.

The provisional President and his brother were hidden in my home here in El Paso during 22 days. The treasurer of the junta gave me only $10 for the maintenance of my illustrious guests. When they left, Raul promised my wife to send her, "when their fortune would turn," the money to pay their wash bill. Undoubtedly their fortune has not changed yet, neither mine, as Gustavo Madero has refused to pay me a bill owed ever since November 4, 1910.

The provisional governor of Chihuahua, to cross the line into Mexico (with Mr. Madero), borrowed from a friend $30; of them, $5 were for me.

When Lic. Gonzalez Garza, at present governor of the federal district, came to take my place as chief of the junta, as the Maderos saw the possibilities of a near triumph, Gustavo opened a little more the purse, but I am sure that he never sent him, altogether, $10,000. The salary of $60 was assigned to me. From it once I used $35 to pay for some balls I ordered to have made for the "blue whistler." For three or four days I refused to attend to the junta in order to compel Garza to pay me back the money employed in the balls.

I believe that the 20th of January the insurrectos under Orozco received the first remittance of cartridges from the junta, and he could not get any more for quite a period of time.

The Maderos had brought to Barnes from New York $50,000 worth of ammunition, and very often Gustavo was unable to send some because he lacked the money to pay the express or freight of the cargo.

The firm "Shelton & Payne Arms Co." of this city, were handling for us the arms and ammunition sent by Gustavo; they did not charge any commission, and even several times lent us the money to pay the express or the freight bills. I wish to add herewith that Mr. Payne could not, long after the triumph of the Madero family, obtain permission to cross the border line with his shotgun in a hunting expedition. That may be strange, but not so much as this: The Madero government has not yet paid the rent of the rooms that the "Confidential agency of the national revolutionary government" had in the Caples Building of El Paso.

During the armistices in Juarez the insurrectos under Madero were fed with voluntary contributions afforded by Messrs. Francesco Madero, sr., Thomas Braniff, and Ernesto Madero, the uncle of the leader, and who, as minister of finances under de la Barra, paid Gustavo over $300,000 for the expenses of the revolution.

The only foreign help—material assistance to the revolution—I received arms and cartridges worth $480.

The truth of God is that the revolution was fought with the abnegation and hunger of the Mexicans, with no more.

United States Senators: The error which has its gala day before it is ripe for destruction, is now tottering to fall headlong to its doom. Orozco is now either hidden in American territory or seeking, with a handful of insurrectos, refuge in the mountains; his filiofobia scared away his followers. Darkness represents evil, and Lic. Robelo is the worthy representative of the multitraitor Orozco, but not of the revolution.

Señor Didapp, who has been pretending to represent in Washington and Vasquistas, must necessarily be known already in that city as an impure liar, an insane sower of darnel.

Peace, peace! The first step to have it is the recognition of beligerent rights to the revolution.

BRAULIO HERNÁNDEZ.

EL PASO, TEX., September 22, 1912.

TESTIMONY OF SHERBURNE G. HOPKINS.

Sherburne G. Hopkins, being first duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

Senator SMITH. Mr. Hopkins, the resolution under which this inquiry is being conducted provides that we are authorized and directed to inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report whether any persons, associations, or corporations, domiciled in or owing allegiance to the United States, have heretofore been or are now engaged in fomenting, inciting, encouraging, or financing rebellion, insurrection, or other flagrant disorder in Mexico against the lawful, organized Government of that country.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am familiar with the resolution.

Senator SMITH. You reside in Washington?

Mr. HOPKINS. Washington, D. C.

Senator SMITH. And have an office in the Hibbs Building?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. What is your business?

Mr. HOPKINS. Lawyer.

Senator SMITH. How old are you?

Mr. HOPKINS. Forty-five.

Senator SMITH. How long have you been engaged in the practice of law?

Mr. HOPKINS. Since I was 21 years of age.

Senator SMITH. In your capacity as a lawyer have you found it necessary or convenient to become familiar with the affairs of the Mexican Republic?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; I have.

Senator SMITH. For how long a time have you been familiar with Mexican affairs?

Mr. HOPKINS. About 15 years.

Senator SMITH. In what manner were you brought in contact with Mexican affairs, especially?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have been concerned since my boyhood with affairs in Latin America, and in this connection became familiar with the affairs of Mexico.

Senator SMITH. Did you have occasion to visit Mexico during the so-called Madero revolution against Diaz?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Or after?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. How soon after?

Mr. HOPKINS. The 1st of June, 1911, after the fall of Juarez.

Senator SMITH. Immediately after the fall of Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. What was the occasion of your going there?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was called there.

Senator SMITH. By whom?

Mr. HOPKINS. By representatives of Mr. Francisco I. Madero.

Senator SMITH. The revolutionary leader who afterwards became President of Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. By whom were you summoned?

Mr. HOPKINS. My recollection is that I was summoned by Gustavo Madero, the brother of the President, or by Juan Sanchez Azcona, his secretary.

Senator SMITH. Did Gustavo Madero afterwards become secretary of the treasury?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; Gustavo Madero has never held public office. Ernesto Madero is minister of finance. He is an uncle of the President.

Senator SMITH. Do you know him?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I know him very well.

Senator SMITH. What was their purpose in summoning you there?

Mr. HOPKINS. To confer with me relative I should say to the settlement of certain affairs.

Senator SMITH. Pecuniary affairs?

Mr. HOPKINS. There were a great many claims outstanding and a great many obligations which had been incurred, some of which I was familiar with, and I presume they desired to consult with me for that reason.

Senator SMITH. What part of the financial affairs of Mexico were you familiar with?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was familiar with railroad affairs.

Senator SMITH. What railroad?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Nacional Railways of Mexico.

Senator SMITH. By whom were the national railways owned?

Mr. HOPKINS. By the Mexican Government.

Senator SMITH. Did they call you there for that purpose?

Mr. HOPKINS. That was possibly one of the purposes.

Senator SMITH. What else?

Mr. HOPKINS. They desired to consult me, as I recall, relative to certain claims.

Senator SMITH. Did they consult you regarding any loans?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; not at that time.

Senator SMITH. Did they afterwards?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was interrogated on the subject.

Senator SMITH. By whom?

Mr. HOPKINS. By Mr. Francisco I. Madero and Gustavo Madero.

Senator SMITH. To what effect?

Mr. HOPKINS. Relative to the best manner of placing loans.

Senator McCUMBER. That was after he became President?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. A few months intervened between the fall of Juarez and his assumption of the Presidency. In fact, he had indicated a disposition to permit Diaz to remain, even after his election. had he not, some weeks?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; but I can explain if you desire.

Senator SMITH. Go right along and explain it in your own way.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you wish me to explain it under oath?

Senator SMITH. Yes. I want to make this record complete.

Mr. HOPKINS. When President Diaz manifested his purposes to leave Mexico——

Senator SMITH. Give that time, if you can.

Mr. HOPKINS. That was in May, 1911; he thereupon summoned Francisco de la Barra, then ambassador of Mexico at this Capital——

Senator SMITH. Washington?

Mr. HOPKINS. Washington; and appointed him minister of foreign relations.

Senator McCUMBER. Who did that?

Mr. HOPKINS. President Diaz, in order that upon his retirement or resignation from the presidency de la Barra might succeed him, appointed him minister of foreign relations, and, as provided by the constitution, the latter succeeded him in the executive chair.

Senator SMITH. Pending the election?

Mr. HOPKINS. As President ad interim. That was agreed to by Mr. Madero. De la Barra succeeded President Diaz and was provisional President on the arrival of Mr. Madero at the capital. Meantime, Mr. de la Barra, recognizing the new order of things and the demands of the public, appointed a cabinet, a majority of whom were Maderistas, or in favor of the principles advocated by Mr. Madero. Among those was Mr. Ernesto Madero, a graduate of an American college, a banker of Monterey, and a large property owner, who was, as I have said, an uncle of the President, and who was made minister of finance. I should describe him as the strong man of that cabinet.

Senator SMITH. When you speak of him as uncle of the President, you mean an uncle of Madero?

Mr. HOPKINS. An uncle of Madero. That was the situation down to the time when Mr. Madero was elected and inaugurated. That was the form of government at the time.

Senator SMITH. You have spoken of Gustavo Madero.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Where did you first know him?

Mr. HOPKINS. In Washington, D. C.

Senator SMITH. Had he been living in this country?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Temporarily?

Mr. HOPKINS. He had lived in this country; yes. He had been partly educated here, and had been living in exile in San Antonio, Tex., with his father, Francisco Madero.

Senator SMITH. Did you have frequent occasion to meet him here?

Mr. HOPKINS. He came here to consult with me, I believe, the latter part of October, 1910.

Senator SMITH. Do you know at whose instance?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not say.

Senator SMITH. Do you mean you do not remember?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know. I do not recall, but I presume it was at the instance of some of the leading members of the revolutionary party.

Senator SMITH. Did you have anything to do with him prior to the fall of Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. How long prior?

Mr. HOPKINS. Continuously.

Senator SMITH. During the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Almost daily.

Senator SMITH. And did he make his headquarters here at that time?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; here and in San Antonio.

Senator SMITH. When did you visit Mexico City after the fall of Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. The first part of June.

Senator SMITH. You went for the purpose of conferring with those people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Did you go at the instance of any American client?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You spoke of being consulted about claims, but you did not state against whom the claims were or in whose favor.

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand it, those claims related to obligations incurred by the revolutionary group—not claims against the Mexican Government.

Senator SMITH. Just tell the committee what those claims were, and who held them, as far as you are able to do so.

Mr. HOPKINS. They were pecuniary claims arising out of services rendered and matters of that sort.

Senator SMITH. Money loaned?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; there was no money loaned.

Senator McCUMBER. Materials furnished?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; there were no materials furnished.

Senator SMITH. What kind of services?

Mr. HOPKINS. Secret services, for instance. There was a very large item outstanding for secret service.

Senator SMITH. Did you advise with Madero and his associates there regarding those matters?

Mr. HOPKINS. I advised with Gustavo Madero and others; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. With the present President?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I did not advise with him in regard to those matters.

Senator SMITH. With his private secretary?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not with regard to those matters.

Senator SMITH. With regard to any matters?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. What?

Mr. HOPKINS. Railroad matters.

Senator SMITH. Concerning any other than the Nacional Railways?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the nature of those claims made a little clearer. Were you retained on behalf of the claimants?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. You were consulted on behalf of the Madero faction?

Mr. HOPKINS. To be frank, I was the legal adviser of the revolutionary party in Washington.

Senator SMITH. For how long a period?

Mr. HOPKINS. From the beginning until the end.

Senator SMITH. Can you explain why they desired to consult you concerning claims for service?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; because I had charge of their secret service.

Senator SMITH. Did you employ the men?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. In that capacity were you thrown in contact with Mr. Sommerfeld at all?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know Mr. Sommerfeld, but I never saw him until after the revolution.

Senator McCUMBER. Who is he?

Senator SMITH. He is the personal representative of President Madero, with his headquarters at El Paso, Tex. Mr. Hopkins, you say you were their principal counsel here?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And they came to you with all matters that concerned that Republic?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; all matters that pertained to the revolution and in connection with which my services were deemed essential.

Senator SMITH. You were also the counsel of the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. I never was and am not now, sir.

Senator SMITH. You have been?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. And never have been in their employ?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never.

Senator SMITH. Or of the Waters-Pierce Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have had relations with the Waters-Pierce Co.; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. Are you their counsel now?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. What relation have you had with them?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was once employed by the Waters-Pierce Co. to get evidence against the Standard Oil Co. in Mexico.

Senator SMITH. At what time?

Mr. HOPKINS. In January, 1912, and thereafter.

Senator SMITH. At any time prior to that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you mean in Mexico or the United States?

Senator SMITH. Either.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. How long prior?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think about six months on one occasion.

Senator SMITH. Did you at any time make any attempt to get any concessions from the Mexican Government for the Waters-Pierce people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never.

Senator SMITH. Did you obtain any personal concessions from the Mexican Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never. I am not interested in any concession. I never applied for a concession, have never owned any, have never had the slightest interest in one in my life.

Senator SMITH. Was there any attempt made to get any oil concession down there by you?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Do I understand you to say that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. had not attempted to get any concession?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never. The Waters-Pierce Oil Co. has never asked for any concession that I am aware of, and I have understood it to be a fact that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. has never owned a concession, and it is inclined to be proud of that fact.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Have they any interests in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Very large interests.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What is the nature of their interests?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oil interests.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Oil lands?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; refineries only and distributing facilities.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Could they operate advantageously without having any special privileges from the Mexican Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; just the same as they could here.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Had they any interest in the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely none.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Had they any interest against it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely none. They remained absolutely neutral.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Were their properties affected by the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know that they suffered a great loss in profits by the revolution.

Senator HITCHCOCK. From the operations of the revolutionists?

Mr. HOPKINS. From the general stagnation in business, I presume. I never heard that they suffered any loss at the hands of the revolutionists. To make matters perfectly clear I should state that I had no relations with the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. during the revolution, knew nobody connected with the company, and I can further assert that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. had no relation whatsoever to the events that took place during the years 1910 and 1911.

Senator HITCHCOCK. How can you state that without having had any relations with them at that time?

Mr. HOPKINS. My relations with the revolutionary party were so close that I think I can affirm that as a fact.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Hopkins, do you know whether the Official Diary of Mexico, along in July, 1910, contained an announcement that important concessions had been made to Sherburne G. Hopkins by the Government of Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I do not. I do not believe it. In fact, I know that no such an announcement exists.

Senator SMITH. If the Official Diary does show that fact, would it be true or untrue?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely untrue. It would be a very simple matter to verify that. The copies of that publication can be found at the office of the Pan American Union.

Senator SMITH. Do you know anything about steps being taken to dissolve the company La Aguila Mexicana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I presume you refer to El Aguila Oil Co. (The Eagle Oil Co.), owned by Lord Cowdray.

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I do not. I never heard of any dissolution or other proceedings.

Senator SMITH. Did you have any part in that?

Mr. HOPKINS. I tried to make it as hot as I could for Lord Cowdray and the Eagle Oil Co.

Senator SMITH. Why?

Mr. HOPKINS. Because I thought they were dishonest; that they had previously debauched officials of the Mexican Government; and I had proof of it.

Senator SMITH. Was that the concern of which Mr. Pearson was the head?

Mr. HOPKINS. Sir Weetman Pearson, afterwards Lord Cowdray, was at the head of it; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. Were you, or was anybody representing you, paid any money by the Mexican Government through either of the Maderos for the purpose of discharging the obligations of a loan?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. A loan to the revolutionary leaders?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. At the time you were in Mexico did you go there for the purpose of making a settlement of any loan?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Did you at any time represent Speyer & Co., of New York?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. Speyer & Co. are friends of mine, but I never represented them.

Senator SMITH. You never were their counsel?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. Pardon me one moment, Senator. I should not say that. In one instance I represented Speyer & Co. indirectly in connection with a transaction which had no relation to Mexico at all.

Senator SMITH. To what did that relate?

Mr. HOPKINS. That related to the funding of the debt of Nicaragua. I said "indirectly." I did not represent them directly, but because they were associated with some other bankers for whom my firm were counsel. I never represented Speyer & Co., in Mexico either directly or indirectly.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of the repayment by the Mexican Government to Mr. Madero of revolutionary expenses aggregating upward of $600,000 shortly after the Madero government assumed authority in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand that the de la Barra government reimbursed Gustavo Madero for advances made by him in a sum amounting to $600,000, more or less, Mexican currency, which would amount to about $300,000 American currency.

Senator SMITH. Did you have any part in that transaction?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. And you got none of the money?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know whether I was compensated out of those funds or not.

Senator SMITH. What is your best impression about it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, to be frank, I believe that I was.

Senator SMITH. To what extent?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was paid a fee of $50,000.

Senator SMITH. Mexican money or American money?

Mr. HOPKINS. American money; which covered the expenses I had incurred by their authority from November 1, 1910, to June 1, 1911.

Senator SMITH. About eight months?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. During that time did you assist the Government or any representative of the Government of Mexico in placing any loans?

Mr. HOPKINS. I presume you refer to the period following the fall of Juarez?

Senator SMITH. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not.

Senator SMITH. Did you after that time?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Have you at any time?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Are you cognizant of any money having been loaned by American companies, corporations, or individuals to Mr. Madero or either of his brothers, or any of his family, for revolutionary purposes by Americans, companies or corporations?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know of no such loans.

Senator SMITH. Have you heard of any?

Mr. HOPKINS. No. I think if such loans had been made I would have known of them.

Senator SMITH. Would they have been apt to have been made by you?

Mr. HOPKINS. I would have at least been consulted with regard to the matter, I am sure.

Senator SMITH. You must have done something to have gotten this large fee of $50,000 American money for eight months' services. What did you do?

Mr. HOPKINS. As I said, I was the legal adviser of the revolutionary party in Washington. I spent the most of my time for eight months in giving them the best advice I knew how to give in regard to the best manner of deposing the Diaz government.

Senator SMITH. At whose instance did you give that advice?

Mr. HOPKINS. At the instance of Gustavo Madero, who came to me first. He was followed by others.

Senator SMITH. Did you during this employment have anything to do with or come in contact with Mr. Limantour?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. And you want the committee to understand that you were not acting in a dual capacity at that time—I do not want to use this term disrespectfully—as a go-between between certain financial interests in the United States and their people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely not.

Senator BORAH. The way that question is asked and the answer made you are asked if you want the committee to understand that you were not acting in a dual capacity, and you said absolutely not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I absolutely did not act in such capacity. I thank you, Senator, for the suggestion.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Can you explain what sort of legal advice a revolutionary party needs, when they have a revolution in progress?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. They need, first, to keep clear of the neutrality laws. To give you another idea, as a mere incident among a thousand others. In the first part of November Mr. Sanchez Azcona, whom I regard as one of the most cultured gentlemen in Mexico, who had been with Mr. Madero as a political lieutenant and afterwards as his private secretary, and now, by the way, chairman of the committee on foreign relations of the Mexican House of Representatives, was at a luncheon in this city at a hotel with Gustavo Madero and Mr. Ernesto Fernandez, who is now the Mexican minister to Honduras, when Mr. Azcona was suddenly arrested by a detective assigned to duty with the United States attorney for this district, was taken before the local courts and, at the request of the Diaz government, held for extradition. After the lapse of 40 days, during which he was held in confinement, because in extradition proceedings the courts will not admit to bail, he found out that the Mexican Government charged him with embezzlement of $100, more or less, while managing editor of the paper called the Diario, the crime being alleged to have taken place six years before. He was, at the request of the Mexican Government, held 15 days longer, when the latter filed the necessary evidence and documents, which were rather voluminous and all in Spanish. It became the duty of my firm to get that man out. To make a long story short, we succeeded. He was immediately discharged by Chief Justice Clabaugh upon a proper showing. There was a peculiar political significance attached to this case.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What interest had the revolutionary party in getting Mr. Azcona out of jail?

Mr. HOPKINS. Because he was the secretary of the mission to Washington and was one of the leaders of the revolutionary party.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Engaged in assisting the revolutionary party in the United States?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; he was one of the leaders of the revolutionary party, and the Diaz government, to use a common phrase, simply framed up these charges against him, and for some reason conceived that they had sufficient pull with this Government to obtain custody of that man, whom they wanted very badly.

Senator McCUMBER. In what way was this man assisting the revolutionary movement here?

Mr. HOPKINS. He was one of the committee.

Senator McCUMBER. In what way was he assisting?

Mr. HOPKINS. He was, I suppose, in correspondence with his friends in San Antonio and along the frontier and elsewhere, and with his friends in Mexico, endeavoring by this means or by personal contact with the people whom he would meet—influential people whom he met here and in New York and other places—to convince them of the uprightness of the revolutionary cause, and so forth.

Senator McCUMBER. How would that affect them, just merely convincing them of the uprightness of the cause?

Mr. HOPKINS. To awaken public sentiment by explaining the truth.

Senator McCUMBER. And back of the public sentiment, to get anything in the shape of assistance, financial or otherwise?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; there was no attempt made to get assistance at that time.

Senator McCUMBER. He was here simply to create public sentiment?

Mr. HOPKINS. Simply to create public sentiment and to expose the shortcomings of the old Government.

Senator McCUMBER. And that was what you referred to when you say that he was here to assist?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And your legal services were employed for the purpose of protecting those revolutionary agents in this country who were engaged in that way.

Mr. HOPKINS. In protecting them, among other things, and guiding them as far as I could in a modest way.

Senator SMITH. Where were you paid this $50,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. In Mexico City.

Senator SMITH. Did you go there for that purpose?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Your visit was coincident with the payment of this money, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And of the $300,000 American money that was paid over by the Mexican Government to Gustavo Madero you got $50,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Do you know what became of the balance of it?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Have you any idea?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Was any of it turned over to you for delivery to certain persons in the United States?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Companies or corporations?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. And you did not return with any money, or draft, or other evidence of credit, for the purpose of making a delivery of that kind?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Have you any knowledge where Madero and his friends and supporters borrowed the necessary money?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not think they borrowed it. I think they had it.

Senator HITCHCOCK. They did not have the money to pay you until they secured it from the Mexican Government, evidently.

Mr. HOPKINS. They had advanced huge sums out of their own pockets, of which I have personal knowledge. I would not have thought of even suggesting that they should pay me, or even reimburse for my expenses, until the cause in which they were engaged had resulted successfully.

Senator SMITH. As a matter of fact Mr. Hopkins, suits had been begun against the Maderos, and their banking and other interests were seriously jeopardized.

Mr. HOPKINS. In Mexico?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I know all about that; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. So that they were not in good financial condition?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know what you mean, but there are other things to be taken into consideration in connection with those suits, because they simply represented the purpose of the Diaz government, which was trying to ruin them and to ruin their credit.

Senator SMITH. You considered yourself against Mr. Diaz?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. You represented the revolutionary party here?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. I want to ask you again whether any officer, director, stockholder, or other person identified with the Standard Oil Co. or any of its constituent companies, or with the Waters-Pierce Co. or any of its constituent companies, at any time, through you or to your knowledge, advanced any money to the Madero people, or anyone representing them, for revolutionary or other purposes in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Most decidedly, no.

Senator SMITH. You were frequently in consultation with Mr. Madero in New York, were you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Which one?

Senator SMITH. Was it Ernesto?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; Ernesto was and is the minister of finance, as I have already explained.

Senator SMITH. Gustavo?

Mr. HOPKINS. Gustavo and his father, Francisco.

Senator SMITH. And where did you make your headquarters over there?

Mr. HOPKINS. At that time I stopped at the Hotel Astor and at the St. Regis.

Senator SMITH. Did he stop with you?

Mr. HOPKINS. He stopped at the Hotel Astor; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. The fact that you had been and were at that time the legal adviser, or one of the legal advisers, of the Standard Oil Co. and of the Waters-Pierce people, had no relation whatever to that?

Mr. HOPKINS. I had never been in the employ of the Standard Oil Co. or of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. at that time, and I have heretofore so stated in my deposition.

Senator SMITH. Or anyone connected with those companies?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; nor anyone connected with those companies. To be more specific: I did not know anyone connected with the Standard Oil Co. or the Waters-Pierce Oil Co.

Senator SMITH. Have you not held yourself out here to others as the representative of the Standard Oil people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Most decidedly, no. On the contrary, I have always been opposed to them. Everybody knows that in Mexico.

Senator SMITH. Who employed you to represent the Waters-Pierce people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Henry Clay Pierce.

Senator SMITH. Where did this employment take place?

Mr. HOPKINS. In Mexico.

Senator SMITH. At what time?

Mr. HOPKINS. It must have been about July, I suppose.

Senator SMITH. What year?

Mr. HOPKINS. 1911; and subsequently, again in January, 1912.

Senator SMITH. Were you consulted by Mr. Pierce prior to the fall of Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Immediately thereafter?

Mr. HOPKINS. Some time thereafter.

Senator SMITH. How long?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, I presume I was employed or consulted by him one month after.

Senator SMITH. And that was prior to the provisional Presidency of De la Barra?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; during the provisional Presidency of De la Barra.

Senator SMITH. That was prior to the abdication of Diaz, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; subsequent to the abdication of Diaz—long after.

Senator SMITH. Diaz did not quit the Presidency until after the fall of Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. Contemporaneously.

Senator SMITH. It was a number of days after that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, more or less, Senator. I am not specifying days and dates. I am speaking generally.

Senator SMITH. Within a month?

Mr. HOPKINS. I mean to say this, that it was some time after the revolution had been successful and Diaz had gone, the old régime had gone out, the científicos had fled, and the new régime had come in.

Senator SMITH. What were the circumstances under which Mr. Henry Clay Pierce employed you?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Henry Clay Pierce found out that I was after some men who had been engaged in crooked practices there, and he conceived that they should be exposed.

Senator SMITH. What were they?

Mr. HOPKINS. They were the so-called científicos, who had been juggling with the national railways, engaged in getting graft from various sources.

Senator SMITH. Doing what?

Mr. HOPKINS. Engaged in getting graft from various sources.

Senator SMITH. What sources?

Mr. HOPKINS. Concessions, and from various sources.

Senator SMITH. From whom?

Mr. HOPKINS. From the Government.

Senator SMITH. And running to whom?

Mr. HOPKINS. There were the so-called Pearson oil concessions, for instance.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Was that the oil concern that was in possession of the Waters-Pierce Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. No. There are two oil concerns down there. One is the Aguila Oil Co., also known as the Eagle Oil Co., which deals in the refined products of oil. The other is known as the Pearson oil concession, belonging to Lord Cowdray, which produces crude oil from the national and other lands. Those are the two interests, both dominated by the same man—Lord Cowdray.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Were they doing business in competition or rivalry with the Waters-Pierce Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; one of them is English and the other is American.

Senator HITCHCOCK. They were active competitors?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. And the corporation you represented wanted to get rid of the concession of the other corporation?

Mr. HOPKINS. The American corporation, the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., was operating under a great disadvantage, for the simple reason that the Diaz Government had granted these vast oil concessions to Lord Cowdray, and Lord Cowdray was taking advantage of it; and, of course, having such a great concession was a great disadvantage to the American competitors.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Had that been going on for some time?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. Lord Cowdray had the concession?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; Lord Cowdray had the concession, and that operated against the American competitor, the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., which had no concession and wanted none.

Senator SMITH. What was the name of that oil company?

Mr. HOPKINS. El Aguila.

Senator SMITH. Do you know who are the members of that corporation—the Aguila Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; at that time or the present?

Senator SMITH. At that time, who were they?

Mr. HOPKINS. Among them there were Mr. Landa y Escandon, Mr. Enrique Creel, who has just retired from the office of minister of foreign relations—

Senator SMITH. Is he the son-in-law of Luis Terrazas?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; the son-in-law of Luis Terrazas.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Limantour?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; Mr. Limantour was not in it.

Senator SMITH. President Diaz?

Mr. HOPKINS. Porfirio Diaz, jr., Luis Riba—

Senator SMITH. Anyone else you can recall?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; Pablo Maceo, Luis Elguera.

Senator SMITH. Was that regarded as a strong company?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; with the Diaz Government.

Senator SMITH. Did they have important concessions?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; as I have stated.

Senator SMITH. Concessions which they had been working for some years?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; only about 2 or 3 years.

Senator SMITH. Had there been any negotiations between your client and this company for this concession?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Was it understood that in the event that Diaz was overthrown, these concessions would be recalled?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator McCUMBER. Were they recalled?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator McCUMBER. Or interfered with in any way?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; unless it should be subsequently shown that they were granted in violation of law.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Did the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. get any concessions?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And it has not been benefited, then, by the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely not.

Senator McCUMBER. Their status has not been changed?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is absolutely unchanged.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You say you were employed to bring about some restraint against certain of these people who were grafting?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was consulted with a view to exposing the graft by means of which Lord Cowdray had attained the degree of influence which he wielded with the Diaz administration.

Senator McCUMBER. But there was something besides that to be obtained; something to follow that, was there not?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; never.

Senator McCUMBER. Why should the company be simply interested in exposing the others, if it was not to affect them in any way or they did not expect any future benefits to arise from that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Because, as I understand it, Mr. Pierce conceived that it would be eminently proper that the public should understand how Lord Cowdray got these concessions and how he had exercised the control which he had exercised over the Mexican Government.

Senator McCUMBER. How was it to affect his company?

Mr. HOPKINS. Incidentally, I was able to prove the number of shares in the Aguila Oil Co. which Lord Cowdray had given to the persons whose names I have mentioned as well as to others.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What good did that do?

Mr. HOPKINS. Because it exposed them to the people of Mexico.

Senator McCUMBER. I know; but did that exposure benefit the Waters-Pierce Co. in any way?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not see how it could possibly.

Senator McCUMBER. Why should the company itself, then, employ an attorney to ferret public offenses—a task which is generally left to the Government itself—when no benefit was expected to the company therefrom?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not believe Mr. Pierce conceived that the Government would do it, and it would require to be done by a person outside of the Government.

Senator McCUMBER. Was it just because of his sense that justice ought to be done that he employed and paid counsel himself?

Mr. HOPKINS. That I do not know; sir. The only thing I do know is that I was consulted in regard to the matter, and I advised as to the methods that appeared to me most effective. It is fair to presume that Mr. Pierce desired decent business methods to prevail.

Senator McCUMBER. You really think he expected to follow that up by some kind of action to secure some beneficial legislation or otherwise, do you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. The best proof is that he has not.

Senator McCUMBER. Yes; but do you not think that that was the expectation at the time?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not say what his expectation was, but I do not believe it, as I understood all that Mr. Pierce wished was fair competition.

Senator McCUMBER. Let me ask you one question right here, Mr. Hopkins, so that I may understand your position here. Is your confidential relation, either with this company or with Madero or any of the revolutionary forces, your professional relation, such that you do not desire to disclose all matters?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I am perfectly willing to disclose anything within my knowledge.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Your employment was not by Mr. Pierce personally, but was a corporate employment by the company that was operating down there?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; that is the idea.

Senator HITCHCOCK. So it could not have been for any idealistic purpose, or purpose of public benefaction. It must have been for some business reason.

Mr. HOPKINS. Of course not altogether, Senator. It was, among other things, to even up conditions.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You did not get even then?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I do not know anything about their business affairs.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You say they have not been benefited?

Mr. HOPKINS. I mean in respect to Government protection, assistance, aid, and so forth.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Do you think they may have been benefited?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I say, not that I know of. There have been no benefits that I know of.

Senator SMITH. Were there to be?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not that I know of. No, sir; I know that there were not to be.

Senator SMITH. How were you compensated by Mr. Pierce for that service?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was given a check for it some six or seven months afterwards.

Senator SMITH. How much?

Mr. HOPKINS. I really do not know, Senator. I think it was perhaps a thousand dollars or something like that. I really do not recollect the amount.

Senator SMITH. Have you been under regular retainer from him since?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator McCUMBER. You stated that part of your advice to the revolutionary forces was in reference to the best method of disposing of the Diaz government, or substantially that. Have you any objection to informing us what that advice was, as to the best method of disposing of the Diaz government?

Mr. HOPKINS. That would be a pretty long story, Senator. It would cover the entire period of the revolution.

Senator McCUMBER. It is rather a long story, anyway, that we are investigating.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I can only say, generally speaking, that my advice to them was to get all the arms and ammunition and munitions of war that they could and, with due regard to the neutrality laws, to get them across the border and organize their movement on the most approved military lines. Then, of course, I saw very plainly that the Diaz government was becoming more unpopular every day, that it was steadily weakening, and I pointed out to them as best I could the lines of least resistance, both in a military and a political sense.

Senator McCUMBER. But the first advice was to get their war material ready?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. And get it across the line?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. Not necessarily across the line, but to get it into Mexico, always with due regard for the neutrality laws.

Senator McCUMBER. Where did most of this war material come from?

Mr. HOPKINS. The United States.

Senator McCUMBER. Perhaps this is already in the record?

Senator SMITH. No, sir; I am very glad to have this brought out.

Senator McCUMBER. You say most of it come from the United States?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Senator McCUMBER. From what firms?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know.

Senator McCUMBER. Do you know from what part of the country it came?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have understood that it came mostly from New York and St. Louis originally.

Senator McCUMBER. Were those claims that you speak of partly made up of claims for this material?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator McCUMBER. You say most of the material came from where?

Mr. HOPKINS. There were small amounts. Most of it was for secret-service advances, etc.

Senator McCUMBER. Perhaps you do not understand me. I say most of the war material, the ammunition, guns, etc., came from where?

Mr. HOPKINS. I could not say from personal knowledge, but I have understood that they came from New York and St. Louis.

Senator McCUMBER. Do you know what firms furnished them?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know one firm from whom material was purchased.

Senator McCUMBER. What firm was that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Bannerman.

Senator McCUMBER. At what place?

Mr. HOPKINS. Broadway, New York City.

Senator McCUMBER. What did they furnish?

Mr. HOPKINS. Rifles, cartridges, and machine guns.

Senator McCUMBER. They are not manufacturers, are they?

Mr. HOPKINS. They are the largest dealers, I suppose, in war materials on this hemisphere.

Senator McCUMBER. They are simply dealers and not manufacturers?

Mr. HOPKINS. Dealers and not manufacturers. They do a very large business.

Senator McCUMBER. And their dealing is generally with foreign Governments and not the home Government? They deal on a large scale do they not, with foreign Governments?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. And in large quantities?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. And such quantities as necessarily must be sold to Governments rather than to individuals?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. They therefore had an interest in creating a demand for their material, had they not?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I do not think so. I think you will find that Alfred Bannerman keeps entirely outside of anything of that sort. In all the experience I have had in such matters I have never known any such thing to be done by Mr. Bannerman.

Senator McCUMBER. Do you know whether they have furnished war material for other Central and South American States?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I know that they have.

Senator McCUMBER. They have been engaged in that business?

Mr. HOPKINS. They are engaged in the traffic of munitions of war; yes, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. When did these sales to the Madero party begin?

Mr. HOPKINS. They simply bought one very large lot.

Senator HITCHCOCK. When was that?

Mr. HOPKINS. At the beginning of the revolution.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Can you give the date?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I can not give the date offhand; the last of October or somewhere along there.

Senator McCUMBER. Who bought it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Gustavo Madero.

Senator McCUMBER. Where did they get the money advanced?

Mr. HOPKINS. They had the money.

Senator McCUMBER. Did they have the money themselves?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; they had the money themselves.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Can you tell how much that purchase amounted to?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I can not.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Approximately?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I can not.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Either in money or arms?

Mr. HOPKINS. I could not do it; it would be impossible.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You say it was a large lot?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; about three carloads.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Enough for 5,000 men?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; that would not be enough for 5,000 men.

Senator McCUMBER. Do you know what the entire cost of this revolution was?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. I do not think anyone will ever know.

Senator McCUMBER. Can you give an estimate of the financial obligations that were incurred by reason of it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Obligations of the Maderos?

Senator McCUMBER. By reason of the revolution. I suppose there was an organization. That organization had to raise money, and the money had to be paid to carry on this revolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. So far as I know, the revolutionary party in the United States borrowed no money at all from any American interests.

Senator McCUMBER. That is, not here. You think it was advanced entirely from Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it was advanced entirely from Mexico.

Senator McCUMBER. And within the Mexican border?

Mr. HOPKINS. Possibly there may have been some Mexicans in the United States who contributed, but I meant to say that that revolution was not financed by any American interests. I know that.

Senator SMITH. Do you know Mr. Didapp?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. He formerly represented the Mexican Republic in Spain and Turkey.

Mr. HOPKINS. He was a consul at Santander, Spain, and afterwards was consul in Turkey. He is a Syrian.

Senator SMITH. When he was introduced to you in Washington he had four or five talks with you?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And during one of those conversations did you say to him, "Get next to the secretary of the Standard Oil Co. You would have the help of the Standard Oil Co. to overthrow Diaz."

"I told him I did not know anyone in the Standard Oil Co., and he told me, 'Well, I know the secretary, and I am going to New York, and I will talk the matter over with the secretary of the Standard Oil Co. Then you try and see him.' This was just before the Madero revolution in September, 1910."

Mr. HOPKINS. I never had any such conversation with Mr. Didapp; never mentioned the Standard Oil Co. to him in my life. Mr. Didapp once came to me some time before the revolution and spoke to me voluntarily. He was not introduced to me. He came to me and asked my assistance in procuring the publication of a book that he was to write attacking the government of Diaz. I declined, and told him I could not be interested in any such thing. He came to see me at my office four or five times, and finally I had to dismiss him rather abruptly.

Senator McCUMBER. Did you have any confidential talk with him at all?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely not. I would not talk confidentially with a man like that. He is a crazy man.

Senator SMITH. Did you ever talk to him about the State Department?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never. In the first place, he is a very, very indiscreet man.

Senator SMITH. But he has represented the Mexican Government in a number of capacities?

Mr. HOPKINS. He has also been dismissed twice for indiscretion. I may say that I saw him again in Mexico City, and he told me he was going to get back into their consular service, and I believed Mr. de la Barra did put him back, but he could not stand prosperity, and he was dismissed within three or four months.

Senator SMITH. He was dismissed by the Madero government?

Mr. HOPKINS. He was put into office again after the Madero revolution had been successful.

Senator McCUMBER. Dismissed by the same power that put him in?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. By Mr. de la Barra?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think he was dismissed subsequently by Mr. Calero, who became minister of foreign relations.

Senator McCUMBER. As a matter of fact he was dismissed by the Madero people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. And he had been known as a Diaz man?

Mr. HOPKINS. He had been known as both, Senator.

Senator SMITH. He had been appointed to various positions by the Diaz government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Only one, that I know of.

Senator SMITH. And his last appointment came from Mr. de la Barra, the provisional president?

Mr. HOPKINS. Because he had been a great advocate of the revolution.

Senator SMITH. Of the Madero revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; although he subsequently turned, and had, as I recall, written a number of articles against Mr. Madero.

Senator SMITH. In order to meet that situation squarely, you say that you had no talk with him about the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. I never mentioned the Standard Oil Co. to him in my life, and never had any conversation with him on the subject. The only conversation I did have was relative to the publication of this book, which he said he wished to have published.

Senator SMITH. Did you tell him you were close to the State Department and were watching matters there?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never.

Senator SMITH. As a matter of fact, have you been watching Mexican matters with the State Department?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; never.

Senator SMITH. Have you ever had any conversation with the Secretary about it?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; never.

Senator SMITH. Or any assistant secretary?

Mr. HOPKINS. I did have some conversation frequently with Mr. Dawson, who at that time was resident diplomatic officer of the Department of State, and who was an old friend of mine.

Senator SMITH. You were frequently in conference with him about it?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I was not frequently in conference. I suppose I spoke to him about the matter three or four times. Mr. Dawson was a gentleman who liked to be accurately informed on both sides of matters, and he used sometimes to ask me privately about the real situation, and I never hesitated to give him any information he desired.

Senator SMITH. That was during the time you represented the Mexican revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. Now, coming back to this fee, what did you do with that money when you brought it back?

Mr. HOPKINS. I forwarded it to my firm.

Senator SMITH. What is the firm?

Mr. HOPKINS. Hopkins & Hopkins?

Senator SMITH. Washington?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. What was done with it then?

Mr. HOPKINS. It was deposited to the credit of the firm in the Union Trust Co., as I recall. I was not here at the time. I was in Mexico.

Senator SMITH. Was any part of it paid out to any others for assistance?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; it was divided in the firm as usual.

Senator SMITH. Had you made any expenditures of money for the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Only minor advances.

Senator SMITH. Of traveling expenses?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Were you thrown in contact with Mr. Llorente, the Mexican consul at El Paso?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. You say you know Mr. Sommerfeld?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. How recently have you seen him?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not seen Sommerfeld since last January.

Senator SMITH. A year ago?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. The repayment of this money by the Mexican Government for revolutionary expenses, $600,000 and odd, was made while you were in Mexico, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And you were present at that settlement?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. The only way I know of it is that Mr. Gustavo Madero came to me and said he wondered in which bank he had better deposit this. I suggested to him that he deposit it in a branch of the International Banking Corporation there.

Senator HITCHCOCK. In Mexico City?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I happened to be acquainted with the manager of that bank.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Where did Madero keep his funds? You say he and his family had large sums of money at the time the revolution began?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; in San Antonio and New York.

Senator SMITH. Was this money deposited in accordance with your recommendation?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. As a matter of fact, the Maderos knew as much about the banking facilities of Mexico City as you did, did they not?

Mr. HOPKINS. There was just one reason. We were standing in front of the Banco Nacional, and he said that he would not deposit the money there, because it would take him two hours to make the deposit. He said he thought he would go to a bank where they did banking business in an up-to-date manner.

Senator SMITH. Did he have the money with him at the time?

Mr. HOPKINS. He had the draft with him.

Senator SMITH. Where did you meet him that morning?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think he came to my hotel and got me.

Senator SMITH. After he received this draft?

Mr. HOPKINS. We used to go down town together every morning.

Senator SMITH. This was a particular morning when he had this amount of money?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; it was just the usual morning meeting. This matter had been up before the cabinet for quite a long time, and it had been approved.

Senator SMITH. That is, the return or the repayment of these advances?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; and with the accompanying vouchers it had been before the officials of the treasury department, and I suppose the accounting officers of that department, and had been approved by the minister of finance. It had been submitted to the cabinet, approved by the cabinet, and was then approved by President de la Barra.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You say, "With the accompanying vouchers." Was your voucher among those?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; my voucher was subsequently attached. I gave a receipt in duplicate.

Senator SMITH. So that the Mexican Government approved what he paid to you?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.
Senator SMITH. They paid the money before it was divided?
Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, the Mexican Government knew about it.
Senator SMITH. They made a voucher to Mr. Madero for this money?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.
Senator SMITH. How much?
Mr. HOPKINS. About six hundred and odd thousand dollars.
Senator SMITH. About $650,000, and that amount of money was taken by Mr. Madero and yourself to the International Banking Corporation?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.
Senator SMITH. And upon your recommendation was deposited?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.
Senator SMITH. To whose credit?
Mr. HOPKINS. To his credit.
Senator SMITH. Then what occurred?
Mr. HOPKINS. Nothing that I know of.
Senator SMITH. Did he give you a check?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; he gave me a check.
Senator SMITH. On that bank?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.
Senator SMITH. Did he make any other check at that time?
Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.
Senator SMITH. And you wish to be understood as saying you do not know what disposition was made of the balance of that fund?
Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.
Senator SMITH. Had you and he come to a settlement regarding your charges?
Mr. HOPKINS. Long before that.
Senator SMITH. How long before?
Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know, Senator. They had expressed their purpose to pay me. They seemed to be very grateful for what they fancied I had accomplished for them, and indicated their purpose to pay me a fee of this amount.
Senator SMITH. Had you loaned them any money?
Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.
Senator SMITH. As a matter of fact do you not know that they were offering as high as 40 per cent bonus for loans at that time?
Mr. HOPKINS. Never heard of it; I do know that along during the last days of the revolution, when their funds were running very low, some conferences took place relative to obtaining a loan.
Senator SMITH. What conferences?
Mr. HOPKINS. I had a conference with one French banker.
Senator SMITH. Where?
Mr. HOPKINS. In New York, at that time.
Senator SMITH. In New York?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; and he absolutely turned the proposition down.
Senator SMITH. What did you ask him?
Mr. HOPKINS. I ask him upon what terms he would make an advance, say of $100,000.
Senator SMITH. What was his reply?

Mr. HOPKINS. He said he would consider the matter; but on the following day, upon some adverse news from Juarez, he informed me that he would not entertain the proposition.

Senator SMITH. Did you see anyone else with a similar purpose?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, I did.

Senator SMITH. Who?

Mr. HOPKINS. I discussed the matter with Mr. Charles R. Flint.

Senator SMITH. Who is he?

Mr. HOPKINS. A well-known merchant and banker in New York.

Senator SMITH. Did you ask him to subscribe to this fund?

Mr. HOPKINS. I asked his advice in regard to the matter.

Senator SMITH. Did you make him any tender?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. He was of the opinion that no loan could be procured.

Senator SMITH. Whom else did you talk with?

Mr. HOPKINS. I discussed the matter generally with Mr. William M. Ivins, of New York.

Senator SMITH. Who is he?

Mr. HOPKINS. Quite a distinguished lawyer of that city.

Senator SMITH. Is his office in Wall Street or lower Broadway?

Mr. HOPKINS. His office is in Lords Court Building on William Street, New York City. He was of the same opinion.

Senator SMITH. As a matter of fact, he had some financial transactions with the Government, had he not?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What date was this?

Mr. HOPKINS. I believe this was in April or May.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Of what year?

Mr. HOPKINS. 1911.

Senator SMITH. You do not know whether he afterwards advanced any money, and certain drafts were made on him?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know he did not. The only draft that I know of that was ever made which Mr. Ivins's firm had any connection with was a draft for $100 which I authorized to be cashed, and which was drawn against Gustavo Madero at El Paso, which was for a fine that I was paying for one of our men, who had been arrested and pleaded guilty, for transporting cartridges without labeling them as such.

Senator SMITH. Did you make any drafts on Madero through the National City Bank of New York?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; never.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of any one else who did?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. This draft you refer to was made on Madero personally?

Mr. HOPKINS. On Gustavo Madero; yes.

Senator SMITH. And through a bank at El Paso?

Mr. HOPKINS. I presume so; yes, sir. I was not in New York at the time.

Senator SMITH. Was it the Rio Grande Valley National Bank?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was not in New York myself at the time. It was only for $100.

Senator SMITH. Whom else did you see regarding a loan?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all.

Senator SMITH. Did you have any occasion to see any of the firm of Speyer & Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; never about loans. Messrs. Speyer & Co. were at that time the bankers for the Mexican Government.

Senator McCUMBER. You stated that you were fairly familiar with some of the financial transactions of the Madero government. Can you give us anything of an idea of what the entire cost of financing this revolution has been?

Mr. HOPKINS. My idea is that it was about 10 per cent of what most people think it was.

Senator McCUMBER. What do most people think it is, then?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not believe that the entire revolution cost the Maderos—that is, I do not believe that they spent more than $400,000 gold.

Senator McCUMBER. Not more than about half as much as it takes to nominate an American President?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; just about.

Senator McCUMBER. If they got $600,000, they must have come out with a profit.

Mr. HOPKINS. That was $600,000 Mexican currency.

Senator McCUMBER. $300,000 American?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. You do not mean to say that would cover the entire expense of carrying on that revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; not at all.

Senator McCUMBER. You mean that is what the Madero family furnished?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. There were lots of other men who took money out of their own pockets and spent it to buy arms and munitions of war.

Senator McCUMBER. And I suppose the revolutionists helped themselves to money once in awhile, as well as to provisions, and so forth?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; I have no doubt they did.

Senator McCUMBER. But, taking simply the financial part, that must have cost at least several million dollars, did it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not believe in the aggregate there was more than $1,500,000 spent in actual money.

Senator McCUMBER. Altogether?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. American money?

Mr. HOPKINS. I mean that much gold—American money.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And the Maderos put up about one-quarter of that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. That was considerable money contributed from all the cities in Mexico.

Senator McCUMBER. What is the population of Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. About 18,000,000 people.

Senator McCUMBER. And you think you can finance a successful revolution in a country of that size for less than a million dollars?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. As a matter of fact, do you not know that the Orozco revolutionists have spent over $2,000,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have heard so.

Senator SMITH. They got $1,000,000 from the city of Chihuahua alone, did they not, through the chamber of commerce, and they have been administering the customs down there and have received at least $100,000 a month, and yet that is not supposed to be a revolution at all.

Senator BORAH. Perhaps its organization was expensive.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Did this firm on Broadway in New York City, which you say sold three or four carloads of war material, require cash in advance?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; always.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Hopkins, are you familiar with the reported statements that upon the return of Mr. Limantour, and his statement to President Diaz that large financial interests in New York had agreed to advance the necessary money to make the Madero revolution successful, Diaz resolved to make no further resistance?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. I do not believe Mr. Limantour ever made such a report, because Mr. Limantour knew better.

Senator SMITH. He had been in New York, had he not, with Mr. Creel?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; he had not.

Senator SMITH. With Mr. Hernandez?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; not that I am aware of. Which Mr. Hernandez do you mean?

Senator SMITH. The one who was afterwards secretary of the interior.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; most decidedly not.

Senator SMITH. Would you have known about those matters?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was in the Hotel Astor at the same time Mr. Limantour was there, and I know exact what took place.

Senator SMITH. Did you have any interview with him?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of anyone who did?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Who did?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Francisco Madero, the father of the President, and Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez, of the revolutionary committee.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of anyone else who had any interview with him?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Who?

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand he had a conference with Mr. Speyer.

Senator SMITH. Speyer & Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. Speyer & Co. were his bankers, the bankers of the Mexican Government at that time.

Senator SMITH. Do you know whether he had any conference with president of the National City Bank?

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you mean Mr. Stillman?

Senator SMITH. Or with Mr. Vanderlip.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Vanderlip is the vice president. No, sir; I am not aware of it. It would not surprise me at all.

Senator SMITH. Do you know whether he had any conversation with anyone else while he was there?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; no personal knowledge.

Senator SMITH. But you do know about these interviews with Speyer & Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; that one took place with Mr. Speyer.

Senator SMITH. And these other people you have spoken of?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Did Mr. Madero inform you as to the nature of those conversations?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; he mentioned them.

Senator SMITH. What did he say about them?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Madero was very anxious to see the revolution terminated, and I think he tried to persuade Mr. Limantour to see the light of day.

Senator SMITH. Do you know whether he told him that financial arrangements had been made in New York?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know, but I am morally certain that he did not.

Senator SMITH. How are you certain that he did not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Because I have never heard of any such thing.

Senator SMITH. I have heard of it a great many times.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have never heard of it, Senator, and I have been right in the midst of it all the time. I have never heard of any such thing.

Senator SMITH. No threats were made, to your knowledge, to Mr. Limantour?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Did you accompany Mr. Madero at the time of his interview with Mr. Limantour?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Or at the time of these interviews with those bankers?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. I have been rather impressed with the amount of money you received down there for the service you have described.

Mr. HOPKINS. Perhaps they overpaid me.

Senator SMITH. Do you think they did?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, they were the best judges of that.

Senator SMITH. No; you are the man who rendered the service.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Was that for eight months' service?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator BORAH. They did not object to the bill, did they?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. In fact, I never rendered any bill. It was a voluntary payment upon their part.

Senator SMITH. But you had agreed upon it some time before this money was repaid?

Mr. HOPKINS. $50,000 was mentioned. Gustavo Madero and the rest of them had voluntarily mentioned it to me, that when the revolution was successful, as they were sure it was going to be, they intended to pay me a fee of $50,000. I said I would be very glad to get it.

Senator McCUMBER. You did not protest against it?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. When was that conversation?

Mr. HOPKINS. I suppose it was along in January or February.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Let me recapitulate. That $50,000 fee was for services rendered during eight months, for keeping the revolutionary agents in the United States out of prison or getting them out after they got in——

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. For advising them to ship arms into the Mexican Republic before the war began, as far as possible, and to get ready for the war?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And for what else?

Senator McCUMBER. The neutrality laws?

Mr. HOPKINS. And for advising them as to the methods that they should pursue, and also so as not to come in conflict with the neutrality laws.

Senator HITCHCOCK. This revolutionary party in Mexico was not afraid to come in conflict with the neutrality laws. That was the very thing they wanted to do, was it not? What had they to fear?

Mr. HOPKINS. They had the fear of getting into jail.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Those in this country?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. But I am speaking of the people in Mexico.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is quite different. I was advising them not to run counter to the neutrality laws. When I say that, I am referring to those Mexicans who were in exile here in the United States.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You have only told us of one or two Mexicans in this country who did get into jail.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; but perhaps it was due to my efforts that others did not.

Senator HITCHCOCK. It was to keep them out of jail, and that was all the service you rendered for $50,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. Generally speaking, and taking into consideration my previous statements, yes.

Senator BORAH. I suppose, occupying the relation which you did to the movement, your general advice and counsel was sought at all times on these matters, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Every day and sometimes all night.

Senator BORAH. And that covered the whole field of the revolutionary movement?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; covered the whole business, including my expenses, which were quite large.

Senator BORAH. But what I mean is, your advice and your counsel were sought upon the whole field of revolutionary action?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; every feature of it.

Senator SMITH. They had other counsel?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; not here.

Senator SMITH. In the United States?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think they had in San Antonio and El Paso.

Senator SMITH. Now, I want to go back a little and to ask you if you know anything about the payment of large interest, or the prepayment of large interest, as high as 40 per cent, for the use of money?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I do not.

Senator SMITH. For the use of money to aid the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Did you ever hear of such a thing?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Would it surprise you if they were called upon to pay large rates of interest?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; it would.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Did this fee of yours also include your efforts to secure loans for them in New York?

Mr. HOPKINS. That was hardly very serious. I had very little to do with that. I simply mentioned it to the gentlemen whose names I have mentioned. Of course, it did include that, naturally.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Did they expend any money with anyone else that you know of to procure loans?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not that I am aware of; no, sir.

Senator SMITH. Have you heard of any payment of that kind?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. To anyone else?

Mr. HOPKINS. I never heard of any such payment.

Senator SMITH. You were very familiar with the neutrality laws. Did you render any service in connection with the legislation to amend the neutrality laws?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Do you know anything about that legislation?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. When did you first know about it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it was on the 10th day of March, 1912.

Senator SMITH. How did you happen to know about it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I received a telegram.

Senator SMITH. From whom?

Mr. HOPKINS. From my firm.

Senator SMITH. Where were you?

Mr. HOPKINS. At Vera Cruz, Mexico.

Senator SMITH. To what effect?

Mr. HOPKINS. That the passage of a resolution which had been or was to be offered, I think by Senator Root, was imminent. I think it was based upon a message from the President, but I do not remember with certainty about that. I do recall that I received a telegram, I think in Vera Cruz, informing me about the resolution which was afterwards passed; I think on March 12 or 14 was about to be passed.

Senator SMITH. Have you that telegram?

Mr. HOPKINS. I doubt it very much.

Senator SMITH. Will you try to find it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I will take great pleasure in doing so. I was subsequently notified, I think either at Key West or Palm Beach, that the resolution had been passed. I probably have that telegram.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Was that after the Madero government had been established?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; long after.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Your firm undoubtedly have a copy of the telegram that they sent to you?

Mr. HOPKINS. I presume I have the original.

Senator SMITH. Will you try and get that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Both of them?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. It has been suggested that that legislation originally had its birth in your brain.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why, Senator, I was not in the country at that time.

Senator SMITH. Or of your firm.

Mr. HOPKINS. I was not in the country. I left the United States on the 27th of January. I had to go to Guatemala.

Senator SMITH. You considered it advantageous, of course, to the Madero government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I not only considered it advantageous to the Madero government, but I considered it, you might say, obligatory legislation on the part of the United States if it desired to perform its duty toward the Government of Mexico.

Senator McCUMBER. What legislation was that?

Senator SMITH. That was an amendment of the neutrality laws which somewhat radically tightened the regulations regarding the exportation of arms.

Senator McCUMBER. That was the provision which authorized the President to take possession of any arms that were being shipped across the line?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. How was that advantageous?

Senator HITCHCOCK. This was after the Madero were in.

Senator SMITH. After they were in the lines were drawn very tight, and I think Mr. Hopkins will admit that that was very helpful to the Madero government.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; very.

Senator SMITH. And rather hostile to the Orozco revolutionists?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator McCUMBER. This was after the second revolution was being hatched?

Mr. HOPKINS. It had already started.

Senator SMITH. It started, in fact, before they got in.

Senator BORAH. Do you still occupy and hold the relation of attorney to client with these people yet?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should say that I do, but in a personal way only.

Senator SMITH. I should like to have you produce that telegram—the first one you got.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will endeavor to do so.

Senator SMITH. While you were at Vera Cruz you got notice from your office that an important change was to be made in the neutrality laws?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it was while I was at Vera Cruz.

Senator SMITH. But just what that message said you are unable to state?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am unable to state at the present time.

Senator SMITH. And you have not been able to find the message yet?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not, yet.

Senator SMITH. But you are going to try to find it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am; yes, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Would not the telegraph office be able to produce a copy?

Senator SMITH. I think, perhaps, they would.

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand, they destroy their messages every six months. I will be very glad to write them a letter and ask them.

Senator SMITH. Now, recurring to what was said this morning with reference to your employment by Henry Clay Pierce, you said that when he found you had some information which showed graft on the part of certain people who held an oil concession in Mexico, he employed you to exploit that information?

Mr. HOPKINS. He requested me to see that all possible publicity was given to the wrongful acts of these people.

Senator SMITH. And those wrongful acts consisted in what? I think you said certain stock was given.

Mr. HOPKINS. In accepting shares of stock amounting to more than a million dollars in value—a million and a half in value—while certain of them held public office.

Senator SMITH. And this stock was given by——

Mr. HOPKINS. Lord Cowdray.

Senator SMITH. And the people to whom the stock was given you enumerated this morning?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; and there are others whose names escape me for the moment.

Senator SMITH. And that included the son of President Diaz?

Mr. HOPKINS. It did; yes, sir; 200 shares at $1,000 per share, 8 per cent guaranteed preferred stock.

Senator SMITH. Do you know the nature of that company's business in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think I do; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. What is it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand they are engaged in the refining and the sale of oil and its products.

Senator SMITH. In that country?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. In the United States?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; although the Pearson interests are engaged in the sale of oil in very large quantities. In fact, I have reason to believe that the Standard Oil Co. at the present time has a contract under the terms of which they practically control the Pearson interests and take the entire Pearson output of crude oil.

Senator SMITH. The Pearson Co. is not the same company as the Pierson Co. of Boston?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. Lord Cowdray was formerly Sir Weetman Pearson.

Senator SMITH. They were also interested in the Northwestern Railroad?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. I thought you said so this morning.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; on the directorate of the National Railways.

Senator SMITH. You say you have reason to believe they sell large quantities of oil to the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know they do; in fact, it is understood that the Standard now owns the Cowdray or Pearson oil interests.

Senator SMITH. How do you know that?

Mr. HOPKINS. From papers that I have seen and statements that have been made.

Senator SMITH. Where did you see them?

Mr. HOPKINS. In Mexico.

Senator SMITH. By whom were they exhibited?

Mr. HOPKINS. They were exhibited to me by a representative of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co.

Senator SMITH. What is his name?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think they were shown to me by J. N. Galbraith.

Senator SMITH. What office does he hold in that company?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think he is general manager.

Senator SMITH. Did you have any conference with him and Mr. Pierce there?

Mr. HOPKINS. I had many conferences with Mr. Galbraith.

Senator SMITH. None with Mr. Pierce?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I have only seldom conferred with Mr. Pierce in regard to this matter. Most of my conferences have been with Mr. Galbraith.

Senator SMITH. You stated this morning that Mr. Pierce employed you?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; exactly.

Senator SMITH. And that you were paid a thousand dollars for that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; something like that, by Mr. Galbraith.

Senator SMITH. Is that company a competitor with the Waters-Pierce Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you mean Cowdray's company?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Then, in your capacity as counsel for the revolutionary party, the Madero house, including all of them, and in your capacity as counsel for the Waters-Pierce Co., you want to be understood as saying that, so far as you know, neither of these people contributed any money toward the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Most positively. That is to say, I mean to assert that I know positively that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. contributed absolutely nothing toward the revolution; and, as I said before, I do not believe that any other American interests contributed toward the Madero revolution.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What leads you to that belief?

Mr. HOPKINS. Because my relations with them at that time were so close and my knowledge of their finances was such that I certainly would have known it had there been any.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Then could you give the committee a little better idea of their finances? I have not got it clear.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is a little difficult. It has been some time ago, and things were going on a little hastily then. I told you this morning I knew about the amount of money expended, and I know that toward the last they were near the end of their rope.

Senator HITCHCOCK. That was about $400,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. More or less.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And the whole cost of the revolution was a million and a half?

Mr. HOPKINS. Probably.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And the $400,000 they put in was in cash, without borrowing anything?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Where did the other $900,000 come from?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is impossible for any human being to say, because it came a few hundred dollars here and a few hundred dollars there; a few hundred dollars contributed by this person and that person—all Mexicans.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Why are you positive in saying that they were all Mexicans?

Mr. HOPKINS. Merely because of my very close association with, you might say, the leaders of the revolution, and being in daily correspondence with them and knowing their wants, and knowing their inability to get things that they did want.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Were there regular lists of the contributors kept?

Mr. HOPKINS. That I do not know.

Senator HITCHCOCK. How could you say positively that $100,000 had not been borrowed in the United States?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not say positively, but I am sure that if it had been I would have known it.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Was any borrowed?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not that I know of. I am positive that there was not any.

Senator SMITH. You tried to make a loan with this French banker?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I sounded him—that is to say. There were never any negotiations. I suggested it.

Senator SMITH. What did you offer him for that?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know of anything offered, Senator. There was no security suggested, of course, except the good faith of the revolutionary party.

Senator SMITH. An obligation on the part of the leaders?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, of course there would be an obligation. The revolutionary government was represented by what was termed a provisional government.

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. The headquarters of that government were in Madero's camp.

Senator SMITH. And those were the people that you represented?

Mr. HOPKINS. Those were the people who were to be responsible.

Senator SMITH. For this loan, if you had made it?

Mr. HOPKINS. For that loan, had any loan been made; but my mission was to sound; not to negotiate for or to conclude a loan.

Senator SMITH. You spoke this morning of only going to two other persons for this loan; one was Charles R. Flint and the other was Mr. Ivins?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. How did it happen that you did not go to the Waters-Pierce people?

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not know them.

Senator SMITH. You knew of them?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; but I did not know them. It would have been very impudent in me to have gone to a corporation of that kind when I had nothing to do with them; was not acquainted with them.

Senator SMITH. You did not know this French banker, did you?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; I knew him intimately.

Senator SMITH. How long had you known him?

Mr. HOPKINS. Four or five years. In fact, he had been a client of mine.

Senator SMITH. Had Mr. Flint been closely connected with you?

Mr. HOPKINS. All my life, and my father before me.

Senator SMITH. And Mr. Ivins?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And those were the only people that you attempted to make any loan with?

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not attempt to make loans with them. I simply sounded them to ascertain if in the future a loan could be made. When I mentioned it to this French banker, I simply mentioned $100,000 as a figure.

Senator SMITH. Now, in fact, you were acting for the Madero party in that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And was that a part of the services for which you were paid $50,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. I presume so; yes. Of course I was paid $50,000 for my entire services as counsel, covering eight months.

Senator SMITH. In gold?

Mr. HOPKINS. In gold.

Senator FALL. Excuse me just a moment. Was this Mexican oil company you are speaking of the Aguila?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is Cowdray's company.

Senator FALL. And the other?

Mr. HOPKINS. Is the Waters-Pierce Oil Co.

Senator FALL. Do you know anything about the Mexican Petroleum Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. I know there is such a company.

Senator FALL. In addition to this $50,000 that you received for your services, did you receive an interest in any concession?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator FALL. No land or anything like that, no concession?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator FALL. You are not interested now in any concession in Chiapas?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. May I made a remark there?

Senator FALL. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I heard through a friend of mine that an article had been published in one of the Mexico City newspapers in which it was stated that Gustavo Madero and some others and myself were interested in a concession in Chiapas. So far as I am concerned, I never heard of such a thing until after my return to the United States, and the statement is absolutely and unqualifiedly untrue. I have absolutely no interest, direct or indirect, in any concession in Mexico or anywhere else.

Senator SMITH. Nor have you had?

Mr. HOPKINS. Nor have I had nor any member of my family.

Senator SMITH. Nor any other person, to your knowledge?

Mr. HOPKINS. Neither directly nor indirectly in any way, shape, or form, contingent or otherwise. I want to make that as emphatic as possible.

Senator SMITH. Now, what is the real title of this national railway?

Mr. HOPKINS. The National Railways of Mexico—the Ferrocarriles Nacionales de México.

Senator SMITH. That does not include the Mexican Central, does it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes, sir. It is a consolidation of the old National Railway and the Central and one or two other small roads. They were nationalized about 1907 and consolidated by the Government.

Senator SMITH. You were interested in the railroad aspect of that situation?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I was.

Senator SMITH. How?

Mr. HOPKINS. The leading científicos had had themselves appointed directors of the National Railways and of course were controlling the policy of that road to suit their own ends; and I had always thought, and Gustavo Madero always thought, and others always thought, that those gentlemen should be gotten rid of as expeditiously as possible; and having the information that I had, they were very anxious to get it and use that in forcing them out, which they did.

Senator HITCHCOCK. In forcing whom out?

Mr. HOPKINS. In forcing them out.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Out of what?

Senator SMITH. Out of the railways.

Mr. HOPKINS. Forcing the científicos out of the control of the National Railways. They had previously had themselves elected directors.

Senator SMITH. Now, the Government of Mexico owns the stock in those companies, does it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Where are the securities held?

Mr. HOPKINS. Principally in the United States and in Europe.

Senator SMITH. Are there not some held in New York?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes.

Senator SMITH. Who holds them?

Mr. HOPKINS. I suppose Speyer & Co. hold a great many. I suppose Ladenburg, Thalman & Co. and Halgarten & Co. hold a great many. I suppose Mr. Pierce owns some. In fact, he is said to be the largest individual holder.

Senator FALL. He was practically at the head of that road for years, was he not?

Mr. HOPKINS. At the head of the Central.

Senator SMITH. That is Henry Clay Pierce?

Mr. HOPKINS. Henry Clay Pierce; yes. I suppose that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. are also holders. Of course the French and English banks, too, are very large holders.

Senator SMITH. This course that you outlined with reference to those railroads—the policy of Gustavo Madero and yourself—was known to the security holders of these properties?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. It was known to Henry Clay Pierce?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; it was afterwards known to him. Pardon me one moment. You asked me if it was known to the bankers? Yes; it became known to them.

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Through our acts.

Senator SMITH. That constituted part of the plan to change the management and direction of those roads?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not the management; the directorate.

Senator SMITH. The directorate of those roads?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Of those Mexican roads. And who took that matter up with you first?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it was Gustavo Madero who first spoke to me about it.

Senator SMITH. When?

Mr. HOPKINS. Here in Washington.

Senator SMITH. How long ago?

Mr. HOPKINS. During the revolution.

Senator SMITH. At about what stage?

Mr. HOPKINS. Probably about the middle of it. We talked it over at great length.

Senator SMITH. Did you have any conferences in New York about it?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Or anywhere else?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. And was the plan outlined between you and him?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; there was no plan outlined at that time, except that he made the declaration, and it was my understanding that his declaration had the approval of all the other leaders, that the científicos ought not only to be ousted from the directorate of the Mexican National Railways, but ousted from all other positions held by them. That was a mere incident.

Senator SMITH. What was to become of those railroads: was any plan discussed?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; except they were to be operated more for the benefit of the Government than heretofore.

Senator SMITH. Was there any plan that ever came to your attention that calculated to turn those roads over to the security holders?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never.

Senator SMITH. You simply wanted to change the directorate and control of the properties?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And that met with the approval of practically everyone?

Mr. HOPKINS. Of practically everyone.

Senator SMITH. Of your clients?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Both Henry Clay Pierce and Madero?

Mr. HOPKINS. I discussed the matter with Gustavo Madero at the time. I never discussed the matter with Mr. Henry Clay Pierce until after the revolution was over.

Senator SMITH. Then what did you say?

Mr. HOPKINS. I advised him as to what was on foot, and he was very heartily in favor of it.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What was his interest in the matter?

Mr. HOPKINS. A shareholder.

Senator SMITH. Security holder, was he not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Do you mean he was the owner of stocks or bonds?

Mr. HOPKINS. Both stocks and bonds.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Both stocks and bonds?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir. He had a very vital interest in the management of the National Railways.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Had the policy of the Mexican Government under Diaz and these científicos been such as to impair the value of his holdings?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should say that they threatened to impair the value of everybody's holdings.

Senator SMITH. How?

Mr. HOPKINS. By mismanagement in many respects.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Had it occurred?

Mr. HOPKINS. I said it was imminent; the danger was imminent.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What indicated it?

Mr. HOPKINS. We go back to the Tehuantepec National Railway, which was constructed, or reconstructed, by Lord Cowdray—or, rather, by Sir Weetman Pierson, as he was then. The construction of that railway cost the Mexican Government about twice what it was really worth. Lord Cowdray had a contract with the Mexican Government for the management of that railroad as managing partner with the Government, and it has always cost to operate that road probably one-third more than it would have had it been operated otherwise. That is the reason.

Senator HITCHCOCK. That was not one of these railroads?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is not one of the roads in the National Railways of Mexico.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You are referring to these roads that you are speaking of. What was there actually to show that the securities were being impaired?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will show you. It was the case of the National Tehuantepec Railroad. All Cowdray's directors in his Aguila Oil Co. were made directors in the National Railways of Mexico, and certain of the leaders, so I was informed, conceived the idea that objectionable conditions which prevailed in connection with the maintenance and operation of the National Tehuantepec Railway might be applied to the National Railways of Mexico.

Senator FALL. I would like to see if I can get that straightened out so that I can understand it. The National Railway of Mexico for many years was not identical with the National Railways of Mexico as they now stand? The Mexican Central Railway was under the direction of Mr. Henry Clay Pierce for many years?

Mr. HOPKINS. He was chairman of the board of directors, as I understand.

Senator FALL. And a large stockholder?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. Who ran the National Railway of Mexico, properly speaking?

Mr. HOPKINS. Who was in charge?

Senator FALL. At that time, of the consolidation.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I do not know, Senator.

Senator FALL. It was an American, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know.

Senator FALL. After the National Railways of Mexico were acquired by the Mexican Government through this revolutionary party, Madero and others, who was the general manager and the president of the road?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think Mr. Brown was afterwards made president.

Senator FALL. Who is the general manager and president of that road?

Mr. HOPKINS. He is president of the road.

Senator FALL. He is, although it is under the Mexican Railways?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. Has there been any change in the management of the road that you know of since the time the National Railways took it over, and Mr. Brown being president of it at that time?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; so far as I know there has been no change in the management.

Senator FALL. Then Gustavo Madero must have been mistaken about the impairment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Senator, I referred to the menace.

Senator FALL. They ran it for some time?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. In fact, Mr. Hopkins, the only change that has been made is that every American in Mexico has been run off the National Railways—every employee?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. And that incompetent Mexicans have been employed, and it has been almost impossible, even where they have not been interfered with by the rebels, for them to keep the trains running; and President Madero a short time ago issued a proclamation to the Mexican employees to the effect that if they did not take more pains in running these railways he was going to take some steps to find competent employees?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have heard that there were a great many complaints on account of new employees, Mexican employees, who were not properly trained; that is quite true.

Senator FALL. The general management of the roads has remained just the same as it was?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely the same.

Senator FALL. Under the cientificos method?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I think that the consolidated roads were started along right lines. I do not think there is any doubt about that. But, as I repeat, it was the menace of this board of directors.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You were starting to outline what this menace consisted of. I did not quite get that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I say I have to go back to the Tehuantepec National Railway matter, in which it is charged, openly and publicly, and figures have been introduced to prove the statement, that the railroad was constructed for just twice what it was worth.

Senator SMITH. That is a question of construction, and not of management.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, and it has also been managed from year to year for one-third more than should have been paid for the management; and, of course, by Lord Cowdray. And now Lord Cowdray's directors in his Aguila Co., his supporters, and his business associates, were put as directors on the National Railways of Mexico, in which Lord Cowdray did not own a share, and, of course, many persons feared that the same methods that were applied to the Tehuantepec National Railway would be applied to the National Railways of Mexico.

Senator FALL. Now, for years and years before the National Railways of Mexico had been organized, the railways had been run by this management, and for years and years prior to the acquisition by the Mexican Railways of the Mexican Central?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is right as far as the minor officials are concerned.

Senator FALL. And no change was made even after the National Railways were acquired by the Madero people? Since they were ousted no change has been made in the management?

Mr. HOPKINS. There has been a complete change in the directorate.

Senator FALL. Yes; but the management?

Mr. HOPKINS. The personnel and policy management has been the same.

Senator FALL. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. The executive heads of the railroad are identical; most of them are Americans.

Senator SMITH. There was a well-defined plan, according to your testimony, originated either by yourself or some one else, by which Henry Clay Pierce and Gustavo Madero were to reform the National Railways?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; not reform the Nation Railways, but simply to change the board of directors; to put in better men.

Senator SMITH. To get the other fellows out?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. To get the Diaz people out?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; and to remove the Cowdray menace.

Senator SMITH. And was that at the bottom of your interest in the matter?

Mr. HOPKINS. In what matter?

Senator SMITH. In this railway matter?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. You spoke of that early this morning.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. That was at the bottom of your plan?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And that had the approval of Mr. Pierce?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. And Mr. Madero?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. This matter was a matter between Gustavo Madero, some others, and myself. Mr. Pierce I did not even know at that time. I never knew Mr. Pierce until after the revolution was over.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Then, to find out what was Madero's interest in it: Was he a stockholder?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; he was a Mexican.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What was his interest?

Mr. HOPKINS. He had simply a patriotic interest in it.

Senator HITCHCOCK. It was pure patriotism?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Was there ever any intention, or did you hear any talk, that these railroads were to be turned over to the security holders?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; I read charge after charge in the sensational Mexican papers down there opposed to President Madero that there were schemes on foot of that nature, but I do not think anybody ever paid any attention to them.

Senator SMITH. What do you think of it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it is absolutely absurd.

Senator SMITH. You think they are satisfied to get in on the directorate?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; to get the objectionable ones off the board.

Senator SMITH. And let the matter rest there?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. The bankers are also so well represented on that directorate that I think there would be little chance of a mishap.

Senator FALL. Are any of these security holders interested with the American Fruit Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. You mean the United Fruit Co.?

Senator FALL. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Senator, the only person that I know of that might have associated between the two would be Mr. Bradley W. Palmer, who is general counsel of the United Fruit Co., and who, I believe, represented some large Boston interests in connection with the consolidation. He was once a director. I do not think, however, that Mr. Palmer has any present interests in the National Railways of Mexico. If he has, I do not know it. Of course, he probably has some interest in the Northwestern Railroad and an indirect interest in the Pan American road which they are building through Chiapas down into Guatemala, because his client, Mr. Keith, has purchased the Northern Guatemala and the Guatemala Central, with which the Pan American is to connect. That is all.

Senator FALL. Do you know whether those people have any idea of connecting the Mexican national lines with those Central American lines?

Mr. HOPKINS. I suppose they will have to be connected, Senator. I do not see any other way than that.

Senator FALL. Do you know whether Mr. Van Horne or Mr. Pearson are interested with them?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know, Senator.

Senator FALL. Do you know whether they are interested with them?

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand so. I happen to have been in Guatemala, and I happen to know that the Northern Railway of Guatemala, as you perhaps know, is owned by Mr. Keith, Gen. Hubbard, and Sir William Van Horne jointly, and they and certain of their associates have recently purchased the road that runs from the capital down to the west coast, which will connect with the Pan American.

Senator FALL. And Sir William Van Horne was interested in the Pearson-Farquhar syndicates and electric light plant in the City of Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I think so.

Senator FALL. And they also owned the Mexican Northwestern?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. And he is one of the directors of the Pacific Central?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. And is it not generally understood that there will be a railroad line extending from Panama to Canada when it is opened up?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. You can go by rail to-day from Montreal, Canada, to Guatemala City.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Was D. E. Thompson connected with this Mexican Railroad?

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you refer to the ex-ambassador?

Senator HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I think he simply acted as an intermediary in the matter of the purchase of one of them.

Senator HITCHCOCK. That is, its sale to the Mexican Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; to the national railways, under the cientifico régime, and he made a very substantial profit by the transactions.

Senator FALL. Let me ask you again: Do you not think it was really the desire of Gustavo Madero to possibly assist persons who were kind to him, or with whom he was acting, to get rid of the directors of Cowdray's railway—that is, the Pearson syndicate—who were also directors in El Aguila? Some of those were directors also of the Mexican National.

Mr. HOPKINS. Luis Riba, Pablo Macedo, Landa y Escandon, Porfirio Diaz, jr., and other of this group were all Cowdray's friends and supporters; and when through his influence and through their own they were put, you might say, in command of the National Railways, some of the stockholders began to sit up and take notice, as they feared that the same methods that had been applied to the Tehuantepec National Railway would be applied to the National Railways of Mexico and thereby very seriously interfere with the dividends.

Senator FALL. Afterwards the Mexican Central was acquired by the Mexican Railways and Pearson was perfectly satisfied with that arrangement?

Mr. HOPKINS. He had nothing to do with it; that consolidation was made possible and effected through Mr. Pierce.

Senator FALL. As a matter of fact, the Mexican Central Railroad had been paying only a very low price when that arrangement was made?

• Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. And, in fact, after it became a part of the Mexican Railways, it became a paying institution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Undoubtedly

Senator FALL. So that at the time Gustavo Madero was patriotically wanting to get rid of its directorate, the railway was a paying institution, which had not been a paying institution in the past?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; thanks to the New York board. It was the menace that stirred the shareholders.

Senator FALL. And Pierce still retained some interest in that road?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes. I do not think that Mr. Pierce, who was chairman of the New York board, was so alarmed as some others.

Senator FALL. And Mr. Pierce was formerly interested in other business in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Very materially.

Senator FALL. And Cowdray was interested?

Mr. HOPKINS. Was his competitor.

Senator FALL. Was his competitor; yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. He was.

Senator FALL. As a matter of fact, Cowdray was considered to be the one partner that Diaz had ever had in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. And as a part of Pierce's scheme to down Cowdray thoroughly he was getting rid of Diaz's friends in the Cowdray properties and in the oil company, which was a competitor of Pierce?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir. He desired, I suppose, to get rid of Cowdray's directors in the National Railways, in which Cowdray did not own a share and in which he, Pierce, was the largest individual security holder. It was a case of protecting himself against piracy.

Senator FALL. And Pierce had sold a road which was not paying to the Cowdray associates, and they had brought it up at that time, and Madero wanted to take the control away from him?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is true only to a limited extent. When Mr. Pierce sold the Central to the Mexican Government his dealings were with Mr. Limantour, and not with Cowdray's associates. At that time the road was, I have understood, on a prosperous basis, and its stock worth four or five times as much as when Mr. Pierce bought it. Cowdray had no interest as a shareholder in this business.

Senator FALL. Then, I do not see where his patriotism came in. That is a matter of judgment, of course.

Mr. HOPKINS. This was not alone the view of Gustavo Madero, but it was the view of everyone connected with the revolutionary movement.

Senator SMITH. What was the motive?

Mr. HOPKINS. The motive was to get rid of the cientificos on the board of directors, who were also political reactionaries and enemies of the revolution.

Senator SMITH. Was not the motive—one of the motives of the revolution—to get control of these properties?

Mr. HOPKINS. No. The proof of it is that they have not taken any special control, except to remove opportunity for graft; they have not taken, certainly, as much control as the Diaz government exercised.

Senator SMITH. That does not quite answer the question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should say no. I should not say that that was a special motive.

Senator SMITH. It all works out in the wash?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should say that was a mere house-cleaning incident.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Were the directors allowed to remain?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; they were forced out.

Senator HITCHCOCK. They were forced out?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And new directors were put in satisfactory to Pierce and Madero?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; not satisfactory to Pierce, but satisfactory to President Madero. Mr. Pierce was not consulted. I do not understand that he cared who the new directors were, so long as they were square.

Senator HITCHCOCK. I understood you to say Madero and Pierce were operating together?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I said that their views were harmonious about getting rid of objectionable characters.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And Madero was actuated by patriotism?

Mr. HOPKINS. Absolutely and entirely, and I can tell you that it is susceptible of proof that the Government of which Mr. Madero is president did not consult Mr. Pierce when the new directorate was selected. Furthermore, the bulk of changes were not made until the annual meeting of stockholders in October, 1911, and then in the manner prescribed by law.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You say that Madero and Pierce operated together?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I repeat that their views were harmonious. There was absolutely no connection. I also repeat that I did not even know Mr. Pierce; I did not know anyone connected with him, and I had never spoken with anyone acting for him until the revolution was over.

Senator HITCHCOCK. You spoke of being retained by him.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not long after the revolution, but after the revolution had ceased.

Senator HITCHCOCK. To assist in getting them out?

Mr. HOPKINS. To assist in giving due publicity—

Senator HITCHCOCK. In getting out those directors that Madero wanted to get out?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; only Mr. Madero did not have to cooperate.

Senator HITCHCOCK. So that both Pierce and Madero were co-operating, and you were acting for both of them?

Mr. HOPKINS. They had ideas in common. But Mr. Madero as president could have removed any director whenever he wished, but refrained from such a radical course. I was not acting for Mr. Madero naturally at this time.

Senator SMITH. That was the first connection that you admitted this morning, was the railway aspect of it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. As a matter of fact, it is rather an incident, if you may treat it as such—

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. It is an incident.

Senator SMITH (continuing). Of the revolution. This evolution of the railroad properties down there is all an incident to the revolution, of course. It could not have occurred if Diaz had remained?

Mr. HOPKINS. You mean the directors would not have been forced out if Diaz had remained?

Senator SMITH. I mean these changes would not have taken place?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; probably not.

Senator SMITH. But you went down there to bring these weaknesses to the attention of the Mexican people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. With a view to bringing about just what has taken place, did you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. That has been a part of your service?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. Mr. Hopkins, of course, you were here, I presume, and not at Juarez, when the attack was made at Juarez which was finally successful?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was in Washington.

Senator FALL. But you are very familiar, of course, with what was done there?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; very familiar.

Senator FALL. Why was it that Madero did not want Juarez attacked at the time it was attacked, and why was it he ordered his troops out?

Mr. HOPKINS. There have been many explanations made of that.

Senator FALL. Do you know his father?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; very well, indeed.

Senator FALL. His father, who was on here and in New York and in Washington?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. His father was not originally in favor of the Madero revolution, was he?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is true, sir, as I have understood it.

Senator FALL. That he was not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; his sympathies, I have heard, were very doubtful before the outbreak.

Senator FALL. He came on here. Were you with him in New York?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I saw him there.

Senator FALL. At the Belmont Hotel?

Mr. HOPKINS. At the Belmont and at the Astor.

Senator FALL. Was José Y. Limantour with him at the Belmont at the time?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; he came to the Astor afterwards, where a special suite of rooms had been prepared.

Senator FALL. Mr. Limantour was at that time what we know as the secretary of the treasury, was he not?

Mr. HOPKINS. The minister of finance.

Senator FALL. And he was also a director in this oil company, was he not, of Cowdray?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; he was one of the few men among the científicos whose skirts were clean.

Senator FALL. Was he not a director in the Mexican National Railways?

Mr. HOPKINS. As minister of finance he was, ex officio, a director,

Senator FALL. And was a special appointment made, and was there a conference between Madero, sr., and Mr. Limantour?

Mr. HOPKINS. And also Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez.

Senator FALL. That was immediately upon Limantour's return from France, was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; a little prior to going to Mexico.

Senator FALL. Do you remember a newspaper report of an interview with Mr. Limantour, just as he was leaving France?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; very well.

Senator FALL. With reference to Mexican affairs?

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well.

Senator FALL. Do you remember that Mr. Creel issued a denial from Mexico City that any such report could have any authenticity?

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well.

Senator FALL. In that interview Mr. Limantour practically stated that Diaz ought to get out of the presidency.

Mr. HOPKINS. Quite true.

Senator FALL. And then Limantour went to New York and had there a conference with Francesco.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. Don Francesco, sr., then went down to San Antonio, and afterwards followed his son in the field with Orozco, followed his son down into the camp, and came back with him a portion of the way, at least, up to Juarez. Now, do you know whether the negotiations then pending between José Limantour and Francisco, sr., had anything to do with the orders issued by Madero, now President of Mexico, to Orozco and others, not to attack Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. May I ask the source of your information?

Mr. HOPKINS. From the very first I have not fallen back at all on my right to decline to answer.

Senator SMITH. No; you have been very good.

Mr. HOPKINS. And I am not going to do it now. My source of information was Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez and José Vasconcelos.

Senator FALL. Do you know what the purport of those negotiations had been between Limantour and the elder Madero, news of which was carried to Francisco Madero, now president, and which pending negotiations caused him, or were purported to have caused him, to order Orozco not to make an attack on Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me answer that. I want to answer it a little more in extenso.

Senator FALL. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Those negotiations, the pendency of those negotiations, and the apprehension with which Francisco Madero was inspired that any attack by him on Juarez, and which might lead to casualties on the American side, might be followed by intervention on the part of the United States.

Senator FALL. Well, these negotiations which occurred in New York, and a report of which was taken by Francisco Madero, sr., to Francisco Madero, jr., had nothing to do with the fear of casualties on this side.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; they were two separate and distinct points.

Senator FALL. What were those negotiations?

Mr. HOPKINS. They were negotiations looking to a compromise.

Senator FALL. Was any money offered?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not that I know of.

Senator SMITH. Did you hear of any?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. Of course, I read the usual rumors in the newspapers, but that is all I ever heard.

Senator FALL. Now, you got your own knowledge from these parties, either of them we have been talking about, these revolutionists, or from Mr. Limantour, and of your own knowledge, then, you do not know whether Limantour at that time offered certain financial inducements which caused Mr. Francisco I. Madero to order a retreat of his forces from Juarez?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator FALL. Did you ever, from any source of information, learn what report, if any, Limantour made to President Diaz in the City of Mexico, with reference to the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I never learned.

Senator FALL. Do you know whether any information was conveyed by himself or by any representative of President Diaz, with the knowledge of any of the revolutionists or of yourself, to President Diaz, as to what might occur in the event the revolution went on, with reference to the possibility of American intervention?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not say that I have any such knowledge, personally.

Senator FALL. Do you know anything about the financial condition of the house of Madero at the time of the outbreak of this revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator FALL. Do you know anything about any judgments which were of record in various cities in Mexico against the house of Madero and individual members of the family?

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you mean judgments which were rendered by the courts subsequent to the outbreak of the revolution?

Senator FALL. Well, at the time, and—

Mr. HOPKINS. I have understood that parties were encouraged to bring suits against them, and that various judgments were rendered against individual members of the family, and that the Government sought to intervene in the affairs of the Bank of Nueva Leon for the purpose of injuring them as much as possible, and that agents of the Government were sent down to Nueva Leon for the purpose of taking charge of their affairs.

Senator SMITH. Do you mean these claims were fictitious?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not necessarily fictitious.

Senator SMITH. Annoying?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Do you mean that the whole power of the Government was being exerted to enforce the collection of those claims in a very onerous way?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. You do not know, of yourself, as to whether those judgments were obtained upon genuine claims, or, as some of them claim, upon fictitious claims?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I do not: though I heard that they were framed up like the case against Mr. Sanchez Azcona.

Senator FALL. Do you know Mr. Moir?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator FALL. Do you know anything about the rubber business of the Madero family?

Mr. HOPKINS. Only in a general way.

Senator FALL. You had nothing to do with financing their affairs?

Mr. HOPKINS. I had absolutely nothing whatever to do with their affairs at all.

Senator FALL. I did not know whether you had been their financial agent in any way.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; nothing of that sort.

Senator FALL. Do you know whether Gustavo Madero, in the city of El Paso, received money from the Continental Rubber Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I do not; and I doubt it very much, for the reason that I know that Gustavo was about at the end of his bank account at that time and that the capture of Juarez and the consequent ability of the revolutionists to enjoy the receipts of the customhouse rendered his official position much easier.

Senator FALL. Do you know whether, immediately upon the capture of Juarez, Gustavo Madero made and secured the cashing of drafts on banks in the City of Mexico to the amount of $150,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I do not know anything about those operations at all.

Senator FALL. Do you know where Gustavo Madero is now?

Mr. HOPKINS. He was in Mexico City the last that I knew.

Senator FALL. Did you have anything to do with the purchase of any arms or ammunition here for the revolutionists?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I never purchased any. Except during the Spanish War, when I was concerned in the purchase of some materials of war for our own Government, I never purchased a gun in my life—that is, personally.

Senator SMITH. You knew they were purchased here?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. You knew who purchased them, did you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. I do not want to appear to be contentious. Certainly I am not asking anything that I intend to be in any objectionable way; but you, as a matter of fact, have had a good deal to do with revolutions, have you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have had, Senator, something to do with them; yes, sir; also in maintaining certain constituted governments.

Senator SMITH. You knew that Zelaya was going to be put out of the Presidency of Nicaragua some time before he was?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. And you imparted your knowledge to people in Europe, did you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I imparted the information to a friend of mine named Otto Fuerth, whom I had known for a number of years and who had vital interests in that Republic, and I did not want to see him make a loss, and I gave him a little quiet information.

Senator SMITH. Your information was in the nature of rather positive information, coming direct, as to what was going to happen?

Mr. HOPKINS. I knew exactly what was going to happen. I knew that nothing could save Zelaya.

Senator SMITH. That came directly from our Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should not say directly from our Government, Senator. I knew what was going to happen before our Government did, and stopped Zelaya's loan from going through. I am also free to say that I received a great many hints that things were going to happen. I knew the sentiment in the Department of State and elsewhere, and felt that if a revolution once started on the east coast of Nicaragua Zelaya was lost.

Senator FALL. A copy of that letter, or what purports to be a copy of that letter, is in the hands of this committee by a very peculiar incident.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not believe there is anything in the letter that I should be ashamed of.

Senator FALL. I do not mean that to be assumed, at all. I have not a transcript of the matter here before me, but it showed you were familiar with revolutions.

Mr. HOPKINS. I was. I am free to admit that I did everything I could to drive both Zelaya and Madriz out of Nicaragua. I do not think I ever worked any harder in my life than I did on that case. This pair both sought the hospitality of the científicos in Mexico upon their overthrow.

Senator FALL. And you say you do not know the Mexican Petroleum Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know the name of the Mexican Petroleum Co. I think there is a Mexican Oil Co. and a Mexican Petroleum Co., but I do not identify them particularly.

Senator FALL. Do you know Ed Doheney?

Mr. HOPKINS. I know who he is.

Senator FALL. And Mr. Canfield, his partner?

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, if you will pardon me, the Mexican Petroleum Co. is Doheney's company, which is, I think, a very large exporter of oil, and the understanding is that they have arrived at an understanding or something more with the Standard.

Senator FALL. That the Mexican Government have certain concessions?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know anything about that.

Senator FALL. Do you know about what is known as the Adler concession, a pipe-line concession in Vera Cruz?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I can assure you that the Adler concession is not worth the paper it is written on, and Mr. Madero has so indicated. As soon as he found out what——

Senator FALL. But Mr. Madero himself made a personal request of the Congress that the pipe-line concession should be granted.

Mr. HOPKINS. It could not have been that pipe-line concession. I do not think Mr. Madero ever made such a personal request. I think your information is in error in that respect. The Adler pipe-line concession was first obtained from the Legislature of the State of Vera Cruz, and was subsequently confirmed by the Federal Government, and as soon as the matter was brought to the attention of Mr. Madero, I think the word went out that the concession would not be worth much.

Senator FALL. It was, however, confirmed after his accession?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. How could the word go out that it would not be worth anything?

Mr. HOPKINS. I understood that the declaration was made by a member of the cabinet, which indicated to all persons——

Senator SMITH. A member of the cabinet of the Mexican Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. That indicated to all persons interested in the shipment of oil that this concession would never be of much value to anyone.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What did that mean?

Mr. HOPKINS. Exactly what the language implied.

Senator HITCHCOCK. That the Government would repudiate it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not that the Government would repudiate it, but that the Government would not regard with favor its carrying out.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What is the difference?

Mr. HOPKINS. Almost any construction can be placed upon it. I do not think it is President Madero's idea, and I do not think it is the idea of the present administration of Mexico, to issue any concession which could be called monopolistic. I do not think it is the idea of Mr. Madero's Government to invite into Mexico any corporations who have any such ideas or principles; and I think it was in harmony with that policy that this hint was given out. I am giving you this information purely by hearsay.

Senator SMITH. They granted it in the first instance right after they came into power?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. It was granted under a misapprehension.

Senator SMITH. They granted it after they came into power?

Mr. HOPKINS. The State of Vera Cruz granted that concession as one of our States would grant a permit or franchise, and then it had to be confirmed by the Federal Government, and it was confirmed by publication in the Diario Oficial.

Senator FALL. El Aguila was the Cowdray Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. Madero went to work to do all he could to break down the Cowdray influence in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. He has followed the law, and I have heard of none of the Cowdray concessions having been forfeited or repudiated.

Senator FALL. Then the Mexican Petroleum Co. did get very valuable pipe-line concessions, exclusive concessions?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; the Mexican Petroleum Co. did not get the Adler concessions, although it may have obtained one to pipe its oil from its wells to tidewater.

Senator FALL. Well, allied interests?

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand it, the Adler pipe-line concession was the only large concession granted for piping oil down there. As I understand it, that concession has never been transferred; and as I further understand it, it has practically lapsed by limitation and about ceased to exist.

Senator FALL. The Mexican Petroleum Co., at any rate, is now doing a large business in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; very large with the Standard.

Senator FALL. You keep fairly posted with reference to the stock market, and things of that kind, in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do in regard to some of the very large companies.

Senator FALL. Do you know what the shares of the Mexican Petroleum Co. were worth before the Madero revolution became successful?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I do not.

Senator FALL. Do you know what they are worth now?

Mr. HOPKINS. The last I saw, they were worth seventy-odd.

Senator FALL. I think 85 was the last quotation. There has been a very large increase from what they were?

Mr. HOPKINS. A very large increase. That increase has taken place since the Mexican Petroleum Co. arrived at an understanding with the Standard Oil Co.

Senator FALL. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. And, as I understand, it is the Standard Oil Co. money that has enabled the Mexican Petroleum Co. to strengthen itself there.

Senator FALL. Yes; and do you know whether Doheney and Canfield are interested in the Mexican Petroleum Co., or whether it is practically owned by the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. They still manage it, I may say. According to common report, however, this company is controlled, if not owned, by the Standard Oil Co. I know on one occasion they were a little hard up for money, and all they had to do was to go to No. 26 Broadway, where they got $400,000 within a few minutes.

Senator SMITH. To the Standard Oil Co.'s offices?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. Will you permit me to insert something in the record?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like it to be distinctly understood, since my name has been mentioned in connection with the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., that that company is not a Standard Oil Company, and has used every endeavor at its command to divorce any interests which it might have had in common from the Standard; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. has done more than anyone else to keep the Standard out of Mexico, and has been and is its greatest enemy in that country. I just want to get that in the record.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Will you state when that divorce began?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. And state how long that fight has been going on?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can tell the whole story.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Just state its beginning.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know that I can state the date of its beginning with absolute accuracy, but it was long before the revolution broke out.

Senator SMITH. How long?

Mr. HOPKINS. At least two or three years.

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. At that time did not the Standard Oil Co. control a majority interest in the Waters-Pierce Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Standard Oil Co. obtained, surreptitiously, some outstanding stock in the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., which gave it a control. Then it attempted to exercise that control; but, as I understand it, Mr. Henry Clay Pierce was enabled to balk the Standard, not only in Missouri but in Texas, and as the result the Standard was driven from Texas as well as from Missouri. At the present time Mr. Pierce has all the stock of the Waters-Pierce Co. The Standard Oil Co. has none.

Senator HITCHCOCK. I thought the Standard Oil Co. controlled the Waters-Pierce Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Pierce has compelled the Standard Oil Co. to sell its stock, and he owns it outright now; he and his friends, of course. The Standard Oil Co. owns nothing in the Waters-Pierce Co.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Did not the Standard Oil Co. own a controlling interest of the Waters-Pierce Co. at the time the Mexican revolution broke out?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; and under a decree of the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri the Standard Oil Co. was enjoined from exercising any control over the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. or its business, or doing any business with the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., or doing any business in the State of Missouri.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Yes; but this is the point: If the Standard Oil Co. controlled the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. at the time the revolution broke out, does it not then follow that anything done by the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. at that time was practically done by the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; because the Standard Oil Co. did not control the Waters-Pierce Oil Co.

Senator FALL. You mean, did not control the management, do you not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Did not control the management, business, or policy. The only connection that the Standard Oil Co. had with the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. was that it owned stock in it. It had absolutely nothing to do with the Waters-Pierce Co. That was the great bone of contention.

Senator FALL. It controlled the stock but not the management?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. And, as a matter of fact, the fight between the two companies in Mexico was a fight between the parent and child? Henry Clay Pierce wanted to keep control of that territory in which his company had been organized?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; and as a result the Standard Oil Co. has what we may call an arrangement with the Cowdray interests and with the Doheney interests, and has made contracts with them, as a result of which the Standard Oil Co. to-day practically controls the entire output of crude oil in Mexico, a very serious thing, that will doubtless, in due course, receive proper consideration.

Senator FALL. Pierce, then, was not successful in his fight with them down there since the revolution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not yet. Furthermore, I think, since this subject has been touched upon, I may add that the Standard Oil Co.—that is, John D. Archbold, Teagle, Folger, and the crowd at 26 Broadway—organized in Texas some time ago, keeping their interest secret, of course, a company called the Magnolia Petroleum Co., as the result of which they are now under indictment by a Federal grand jury for violation of the Sherman Act, and, according to Attorney General

Wickersham, will be reindicted next month and tried in February. About four months ago—of course this was before they were found out—that company purchased some 400 acres of land, surreptitiously, at Tampico, and the Standard Oil Co. sent down its own men to go over the land and survey it and purchase it for the Magnolia Co., all the while denying they had any interest in it. They were to erect, and will erect, on that land an immense refinery, and with that as a base and with the possible consolidation with the Aguila Oil Co. they will endeavor to monopolize the oil business in Mexico, precisely as they did in this country until recently; all of which I think will be very bitterly opposed by the Madero administration and the Federal Government of Mexico.

Senator SMITH. You speak of their going to the Standard office and getting a check for $400,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; Mr. Doheney, whose Mexican petroleum company is now controlled by the Standard.

Senator SMITH. How did you know about that?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was informed of it the same day.

Senator SMITH. By whom?

Mr. HOPKINS. The information came from a man in the office of the Standard Oil Co., and was communicated to a gentleman who informed me. I really do not think it is proper that I should mention his name, unless there is some urgent necessity for it.

Senator SMITH. Was it Mr. Pierce?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Was it Gustavo Madero?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. This was in the summer of 1911—in August or September, I think.

Senator SMITH. It was not the secretary of the president?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. This was in New York; this took place in New York, while I was in New York myself.

Senator SMITH. I understand.

Mr. HOPKINS. On the same day that it happened.

Senator SMITH. I was just wondering how you happened to get that information so promptly.

Mr. HOPKINS. That was the way.

Senator SMITH. I suppose others wondered at the same thing.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. There is a little information that I might like on behalf of the committee from Mr. Hopkins later. I do not know of anything just now, but I have some documents I want to look over for some names. If the committee will send for him in future, at some time that suits his convenience, I would like to reserve the right to ask him a few questions at that time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Any time, Senator. I am at your service.

Senator SMITH. Senator Hitchcock, do you want to ask any questions?

Senator HITCHCOCK. No; I do not think so.

Senator SMITH. Judging from all you have said, Mr. Hopkins, your familiarity with the Waters-Pierce interests and the fight they have been making in Mexico and your intimate relations with Mr. Madero, you have not been paid any very large sum for what you have done for them

Mr. HOPKINS. I was paid a fair fee by the Government for what I did during the revolution.

Senator SMITH. Yes; and that was not supposed to cover your services to Mr. Henry Clay Pierce, was it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, of course not.

Senator SMITH. Are you receiving a salary now?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Are you from the Mexican Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. That has been stated. That is the reason that I asked you the question.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; I am not.

Senator SMITH. Going back to the question of your original employment, I think you said to Senator Hitchcock that at the time this revolution began the Standard Oil Co. had a very large interest in the Waters-Pierce Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And practically acquired control of its stock—a majority?

Mr. HOPKINS. They had a majority holding.

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. But they did not control the company.

Senator SMITH. Through any agency of the Waters-Pierce Co., or anyone else, did you ever perform any service for the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. HOPKINS. Under no circumstances whatsoever. I have never had a thing to do with the Standard Oil Co., either directly or indirectly.

Senator SMITH. That is, knowingly?

Mr. HOPKINS. Knowingly. I know positively that I have not.

Senator SMITH. Then what you did for the Waters-Pierce Co. would not inure to their benefit?

Mr. HOPKINS. On the contrary, everything that I did for the Waters-Pierce Co. was against the interests of the Standard.

Senator HITCHCOCK. The Standard had stock in it?

Mr. HOPKINS. It had stock in it; but it was quite willing to sacrifice its stock interest to destroy the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., because they saw what was coming, and that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. would be able to so establish itself that it could withstand any attack.

Senator SMITH. In Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. Everywhere; in Mexico and in the Middle West.

Senator FALL. How could they do it in Mexico unless they could get some such law, some such decision, as was obtained in Missouri and Texas?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what they have obtained now.

Senator FALL. But they had to get something of the same kind in Mexico in order to succeed?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; they organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, and they are doing business under that charter in Mexico.

Senator FALL. That is, Mexico has recognized their charter as it does a Mexican charter?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; and, as I say, the Standard Oil Co. is out of it. They do not own a share of stock in the Waters-Pierce Co.

Senator FALL. That is, now; but at the time they did own it and were doing business in Mexico, the Standard Oil Co. actually owned it!

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; the stock.

Senator FALL. And the only way that they could be compelled to divorce themselves in Mexico would have been by some such decision as that in Missouri and Texas, rendered in Mexico?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is quite true; but the Standard Oil Co. was not keen to meddle in Mexico until they began to have this relationship with Cowdray & Doheny.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Do the Cowdray companies still enjoy the benefits of their concessions there?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And the Standard Oil Co. is simply a purchaser of their products?

Mr. HOPKINS. No one knows, Senator, exactly the nature of the interest that the Standard Oil Co. has in the Cowdray properties; but we all know that they do have an interest, and control them, because the Standard Oil Co. steamers are there at Tampico every day getting oil from the Cowdray & Doheney companies.

Senator FALL. A half ownership of the Cowdray company, of that scheme, of that whole business, was in the Mexican Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator FALL. Practically so?

Mr. HOPKINS. No.

Senator FALL. And in the Aguila, what we call the Aguila down there?

Mr. HOPKINS. There were vast personal holdings of some of the leading men of the Mexican Government.

Senator FALL. Was it not a Government property?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not of the Government.

Senator FALL. Was it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is true of the Tehuantepec Railway across Tehuantepec, which Cowdray operates for the Government.

Senator FALL. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is also true of the interest which the Mexican Government has in the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co.

Senator FALL. But it is not true of the oil business?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; but it is true of the land concessions.

Senator FALL. I am speaking now of the oil business.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Mexican Government participates in that only to the extent of receiving a royalty from oil taken from the National lands, over and above a certain number of barrels.

Senator FALL. Cowdray was interested in getting rid of the Cientifico directors, and putting his own directors in there, the Government still enjoying its rights?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Government has no directors in Cowdray's company.

Senator FALL. I understood you to say that the Cientificos crowd, who were partners or directors with Cowdray, Madero wanted to get rid of?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I was speaking of wanting to get rid of them in the National Railways.

Senator FALL. How about El Aguila; as a matter of fact, were they not forced out of El Aguila?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; that is a corporation entirely separate and independent of the Government. The Government has no control over it any more than over any other corporation.

Senator FALL. And the same directors who were directors before Madero took charge there, are they now the directors?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; most of them have fled.

Senator FALL. And Madero has his own directors?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir. Mr. Madero has nothing to do with it; that is for Lord Cowdray alone. It is a corporation distinct from Government control.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Do you know whether the Cowdray Co. named the new directors?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is an oil company that is owned by Lord Cowdray and associates. Naturally they name the directors in their own company.

Senator HITCHCOCK. I thought you were speaking of the railroad.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator FALL. I may be entirely wrong. I engaged in operations in Mexico sometime ago, in a turpentine company. I had relations with the oil companies, because they were largely purchasers of my product, and I had personal relations with men who were directors after the El Aguila was formed. I must say that my understanding was that El Aguila was a governmental concern, Lord Cowdray putting in certain properties and holding his interest, and the Government enjoying, the general understanding was, one-half of the profits.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I can assure you that your understanding was wrong.

Senator FALL. I may be wrong.

Mr. HOPKINS. Because I have read the articles of incorporation very carefully; I know perfectly well the conditions.

Senator FALL. Mr. Creel was a director of El Aguila?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Creel is now president of the El Aguila Oil Co.

Senator SMITH. Did you ever have any dealings with that bank that you spoke of this morning, where Gustavo Madero deposited six hundred and odd thousand dollars?

Mr. HOPKINS. The International Banking Corporation?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have only had to deal with them in a friendly way, because my firm are counsel for the two great banks of the Far East; that is, the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation and the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China. The International Banking Corporation was organized originally to enter the far eastern field, and in that connection I have been brought frequently in contact with a good many of their officials.

Senator SMITH. Is that the reason you suggested that the money be deposited there?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I knew it to be a very solid institution.

Senator SMITH. Had you ever had any money deposited with them there?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Have you since?

Mr. HOPKINS. Never.

Senator SMITH. It seemed to be perfectly agreeable to Mr. Madero to put it there?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; he knew the stability of the institution.

Senator SMITH. It gives you rather an intimate acquaintance with the financial operations of Mr. Madero?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I had opportunity to learn a good deal. I did not learn as much as I might have, however, if I had been a little more inquisitive.

Senator FALL. The two great banks in the City of Mexico are the Banco Nacional and the Banco de Londres?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator FALL. The Banco Nacional is practically a Government institution, is it not?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Is this International Bank a private institution?

Mr. HOPKINS. Organized, I believe, under the laws of the State of New York.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Where does it do business?

Mr. HOPKINS. All over the world.

Senator HITCHCOCK. It has branch offices in Washington?

Mr. HOPKINS. Its head office is in New York.

Senator HITCHCOCK. It has an office in Washington?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. It did have?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; it did have.

Senator HITCHCOCK. And one in Mexico City?

Mr. HOPKINS. It has one in Mexico City and one in Panama, and, of course, all the cities of the Far East.

TESTIMONY OF JUNIUS ROMNEY.

Junius Romney, being first duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

Senator SMITH. Where do you live?

Mr. ROMNEY. I live at Colonia Juarez, Chihuahua, Mexico.

Senator SMITH. Are you an American citizen?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Where is your American home; in what State?

Mr. ROMNEY. I have been in Mexico so long that I really have no home here. I was born in St. George, Washington County, Utah. I have lived also in St. John, Ariz.

Senator SMITH. How old are you?

Mr. ROMNEY. I am 34 years old.

Senator SMITH. What is your business?

Mr. ROMNEY. I am at present the legal and ecclesiastical representative of the Mormon colonies in Mexico. I am a bookkeeper by profession.

Senator SMITH. You speak of being the ecclesiastical representative. What function does that indicate?

Mr. ROMNEY. I am president of the stake. The church organization is divided into districts. The country where the people live is divided into districts or sections, and each section is called a stake. I am presiding officer in that stake. In this instance it comprises all the localities where our people are located in Mexico.

Senator SMITH. Are they Mormons?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. How many Mormons are under your jurisdiction?

Mr. ROMNEY. Approximately 4,000. I think the last census showed 4,030, as I remember it. In round numbers it is 4,000.

Senator SMITH. Have they gone into Mexico for the purpose of residing there permanently?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; that was our intention.

Senator SMITH. Are they landowners there?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Cultivating the soil?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Are they engaged in trade and commerce in any way?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Do they have stores?

Mr. ROMNEY. We have stores, gristmills, and sawmills.

Senator SMITH. Any factories?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; a shoe, harness, and saddle factory and a canning factory, not on an extensive scale, however.

Senator SMITH. When did this exodus occur?

Mr. ROMNEY. I am not able to give the date of the exodus of the women and children without reference to my notes, but it was in the neighborhood of a week prior to the exodus of the men, and that occurred on the 2d day of August, 1912. It was the 28th of July when the exodus began. It consumed several days before we could get transportation, and some of the colonies farther from the railroad were two or three days in reaching the railroad.

Senator SMITH. How long had these people been in Mexico before they took their leave?

Mr. ROMNEY. As I remember it, we began the establishment of those colonies in 1885. I am not entirely positive as to the exact date of the first entrance into Mexico, but it was about 1885.

Senator SMITH. Was that about the time of the passage of the Edmunds law?

Mr. ROMNEY. I am not conversant with those facts.

Senator SMITH. You were not taking an active part at that time?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; I was a small boy.

Senator SMITH. And they have been colonizing in Mexico since that time?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Until they now represent about 4,000 people?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Do they practice polygamy there?

Mr. ROMNEY. They do not practice it at present, except as in the United States. The same conditions prevail there as in the United States.

Senator SMITH. There are no plural marriages being solemnized at present?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. But those that were previously performed——

Mr. ROMNEY. They are supporting their families; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. But you do not know of any polygamous marriages being solemnized now?

Mr. ROMNEY. There are none. I am in a position to know that there are no such marriages being performed.

Senator SMITH. Did most of these Mormons come from Utah?

Mr. ROMNEY. The majority came from Utah and Arizona, some from Idaho, and from any localities where there are Latter Day Saints.

Senator SMITH. How did they happen to go there?

Mr. ROMNEY. We have a good country there at present, and we have established a most excellent school system. The climate can hardly be beaten, and they have gone there because, on account of the climate and other conditions, they thought it a desirable place to live. The social conditions were very excellent in our colonies and financial opportunities were good. It is a new country, and land is very cheap compared with the same quality of land in the United States.

Senator SMITH. Is there any more latitude in Mexico than in the United States for the views entertained by the Mormons?

Mr. ROMNEY. We have never had any restrictions there. All the restrictions have come from our presiding officers in the church.

Senator SMITH. Voluntarily?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; voluntarily on the part of our leaders. Any restrictions in that regard have come from them. The Mexican Government has never interfered in our social conditions in any way.

Senator SMITH. In that respect they are much easier with you than they are in Utah?

Mr. ROMNEY. I do not know that it has been called to their attention. I do not know that their laws would be any different than they are in the United States. I do not know how that would be, but I am only speaking of our experiences.

Senator SMITH. How many people are under your direction in El Paso at the present time?

Mr. ROMNEY. I am not as well qualified to answer questions of that kind as some of my assistants would be who have been in direct charge here. You understand I remained with the people at home until the last ones came out, and since then I have been back there to investigate conditions; but I think that in the neighborhood of perhaps 1,500 people are at present here in El Paso. I should like to have you bear in mind, however, that I am not in a position to give you exact statistics. In a general way I should say about 1,500, from what I have heard my assistants say and the knowledge that I have of those who are with me.

Senator SMITH. Do you have any part in administering the funds for their entertainment?

Mr. ROMNEY. Nothing, except that when I was here recently a small amount of money was placed to my credit by Mr. A. W. Ivans, who was here representing the people, in order that I might have funds to defray my personal traveling expenses and to render limited aid in some extreme cases. Do you mean in regard to the fund so far as their food supply is concerned, and so on?

Senator SMITH. Yes; the Government fund?

Mr. ROMNEY. I have no direct part in that. They recognize me as the head, but there are other men appointed who have direct charge of that business and also of the transportation.

Senator SMITH. Is it your understanding that these Mormon colonists who have been driven out of Mexico are being maintained and supported in El Paso out of the Government fund?

Mr. ROMNEY. It is my understanding that the Government furnished them tents, in which to live, and that they made an appropriation for food for them.

Senator SMITH. And transportation?

Mr. ROMNEY. And that something was placed at their disposal for transportation; yes.

Senator SMITH. Are these people, as far as you know, availing themselves of that privilege?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; I think they are.

Senator SMITH. Have they any other sources of supply?

Mr. ROMNEY. None other except purely charitable means. Do you mean whether they have any other sources of support?

Senator SMITH. From having brought means with them or anything of that kind?

Mr. ROMNEY. Absolutely none.

Senator SMITH. Their property is all in Mexico?

Mr. ROMNEY. Every dollar. They came here practically penniless. In fact, everything that we have is in Mexico. We went to Mexico poor people, and every dollar we have has been applied there. We believe in public improvements and good schools and homes; and, not supposing we would be disturbed in this way, we have built good homes and bridges and school buildings and public improvements of that kind, besides planting good trees and getting improved breeds of stock and horses into the country. We had no bank accounts and no other interests in the United States.

Senator SMITH. All of your interests were in Mexico?

Mr. ROMNEY. All of them.

Senator SMITH. And all of these improvements to which you refer are permanent in their character?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes. They are there to show for themselves.

Senator SMITH. So that these people have brought no money out with them?

Mr. ROMNEY. None at all, with the exception of a few dollars that some of them may have had.

Senator SMITH. In your capacity as the general representative of the church—I suppose I am correct in saying that you represent the church, am I not?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; that is correct.

Senator SMITH. You made it your business to go among these colonists and advise them what to do?

Mr. ROMNEY. Do you mean when they were in Mexico?

Senator SMITH. In Mexico.

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; I advised them.

Senator SMITH. Was it upon your advice that they came out of Mexico?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; it was on my advice—not my advice alone, however; I did not assume all the responsibility. It was in keeping with my advice, and I viewed it as necessary, if that is what you mean.

Senator SMITH. In the exercise of your office you took the responsibility, wherever necessary, of advising them that they get out of Mexico and come to the United States?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; I assumed the part of the responsibility that belonged to me. Of course, it does not all fall on me.

Mr. SMITH. I suppose most of the people are in the same general condition as yourself—they have left everything down there, so that they have no other homes?

Mr. ROMNEY. That is the condition; yes. They have lived down there so long that they have no other homes.

Senator SMITH. Did you ever exercise the right of voting in Mexico yourself?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. In local affairs?

Mr. ROMNEY. We have never had any elections in which I voted. I have expressed opinions regarding local officials who had immediate jurisdiction over us.

Senator SMITH. Some of your people voted, I suppose?

Mr. ROMNEY. I should explain to you that all officers who have presided over us have been appointed. We have had opportunity at times to express a choice, or perhaps not a choice, but to make a recommendation, and it has been listened to. We have had some views in that respect, and the person of our choice has at times been appointed to office where he had jurisdiction over us.

Senator SMITH. Do most of your Mormon people live in a limited area in the Republic of Mexico?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. In what States?

Mr. ROMNEY. In the State of Chihuahua we have seven colonies, and the State of Sonora we have three.

Senator SMITH. Have you any colonies in any other Mexican State?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. You have 10 colonies altogether in Mexico?

Mr. ROMNEY. That is all in the way of any organization. Of course there are a few people who have gone on their own responsibility into other sections in a speculative way, but they have no organization.

Senator SMITH. How many people are represented in a colony?

Mr. ROMNEY. They vary in their population from, I should say, 250 to 1,100 people in a colony. There is one colony smaller than 250.

Senator SMITH. What is the future of these colonies now? What is going to become of these people?

Mr. ROMNEY. If you want an opinion from me, I think I could tell better a year from now. I would hardly dare to guess at this time.

Senator SMITH. Do they expect to go back to Mexico?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes. We have our home there. Everything on earth that we own is there. That is the reason why the people have lingered here. If the conditions were stable, so that they would permit of their going back, they would go back immediately to their homes.

Senator SMITH. Have these colonies passed out from under the control or direction of the Mormon Church of America?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. They still adhere to that organization?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Is that the dominant organization in these colonies?

Mr. ROMNEY. In an ecclesiastical sense it is. Of course it does not supersede the Government, either in this country or in Mexico. It exercises no functions of that character. It is merely ecclesiastical, but in that sense they adhere to the same organization.

Senator SMITH. Have you received any advice from the head of the Mormon Church as to what course you ought to pursue?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; to this effect, to attend strictly to our own affairs and not to be mixed with either side of the controversy—not to take sides with either party in the controversy.

Senator SMITH. Was the head of the church consulted as to the movement of these refugees?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; there was not time to consult anyone.

Senator SMITH. They acted upon their own initiative?

Mr. ROMNEY. We had to act upon our own initiative. If you desire an explanation of the conditions that made it necessary, I can give it to you.

Senator SMITH. I should like to have you do it.

Mr. ROMNEY. Do you want me to go back a little and explain the conditions during the revolution prior to the latter part of July?

Senator SMITH. Yes; I should like to have that.

Mr. ROMNEY. During the latter revolutions, as during the Madero revolution, our attitude has been one of strict neutrality.

Senator SMITH. You are speaking from personal knowledge?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; from personal knowledge, because I was in charge of affairs and know what I am talking about. Our position was one of strict neutrality. Our relationships with the Mexican people had always been friendly with all parties and factions of the people. We had taken no part in their politics, and our desire was to benefit them; and when the revolution began it was our policy to be strictly neutral, to take no part. During the other revolution some efforts were made by local officers to draw us into the federal ranks. They made some requests that we help them, but we made known our position and maintained it, and it was not long until they respected our position. In fact, developments showed them that it was the wiser course for us to keep out of it, and they seemed to appreciate that; and we also made known our attitude to the revolutionary faction, and they approved of it.

When this last revolution was hatched and developed in our immediate section we thought it wise to continue the same policy that we had pursued before, and so, when it was necessary, we announced our attitude to both parties and appealed to them in every instance to give us protection, explained to them that all we asked was to be left alone in our business, not to have our property rights interfered with, and we stated that we would keep strictly out of it, that we would not render any assistance to either party, but would attend to our own business and not mix in it. We also received a suggestion from the United States to that effect—that is, I mean from our people in the United States.

Senator SMITH. From the church?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; and I think perhaps there had been some suggestion given to them—perhaps I had better say nothing about that, though, because that would be a supposition and not my own knowledge. I will say that we had received from our ecclesiastical leaders a suggestion to continue that same policy.

Senator SMITH. A policy of neutrality?

Mr. ROMNEY. A policy of strict neutrality. I will explain that when we went into Mexico it was a wild country, and we had taken firearms with us. Almost every man took some sort of firearms with him for the defense of his family. The Apaches inhabited that country when we first went in there. The Mexicans did not dare go where our colony was established because of the presence there of the Apache Indians. We took along firearms when we went in there and we acquired them gradually until we had quite a number of firearms which were the personal property of the individuals. We had no military organization, but we had them in our homes for our protection, and, as I said before, we were in perfect harmony with the people there. We received kind treatment from both the revolutionary party and the Federal Government, with the exception of the stealing that was done by the revolutionary party and their followers and sympathizers.

Of course, matters gradually grew worse, because of the unstable conditions in the country, and people who were that way inclined took advantage of the situation and cut pasture fences and stole horses wherever they could get them, and stole cattle for beef; and then a habit grew up among the revolutionary people of exacting from us things that they claimed to need in the way of horses.

Senator SMITH. You are speaking now of the Orozco revolution?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; both of them. It had also been more or less the custom in the Madero revolution to make exactions upon us, and for leather goods and things of that kind, but they had always given us receipts, and our attitude in regard to that was that we would not fight them. We would protest and use every peaceable and pacific means of avoiding giving anything to them; but when they would come and make demands and threats if we did not give them certain things, our policy was to give them as little as possible and get them to give us a receipt. In a few instances we got those receipts applied on our taxes, but a good many of the people hold those receipts at present and have never realized anything on them.

Senator SMITH. Were those receipts agreements to reimburse you?

Mr. ROMNEY. In case the revolution triumphed; that was about the way of it.

Senator SMITH. Was the form of receipt about the same on both sides?

Mr. ROMNEY. The Federal Government never exacted anything from us. It was only the revolutionary party that made any exactions.

Senator SMITH. I mean both the Madero and the Orozco revolutions.

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; just about the same. We had these friendly relations with them—even with Orozco and Salazar.

I will say that conditions finally grew a little more strained, and shortly after this last revolution began they made up their minds to disarm us, and they sent a force of 35 men in Colonia Juarez, under the leadership of Enrique Portillo. Salazar had taken possession of Casas Grandes, and had demanded our arms and ammunition. There were not a great number of them then, and we did not feel justified in giving up our arms; and, in fact, the American consul, Mr. Edwards, has approved of our refusing to give them up. So we told them they could not have any of our guns, and that if it came to a matter of choice between using our guns or giving them up to them, we would use them, and that was our determination, because we felt we were not justified in giving them up to that small number of men. They arrested one man because he refused to give up his gun, prior to this. Before we gave them this ultimatum they had already arrested one man, and had written out a receipt for another gun and pistol, and then an armed body went to the houses where a Mexican had told them there was a gun and a pistol. The owner had slipped away. So then we gave them the ultimatum, and Portillo went back to Casas Grandes. I followed them up next morning to see Salazar and tell him the same thing. I took two or three men with me. We went down there to talk it over with them and have an understanding with them, and they decided to leave us alone, and not to interfere with our guns; said they did not want any trouble with us, and as long as we continued to be neutral they would respect our rights and would not interfere with us. Conditions continued that way. We have many written guaranties from Salazar and from Orozco and from various others, given at various times; but conditions kept getting worse, until finally, just two or three weeks before this final trouble came on, two of their federals went down to Colonia Diaz and made a demand for the guns there, and I went myself in the night to tell Salazar of the trouble at Colonia Diaz, and ask him to forestall it. They had given them until 10 o'clock the next morning to send in their arms.

Salazar complied with my request, but in our conversation he let drop a remark that gave me to understand that he intended to make a demand a little later. Of course, he did not say so directly, but in his conversation he said they had no business to deviate from their written orders—"not yet." Then he seemed to catch himself up, as though he had let slip something he did not want to, and went on discussing the situation; but we secured the order and forestalled that trouble.

Later I came out to El Paso with Salazar. He happened to be on the same train. He wanted me to take the matter up with the United States Government and let them import arms and ammunition. He told me that the people of the United States were the ones that were killing them off by taking sides with Madero. He said they were supposed to be neutral, but that they had taken sides with Madero, and because of their attitude and because of his being unable in consequence to get ammunition the United States were killing them off without taking any risks; and he said he intended to force the issue. to force the United States to get out and fight, because they could not kill them any worse than they were doing, and then the United States would be taking their chances along with them.

I went back to Casas Grandes and back to my home in Colonia Juarez, and I should judge along about the 25th or 27th of July, in the latter days of July, Salazar sent for me at Colonia Juarez to come over the next day and see him. I went over with Mr. Bowman.

Senator SMITH. Who is Mr. Bowman?

Mr. ROMNEY. He is one of our colonists who resides at Colonia Dublan. He is manager of the largest mercantile institution there. He had come over to Colonia Juarez during the night to bring the message that Salazar wanted to see me. When we called out Salazar he was very much wrought up and told me that he had sent for me to tell me that they had withdrawn all kinds of guaranties from our people; that they would not give us any kind of protection, either for our lives or our property. I called his attention to the fact that he had given me written guaranties and verbal guaranties and that I had always felt that they were good, that we had relied on him to make good on them, and he replied in Spanish, saying, "Those are words," and intimated that they could be changed at any time he wanted to.

He then told me that they had made up their minds in consultation with Orozco to take from us all our guns and ammunition. I told him that we did not feel justified in giving them up, but he insisted that we must do it. I asked him then for sufficient time to bring our women and children out. There were then approximately about 2,000 rebels right there in the neighborhood of Casas Grandes, and they had five or six cannon. They were in the outskirts of Dublan, at the stockyards near Dublan. They had several rapid-fire guns. I asked him for time to remove our women and children before giving him a reply. He refused to grant that request. He said we would be a menace to them if we got our women and children out first, and that there was just one thing to do, that we must deliver those guns and ammunition immediately.

After arguing with him in every possible way that I could, we discussed the situation; and when he seemed to be a little convinced in his own mind, he and Demetrio Ponce would go out and talk a little while about it in another room, and then he would come back and say, "Anyhow, it is just a superior order that I have got from Orozco, and I have no authority except to comply with my orders." Then I asked him to give me time to see Orozco, and he said, "No; we have been acting the fool by giving guaranties to you people as long as we have. This thing has got to be done right now. Anyhow, we can not permit Americans to have arms in our territory, because intervention is now an established fact." He said that in Spanish. I am giving you his words as nearly as I can give them to you in English.

Senator SMITH. Did he not recognize your Mexican citizenship?

Mr. ROMNEY. I did not have any Mexican citizenship.

Senator SMITH. I mean the Mexican citizenship of the people.

Mr. ROMNEY. There were not very many who were Mexican citizens. There were very few who had ever become naturalized in Mexico. He repeated what he had said to me before, that the United States had taken sides with Madero, and he said if we wanted any protection to apply to Madero or to the United States Government.

When I could not get any permission to get away the women and children before we replied, I said, "Well, I will go and consult with the people and see what they say about giving up their guns." He said, "No; you can not leave here until that order is complied with."

You remain right here until that is complied with." I said, "Then that means that we are prisoners, does it?" He said, "Yes; you can not leave here until that order is complied with." I said, "Then, I will be with you a long time, because I do not think it will be complied with. I could not give any order to the colonists to bring in their guns and deliver them. We have no military organization. What few guns there are belong to the individuals. They have brought them in and paid for them themselves. They are their own property. I have no authority to order them to bring them in."

Then they went out and discussed it a little longer, and Demetrio Ponce said, "Well, you can make a suggestion to them to do it, and if you do that, they will bring in the guns. That is what we want them to do." I said, "I will not make any such suggestion, and I will not issue any such order from Casas Grandes, because if I did my people would regard me as a traitor. They would think I had been in league with you, and I have told them all the time of these guarantees you have given. When you have demanded a list of the guns, I have told them that you have given your word of honor that you would not interfere with the guns; and I can not issue any such order and do not intend to. I will stay with you, and you can do as you please with me." I happened to tell him in that conversation that I was not afraid of him and was not afraid of what he could do to me, and it made him angry, and he said, "Well, you can go home to the colonists; neither am I afraid of you. I will come and get the guns, no matter where I have to go for them."

I said, "Do you mean to say you would invade our homes and take our guns by force?" He said, "We will take the guns wherever we have to go to get them. If you want to deliver the guns as gentlemen, you can do it, but if you do not, we will proceed against you just as we do against the federals. We will consider you our enemies and we will declare war on you immediately."

You could not just thoroughly understand our situation unless you were down there and saw our houses. You can understand something about it when you think of the American style of buildings. Our houses are of inflammable material. They are built of brick and lumber, and some of them are rustic buildings, and they are very scattered, one on a city lot or two on a city lot, and so on. Of course, our families were in these various colonies, and we had no opportunity to do any fortifying. We had been pursuing a course to maintain peace with them and friendly relations, and to have made any preparations for war would have been equivalent to a declaration of war, and, of course, they would have immediately taken issue with us, so we were in a very delicate position. We could not make a hostile demonstration of any kind. We could not even throw up a wall of dirt to get behind or anything. Then when they came on us suddenly there we were, men at work in the fields with their guns in their homes. Our wives and daughters were there exposed to that mob.

So I went down to Dublan and discussed the matter. They sent 50 armed men right along with us; never left us at all without armed men in reach. When we got down to Dublan there were three or four hundred of them just across the river at San Jose; and there were a large number of them—I should say a hundred of them—who were just helping themselves to the merchandise in the Union Mercantile right in the town. These 50 came right along and surrounded the house where we were. I called in a number of colonists to discuss the situation. They surrounded the house almost immediately. We asked them to wait just a few minutes while we discussed it, and they did, and we decided that the only thing that we could do was to deliver our guns.

We sent out word to the colonists of what we had decided, and we got permission to bring our guns and deliver them at a certain place in the town which they designated so that they would not go into our homes. Of course, men used their own judgment somewhat. We just told them the situation—told them we could not see anything else to do. Of course, under those conditions, knowing that we could not get our families out, they reluctantly gave up their guns. Some brought them and some did not. Some who had more than one gun brought one. They brought the poorer class of guns.

They collected quite a number of guns and quite a considerable amount of ammunition, but only a small part of what we had at Dublan. Then they sent these same 50 men over to Colonia Juarez next. We had consulted over the matter there, and had decided that we could not do anything else except the same way, and we delivered to them some guns. They did not get all there were at Colonia Juarez, not as large a percentage as they had gotten at Dublan. We had a little more time to consider it, individuals did, and they did not give them up as freely at Juarez as they had done at Dublan.

Then they went on in a few days to Colonia Pacheco. We began immediately to ship our women and children out. We felt as though we were in imminent danger. The women and children thought it was no place for them.

Senator SMITH. You acted upon your own initiative?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; because we had no time to consult anybody. The demand was made for the guns, and they went right along, as I have explained to you; and having retired all guaranties in such a way as he did, we did not feel that Salazar's guaranties were worth much. He said, "You did not need to take your women and children out. We will not bother them."

I told him, "Mr. Salazar, we have had your written guaranties, and we have had your verbal guaranties, but you have withdrawn them. What security do you think the people will feel if I go and tell them now that you say you will not bother the women and children?" Before we had given up the guns I asked him if they would permit us to take the women and children out immediately, and he said, yes, if we wanted to we could take them out. "But," he said, "you do not need to go"; but he said afterwards, "Well, you had just as well go if you want to. It is probable that the exit of that many people in a body will bring about intervention anyhow, and that is what we want." So we began immediately to send the women and children. We got transportation the best we could and sent them out here, and enough men to take care of them and organize them, so that they would not come without any kind of direction. We sent out the older men and a few able-bodied men to look after them, but kept most of the men there to look after the property.

From then on they began making things a little tighter and a little tighter, and they began looting in Dublan.

A few guns were given to them at Pacheco and at Garcia, but by the time they had gotten over to Chuichupa the people there had decided not to give them any guns. I will say right there that by the time they got to Colonia Juarez they had added a condition to their previous order for guns and ammunition, and they demanded every horse and saddle in the colonies. Of course, they had stolen hundreds of horses from us already, and I talked them out of taking the horses at Colonia Juarez until they should return from the mountains.

Senator SMITH. Did they make any demand for men?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Or any draft for men?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir. When they reached Chuichupa the men there had decided not to give up their guns and ammunition, and they moved out of their town into the mountains west with their horses. They learned of the approach of these rebels, so that when the rebels reached Chuichupa the men had vacated the town and gone into the mountains. At Dublan they went down there en masse and looted, I should judge, some dozen homes at Dublan with the men present and pleading for them to spare their property and to respect their rights. They looted the home of Ammon Tenney. They looted the home of Alexander Jamison while we were still there, and I think it was on the evening of August 1, after having previously taken different amounts from the stores at Dublan, for which they had given receipts, they took between $30,000 and $40,000 from the Union Mercantile, the soldiers helping themselves in some instances, and for this they refused to give a receipt.

Senator SMITH. Under whose personal direction was that taken?

Mr. ROMNEY. Demetrio Ponce was there, but Salazar, of course, was the man in charge. He was in general charge, but I do not know whether he was there in person during the time of this raid on the colony or not.

I want to say that during this looting of the homes they would poke the owners around with the points of their guns—with their guns cocked—and they held pistols in the faces of the men, and made threats that if they even did not cease their pleadings for their property, they would shoot them. They told Mr. Tenney that.

Senator SMITH. Did they make any demonstration of that kind against you?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; not against me personally. I have Mr. Tenney's affidavit, if you care to see that. I have several affidavits, if they are of interest to you, showing those conditions to have existed. Right while they were disarming us and saying they would protect us, there were other soldiers from different commands that were about the towns then, holding up people on the streets, and especially was this the case at Colonia Juarez.

Senator SMITH. Did they hold any individuals for ransom?

Mr. ROMNEY. Not at that time.

Senator SMITH. Men, women, or children?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir. While they were taking our arms at Colonia Juarez there were three Mexicans who came up from Pearson to Colonia Juarez, and on the road they held up each outfit that they met going out with the women and children, and they stole the money that they had, en route to Pearson, to ship the women and children out.

Senator SMITH. The money with which they intended to ship them to El Paso?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes. Then they came up to Colonia Juarez, and while they were taking our guns they went to the home of an aged widow there, about 84 years old, and they ransacked her house completely in search of money, found money in two places aggregating about $40, and this they took. It happened that as these bandits went down the street they met some of the native residents who had come in. One of them had on a new hat, and one of these rebels rode up to him and took his hat off and put his old one on, and slapped him in the face with it and insulted him. The name of this man was Juan Tredizo. He went and complained to Llano Ponce, who was in charge of the party collecting the guns; and thinking it was one of Ponce's soldiers, Ponce asked him if he could identify the man. He told him he could, and he waited a while until this soldier came along, and then he pointed him out to Mr. Ponce, who had the man arrested, and having punished him and disarmed him, they were holding him there, and these accounts began to come in of the robberies that had been committed.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of any cases where the women and children in your colony were insulted or assaulted?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; not by these rebels at that time. I know of other earlier cases of rape.

Senator SMITH. By banditti, or by others?

Mr. ROMNEY. By banditti. These evidences began to come in until it was fully established that this man had been carrying on a regular campaign of loot, and they finally executed him.

Senator SMITH. Where?

Mr. ROMNEY. Near Colonia Juarez.

Senator SMITH. By shooting him?

Mr. ROMNEY. They shot him; yes sir.

Senator SMITH. Was that execution unusual?

Mr. ROMNEY. That is the only case of an execution that we know of in our neighborhood.

Senator SMITH. Was he executed by the rebel soldiers?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; he was executed by the rebel soldiers. The reason I am telling this is that about the 1st day of August the band to which this soldier who was executed belonged came into Colonia Juarez, about 75 in all, and asked if the Mormons had executed any more of their soldiers, or if the guard had executed any more of their soldiers, and the guard replied that they had not. The rebels said that it was a good thing they had not, that they were not satisfied with the execution of that man. He said that whenever the Mormons wanted to get a man executed, they just worked up a charge against him and brought about his execution, and they were going to get even with them, they were going to get revenge on the Mormon people for the execution of this rebel. That was one of the things that led up to this exodus. They took possession of our town and demanded feed for their horses.

We took into consideration the different developments in Dublan, and the looting, and the threats that had been made against our lives, and the continued less favorable attitude of the rebels, and the fact that they had required all kinds of guaranties and had taken our arms, and this new development in Colonia Juarez, showing how absolutely prejudiced they were against us, and Salazar's oft-repeated threat that he would bring intervention at any cost, and we concluded that it would be impossible for our people to remain in the colonies and witness the wholesale destruction of their property, which was the accumulation of years. We fully expected an attack to be made upon us, and reprisals to be made for the execution of that man, which had been done by another faction of their own party without our having had anything to do with it, other than to bring the evidence before them of the criminality of the man.

So on the morning of the 2d of August we evacuated the colonies. We left Colonia Juarez on the night of the 1st of August, and I sent couriers to Dublan telling them of the conditions prevailing at Colonia Juarez, and suggesting that they meet us at a designated point in the mountains, and also sent couriers to the mountain settlements to do the same thing.

Senator SMITH. Have you had any special instructions from any official or member of the church in Utah regarding your moves?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; not to vacate. I have had no instructions to do that.

Senator SMITH. Have you had any other instructions of a character that would be interesting for us to know?

Mr. ROMNEY. Only in the way I have indicated—to do the very best we could, but by all means to take no part in the controversy, maintaining a strict neutrality, and to avoid anything that would bring about international complications. That seemed to be the thing they were most interested in.

Senator SMITH. Was there any money tribute demanded of you as a consideration for exemption?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; there were demands made upon us. One written order that was sent to me by a colonel in the army demanded money, as I remember it.

Senator SMITH. Did it fix any amount?

Mr. ROMNEY. No; no specified amount; any amount that we had; money, merchandise, horses, saddles, guns, and ammunition. That was prior to my consultation with Salazar.

Senator SMITH. Has there been any demand made upon the parent church in Utah for money?

Mr. ROMNEY. None that I know of.

Senator SMITH. Or for ransom of any kind?

Mr. ROMNEY. Not that I know of.

Senator SMITH. Has there been any correspondence or talk between yourself and the general officers of the church regarding that matter?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; only in this way: That it was suggested that rather than fight we make peace with them, and take receipts for our property and give them whatever we had, in order to prevent a crisis of this kind or anything that would bring on international complications. That was the burden of our instructions—to find a way to get through it without doing that.

Senator SMITH. Can you say with perfect candor that the Mormon colonies did not take part in the revolution against Diaz?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; I can say with perfect candor that they took part in neither revolution.

Senator SMITH. And that they have taken no part and are taking none against Madero?

Mr. ROMNEY. And they are taking absolutely no part.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of any American sources or foreign sources of encouragement or support of any kind for the revolution?

Mr. ROMNEY. Nothing except rumors and newspaper talk. All I know in regard to that is what I have heard.

Senator SMITH. Do you mean rumor passing from the mouth of one person to another?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; I heard a rumor some time ago.

Senator SMITH. How long ago?

Mr. ROMNEY. I do not know whether I can recall the period. I think it was during the Madero revolution. I am not certain. It was either the latter part of the Madero revolution or early in this revolution that I heard a rumor. I guess you would call it a rumor. An individual who had been down in the interior over this way and told me it was understood that some corporation in the United States were backing the revolution, but I regarded it simply as a rumor. I do not know anything about it.

Senator SMITH. Did he mention the name of the corporation?

Mr. ROMNEY. He mentioned the Standard Oil Co.

Senator SMITH. Any other?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir. That is the only one I have heard mentioned, and I would like it distinctly understood that that was simply a rumor. I do not know anything about it, further than the newspaper talk I have read.

Senator SMITH. Were any sums of money mentioned?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; just the mere statement that that was the reason the revolution had been able to be carried on.

Senator SMITH. Do you know any corporation in Mexico owned by American citizens that have been exempt from attack or destruction because of the payment of money?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Or any transportation company?

Mr. ROMNEY. I do not know of any that have been exempt at all. I know that the property of the Northwestern people has been attacked, and values have been extorted from them, as they have from us. That is, I know that by hearsay. I have never been present when it was done, but I have understood that.

Senator SMITH. Have you had any talk with Orozco or Madero in person?

Mr. ROMNEY. I have never met either one of them. I have met nearly all of the other leaders, but I have never met either of them.

Senator SMITH. You have never been in conference with anybody with reference to the plans of the revolutionists?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir. As far as possible we avoided any discussion of them, because of our position of neutrality, other than to inquire for information that would affect our welfare in the way of the movement of their troops.

Senator SMITH. Have you ever been invited to any conference with them?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; never.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of any other people in your colonies who have?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; I do not think there is anyone who has had any part with them. There may have been people who were unwise, individual cases, as there always are, unofficial acts that were not as wise as they ought to be, but there has been no authorized action of that kind.

Senator SMITH. I assume from what you say that you are yourself a member of the Mormon Church?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And a man of family?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Have you more than one wife?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Is your office a salaried office?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. What compensation do you receive?

Mr. ROMNEY. I get some assistance, but not any salary. We are not paid a salary.

Senator SMITH. A commission?

Mr. ROMNEY. No; not a commission. Some help has been extended to me in the discharge of my duties. I have expenses that I am assisted in defraying.

Senator SMITH. You seem to have considerable responsibility.

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. That is the result of your devotion to the church, I suppose?

Mr. ROMNEY. Yes; absolutely.

Senator SMITH. Can you think of anything else that would throw any light on our inquiry to ascertain whether or not this revolution has been fomented, aided, or encouraged by Americans, companies, or corporations, or people resident in our country?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir. There is just one thing I would like to ask, with your permission, in case this is considered a statement of our attitude. I should just like it understood why we came to the border without any fight. We went into the Sierra Madre for our own protection. The revolutionists claimed they supposed that we had given up all our guns. As soon as the people left Colonia Dublan they fired on them. They pursued them toward the mountains and opened fire on them. Finally a spent bullet struck one of the boys on the leg, and the bullets were striking all around in their ranks, and they detailed a number of the boys to stay behind and stop the advance.

Senator SMITH. Were there women and children?

Mr. ROMNEY. No, sir; these were the men.

Senator SMITH. And these men were headed toward the Sierra Madre Mountains?

Mr. ROMNEY. These men were headed toward the Sierra Madre Mountains. So they fired a volley or two at the revolutionists who were firing at them, and the revolutionists afterwards told some of our colonists that they now considered us as their enemies, that we had taken up arms against them. They said we had gone to join Blanco, who was then at Ojitas.

Senator SMITH. Who is Blanco?

Mr. ROMNEY. He is a federal officer, and he and Sanjinez were stationed at Ojitas with federal troops making an advance on these rebels; and as we retired to the Sierra Madre Mountains to the west they said we had gone to join the federals and that while we pretended to be neutral we were not; and they said they found out that we had guns. They seemed to blame us considerably that we had not given up all our guns under those conditions, and they said they were our enemies and they would wreak vengeance on us because we had joined the Federal Government. We had declared ourselves as being neutral, and we had understood that that was the desire of the United States, that we should remain neutral, and it had been the expressed will of the ecclesiastical authorities, and we felt that we wanted to avoid any kind of a fight with these people. They said they had discovered when they fired on Dublin that we had guns, and long-range guns, too, because of the volley that our men had shot at them.

Senator SMITH. When you speak of the United States, what information have you about that?

Mr. ROMNEY. We had talked with Consul Edwards. Of course, we have always kept in touch with him.

Senator SMITH. He is the American consul at what point?

Mr. ROMNEY. At Ciudad Juarez; and we understood it was agreeable to the United States that we should not mix up in that thing or do anything to bring on any kind of complications. Afterwards, when they declared that we had gone to join the federals, they moved their own force up into our mountain colonies, right up in the vicinity of where we were, and we knew that to remain there meant to fight; and we thought that to fight meant to bring on other complications that were not desirable, and we decided that the only thing to do to establish their error in saying that we had gone to join the federals was to come out here and show that we were not taking sides with either party and bring the guns that we had to the border and not use them. We remained there until our colonists could get together and we could defend our lives. Then we marched direct to the United States border. We felt that was the proper course to pursue, and we acted according to our best judgment of what our duties were.

Senator SMITH. Is there anything further you care to say, to throw any light on the purposes of our inquiry?

Mr. ROMNEY. I do not think so, Senator. I think that is about as much as I know about it. If there is any other information you think I have that you would like to have, I shall be glad to tell you.

TESTIMONY OF ADOLPH KRAKAUER.

Adolph Krakauer, being first duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

* * * * *

Mr. KRAKAUER. It may have no particular reference to the investigation, but it may serve some purpose. I want to be understood that I personally have always been a Diaz man. All our people in Chihuahua have been. We have nothing but good to say of the Diaz Government. They have protected us at all times. The country, as you know, has prospered under the Diaz administration. We have paid our taxes. We are not Mexican citizens. We have paid our taxes, and whenever we have been called on to pay any extra contributions, we have paid them. We were protected in our business and we thought that we owed allegiance to the existing government, whichever it was.

I was very much surprised that the Madero revolution was successful; never believed that it could be. I do not believe it could have been except for some wild dare-devils who came around here and joined the Madero army. But for that I do not believe they ever would have succeeded in taking Juarez. I do not believe Madero would have been known but for that.

Furthermore, if the United States Government had adopted the same stringent measures last year, during the Diaz régime, as they adopt now, I do not believe Madero would have been heard of; and the world at large, the United States especially, and various places in the Republic of Mexico, would have been better off. That is my opinion.

Senator SMITH. That is very interesting.

* * * * *

Mr. KRAKAUER. I have heard on good authority—the trouble was just this: That the sympathies of the people in the Madero revolution were with Madero, especially on this frontier. The people in the interior of the United States, in the East and West, they do not care. They do not know anything about this revolution now, so far as that is concerned. But the sympathies of the Texas people on the Mexican border were with Madero, there is no question about that; and I am reliably informed, by people who were very near Diaz when the Madero revolution started, that Diaz asked "How do the people of the United States feel about this?" and that ment old him that the sympathies of the Texas people were with Madero, and right then and there he said "I am gone. If Madero can get all the arms and ammunition he wants, smuggled over, I am gone. I can not hold out"; and that he made up his mind at that time.

As far as that is concerned, I suppose you know that this revolution was started by Orozco and a few of his men in the mountains of Chihuahua. That was a local grievance against the Chihuahua State government conducted by Creel, who was at one time ambassador from Mexico to Washington, and a very nice man. It was a grievance against the Terrazas family, of which Creel was a member. These mountain people undoubtedly had grievances against that government. They were oppressed, and their crops failed. They did not want to pay the taxes. They wanted to get time and it was not granted, and they had all sorts of grievances. The revolution was started against the Creel and Terrazas régime. When that revolution assumed larger proportions, then Madero thought "Here is my chance to get in," and he did.

AFFIDAVIT OF INEZ SALAZAR.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Inez Salazar, who, upon oath first duly made, deposes and says: That he is a native and citizen of the Republic of Mexico, having been born 34 years ago in the town of Sabinal, and State of Chihuahua, and Republic of Mexico; that he is at present temporarily in the city of El Paso, El Paso County, Tex.; that he held the position of commandante in the revolutionary army of Francisco I. Madero, having enlisted in said army on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1910, and having retired from same in April, 1911; that during the period of time between said dates he was in command of revolutionary troops operating in the State of Chihuahua and Republic of Mexico in the interests of the revolutionary party and in opposition to the Federal or Diaz régime; that he had from 35 to 400 men in his immediate command; that his command operated in various portions of the said State, and that in so operating it was necessary for he and those under his command to seize and forcibly take possession of property belonging to various individuals, American citizens as well as citizens of Mexico, for the commissary of his soldiers; that in pursuance of the directions received by him from his superior officers he did from time to time seize and possess himself of articles of merchandise necessary for his said command.

That on the 26th day of December, A. D. 1910, at the town of Sabinal, in the State of Chihuahua and the Republic of Mexico, he seized goods, wares, and merchandise belonging to and being the property of D. C. Sutton, said property being of the value of $7,000 Mexican currency, and having been taken by affiant, as commandante in said army and under his direction, from the store or said Sutton.

That on the 8th day of March, A. D. 1911, in the town of Sabinal, the State of Chihuahua and the Republic of Mexico, affiant, as commandante of said file of revolutionary soldiers, did seize and possess himself of goods, wares, and merchandise of the value of $6,035.50 Mexican currency from the possession of D. C. Sutton and from the store of the said D. C. Sutton at said place and at said time.

That on the 23d day of January, A. D. 1911, your affiant, acting in the said capacity of commandante in the revolutionary army, did seize and possess himself of certain goods, wares, and merchandise of the value of $8,070 Mexican currency, said property being taken from the possession of D. C. Sutton and from the store of said D. C. Sutton at said place and at said time.

That your affiant seized said property belonging to the said Sutton, amounting in the aggregate to $21,105.50 Mexican money. That he seized same and used same for the benefit of the revolutionary army under Francisco I. Madero; that said property was utilized for the benefit of said revolutionary army in sustaining the soldiers actually engaged in operating actively in the field; that affiant, upon seizing said property, gave to the said Sutton his receipts for same, signed by affiant as commandante; that in so seizing and possessing himself of said property said affiant was acting under the orders and directions of his superior officers, and especially so of the chief of the revolution, Francisco I. Madero.

That affiant has no interest in the claim to which the above testimony relates, and that he is not the attorney or agent of any person having such claim, or in any way connected therewith; that affiant is voluntarily giving this testimony for the purpose of doing justice to Mr. D. C. Sutton in the loss sustained by him, the said Sutton, because of the operation of the said column of revolutionary soldiers in the vicinity of Sabinal, Mexico.

Wherefore affiant verifies.

INEZ SALAZAR.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso:

I, E. M. Marteeney, a notary public in and for El Paso County, Tex., do hereby certify that the above and foregoing instrument was subscribed and sworn to before me by Inez Salazar, the affiant, on this the 4th day of October, A. D. 1911.

I further certify that I am a notary public in and for the county of El Paso and the State of Texas, and am authorized by law to take depositions and administer oaths; and that I have no interest in the claim to which the above testimony relates; and that I am not the agent or attorney of any such person having such a claim, or in any way connected therewith.

I further certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. Inez Salazar, the affiant.

I further certify that the above and foregoing instrument was reduced to writing in my presence, by myself as a stenographer, and that the same was carefully read to the affiant by me before being signed by him.

Witness my hand and seal of office this the 4th day of October, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.]

E. M. MARTEENEY,

Notary Public in and for El Paso County, Tex.

STATEMENT OF MARGARET CARLIN.

Senator FALL. I introduce the following affidavit of Margaret Carlin for the purpose of showing that even the revolutionists in Chihuahua have made statements corroborative of the evidence of Mr. McCormick, the United States attorney, and of Mr. Robinson, his assistant at Los Angeles, concerning the socialistic doctrines which have been promulgated among the Mexicans:

• STATE OF TEXAS,
County of El Paso, ss:

Margaret Carlin, being duly sworn, on oath says that both she and her husband are citizens of the United States, she being a native of Wisconsin and her husband having been born in Canada, but a resident of Wisconsin since he was a little boy. That affiant and her husband have three children, and that her husband has been residing in Mexico for six years, in the employ of the Pearson Co. and in business for himself, having for the last year been engaged in raising cattle and in farming.

That for the past year they have made their home about 2 miles from Colonia Dublan, in the State of Chihuahua, but though living in proximity to the Mormon colony at that place they are not Mormons, and have at all times since their residence in Mexico claimed their American citizenship, lived and conducted their lives according to the best standard of their home people; that they have taken no part in the troubles in Mexico, affiant remaining at home with her children and husband, taking care of the same, and the husband taking care of his farming business and keeping aloof from both sides of the revolutionary trouble.

Affiant says that about the middle of last July their home was visited by three Mexicans, claiming to belong to the revolutionary bands in that vicinity, at a time when affiant's husband was away and she was alone with her two children. At such time three of these so-called soldiers drove into the yard around the house and demanded to be admitted to the house; that affiant protested, and thereupon one of them leveled his gun upon affiant and threatened her if she did not permit them to come into the house without resistance, but that affiant had her son tell them that she had locked the door and that she was armed, and that they could not get in without meeting with resistance. At this time they cursed affiant and abused her greatly and threatened her with bodily harm, and that they would break into the house, but that affiant had secured arms on the inside and was determined to resist their coming in, and so they finally concluded they had better not attempt it and went away.

About two weeks after the occurrence above stated, a large number of such soldiers came to affiant's house when affiant was again alone with her two boys, her husband being away at work on the ditches, and demanded admission.

And affiant here continuing this narrative in the first person says:

After the occurrence above stated we padlocked the gate, and about the 27th of July a large body of soldiers, about 150 in all, passed the place, 40 or 50 stopping and demanding that if I did not unlock the gate they would break it open. I had the little boy then tell them Mr. Carlin had the key and as soon as he came he would unlock it. Mr. Carlin saw them and came down as quickly as possible and went to the gate, trying to talk them out of coming in, telling them that we had nothing, but at this they leveled their guns at him, telling him they would kill him if he did not open the gate. This frightened me and I told Mr. Carlin he had better let them in. He unlocked the gate and they all came in; that is, between 40 and 50 of them. I then locked our living-room door and they demanded to enter there and threatened to kill Mr. Carlin on the outside, pounding him against the door. He said to me, "Maybe you had better open the door," and I opened it, and they all rushed in the living room and I had put the two rifles under the bed clothes as they came in, and the first thing they made a rush for the rifles. Mr. Carlin protested when they took the second rifle and they cursed him and said they would kill him, and one raised his gun and with the heavy end of the gun tried to strike him across the head, and in warding off the blow Mr. Carlin threw his hand up and they struck him across the wrist with a severe blow. Then they searched the house for money and ammunition, but they did not find any ammunition. Then they went to my wardrobe looking for money. They tore my clothes out of the wardrobe and threw them on the floor and trampled on them. They took our field glasses and one of the common soldiers slung them across his shoulder. When I protested about trampling my clothes they shoved me across the room, cursing me at the same time. Then they picked up bridles, etc., and everything they saw which took their fancy. At the time they struck my husband I tried to ward off the blow and threw my hand up and got a portion of the blow across my hand.

After having taken all they could they finally left, cursing the Americans as they went. After this band left others came, two of them demanding to enter, but when we told them that the others had taken all we had they were quite decent and one man talked very good English. He said the reason they were treating Americans this way was because the United States allowed Madero to go over and get all the ammunition and guns he wanted and would not let them. He said they were going to treat the Americans as mean as they could and with as much contempt, so that it would bring on a revolution, which they very much desired. One of them also said that they were going to go into the United States and all the socialists of the United States were going to join them and they were going to have a socialistic revolution in the United States—the poor against the rich.

He also said: Why should they care anything about protecting the American colonists in Mexico, as your own people in the United States do not intend to protect you?

This band went away and several others came, and when they found out the others had taken everything they also went on. On the 28th I abandoned everything and left on the first refugee train for El Paso, where I am now. Mr. Carlin stayed at the colony, and I expect him out in a day or two with the rest of the colonists.

MARGARET CARLIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of August, A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.]

W. M. JOHNSTON, Notary Public.

Senator FALL. I introduce a number of other affidavits which are cumulative testimony as to the conditions in Mexico. We have had a great deal of testimony on this point, but still I introduce these:

AFFIDAVIT OF NIELS LARSEN.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso, ss:

Niels Larsen, being duly sworn, on his oath says that he is a citizen of the United States, but has been residing in Mexico temporarily for the past year, and last October, together with his partner, Mr. Bowman, under the firm name of Bowman & Larsen, engaged as grade contractor for the construction of the railroad grade with Mr. L. E. Booker, who at that time commenced to build a railroad from Pearson to Pacheco, in the State of Chihuahua, and as such contractor has been actively in charge on the ground of the teams and employees used by the firm of Bowman & Larsen in performing such contract; such firm having themselves about 200 employees, and having control over the employees of sub-contractors under them to the number of about 200.

That in performing such work it was necessary that affiant and his partner should, and they did, obtain and use on such work large numbers of work animals in teams and otherwise, and wagons, plows, scrapers, and other machinery and property usual to that class of work, and that they also kept a large commissary supply on such work for the furnishing of their own and the employees of their sub-contractors, so that the said Bowman and affiant had an investment in all such property of the cost to them of more than seventy thousand ($70,000) dollars, representing actual cash by them laid out and expended; that affiant and his partner were tendered and accepted such work at a time when they had no reason to believe that it was dangerous or risky to be in that part of Mexico, but subsequent to the Madero revolution and when all was peaceful; that they were assured of every protection and of the right to proceed with the work peacefully, and rested upon that assurance at the time of commencing the same. Affiant says that they were not interfered with to any appreciable extent in the prosecution of their work until the month of February, 1912, when the rebel forces under Orozco came into their camps and demanded arms and ammunition in such a way as to compel affiant and his employees to furnish the same to such defendants; that about the 1st of July, 1912, that section of country was overrun by the rebel soldiers under Orozco's general control, he being represented by a superior officer who styled himself Gen. Salazar. This general made his headquarters at Casas Grandes, about 25 miles from affiant's principal camp, and the soldiers of Gen. Salazar commenced immediately to overrun that section of country from its general headquarters; that the first visit that these soldiers made resulted in their taking forcibly some commissary supplies from affiant, amounting, perhaps, to about $200, and a few days afterwards about 40 of them came and compelled affiant to turn his firm's horses out of the corral for them and put the rebels' horses in their place and feed them well, which demand affiant complied with, because of the evident danger he would be in if he refused to do so. They also compelled affiant to have supper provided for some of their officers and went into the commissary and took about $150 worth of supplies for their men without pay therefor, and the next morning they seized five head of affiant's horses and took them away without any pay therefor, by force, and from that day forward nearly every day these rebel soldiers were on the line of work taking from affiant whatever they wanted, whether it was commissary supplies or horses or personal property belonging to affiant or his employees, which they were able to do by threat of danger to the lives of affiant and such employees if any resistance was made to their demands, and this went on from day to day, gradually becoming worse each day, and more dangerous to the lives of all the Americans, until affiant and the other Americans were compelled to abandon the camp and flee for their lives, which they did on the 31st of July.

That previous to the 30th of July these outrages had become such that it was perfectly apparent that no American's life was safe, Gen. Salazar having told all the Americans that their lives would be taken if it was necessary to take the same, and that all their property would be taken which the rebels desired to take without any protection being given to them. This information was given by Gen. Salazar to representatives of the Americans, and, among others, to affiant's partner, Mr. Bowman, who went to Gen. Salazar in their own names and as representatives of the other Americans to protest, and they returned with directions from Gen. Salazar to scatter the news amongst the Americans that this was the way they were going to be treated, and after this information was brought to affiant, amongst others, it was apparently evident that it was genuine and represented the true intent of such rebel commander and his soldiers.

On July 30, previous to the Americans concluding it best to abandon the work and get away as soon as possible, visits were made to the camp by various bodies of rebel soldiers, who seized affiant and other people in such camp and compelled them to pay money for their liberty, affiant being arrested and compelled to pay over one hundred ($100) dollars in order to be released, and that and other amounts being secured from other persons under affiant's employ or contracting for affiant in the same way; that the news was brought to affiant on the night of July 30; that on the following day another raid of a similar kind was going to be made, and that all the Americans from whom the money could be extorted were going to be subjected to the same process, and that they would not get off as easily the second time as they had the first time. Not only was affiant and the other Americans in fear of their lives by the conduct of these soldiers, but the attitude of some of the Mexican employees changed to one antagonistic to the life of Americans engaged on such work, without any cause whatever, except the general hatred which had become instilled in these people through what was said was President Taft's policy in opposition to the revolution, and almost daily in camp it became apparently evident that bitter hatred of Americans was being inspired by all who were in sympathy with the Orozco movement, and insults to the face of affiant and other Americans and personal threats of bodily danger and destruction of property had become a daily event and was expected and feared whenever affiant came into the presence of that class of people in that vicinity.

That affiant and all of the Americans tried to avoid all trouble, behaved themselves in an entirely peaceable and conciliatory way, and did everything possible to prevent the necessity of abandoning their property, and tried to secure justice and protection, until it became dangerous to remain. This was amply proven by the fact that at the time affiant escaped he had to give up his horse and make his way from the immediate vicinity of the camp with his loaded weapons in hand and ready for instantaneous use, a large party of rebels being in the camp, seizing all horses and other material belonging to affiant which they desired at the time of affiant's escape, and affiant being compelled to hide behind a tree to protect himself from capture at such moment.

Affiant says that he left camp on the afternoon of July 31 and joined a party of about a dozen, including Mr. Atwood, chief engineer for L. E. Booker, upon such work, all of the party escaping through the mountains and taking circuitous and unknown trails and routes in order to escape observation, and riding for five days, a distance of about 175 miles, being at one time in the saddle for 36 hours, until they reached the United States at a remote boundary point, and that if they had not left at the very time they did it would have been impossible for them to have escaped.

Affiant says that in leaving the camp and the work being constructed they had to abandon all of the supplies and property to whatever wreckage and looting thereof such rebel soldiers and the other antagonistic elements chose to make of such property; that much of it had already been taken before affiant's flight, and much of it was being taken at the time affiant left, and affiant has no idea but what all of it that they can use in any way, and especially all of the teams and commissary supplies, were taken within the day of or a very short time after such flight, although affiant is as yet not actually informed, as he has not been able to get any word up to the present as to the condition of affairs in that vicinity.

Affiant says that in leaving such property he did not act precipitately, but as a man would act who has had much border experience and who is not afraid to face such difficulties wherever there was a possibility of being able to preserve his life and hold on to his property; that the whole situation was such that it was clearly imminent that the Americans who did not leave would be killed or subject to great danger, and that it was simply foolhardy to stay or try to protect himself or his property an hour longer.

Affiant further says that there were included in the property which he was compelled to so abandon, including what was taken by such rebels a few days before his escape, the following list of property and the value thereof, as near as affiant can approximate the same:

Commissary supplies.....	$25,000
700 sacks of corn.....	3,500
20 tons of alfalfa.....	1,000
300 boxes dynamite.....	6,000
600 kegs black powder.....	3,000
Office, commissary buildings, shops, barns, and corrals.....	2,000
130 small tents.....	1,600
Cook tent and kitchen outfit.....	500
3 wagons.....	600
35 carts.....	5,000
35 sets cart harness.....	1,400
18 sets harness.....	900
3 B. S. outfits.....	1,000
5 tons steel.....	2,500
500 shovels.....	750
650 picks.....	1,000
250 wheelbarrows.....	2,500
5 fresnos.....	200
8 slips.....	100
1 railway plow.....	100
60 horses and mules.....	12,000
Total.....	70,650

And further affiant saith not.

NIELS LARSEN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 10th day of August, A. D. 1912.

W. M. JOHNSTON,
Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT OF BARNETT SMITH.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso, ss:

My name is Barnett Smith, and I was born in Alaculsey, Ga., in 1859, and was raised in Ocoee, Tenn. My father and mother reside there now. In September, 1909, I moved to Mexico and bought farming land near Colonia Dublan, in the State of Chihuahua, and settled upon the same and commenced business of farming. Colonia Dublan is the headquarters town for a lot of Mormons, but there are other Americans in that vicinity also who are not Mormons. I am not a Mormon. I have pursued the occupation of farming on that land and of building up my place since that time, having 65 acres of land in cultivation and having the ownership of a good lot of farming animals, a barnhouse, where my wife lives with me on the place. She is an American also, a native of Pennsylvania, where she has been for about six months. On July 20, 1909, while I was at the office for mail a rebel soldier came to my place and took one of my horses. I followed his trail for 2 miles and found my horse tied in a man's yard. I asked why my horse had been taken, and he replied that a rebel soldier had brought the horse there; and when I asked that my horse be delivered to me, he untied him, and I took the rope in hand, and the rebel soldier came out and seized a sword and insulted me with many abusive words, drew the sword and said he would kill me; but I led the horse away, when he said that he would visit me that night with a company of men and they would take my life, but I was not molested again until the 27th of July, when a large number of rebel soldiers came to my place and asked for water and food, which I freely gave. They bid me good-by without molesting me, but a few minutes later about 40 more entered my yard, demanded the keys to unlock my horses, but I refused to grant their request, stating that they were my farm horses and that I could not do the work of farming without them. They then took a pick and sledge hammer, broke the locks and chains with which my horses were confined, and led them into the yard and demanded the key of my house, which I also refused to give. Then they heaped indignities upon me, threatening to kill me, stating that they would drive all Americans out; that Mexico was for Mexicans, and, if necessary, they would raise a revolution against Americans and drive them out. They still demanded entrance into my house, and when I refused to open the door they thrust me twice in the abdomen and struck me three heavy blows across my back with a saber. They drew a gun and threatened to shoot me, but a question which arose among them over the possession of my horses attracted their attention, and when they turned from me I walked away, leaving them to break into my house, which they did, and took therefrom practically all valuable articles, leaving me absolutely helpless so far as my business was concerned. I went to Colonia Dublan, leaving there on the 30th of July when I came to El Paso, and am still here with other refugees from the community in which I lived.

BARNETT SMITH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 10th day of August, A. D. 1912.

W. M. JOHNSTON, Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT OF H. E. BOWMAN.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso, ss:

H. E. Bowman, on his oath, say that: I am 54 years of age; a citizen of the United States; and have resided for the past 10 years in Colonia Dublan, Chihuahua, Mexico, under the guarantees given to all colonists in that section; that during such time I have been engaged in general merchandising, and for the past eight years have been general manager of the Union Mercantile, a corporation engaged in general merchandising; that said corporation owned real estate to the value of forty thousand ($40,000) and carried a stock of general merchandise in Colonia Dublan of about $160,000 and an additional stock of about $30,000 in our branch store at Colonia Diaz.

That since the close of the Madero revolution we have been doing an excellent business and have enjoyed full protection in our property until about the 1st of February, 1912. At this time Gen. Salazar made his headquarters at Casas Grandes, recruiting troops, which later came under the general direction of Pascual Orozco; that during the sojourn of Salazar at Casas Grandes we were compelled to furnish supplies amounting to about $1,500, which Gen. Salazar promised to pay for, but never did. The rebel troops left our neighborhood, and we again enjoyed peace and a prosperous business until they returned from their defeat at Bachimba, about July 1. From then on we were compelled to contribute supplies almost daily, but always in an orderly manner, we consenting to their demands and receiving receipts for what they took, always, however, protesting and furnishing as little as possible.

During this time Gen. Salazar gave me a written guaranty of protection and prohibiting any of his troops from molesting us or taking any property without a direct order from himself. Gen. Salazar repeatedly, on various occasions, assured me that they would take as little merchandise as possible from our store and that they would not molest our horses or other property, and especially would allow us to retain our arms to protect our families from disorganized and irresponsible parties. This promise and assurance was made not only to myself, but to others of our leading men, and especially Junius Romney, in my presence.

On July 26, 1912, I was present in Gen. Salazar's headquarters in Casas Grandes when L. P. Atwood requested the return of horses and other property which had been taken from his camp, and heard what Salazar said to Mr. Atwood. At the same time Salazar informed me that he desired the presence of Junius Romney and myself at his headquarters the following day at 10 a. m. We went there and were informed by Salazar that he had just returned from a conference with Pascual Orozco, and, acting under orders from him, required us to come there to inform us that all promises and guaranties formerly given were withdrawn; that they proposed to take our horses, saddles, merchandise, and all property whenever and wherever they wished; and, further, that we must surrender all of our arms and ammunition. Our conference with Salazar lasted about one hour, during which we argued the question over from every standpoint and tried to make terms with him by the surrendering of property on condition we would be allowed to retain our arms. He absolutely refused to consider any of our propositions, or to let us remove our families before surrendering our arms. In fact, stated that we could consider ourselves prisoners until the arms were forthcoming, and demanded that we send out an order to our fellow colonists to bring in their arms. We stated that the arms were personal property of each individual; that we had no military organization, and no authority to give orders to anyone, but each person must act for himself. During the course of our conference Salazar was very bitter in his denunciation of what he called the Taft government, stating that they had had to fight two governments and would have overcome the Madero government long ago had they received the same treatment at the hands of the Taft government that had been accorded the Madero government. He claimed that not only had they been prevented from obtaining arms and ammunition, but that Madero had been allowed to recruit troops on American soil. We explained to him that we were not responsible for the policy of Taft's administration, but that we ourselves had been neutral, had made our homes among them, and had done much for the betterment of their people. He replied that we must either repudiate the Taft government and join them or be responsible for what the Taft administration had done and take the consequences.

He stated while it was not their purpose to take our lives if we conceded all their demands, still he had no guaranty of protection to offer, and we must look to Taft or to Madero for protection. He finally stated that if we would give up our arms we could remove our families in peace, and if we would do so at once could go ourselves if we desired.

We left Casas Grandes about 11 a. m. and went direct to Colonia Dublan and informed our fellow colonists there of what had happened. After a consultation of about 20 men, in the presence of a large body of Salazar's troops, who were surrounding us, we decided to recommend that the colonists surrender their arms, as a result of which about 100 rifles and ammunition were turned over at Colonia Dublan. During this time, and commencing at about 10.30 a. m. on this date, July 27, a large force of Salazar's men were helping themselves to merchandise in the Union Mercantile store. I was requested by the principal citizens of Dublan to go to El Paso and arrange for transportation for our women and children to El Paso, and that in the meantime runners would be sent to Colonias Diaz, Juarez, Pacheco, Garcia, and Chulchufa to recommend them to do the same, Salazar having already dispatched his troops to disarm them also.

I reached El Paso at midnight. The next morning I made arrangements with officers of the Northwestern to put all of their available rolling stock at our disposal, and I at once made the best arrangements possible to provide temporary quarters for women and children when they arrived. The first train reached El Paso at 1 a. m. July 29, and one to two trains daily arrived until about 2,000 women and children reached El Paso, and I am informed about 500 reached Huchita, N. Mex., going overland in wagons. Since that time I have been busy as chairman of the committee, with headquarters in the American National Bank Building, caring for these refugees.

On leaving Colonia Dublan I left three of my sons and other parties in charge of our store and home. According to authentic information the Union Mercantile store was looted daily, and on August 1 two box cars were stopped in front of the store and entirely filled with dry goods and other merchandise which was of no value to the troops; that these cars were run to Casas Grandes and Pearson and the merchandise distributed among the common people. According to information the condition became so tense on August 2 that the men left in charge of property in all the aforementioned colonies were compelled to flee for their safety, and are still somewhere in the mountains trying to make their way to the American border.

Since that date our homes and all property have been at the mercy of not only the soldiers but the surrounding population without any caretakers whatever. In addition to our mercantile business above mentioned the Union Mercantile owned a large blacksmith and repair shop, with gasoline engine and machinery, and a large stock of material worth about $20,000. I personally left a home worth $25,000, with 5 acres of orchard and garden heavily loaded with fruit and all kinds of vegetables, also one other city block with orchard and growing crops, and 20 acres of alfalfa.

During the 10 years I have lived in Mexico I have broken no law, have always been a law-abiding and industrious citizen, and have paid large sums to the Mexican Government in taxes. I have not taken any part in their political affairs and have always been subject to their officers. All I have desired or contended for is the peaceable possession of my property and the protection guaranteed by the civilized nations. I have abandoned everything I possess in the world in Mexico, am indebted to various firms and banks in the United States and elsewhere for large sums of money borrowed and for merchandise not paid for. It is my purpose and desire to return and save what is left of my property and occupy my home in Mexico just as soon as it is safe to do so.

And further affiant saith not.

H. E. BOWMAN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 10th day of August, A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.]

W. M. JOHNSTON,
Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT OF L. P. ATWOOD.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso, ss:

L. P. Atwood, on his oath, being duly sworn, says that he is 39 years of age, a citizen of the United States, and resident of El Paso, Tex.; that since October, 1911, he has been employed as chief engineer in the construction of a railroad by L. E. Booker, from a connection with the Mexico & Northwestern at Pearson, in the State of Chihuahua, Republic of Mexico, to Pacheco, in such State, about 30 miles from Pearson, and during such period of time has had under his superintendence and direction a large number of native laborers and 15 or 20 Americans, mainly engineers, the grading work being under the charge of Messrs. Bowman & Larsen, American contractors.

Affiant says that the enterprise referred to was owned by L. E. Booker and his associates in the United States, Mr. Booker himself personally being a resident of El Paso, Tex., and a citizen of the United States; that at the time of the commencement of such enterprise, in October, 1911, the Madero revolution had triumphed, there had been a peaceful election of Mr. Madero as the successor of President Diaz, and there was no military trouble or outlawry of any kind in the general section of country around Pearson and the enterprise was inaugurated and commenced under entirely peaceful conditions, was welcomed by the people in that section, who all flocked in to get work, which conditions continued until in February, 1912, at which time the Orozco revolution started.

That almost from the time of the start of the Orozco revolution the situation in and around Pearson and Pacheco more or less became embarrassing with reference to the prosecution of the work, but it had progressed so far at that time and it seemed so probable that the troubles might be overcome and the loss would have been so great if the work stopped that it was thought conservative to continue the same, and the said Booker and affiant and all of the men under affiant's general direction and control, particularly all the Americans, were charged with the duty of being careful and politic, so as not to excite any enmity or to enrage any of the people that were in authority or to stir up trouble, and the enterprise worked along on this plan during the entire time that it progressed; but subsequent to last February affiant and all other men in authority on such work from time to time were annoyed and their rights more or less violated by the Orozco soldiers and officers in that they could never hold any teams or saddles or personal property or goods in stores provided any of the troops desired the same, and since about the 1st of July, A. D. 1912, when the Orozco troops retreated into that section, this course of conduct has been almost continuous and more aggravated conduct indulged in toward such Americans and such enterprise.

That beginning along about that date the soldiers have almost continuously been in and upon the work being prosecuted, and each day, more or less, one or more bands did some riding up and down the line, taking whatever they wanted, whether of work animals, commissary supplies, or other property; that beginning about such date, too, their conduct became of a more violent character, with a constant threat of personal violence in their attitude toward the Americans, including affiant and toward the enterprise.

That on the 26th day of July, 1912, shortly after a raid had been made by some of Salazar's soldiers and several horses taken away from camp, belonging to the said Booker and to the subcontractors, affiant went in person, accompanied by Mr. H. E. Bowman, to Casas Grandes, which was Salazar's headquarters, for the purpose of protesting against such robbery and general course of conduct, and demanding the return of such horses and other property, affiant stating that such property had been taken to Casas Grandes, and was then at such place.

That affiant was granted an interview by the said Salazar, at which the said Bowman was present, the room being full of soldiers at the time.

Upon affiant stating the course of conduct which had been pursued by Salazar's soldiers and asking for return of the property and for guaranty against such conduct, he was promptly informed by said Salazar that all guaranties which formerly the said Salazar had promised to affiant and other Americans were withdrawn, to take effect the next day, and that thereafter all the Americans would have to protect themselves. He gave as his reasons for this that President Taft's administration had been favoring Madero in the revolutionary troubles and had been opposing him and the Orozco revolutionists, and because of this the Americans in the country would have to take care of themselves, and they would not hesitate to take anything which belonged to them when they wanted to do so, and that they would take everything from affiant's enterprise that they wanted, and would take life if there was opposition. He sneeringly told affiant that he, affiant, might take his rifle and protect himself if he could, and thereupon affiant said substantially, "I brought no rifle into this country with me. I did not come here to fight, but to work and prosecute this enterprise, and in coming I depended upon the protection of the authorities here, and I shall still rely on my right to that protection," but Salazar concluded his interview with affiant in the same way, that affiant or any other American should receive no protection whatever from their hands, but must look to President Taft or Gen. Huerta, of the Mexican Army, or get out of the country, and the interview ended in this same spirit on his part. During the course of the interview Salazar constantly brought up the policy of the present administration of the United States as being one directly in opposition to the Orozco followers, and that their attitude in persecuting the Americans in Mexico was due to resentment over that policy, and affiant was given to understand straight out that the Orozco people would take out their resentment against President Taft's policy on the Americans in that section of Mexico.

Affiant further says that, as stated above, there were a large number of Mexican soldiers in the room where this interview occurred and a considerable number standing around the doors and outside of the doors listening to what was said, and it was very evident that Gen. Salazar was making an opportunity out of the interview and what he should state therein for the purpose of impressing all of these soldiers as to what the spirit of the revolution was to be with reference to Americans, and they all listened intently to what was said. The interview lasted between 10 and 15 minutes, and throughout the same Gen. Salazar spoke in a loud and offensive tone, and the atmosphere changed during the interview so that it became on the part of Gen. Salazar and the listeners a very offensive and antagonistic one toward Americans.

Affiant fully realized and appreciated at the conclusion of the interview that every American who longer remained took his life in his hands, and left the interview with that conclusion and undertook to make his way back to where the construction work was going on, in doing which he stayed all night in Colonia Dublan, at which place on the following day a large bunch of Orozco's soldiers surrounded the store of Mr. Bowman, affiant being in the same at such time, and looted the same, taking from the same all that each one of them individually wanted and without leaving any account of it or being possible to take any account thereof.

Affiant understands that it was afterwards estimated that about $2,000 worth of stuff was taken by these soldiers. At first these looters came in in little bunches under the control of officers, who compelled the clerks to give them whatever they desired, but in the course of an hour all pretended control was relinquished by the officers and the looters swarmed in in numbers without any discipline or control.

Affiant returned that day to the work that he was engaged in prosecuting and conferred with some of the American contractors with reference to the situation and learned that the same had been growing very intense on the work, due not alone to the soldiers, but to the antagonistic sentiments which had been spread against the Americans, so that some of the Mexican employees themselves had become ugly and in a threatening attitude, and such things had occurred in the way of robbery and interference with the Americans that it seemed to be the conservative conclusion of all that it was either abandon all work and get out in a day or two or take great risk of their lives and that there was no hope but that all of their property was going to be confiscated, but it was thought best to hold on for a day or two longer, which they concluded to do, and the following day they tried to prosecute their work the same as usual; that by nightfall, however, it was evident that any American from whom money could be procured by threat or violence would undoubtedly be taken in charge or their money extorted, and that night affiant was compelled, in order to protect his own safety, to sleep out in the mountains, which he did, there being a bunch of soldiers in possession of the camp that night; that the next day affiant left his horse and saddle in the mountains and prepared in person to escape from that section of the country, which he did on the next night by riding out, abandoning his work entirely, going out with a party of nine, being practically all the Americans left, riding overland from camp to Hachita, N. Mex., a distance of about 175 miles across the mountains.

Affiant says that all of the Americans in such party found it necessary to conceal their intention and their acts in leaving; that the whole atmosphere was one of insult and threats of danger from both the soldiers and a part of the Mexican employees on the work for several days before this party left; and the day before it left the Mexican soldiers had commenced extorting money from the Americans on the work, affiant giving out that one gentleman, Mr. Larsen, had been held up, and being well aware that it was true that he was to be treated in the same manner, affiant being informed that it was talked around through the camp that affiant was considered a representative of big interests and that he was to be compelled to pay several thousand dollars for his liberty. Affiant further states that this party was compelled to travel over the mountains in this way in order to get out, because it would not have been safe for them to have gone through the regular avenues of travel to the railroad about 15 miles away.

Affiant says that in leaving at such juncture he was compelled to abandon to such people, entirely free from any protection of care, property of the company which he represented of great value, and that while he has not been able to hear from there since, the situation is such that it is highly probable that practically all of it had been seized, taken, or destroyed, and that such property was of general description as follows:

	Approximate value.
1 sawmill, complete, with blacksmith shop and 9 or 10 logging wagons	$10,000
Lumber on yards	150,000
Headquarters camp equipment, houses, bedding, furnishings, etc.	4,000
Stock of commissary supplies	5,000
Corn and hay	700
18 freight wagons	5,000
60 sets of harness	6,000
90 head of mules and horses	18,000

	Approximate value.
Saddles -----	$750
2 cows with calves -----	150
3 hogs and 6 small pigs -----	300
Bridge camp equipment, commissary supplies, with tools and equipment and rigging -----	4,000
4 engineering instruments, with tools and equipment, tents, and com- missary supplies -----	4,000
Total -----	207,900

In conclusion, affiant desires to say that the attitude of the Mexican soldiers in that section of Mexico is that the Americans have no business in the claim of ownership to property; that it doesn't make any difference what their titles are, "Mexico belongs to Mexicans," and the Americans should be forced to get out. This was plainly stated to affiant at one time by one of the Mexican officers, Maj. Gutierrez, to whom affiant had complained of the outrages of some of his troops, such officer stating in so many words to affiant that Mr. Booker had no right to claim any titles or property, that he was an American, and that all lands in Mexico belonged to Mexicans.

And further affiant saith not.

L. P. Atwood.

TESTIMONY OF ELLA STEVENS.

Ella Stevens, being first duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

Senator SMITH. Where do you live?

Miss STEVENS. Colonia Pacheco, Chihuahua, Mexico.

Senator SMITH. Do you consider yourself a citizen of the United States?

Miss STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. Where did you live before you went to Mexico?

Miss STEVENS. At Holden, Miller County, Utah.

Senator SMITH. I want you to tell where you were and what you were doing at the time you were interfered with by the revolutionists. I assume they were revolutionists:

Miss STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. Tell it in your own way, and do not omit anything important.

Miss STEVENS. We were picking berries above our orchard. We heard a dog bark, and looked up and saw a man standing there.

Senator SMITH. What day was this?

Miss STEVENS. It was August 26, 1912.

Senator SMITH. Who was this man you saw standing there?

Miss STEVENS. He was a Mexican. He was standing at the foot of the blackberry patch. We went on picking, and in a moment looked up again and saw another one coming up out of the brush behind the first one. When the second one came up to the first one they stood as though they were counseling over something. Of course we could not hear what they were saying.

They went on down toward the foot of the patch and down toward the main road, and we supposed they were going farther on down toward our home. The place where we were picking the berries is just over a low ridge, and the men passed along a lower part of the ground, where they were out of our sight. We were looking for them to come up again into sight over a little rise. Instead of seeing them there we saw them creeping up in the bushes toward us, and when they were nearly to us they stood up and looked over the bushes.

Senator SMITH. Did they motion to you?

Miss STEVENS. No; one of the men spoke in English, and said "Come here." He went around to head us off from our main road, but we went through some brush by a roundabout way and escaped them. They were in the bushes and did not see us when we escaped them, for we went around them into the main road. We looked back and saw them and they saw us at the same time.

The blackberry patch was above the upper orchard, and when we came down to the upper orchard we decided to go down the road in the orchard and continue picking fruit; but we saw them following us, and so I said to my sister, "Let one of us go down and tell father. You go and tell him and I will stay here and watch and see what they are up to." She suggested that we both go to the house. So we thought we would walk along toward the house and pick fruit as we went so we would have that much more done. We looked and saw the men coming toward us and so we went on toward the house.

When we reached the house our mother and other sister were in the lower orchard picking fruit. We inquired for our father and found that he had gone out to the field. While we were waiting for him to come—while one of the children had gone for him—we picked fruit there in the lower orchard by the house. We heard their dog bark again, near the bottom of the upper orchard, so we knew the Mexicans were still following us. Just at this time we went into the house, and our mother called out to our father and told him what had happened.

Senator SMITH. Had anything happened up to that time more than you have told us?

Miss STEVENS. We just told him that the Mexicans were there and how they were heading us off and following us up, that they had spoken to us, and that they were still following us, and that as we had hurried they had seemed to hurry also.

Senator SMITH. How far away were they from you at the time you first saw them at the lower end of the patch?

Miss STEVENS. About 60 yards.

Senator SMITH. Did they get any closer to you than that when they came to speak to you in the bushes?

Miss STEVENS. They were then about the distance of six rows of trees. The rows are about $2\frac{1}{2}$ yards apart.

Senator SMITH. They were then about 15 yards away. Were they close enough so that you knew they were trying to overtake you?

Miss STEVENS. Yes. When the second one came up he had a dagger in his hand. I omitted to state that.

Senator SMITH. You said your father came to the house.

Miss STEVENS. He came in and took his shotgun and went out to the side of the lower orchard. My sister Emma suggested that we go up and finish the picking of the fruit while father was there. So we two and my sister Abbie started up there. As we were up at the top of the lower orchard we saw father at the upper orchard, going on the north side of the patch. He was about 30 yards up the row. The two Mexicans were ambushed there and came out as he was going between the rows. They came out onto him. He went out behind them and we saw them coming down in front of him, and my sister said, "It looks like father is driving them." They walked a few steps ahead of him and then one of them turned quickly and stabbed him. We heard him call, but could not tell what he said. We hurried up there to him as fast as we could run, and while we were running up we heard two shots.

Senator SMITH. Was there any shooting before he was stabbed?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. How far were you from your father when he was stabbed?

Miss STEVENS. He was in one orchard and we were at the top of the other, about 100 yards away.

Senator SMITH. Had he overtaken the two men or had they circled around him?

Miss STEVENS. He was going up through the orchard and they came out of the bushes.

Senator SMITH. You say they were "ambushed." What do you mean by that?

Miss STEVENS. They were hidden in the bushes.

Senator SMITH. After you saw your father was stabbed, then what occurred?

Miss STEVENS. The rows of trees hid them from our view when we were running. We heard two shots while we were running.

Senator SMITH. Then what happened?

Miss STEVENS. Next, we saw the fellow that was running, with his left hand over his right side. At the end of the third row of trees we saw father and the other Mexican the length of their guns apart, and they went into the ditch and went out of our view. As soon as we came to them, the Mexican was lying in the ditch, and father was trying to take the knife from him. The Mexican was across the gun and father was sitting on him, and hold of the hand that held the knife. The Mexican was trying to stab him again, and father was holding the knife and trying to take it from the Mexican when we came up. We both went toward the Mexican, and I took hold of father's hands, and my sister took hold of the blade of the knife, and we both arose at the same instant. While we were going up there I picked up an oak stick about 4 feet long. I laid this down just before going to take hold of the hand to help take the knife away. I stepped around on the other side of them and took hold of the gun and worked it out from under them, and my sister picked up this stick and hit the Mexican in the face with the stick. At this he made an extra move and father at this moment fainted from loss of blood and fell over on the ground. The Mexican arose and came at my sister. I pulled her back, and picked up the gun, and he thought I might shoot.

Senator SMITH. Did you put it to your shoulder.

Miss STEVENS. No; I held it in my hand. It was quite muddy and I was trying to work it, and he, seeing that I was getting it ready, began to go away. I followed him a few steps, and watched him until he went out of sight around the next row of trees, and then we paid our attention to our father, who was lying on the ground, and we did not see either of the Mexicans after this.

Senator SMITH. Was the first Mexican apparently wounded?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. When he went away?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. You never saw him again?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Had the second one been shot—the one that you saw there with your father?

Miss STEVENS. We do not know. He walked away slowly. We do not know whether he was wounded or whether he did not know whether to go on or to come back. We wondered why he left so slowly, as if he was afraid, or waiting to see what we would do.

Senator SMITH. Did you take your father to the house?

Miss STEVENS. While I was walking a few steps toward the Mexican my sister went to my father, and he was on his elbows and knees, with his head bowed, and he soon lay down on the ground. She took his head in her lap, and she was sitting there when I came back to them. She went after some water and bathed his face, and while we were moving him a step or two he gave a faint groan, and that was the last.

Senator SMITH. He died?

Miss STEVENS. Yes; he died at that time; and we carried him into the house and laid him on the bed.

Senator SMITH. Did either of these Mexicans lay hands on you or your sister?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir. He came within 2 feet of her with the knife, but I pulled her back in time to keep her from being stabbed with the knife.

Senator SMITH. Do you think that is what he intended to do?

Miss STEVENS. Yes; he came at her with his knife ready.

Senator SMITH. If you had not held the gun, you think he would have stabbed her?

Miss STEVENS. Yes. Just as I took the gun up and pulled her back, he hesitated an instant, and then he decided to take a step backward, and he then turned and walked away.

Senator SMITH. You say this Mexican and your father both went into the ditch?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Was there any water in the ditch?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Your father was on top of him?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Sitting on him, holding him down?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. By force, or was the man apparently injured?

Miss STEVENS. We do not know whether he was injured or not.

Senator SMITH. But your father was evidently able to master him in that situation, even after he had been stabbed?

Miss STEVENS. Yes; until father fainted. When we saw them, it appeared that the Mexican had rushed upon him to stab him again, and he was trying to protect himself. It looked as if they both went down on the ground, and he had managed to get on top.

Senator SMITH. Your father had?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Where did this Mexican stab him?

Miss STEVENS. In the right side.

Senator SMITH. Was this the first time you had ever been molested?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. State where your place is located, with reference to some town or village.

Miss STEVENS. It is located about three-quarters of a mile north of Colonia Pacheco.

Senator SMITH. Was either of these Mexicans in uniform?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. In your opinion was either of them a soldier?

Miss STEVENS. The insurrecto soldiers are never in uniform.

Senator SMITH. Were there any soldiers in the vicinity of your house at that time?

Miss STEVENS. Yes; there were a few rebels around there that we know had deserted from the bunch. They passed right by us as they came back. The army had gone by.

Senator SMITH. Were these a part of that band?

Miss STEVENS. We could not say whether they were a part of that band or whether they were some that were following the rebels and stealing what they could. After the rebels got what they wanted these other men would come and get what was left.

Senator SMITH. Have you told everything that transpired from the time you saw these men until they went away? Did they make any physical attack on you other than you have stated?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Did they grab you by the arms or attempt to drag you away?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. From the time you first saw them until you went to the ditch where the Mexican and your father were you were some little distance from them?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And the only overtures they made to you were from the bushes when they called to you?

Miss STEVENS. Yes. They were quite near us then.

Senator SMITH. How near? As near as across this room?

Miss STEVENS. A little farther than that.

Senator SMITH. Fifty feet away?

Miss STEVENS. About 15 yards away.

Senator SMITH. Have they attempted any harm either to yourself or your brother or your mother since then?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Had they before?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. What happened after that?

Miss STEVENS. We left the next day. There were two other men in Colonia Pacheco, and they were sent for, and the next morning we came down to Juarez, and we have not been back there since.

Senator SMITH. What is your sister's name?

Miss STEVENS. Her name is Emma.

TESTIMONY OF EMMA STEVENS.

Emma Stevens, being first duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

Senator SMITH. Is your version of this matter the same as your sister's?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Entirely?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. When you struck this Mexican with that stick, was he lying on his back or his side?

Miss STEVENS. He was lying on his back, with his hand holding the knife toward father's face. He was trying to strike father in the face with the knife. When I struck him, he fell back in the ditch. His head was raised from the ground. He fell back, and that prevented him from striking father again.

Senator SMITH. You finally got the knife away from him?

Miss STEVENS. No, sir; we tried to get it, but we did not succeed.

Senator SMITH. Did he take it away with him?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Do you know whether he struck your father more than once with the knife?

Miss STEVENS. I think not. Father only had one wound, with the exception of cut fingers.

Senator SMITH. And in all respects your statement would be the same as the one which your sister has made?

Miss STEVENS. Yes.

TESTIMONY OF WALTER J. STEVENS.

Walter J. Stevens, being first duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

Senator SMITH. Where were you the day your father was killed?

Mr. STEVENS. I went out to look after cattle and horses in the mountains. We had been hiding out some of our horses, and I went to look after the horses.

Senator SMITH. So that you were not there at the time this happened?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. You did not see these men at all?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; I saw the Mexican that was killed. We found him in the orchard dead, afterwards.

Senator SMITH. On your place there?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes; about 150 yards from where father was killed.

Senator SMITH. He had been shot by your father?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes; he was shot with a load of buckshot. He was so close that the buckshot all went in at one hole in his right breast at about the same place where father was stabbed. The shot did not scatter at all.

Senator SMITH. Miss Stevens, did you see the body of the Mexican?

Miss ELLA STEVENS. No, sir; we left the next morning.

Mr. WALTER J. STEVENS. We did not find the body until the next day, and our attention was attracted by the fact that their dogs did not go away, but stayed there. Part of the time they would be by this man's hat, and part of the time they were up there at the body. We noticed that they stayed right there in the field, and two of the boys went up to see if they could find anything, and they found this Mexican's body about 150 yards from where the trouble occurred.

Senator SMITH. Was there anything on the body to show who the man was, to identify him?

Mr. STEVENS. I never examined his body myself. There were officers sent up from Pearson, and they examined his body. He had a belt and a knife scabbard, but no knife.

Senator SMITH. Any cartridges?

Mr. STEVENS. No cartridges. He was dressed in a yellow suit, with a pair of calf half boots.

Senator SMITH. Is that all you know about it?

Mr. STEVENS. That is all I know about it.

Senator SMITH. Was any attempt made to collect any money from you?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Or from your father, to your knowledge?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. By either the revolutionists or the federals?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir. Four rebels came there and got three guns.

Senator SMITH. Took them out of your house?

Mr. STEVENS. I was not there. I was out with the horses. I would go about twice a week and look after the horses. We had to keep them down in a deep canyon, to keep the rebels from running onto them, and I would go about twice a week and look after the horses. The time before this, while I was out there, the four rebels came there and demanded our guns. We gave them three guns. One of them belonged to them, and one of them a Mexican left there in our charge, and the other was one of our own guns. They demanded the shotgun, and we said they could not have that, that we were not going to be left there with a family without something for our protection.

Senator SMITH. Did you see any Americans among these revolutionists?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Have you ever seen Americans among the revolutionists, in either party?

Mr. STEVENS. Do you mean in the Madero revolution?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think I ever saw an American with them at all at any time. I have seen men with them, just as I have been with them myself, as I happened along with them at times, and talked with them for a little while, but I never saw any Americans who were following them.

Senator SMITH. When was it that they took the guns?

Mr. STEVENS. It was the 21st of August, so my sister says.

Miss EMMA STEVENS. It was the 21st of August.

Senator SMITH. About what time of day was it?

Miss EMMA STEVENS. About 1 o'clock.

Senator SMITH. You are here now in El Paso with this colony?

Miss ELLA STEVENS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. You are being cared for out of the United States Government funds?

Miss ELLA STEVENS. Yes.

Mr. WALTER J. STEVENS. We left two brothers down in Colonia Pacheco to look after things, to see if they could save anything down there. Our crop had not been disturbed this year.

Senator SMITH. When was this?

Mr. STEVENS. The 26th of August, 1912.

Senator SMITH. I would like to ask Miss Stevens this question: Did you feel that these Mexicans were intending to do you bodily harm when you first saw them?

Miss EMMA STEVENS. Not when we saw the first one.

Senator SMITH. After they spoke to you?

Miss EMMA STEVENS. Yes; then we did.

Senator SMITH. And you moved away from them because you feared them?

Miss EMMA STEVENS. Yes.

TESTIMONY OF H. O. HARRIS.

H. O. Harris, being first duly sworn by Senator Fall, testified as follows:

Senator FALL. What is your business?

Mr. HARRIS. I am a railway conductor.

Senator FALL. On what road are you running?

Mr. HARRIS. On the Mexico Northwestern.

Senator FALL. In the Republic of Mexico?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Senator FALL. Where were you about August of this year?

Mr. HARRIS. I was working in the district between Pearson and Madera.

Senator FALL. Were the principal points along on that road occupied by the federal troops or by rebels?

Mr. HARRIS. The federal troops came in and took charge in that month and were supposed to be in charge of it?

Senator FALL. Where were they?

Mr. HARRIS. They were stationed at Aguaje and Madera and Pearson.

Senator FALL. You did not run up as far as Casas Grandes?

Mr. HARRIS. I was up at Casas Grandes during that time, but not regularly.

Senator FALL. Were the federals also at Casas Grandes?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. How far is Cumbre from Madera or from Pearson?

Mr. HARRIS. It is 77 kilometers south of Pearson, toward Madera.

Senator FALL. How many kilometers is it from Madera?

Mr. HARRIS. It is 168 kilometers.

Senator FALL. I know all the trails in that country, but I have not been there since you have completed the road. Was there any particular incident that occurred in connection with yourself or your train in August, after the federals had occupied these places you mentioned?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes. As I was coming north with a mixed train between Madera and Pearson they began firing on the train on the south side of the continental tunnel, which is at Cumbre. They fired several shots on the train on the south side. As we came out on the north side of the tunnel they began firing again. We had merchandise and passengers for Cumbre. It was a mixed train. We did not stop, as it is a very dangerous hill. We pulled out of Cumbre and stopped on a curve so that they could not see us from Cumbre and made the train safe and came down the hill with retainers and hand brakes.

When we got to Aguaje the Federal troops that were there could examine the train and see how it was, but instead of that they cut the train all to pieces, pulled all the pins in the train, so that we were delayed quite awhile. We found that the caboose was hit once. The coach next to the caboose was hit six times or seven times, and the car next to the coach was hit twice. The engine was hit four times.

Then we came on into Pearson with the same train.

The next day we started out of Pearson south with a mixed train, six cars of coke, a coach, and a caboose. We got to Aguaje. The general there began to load his women, dogs, and chickens, and all such stuff as that for fighting, and his artillery, to go to Cumbre and fight. He was going to take myself and the engineer as prisoners back with him to Cumbre to go within 2 kilometers of Cumbre and cut the engine off and go up to Cumbre with the engine and train crew to see if it was safe to take his army to Cumbre. That was the Federal general.

Senator FALL. Who was that?

Mr. HARRIS. His name was Pina. Instead of doing this I made a stand on him. I think if he had been a rebel he would have shot me. I do not know whether he would or not. I made a stand on him, pulled up and set out the cars of coke I had on the sidetrack. I intended to get away from him with the coach and caboose, and as we had a chance we backed away from him, backed down the track about 4 kilometers, put up a telephone and got train orders and came back into Pearson and left him up there with his artillery loaded.

Senator FALL. You speak of his artillery. Did he carry any artillery?

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, yes; they had plenty of artillery. They had plenty of guns and ammunition, but they took more pains to load the chickens and dogs and squaws than they did the guns and ammunition.

I went on into Pearson and reported this to Gen. Blanco, and he took it up with Supt. Marcello, and he thought we did a very rotten piece of business by not taking the company to Cumbre.

Senator FALL. And then going ahead and scouting for them?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes. I have handled rebels considerably, and have been out with them as much as three weeks at a time, without handling anybody but rebel soldiers, but I can say on oath that I have never been mistreated a particle by rebels. I have had them hold us up, and tell us what to do, and what they wanted, and we have never resisted; but there was never anyone of them who wanted us to do any scouting for them.

I was getting stuff out of Juarez here a few days ago. It was the same day that the Arroyo Seco Bridge was burned. At the time that was burned I went as far as Guzman, and we stopped at Guzman. There was a work train came in from San Pedro, and they told us there was trouble on the line, and they had come in to get away from the trouble. They understood that the rebels had held up the passenger train near Arroyo Secco, and we came north with the equipment. Guzman is filled with federal soldiers. I had a train of three cars of merchandise and some coal and coke. So I went and set out my coal and coke and hung onto the three cars of merchandise. The brakemen and train crew were up on watch all night. The federal soldiers at Guzman went and hid their guns and crawled into all the corners, wrapped up in their blankets, for fear the rebels were coming. They had no intention of fighting at all. I got very little sleep that night. I got up and looked around for their guns. If I had found them, I was going to load them up and get away with them.

Senator FALL. They were so well hidden you could not find them?

Mr. HARRIS. If I had had moonlight I would have found them, but I would not run around with a lantern looking for them. Those were the brave federal soldiers.

Senator FALL. Just go back for a moment, you say that on this occasion when you were fired into at Cumbre you went on and found the federals at Aguaje?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Senator FALL. How far is Aguaje from Cumbre?

Mr. HARRIS. Twenty kilometers by rail, but only about 12 kilometers across country.

Senator FALL. So that if the federal soldiers there had desired to catch the rebels at Cumbre, they could have gone over the trails 12 kilometers?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; in about four hours.

Senator FALL. Or they could have commandeered your train and gotten on that and gone back to Cumbre. How long would that have taken?

Mr. HARRIS. I could have put them back to Cumbre in three hours from the time I was shot at. I tried to take them back there when I got out to Aguaje.

Senator FALL. You tried to take them back?

Mr. HARRIS. I told them I would take their cars behind the engine and shove them up the hill.

Senator FALL. What did they say?

Mr. HARRIS. They would not go. They did not want to leave Aguaje.

Senator FALL. Have you noticed the federal soldiers who have been out on this Northwestern Road, as to their method of traveling, and what encumbrances they have in traveling, and also in the towns and camps where they are stationed?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; considerably.

Senator FALL. What is their custom in reference to carrying other people, animals, and various articles along with them?

Mr. HARRIS. They carry everything that they can make a pet out of, it does not make any difference what it is, anything that can crawl, climb, or jump.

Senator FALL. Did they have women and children along with them?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; all the time. They are never without them. They take everything that they can get into the cars, with the exception of cattle. I have never seen any cows along with them, but they have pigs, sheep, chickens, dogs, pet crows, poll parrots, and all such stuff as that. If you ever start out of a station and leave one of those creatures, you have got to stop and back up and get it. I have had them stop me and back me up to get them after they had started out of a station.

Senator FALL. And their women and children?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Senator FALL. Have you ever observed how they are fed and who does the cooking? Do they have a regular commissary where they all go and eat?

Mr. HARRIS. No, sir; when they stop—just as soon as you stop the train anywhere, it makes no difference whether for one minute or an hour, they will unload and start cooking right there, and when you get ready to go you have got to wait until they load up again. They will unload and build a fire right by the side of the car and start cooking.

Senator FALL. Who does the cooking?

Mr. HARRIS. They generally have their squaw out there with a pot of beans.

Senator FALL. You mean the women?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; the Yaqui Indians are the only ones who do not take their women along with them.

Senator FALL. The women start to cooking beans?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes. They are already cooked, but they make them hot again, and if you stop along where there are Mexican camps they will run to the camp to get tortillas or whatever else they need in the way of cooking supplies, or will run to the commissary car that they have on the train to buy supplies.

Senator FALL. They carry a commissary car along with them and sell the food from that car to the soldiers?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes. Almost every train of soldiers has a commissary car.

Senator FALL. And then the soldiers have their own women, whom they carry along with them everywhere to do the cooking?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

When the Yaqui Indians went to Cumbre they met up with the same gang that did the shooting at Cumbre and had a fight with them at Los Pomas, and the Yaquis followed the rebels six hours after they were called back that day. They have been picking up dead rebels down in the canyon ever since. Nobody knows how many were killed, but all the Yaquis came back. Instead of waiting for the train, the Yaquis waded in the water all night.

Senator FALL. Do the Yaquis carry any women with them?

Mr. HARRIS. No; they carry nothing but Mausers and belts of ammunition, and when they get hungry they shoot the first thing they see and eat it. The Yaquis are soldiers.

I was with the train that was burned the other night, on which Mr. Rupert was the engineer. The bunch of rebels in between Sabinal and Casas Grandes told us not to come back; that they were going to kill everybody who did come back.

Senator FALL. Was that the train that was stopped by the four men?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; there were only four there, but there were others close by.

Senator FALL. Who was the man who was doing the talking? Was he a major?

Mr. HARRIS. No; he was in charge of a little gang. I suppose you might call him a major. He was one of the Mascereñas family. Mascereñas was the provisional governor of Sonora, and this was one of the same family, a younger man. I had seen him several times.

Senator FALL. Do you believe you had better stay out of Mexico?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; I have that much confidence in him, the way he talked to me and told me to inform the others.

Senator FALL. Mascereñas is a gentleman?

Mr. HARRIS. I believe he is. He was in the caboose with us, and he did not interfere with a thing that we had there. As far as guns and ammunition were concerned, I had a mighty good gun myself, and he did not ask me a question about it. If he had, I would have given it to him.

STATEMENT OF LEWIS E. BOOKER.

Senator FALL. Mr. Booker, where do you live?

Mr. BOOKER. I live in El Paso.

Senator FALL. Have you interests in the Republic of Mexico?

Mr. BOOKER. I have.

Senator FALL. How long have you been interested there?

Mr. BOOKER. For 12 years.

Senator FALL. Have you devoted much of your personal attention to business in Mexico?

Mr. BOOKER. Almost exclusively.

Senator FALL. Of what do your interests there consist?

Mr. BOOKER. Ranches, live stock, and timberlands. And just at the present time we are constructing a little railroad.

Senator FALL. Your interests lie principally in the western part of Chihuahua, do they not?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Particularly along the line of the Northwestern Road, and west and south?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. What generally are the conditions existing in the portion of Mexico with which you are familiar with reference to investments and property rights of foreigners at this time?

Mr. BOOKER. There is no protection whatever to foreign interests, especially Americans, and I consider that the property of Americans in northwestern Chihuahua is absolutely in the hands of the revolting Mexicans.

Senator FALL. Are there federal troops in that neighborhood?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Are they attempting to protect American and foreign interests there?

Mr. BOOKER. They seem to be inactive.

Senator FALL. Have you lost any stock or horses from your ranches there recently?

Mr. BOOKER. They rode up to our hacienda there and shot down about 35 milch cows. Outside of that we have not lost anything that I know of, except what they killed for meat.

Senator FALL. How about saddle horses, mules, and harness?

Mr. BOOKER. Where I am building the railroad, west of Pearson, they came in and took about 200 horses and mules, about 80 sets of harness, and about $5,000 worth of commissary supplies. They also took quite a number of wagons, but we got most of the wagons back.

Senator FALL. Have you ever discovered any of your stock since they were taken? Do you know into whose hands any of them have fallen?

Mr. BOOKER. We have found some of them in the hands of the federals.

Senator FALL. Have you been able to secure the return of your stock from the federals?

Mr. BOOKER. I have not. Their requirements are such that I can not comply with them to get them.

Senator FALL. You have offered proof of ownership such as has always been recognized in Mexico?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes.

Senator FALL. And they refused to recognize it and to restore your property that you found in their hands?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Do you remember the recent occasion when the federal Mexican troops were allowed to go through the United States from El Paso to Douglas?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Did they have any horses with them at that time?

Mr. BOOKER. I was informed that they had four or five of my horses with them at that time.

Senator FALL. Do you know where they got these horses or any other horses which they brought?

Mr. BOOKER. They brought them from the vicinity of Casas Grandes.

Senator FALL. Had you heard that the federals themselves had rounded up horses down there and taken them?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes.

Senator FALL. And you were told by some one who knew your horses or horse brands that these federals had at least some four or five of your horses with them when they went through the United States?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes; and confiscated horses belonging to other settlers down there.

Senator FALL. In your opinion are the conditions, since the federals have taken charge of the different places which they have garrisoned along on the Mexico Northwestern, better now, and is property better protected than it was when the federals were not in that country, or are the conditions worse?

Mr. BOOKER. They are worse. The rebels operate right around the camps of the federals.

Senator FALL. Practically with impunity, or do the federals undertake to capture and punish them?

Mr. BOOKER. With impunity. At Sabinal we have a little mine called the Central mine. Salazar personally came in there with three men and held up our superintendent, and told him he wanted him to pay $4,000. He said he could not do it. Salazar put him on a horse and said to him, "How much money can you get me by going to El Paso?" He said, "I can get you one month's wages gold." He said, "You go to El Paso and get it." The superintendent went from there 3 miles to the federal troops and told them about his experience. Salazar was over there, and was supposed to have 300 or 400 troops, and the federals had 700 to 900. When the superintendent told the federals about it, they told him that they knew that Salazar was over there.

Senator FALL. Did they go after him?

Mr. BOOKER. No, sir.

Senator FALL. Prior to the Madero revolution, how were Americans and foreigners in Mexico treated by the Mexicans, both of the lower and the higher orders, with whom they came in contact?

Mr. BOOKER. With the greatest respect and consideration.

Senator FALL. How are they treated now?

Mr. BOOKER. They are treated with contempt.

Senator FALL. Do you recall any instance which will illustrate the difference?

Mr. BOOKER. One of the men in the engineering camp down on the road told me that when the rebels came in there one of them stepped up to one of the engineering corps who had a new Stetson hat. The Mexican took off his old slouch hat, with holes in the top and the rim torn, and put it on the head of this member of the engineering corps and pulled it down——

Senator FALL. Put it on the American's head?

Mr. BOOKER. He pulled it down on the American's head and said, "Say thank you."

Senator FALL. Did he keep the Stetson hat himself?

Mr. BOOKER. Yes. It simply shows that they have lost all respect for Americans, and they feel that they can treat them as they please with impunity.

Senator FALL. Did the proclamation of the President of the United States, which was construed generally as ordering the Americans out of Mexico, affect the conditions there as to the treatment of Americans at all; and if so, why?

Mr. BOOKER. Personally I felt that that order said to me, "Sacrifice your property and get out." That is the way I felt about it. That order seemed to be issued without respect to the fact that there were thousands and thousands of Americans who had lived in the Republic of Mexico for years, and had accumulated property and made homes, and were comfortable there, and the order meant, "Leave your earnings for 25 years and get out of the country and sacrifice everything you have there."

Senator FALL. Have you any opinion or information as to the effect of that order upon Mexicans in Mexico?

Mr. BOOKER. I do not know at that particular time, but subsequently it had its effect. I have not been living in Mexico myself since then.

At 12 o'clock noon the committee adjourned until Saturday, October 12, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EL PASO, TEX., Saturday, October 12, 1912.

The committee met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senator Fall.

STATEMENT OF CHARLES SMITH.

Senator FALL. Of what country are you a citizen?

Mr. SMITH. Of the United States.

Senator FALL. Where are you residing now?

Mr. SMITH. At Trinidad, in the district of Sahuaripa, State of Sonora, Republic of Mexico.

Senator FALL. How long have you been in Mexico?

Mr. SMITH. I have been in Mexico off and on for 32 years.

Senator FALL. Do you speak the Spanish language?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Are you familiar with the Mexican people?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. What has been your business in Mexico?

Mr. SMITH. Principally mining.

Senator FALL. Where have you lived in the United States?

Mr. SMITH. I have lived in Wyoming. I came to Wyoming in 1873, to California in 1876, and to Arizona in 1880.

Senator FALL. What has been your business principally in the United States?

Mr. SMITH. Mining; and I have also been in the Government service.

Senator FALL. What positions have you occupied in the Government service?

Mr. SMITH. I was inspector of customs during Harrison's administration in Nogales, Ariz. When Cleveland was elected of course we had to pack our duds and get.

Senator FALL. How long have you been at Trinidad?

Mr. SMITH. Next month it will be five years that I have been there.

Senator FALL. What is Trinidad?

Mr. SMITH. It is a mining camp.

Senator FALL. What position have you had there?

Mr. SMITH. I have charge of the Trinidad property.

Senator FALL. Also the Trinidad ranch property?

Mr. SMITH. Also the 50,000 acres of land belonging to it.

Senator FALL. Remaining there in charge of the ranch and property?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. How far is the camp of Trinidad from the line of Chihuahua?

Mr. SMITH. Do you mean directly in an air line?

Senator FALL. Yes; approximately.

Mr. SMITH. Perhaps about 40 miles.

Senator FALL. How far approximately from the line of the next State south?

Mr. SMITH. I will say about 15 miles from Sinaloa. It is farther than that the way you go around.

Senator FALL. How far is Trinidad from any line of railroad?

Mr. SMITH. About 55 or 56 miles. It is 18 or 19 leagues.

Senator FALL. What is the station on the railroad to which you come in coming out from Trinidad?

Mr. SMITH. La Dura and Tonochi. They are both about the same distance.

Senator FALL. What is La Dura?

Mr. SMITH. La Dura is a mining town and a kind of distribution station for freight into the mountains.

Senator FALL. Have you been in Mexico, at Trinidad or in that neighborhood, during the last two rebellions in Mexico?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator FALL. That is to say, first the Madero rebellion against Diaz, and later on the so-called Orozco and Zapata rebellion against Madero?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. What has been the general condition of the country down there in that neighborhood? Have business conditions been disturbed or has everything been quiet and peaceful?

Mr. SMITH. It has been very much disturbed, especially under this latest revolution.

Senator FALL. Have you see any Federal soldiers there lately in your neighborhood?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Senator FALL. When did you see or know of any Federal soldiers being in that neighborhood?

Mr. SMITH. We are talking about regular soldiers now. There have not been any there for over two years. There has only been one party there, and that was under Col. Matthews during the Madero revolution.

Senator FALL. Do you know anything about the recent movements of the rebel army, the soldiers or bands under Rojas, El Toro, Fernandez, Cheche Campos, and others?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; I do.

Senator FALL. Did they or any of them pass through your country?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; they all passed.

Senator FALL. Recently?

Mr. SMITH. A force passed through there on the 28th of July under Escandon and Dr. Huerta.

Senator FALL. About how many did they have?

Mr. SMITH. They had about 40 when they came through.

Senator FALL. Did they cause you any trouble at Trinidad?

Mr. SMITH. No; they passed through, but they did not cause me any trouble personally. They took away our guns and provisions and everything they could get from the people around there.

Senator FALL. Since that time have there been any rebels through there?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Go ahead and state what you know about the rebels in there recently, in the last two months.

Mr. SMITH. There are towns near me, where they commit a great many depredations. When Escandon's party struck Jecodi, which is 15 miles from Trinidad, east of there, they committed a great many depredations there, stealing mules, breaking up the houses, stealing grain and money and clothing, and, in fact, every thing they could get hold of.

Senator FALL. Go right ahead as to their movements there and what occurred, whether there was any attempt on the part of the authorities to stop them or not.

Mr. SMITH. No; there was no authorities there to stop them. Then the next outfit that came through was that of Fernandez. He had perhaps a few more than 500 men with him. I think they came through on the 3d of August. They also came in from the Jecori country.

Senator FALL. In which direction did they go?

Mr. SMITH. They went west toward La Dura. They were a tough outfit. I ought to state how they got away. They did a whole lot of depredations around the Jecori country, and then they struck Mr. Harding, a consulting engineer of the Republique mine. When they struck Jecori they met Mr. Gordon Harding and four or five other men, including the foreman of the mine and the pump man, and they took away all their guns and ammunition, and were going to take away their riding animals, but they finally persuaded them to allow them to keep the riding animals.

I talked to Mr. Harding when he passed through Trinidad from Jecori, and he told me this Fernandez was coming and to look out for him, that his men had taken everything he had.

Senator FALL. I wish to state here that Mr. Gordon Harding, who is mentioned by the witness, called on me in Washington and stated that he had communicated to the State Department at Washington the facts which this witness has just stated.

Mr. SMITH. I went up to the house then. I had a little bag of what they call pinole, or parched corn cracked, with a little salt, and a little provisions fixed up in a sack, and I got on my horse and hit the road in high places, but when I got to the house they commenced coming down. That was about half-past 10 o'clock in the morning. They stopped me and asked me if I had any guns. I had my guns hidden, all except the shot gun. They wanted to take it. I stood and argued with them for quite awhile expecting some of the officers would come along. Finally the officers came along. One of them was Col. Herrera, who used to work for the Corralitos Co. when I worked there, and he helped me out, so they did not take my arms. Afterwards Fernandez and a number of other officials, among them the secretary, stopped there with me for three or four hours, and I fed them. They had some women with them that they put in the kitchen to cook. The women that the rebels were carrying with them told the American women at the house that if it was not for them the rebels would ravish the American woman that they found there.

As I say, they stayed at the house three or four hours, and they had chickens cooked and had a fine meal there. Finally they left. Of course in the meantime the soldiers searched the house everywhere and took everything they could, broke down fruit trees, killed chickens and dogs, and anything that they could find. Along about 3 o'clock the others left for Santa Rosa, 5 miles from Trinidad, where they were going to make their camp that night. If there had been any Federal troops I could have taken them and destroyed the whole outfit. They carried in bundles of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and so on, scattered along.

Senator FALL. This was a part of the same outfit?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator FALL. That was a part of the same band who had left Madera or Pearson and that portion of Chihuahua when Gen. Huerta's Federal troops came into Pearson?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator FALL. And into Madera?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. The last bunch that came here started from Trinidad about 7 o'clock in the evening. It was quite dark. When they got down below Trinidad about half a mile they came to where there are two Mexican families living. I had let these families have a little piece of land to plant a little bit of corn, perhaps covering as much ground as two of these city buildings, and they were living in a little jacal above the creek on a little mesa. When the last bunch got down there one of them said, "We must go up and kill them fellows up there."

Jose Rubiana was one of the men who lived there, and he said to his wife, "Get the children and run for the mountains." So the woman took one baby in her arms, a little thing about 9 months old, and rushed off in the brush, and one of the larger boys took the other kid and ran off. It was pitch dark. There was no moon. There was a dog that barked, and they shot and broke the dog's leg and fired three or four shots at Rubiana. He had nothing with which to defend himself, and he ran out in the brush. There was a captain among these rebels, because the women that were with him said, "Captain, don't disturb them poor people"; but he said he was going up and kill them anyway.

There was another man living about 100 yards from there, and his name was Alberto Encinas. He had a little patch of corn. They shot three shots at his house. It was too dark to see the man, but they shot through the house, and his wife and he picked up the children and ran for the mountains, and stayed there all night, up in the mountains.

Senator FALL. These were Mexican people that they were shooting at?

Mr. SMITH. They were poor Mexican people. I am the only American in there. You can see how they treat the poor Mexicans. Then they went into the little jacals and took what poor little clothes they could find there, that the kids had, rags that I would not wipe my gun with, but it was all they had, and they had about 25 or 30 pounds of corn and about a pound of coffee, and they took that and threw it out on the ground. Then they went down into the little cornfield and turned their horses loose in the little cornfield, and seven of the rebels slept there all night. In the morning they left for Santa Rosa, where the other parties were. There was nothing more left for them to destroy. Then they went on in the direction of La Dura.

A couple of days afterwards I went down to Santa Rosa. There is one American living there, an old man by the name of Francisco Carlton. He is a man about 70 years old. About 40 years ago he used to have charge of the Trinidad mines. I had just got down to Santa Rosa and chatted a few minute with Francisco Carlton when a messenger came in and said there were a lot of "Colorados," or Reds, coming. I got on my horse immediately and started back for Trinidad, thinking perhaps it was Fernandez's outfit that possibly had run across some federals, as there were federals at that time in Sahuaripa, 60 miles from there, which is the capital of the district.

I had got about a quarter of a mile from Santa Rosa, just got over a hill, when I saw them coming down into Santa Rosa like ants, and it was the outfits of Cheche Campos, Emilio Campa, and El Toro.

Senator FALL. Do you know the name of that leader whom they call El Toro?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know his name. "El Toro" means "the Bull." And there were also Antonio Rojas and Col. Ramon Valenzuela.

I started back toward Trinidad, as I stated before, to notify the people that there were some rebels coming. In going up the canyon toward Trinidad I did not expect to meet any rebels, but Escandon and Huerta had made a circle and come back between Jecori and Trinidad, and I met them about a mile from Trinidad, in a very narrow canyon, and did not see them until they were within 30 feet of me. There was no show either to run or to fight, so I rode right in among them. They wanted to take my horse, saddle, gun, and pistol.

The bunch that I first met had a jefe, or officer, Jesus Ramirez, and I talked to him, and argued with them until finally they let me keep my horse and saddle, but wanted me to give up my gun and six-shooter and belt. I told them that of course there were too many of them for me, that I could not resist them, but that I would not give them up—that they would have to disarm me themselves. So they took my Winchester and my six-shooter and unbuckled my belt, and in a few minutes Escandon and Huerta came along. I had met Escandon before. He told me to come back with him and he would get me my arms. We overtook them, and they returned my rifle and my belt, but would not give up my six-shooter. They joined the forces of Cheche Campos and those various jefes that I mentioned before, at Santa Rosa, and with them they went through the different little towns, and robbed and destroyed as they went.

In the neighborhood of La Dura they separated. Cheche and El Toro and Fernandez went in the direction of Nuri, where they robbed all the stores. There are two grist mills there, and there is a great deal of wheat farming. They took all the wheat and started the people to grinding flour, and in the meantime killed the cattle, and in fact committed all kinds of depredations. From there they went on to Alamos and to Ceilos. At Ceilos they took 60 head of mules and horses and all kinds of provisions.

En route from Trinidad to La Dura the rebels stopped the mail carrier and destroyed the mail and cut up the mail sacks.

Antonio Rojas and Emilio Campa left this band that went to Alamos and went to a town called Oravas, situated about 7 or 8 miles from La Dura, up the river. There they crossed the Yaqui River to the west side. The river was very high. They had to cross in a small boat, a few at a time, and the animals had to swim the river. It took them from 3 o'clock in the afternoon until the next day about 12 o'clock to pass over. That bunch had about 80 men with them. In the meantime there were in the neighborhood of 1,000 federals, or rather nacionales or federal militia, at La Dura, Col. Kosterlitzki among them. They knew that this party of rebels were crossing at Onavas. It was reported to me that they wanted to start after them, that Kosterlitzki wanted to go and take them, but the general in command would not let him.

They were also 400 or more federals near Onavas in sight of them when they crossed and they never attacked them. I get this right from the men who lost the mules. Emilio Campa gave them $20 apiece for every mule, and the men said the federal soldiers were up on a hill in sight of them.

Senator FALL. It was reported in the newspapers about that time and given out, I believe, from El Paso, Tex., that there had been severe fighting there at La Dura and Onavas, and in that section of country, that the federals had attacked the rebels as they crossed through that country, and that there was fighting for two or three days. Was there any fighting there?

Mr. SMITH. That was a little scrap there. There was 50 of them went into La Dura, and they started to rob the company's store of some saddles and a little stuff, and the federals fired at them from the other side of the river, and these 50 went away and joined the other bunch, but there was no fighting to speak of.

Senator FALL. The federals made no attempt to catch them or surround them and take them prisoners?

Mr. SMITH. Twenty-five men could have kept them from passing that river. Just think of it for yourself. The Yaqui River was over 100 meters wide there, and it was high flood, and they had a little boat in which you could not put over 8, 10, or 12 men at a time. I could have kept them from crossing myself. I could have knocked them over as fast as they got into the boat.

Senator FALL. Emilio Campa and Rojas are the men who have been up in Sonora since that time, burning bridges on the Southern Pacific Railroad?

Mr. SMITH. Escandon was with them also at the time, along with that outfit.

Senator FALL. Burning bridges and destroying the Southern Pacific Railroad property and committing other depredations in the State of Sonora?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator FALL. Those were the same men?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; Emilio Campa and Rojas. Then on the road Ramon Valenzuela burned some bridges also between La Dura and Corral.

Senator FALL. What class of troops and from whence recruited are the so-called federal troops who were in that neighborhood, at La Dura and Sahuraipa, when these rebels were crossing there?

Mr. SMITH. They are mostly recruited from the penitentiaries, a great majority of them. That is a noted fact everywhere. They are given their choice either to serve in the penitentiary or in the army; of course, not all of them; there are probably some of them who are not, but the great majority of them are recruited from Belem and from the different big cities and they are not used to the mountains. A man raised in the city would have a nice time climbing the hills.

Senator FALL. The rebels move slowly backward and forward through that country.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator FALL. And the federals stay in Sahuaripa for days at a time?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and let the rebels go as they please, without going after them. They were scattered around there for miles. If I could have done it, I would have left the federals in town and taken the Nacionales, who can ride horseback and climb the hills. The majority of these poor federals can not ride horseback.

Senator FALL. Are there any rebels in that neighborhood now, or were there when you came out?

Mr. SMITH. The only ones that were there were a few with Ramon Valenzuela. They were petty well scattered.

Senator FALL. Were there any federals there when you left?

Mr. SMITH. No; there were no federals. The nearest place where there were any federals was at Tonichi, about 60 miles from there.

Senator FALL. From your knowledge of Mexico and of the people and the conditions there, gained by thirty-odd years of experience and knowledge of the language, and so forth, what is your judgment of the possibility of the present Government being able to restore peace, order, and law in Mexico?

Mr. SMITH. I do not think they ever will.

Senator FALL. In your business there you are in the habit of paying taxes on mining property and the land and the municipal taxes to the State and Federal Governments and to the municipal authorities, are you not?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I have some receipts with me, too—the last ones.

Senator FALL. In your business there, and particularly at Trinidad, in charge of the property, you have had dealings with the courts and the State officials and district officials and municipal officials, have you?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator FALL. What is the condition there now in that country, in the Sahuaripa district, and in that entire country of which you have personal knowledge, with reference to the enforcement of law through the courts, through the officials, or otherwise?

Mr. SMITH. In my neighborhood it is very bad. They sell mescal everywhere nearly. Everybody who wants to can sell mescal. There is no restriction. They do not pay any license. It is very much a go-as-you-please.

Senator FALL. Are there frequent changes in the personnel of the State, district, and municipal officials and federal officials there?

Mr. SMITH. No; about the same. They have been there for some time.

Senator FALL. Are they able to enforce their orders or the orders of the court or the orders of the State, federal, and municipal officials?

Mr. SMITH. If they are able, they do not do it, anyway. That is one thing certain. They seem to let things go until this trouble gets over in some way or other. Of course, to come right down to it, they could do it, but they do not. There are no schools there. Ever since Diaz resigned there has not been a school.

Senator FALL. Prior to the resignation of Diaz were the schools kept up?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; there were schools in Trinidad, in Santa Rosa, and in all the little villages.

Senator FALL. Were the laws enforced?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator FALL. Did peace and order reign and were life and property secure?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; just as secure as they were in the United States. The criminals were prosecuted and the laws were obeyed, and if they were not, the offenders were punished.

Senator FALL. Then, from your knowledge and information, the rebels in that neighborhood appear to have no regard for the property of Mexican citizens or any other citizens?

Mr. SMITH. No; and less for American citizens than for any others.

Senator FALL. Less for Americans?

Mr. SMITH. They even told me themselves, the officers to whom I talked—and I know how to talk to them—they told me to hide myself, that they did not respect the Americans. I said to them, "Why?" The reply was, "They will not let us bring over ammunition and guns. They let Madero bring over ammunition and guns, and why should they not let us? We are fighting against Madero because he did not comply with the program," or whatever arrangements they had made, "and the United States Government is helping him." I told them, "That is none of my fault or of those of us who are here in this country. We have nothing to do with the actions of the United States Government." This man said they knew that, but that they could not control the soldiers. In a general way they have got it put down that the Americans and the American Government outside of Texas will not fight. The lower classes in Mexico do not consider that Texas belongs to the United States. They will say, "He is not an American, he is a Texan." Of course they respect a Texan, because he knows how to handle a gun. They respect anybody who knows how to handle a gun. They do not bother the English so much. There is an English ranch about 30 miles from Trinidad, owned by a family by the name of Walker. They never went there at all, never disturbed them, although through a mistake they took away 11 mules belonging to them, when the forces went through there. They happened to be in town when they went through, and took 11 mules. Three of their mules came back. They are still out eight.

AFFIDAVIT OF P. H. CARLIN.

STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso, ss:

P. H. Carlin, being duly sworn on his oath, says: I am a citizen of the United States and my former home was in Wisconsin, but I have been living for the last five or six years in the State of Chihuahua, in Mexico, where I have been working in the capacity, first, as general manager of the Murphy interests, then later I was general woodsman for the Madero Co. For the last year or so I have been engaged in stock raising and farming for myself near Colonia Dublan, which is a Mormon colony. I am not a Mormon. My wife and family resided with me on my farm near Dublan at the time of the Mexican troubles breaking out. There was considerable trouble and danger in the vicinity of my farm for several weeks before we finally deserted it. My house had been visited two or three times and robbed and looted by what was generally called the Orozco soldiers. They did this by breaking into the yard and house in open daylight, and when I resisted to the extent I did I was pretty badly used and handled, punched in the ribs, struck and shoved from one side to the other of the house, and given to understand that I would be killed if I made further resistance. Vile language and threats of death were showered on me, loaded guns were held upon me, and I was struck over the head with the same. We were told by these soldiers that they were going to run all the Americans out of the country; that they were going to make all the Americans get out and, if they resisted, they would kill them; that this was done for the purpose of bringing on intervention and for the purpose of supplying themselves with whatever they desired—the talk being common and open amongst them that the Americans had no right in the country and were not entitled to stay there and own property. There were very few Americans in that section of the country, and we were powerless to resist, except occasionally some small bands. My house was finally pretty thoroughly robbed and looted in open daylight on or about two weeks before I left there, but shortly thereafter I managed to get my wife and smaller children out of that section of the country, and remained to take care of our property the best I could myself in company with other American men, though all the others did the same as I did, and got their women and children out about the 28th of July, 1912, the most of them being sent to El Paso.

After they were sent away the situation became more threatening still, and dangerous, and it was a question whenever you met any of these so-called soldiers whether you could escape with your life.

On or about July 27 these soldiers placed three rapid-fire guns, generally called Gatling guns, at one end of the town of Dublan and two at the other, and it was evident that they had determined to carry out some design against the people of that town. At that time they demanded and we had to turn over to them a lot of guns and ammunition. In fact, they got all except what we hid and concealed from them. After this for two or three days it rapidly grew worse, until finally, on the evening of August 1, they placed three bodies of troops at about one and the same time on three different sides of the town, so placed as to enable them to massacre the town if that was their intention, and that night runners came in from Colonia Juarez with the information that that colony, which was about 15 miles from Dublan, had also been surrounded in the same way on that day and that the intention was to do bodily harm to the people in the two colonies, the soldiers claiming that they intended to demand 10 citizens, who were to be killed, besides the head of the Mormon Church, because a rebel soldier had been executed by the authorities at Colonia Juarez some time since, which execution they were revengeful over.

After we had succeeded in getting the women and children out of Dublan and the other near-by colonies, we had a general agreement or understanding that if we were compelled to leave the country we would act together in self-defense in getting away, and the runner above spoken of came in from Colonia Juarez because of this understanding. We determined that night that we would desert our homes and make our escape before morning, as we heard it everywhere, from what seemed to be very reliable sources, that whatever they intended to do with us was going to be done the next day. So about 4.30 a. m. on the morning of August 2, 87 of us, mounted and armed, had managed to get together at the rendezvous agreed upon and managed to get out of the town by going over the back ways, cutting wire fences, and passing between rebel forces that had been so disposed as to guard the highways that we were expected to travel. Our escape was not observed by the soldiers until the next morning about 8 o'clock, when they started in pursuit. There was apparently three columns of them pursuing us, but we were in the mountains, where the trails were very difficult, and were able to keep ahead of them. They fired several volleys at us at various times, but without effect, except that a bullet struck, but did not seriously injure, one boy in the crowd. We were able to stand them off by having a rear guard drop back when this boy was shot, and scared them with a volley from long-range guns. There was no question about their intention in that pursuit to kill us, and it was only by taking to the difficult mountain passages and by having long-range guns superior to theirs that we were able to get away.

The pursuit continued for several miles. We passed by Colonia Juarez about 4 or 5 miles away and called a halt about 15 miles to an agreed rendezvous with the Juarez colony, at a place known as the "Steps" in the mountains. During the day some of the scouts from the American colony at Juarez reached this rendezvous, and we learned from them that other people from that colony were about halfway between this rendezvous and Juarez, endeavoring to make their way thereto, but that Juarez had been invested with troops the day before in the same way that Dublin had been, and a great many of the people had not been able to make their way out of the colony, but were hiding at various places therein. We spent that night and the next night in getting all of these people together and getting them out of this colony, nobody daring to speak or move in the daytime. The people in this colony had been preparing for such an emergency for several days and had been "caching" provisions, ammunition, stores, etc., as they had the opportunity. Our party from Dublin had no provisions, and only got sufficient to exist on from the supplies which these people at Juarez had cached. We also sent runners to Pacheco, Garcia, Chulchupa, all of which were colonies a few miles apart. Chulchupa was the farthest away. We stayed in the mountains and held the places which we had occupied while our runners worked back and forth between these mountains and the other colonies, gradually gathering in at nighttime through the mountain passes and defiles all people from such colonies, and found when they got together that their colonies also had been invested on the same day with rebel troops placed in positions to prevent their escape, if possible, from such towns, and that in every instance the citizens of such colonies, acting individually, had during the night after such investment of the town, escaped into the hills and mountains near by. It took five days to get all these people from the various colonies together, and on the 7th of August we had gotten them all in, except the people from Chulchupa, but our runners reported that these people, they thought, had gone another route than the one we were proposing to go, so on the last-named date we took up our march toward the United States, which we reached about August 12 without further mishap; but in order to get through safely, the whole country being filled with soldiers, we kept in the difficult mountain passes and away from all traveled roads, thus making a circuitous and very difficult journey, passing between the federal and rebel armies, and arrived in the United States on August 12. While we were camped at the rendezvous and were engaged in getting the citizens out of Juarez and other colonies some of our scouts went back at nighttime to see what destruction had been committed of our homes and what was being done by the soldiers. They reported to us that they found all of our homes which they had visited as having been ruthlessly robbed and pillaged and much wanton destruction done, such as smashing the windows, breaking of furniture, cutting up the carpets, and similar conduct, and that this was very general.

When we reached the border of the United States we found about 15 United States soldiers in camp at a rock corral. They took us for rebel soldiers, and were preparing to defend themselves when they ascertained that we were Americans. They stated that they were expecting trouble with the Mexican soldiers, since the latter had sent threats to them that they were coming up there to clean out the camp and take everything that the soldiers had. There were about 225 or 230 of us in this party, and by the route we traveled it was 150 miles. We had very scant provisions, but all of us arrived in El Paso safely.

And further affiant saith not.

P. H. CARLIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 16th day of August, A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.]

JOHN D. MASON, Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT OF HENRY BECKER.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of El Paso:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Henry Becker, to me well known, who, being by me first duly sworn, on his oath deposes and states as follows:

My name is Henry Becker; I am an American citizen, having been born in New York City on the 7th day of November, 1855; I have lived in the Republic of Mexico for nearly 20 years. In about 1903 I started a general merchandise store in Asientos, State of Aguas Calientes, Mexico, and I conducted that business until May 6, 1911. On that date a crowd of revolutionists came into the town; they entered my store and demanded $2,000 upon penalty of taking me out and shooting me if I refused. I told them that I could not possibly give them the money, as I did not have the same; thereupon they took what money I had and looted my store. When I remonstrated and told them that I was an American citizen they swore and told me that they did not care. I could do nothing to protect myself, as they placed a rifle at my breast whenever I objected to anything, and used the vilest language to me. My wife and children, fearing for my safety, would not leave me, and they had to share in this vile treatment.

They came into my store in twos and threes, taking whatever they wanted. Again, about May 20, 1911, another band of rebels came to my town and again looted and destroyed, taking from me whatever they wished. They disregarded my protestations that I was an American citizen, and threatened to kill me if I said anything to them. I had to send my family to Aguas Calientes for safety. They entered my home by force, drank and caroused therein, and threatened to burn same. They called all Americans the vilest names.

Americans in my town in Mexico and in many other places have been flagrantly insulted and abused. Their citizenship is disregarded by the Mexicans and treated with contempt. I could cite the instance of many Americans who have been injured and abused by Mexicans, without any protection from the American Government.

After my store was destroyed I put in my claim with the American consul at Aguas Calientes, and then upon his advice, with the American ambassador. Since then I have presented same to our State Department, but I have had no real help that I can see, and at present I have no assurance of any settlement. This has been the experience of most Americans who have been injured and whose property has been destroyed in Mexico.

I can truthfully say, from my experience and observations during 20 years' residence in Mexico, that Americans are more the object of mistreatment and insult in Mexico than are the citizens of any other nation on the face of the earth. This is particularly true of the past year or year and a half. Our Government is slow in protecting us in any way, and hence we are held in shameful disrespect by most Mexicans, and consequently subjected to more indignities.

HENRY BECKER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me by said Henry Becker this the 25th day of July, 1912.

[SEAL.]

ROBT. T. NEILL,

Notary Public in and for El Paso County, Tex.

TESTIMONY OF E. L. CHARPENTIER.

Senator FALL. Please be sworn. Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you shall give in this matter shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the whole truth, so help you God?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Yes.

Senator FALL. Of what country are you a citizen?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. France.

Senator FALL. How long have you been away from France?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. My most recent visit was six years ago.

Senator FALL. Where have you been living?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. In different parts of the United States and Central America.

Senator FALL. You are confined in the jail in El Paso under a charge of violating the neutrality laws, smuggling arms, or something of that kind? What is the charge against you?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. The charge appears to be conspiracy to violate the neutrality laws.

Senator FALL. Have you had anything to do with either of the recent revolutions in Mexico?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. I believe I took an active part in both revolutions.

Senator FALL. Where were you at the time of the capture of the city of Juarez by the revolutionary forces who were in revolution against Diaz?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. I was in command of Madero's artillery and took an active part in the fight all the way through.

Senator FALL. Where did you get your artillery?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Such as it was, we constructed it from the axle of a railroad engine at Madera.

Senator FALL. That is a lumber camp of the Mexico Northwestern, or Madera Co.?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Yes.

Senator FALL. You constructed your artillery from the axle of an engine?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Yes.

Senator FALL. Who did the constructing? Who made it?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. There were several of us, among them Gen. Garibaldi, myself, and four or five other companions. We all worked on it.

Senator FALL. What part did you take, if any, during the present revolution, which commenced about March 1 of this year?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. At the time I was living in Chihuahua, and had opened up a brokerage office, intending to handle mining properties down there, and among the Orozquistas down there—that is, the men who turned against the Government—were several companions of mine during the former revolution. They came to me several times with propositions to join them, to help them make cannon, and so forth, and handle their artillery, knowing that I had had artillery experience and was an artillery man. I refused all their offers, and got into a violent quarrel one night about it. I was associating very frequently with some of Gov. Gonzales's friends, and the remark was made several times in my presence that I was a Madero spy. They came to me again with the same proposition, offering me land and money, and so forth, and I refused, and told them that I preferred to remain entirely neutral in the matter; that in the former revolution it was a personal grievance with me; that I was not fighting for money; that I could make it otherwise.

On going home that night about 7 or 7.30 o'clock I was shot at several times. In fact, one of the bullets tore the padding from my coat. So I decided to leave. On Sunday morning Villa and Orozco had had their little skirmish. On Sunday night I decided to leave, and I procured a horse and saddle. As I was trying to go by the outposts I had the horse shot, and I made my way back into town by foot. That was on the 4th. On next day I met Thomas Fountain—

Senator FALL. The same man who was afterwards shot by Salazar at Parí?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Yes. I had seen him quite a number of times, but had never spoken to him, and through conversation then, speaking of the revolutionary trouble, which seemed to be the main topic at the time there, we got into conversation, and he told me that he had to leave, as they were watching him, and I expressed myself the same way. So we decided to leave together, and my intentions were to go to Torreon, going south instead of coming north. Knowing so many revolutionists, I did not feel like making the ride to border; I felt that it was safer to make the ride to the south.

We left on the night of the 6th of March—either the 5th or 6th, I am not positive which—and we rode out, and after getting a short way we had a skirmish with a band coming into Chihuahua, and two days later we joined Villa. In the meantime we had had several skirmishes.

Senator FALL. You mean Pancho Villa?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Yes.

Senator FALL. Did you go with him to Paral?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. We first went to La Boquilla, where we engaged the enemy. At the time we were about 225 strong; but myself, Fountain, and 11 men practically engaged the enemy of 250. We defeated them. The other men had deserted us. Their reenforcements came in and drove us out, and we took to the mountains. We were out of ammunition, and finally made our way to Paral, where Soto opposed our entering the town, saying we were bandits. We had then again recruited about 80 men, who composed our forces.

Senator FALL. Was Villa with you?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Yes; Villa sent in messages to Soto, stating that if he was not allowed to enter peacefully he would do so otherwise: that he thought Soto was a traitor. We finally entered the town about 8 o'clock in the evening.

On the following morning I expressed my wishes to Villa to continue on to Torreon, as I did not care about taking part in the fighting, and he asked me to remain with him until some of the Federals would arrive and see if I could not help him to make some artillery to defend the place with so that I could remain with him. At that time I was not receiving any money or anything of that sort from them. I was paying my own expenses. I started to make two cannon. Fountain was assisting me, though he knew absolutely nothing about artillery.

Senator FALL. When you left Chihuahua with Fountain did either of you have a pass from Orozco?

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Yes; I believe Fountain did have a pass. I did not see it, but he said he had a pass.

Senator FALL. Go ahead.

Mr. CHARPENTIER. Before the first fight at Paral I had quite a talk with Fountain in regard to fighting. I explained to him that it was a case of fighting until the finish—that is, we practically agreed never to surrender, to be shot rather than surrender, knowing that we would be executed anyway if we were caught.

Senator FALL. You spoke of a second fight.

Mr. CHARPENTIER. The second fight had not taken place yet. This was before the first fight.

On the 2d of April Campa attacked us, and Fountain and myself and nine men held the position known as Sierra la Cruz. I captured a mounted gun and the tripod and one machine gun and seven prisoners. That was the part that I took in that particular fight. We had considerable trouble with Villa to keep him from executing the prisoners, and it was stated to him that the men were prisoners of war and should be treated as such. I was opposed to executing them: so he delayed the execution, saying he would send them on to Mexico City.

On the afternoon of the 4th of April Salazar came and attacked us. I used the gun against them there. The others had not been made yet. I used the piece I had captured, and placed Fountain with the machine gun about 200 yards from my position, and instructed him not to use his gun until they were at least within 1,000 yards or closer, and when he was finally compelled to retreat, to retreat to my position, and we would pick up our horses and take to the hills.

I stayed on the hill and fought until after dark. I have since been informed that Villa and the majority of the men retreated before it was dark, I should judge about 4.30 o'clock.

Finally I was compelled to retreat from the hill, as I was alone at the time. Most of my men had either been killed or had deserted. I had two 6-shooter shells remaining. I had been waiting for Fountain to join me. The enemy were only about 30 or 40 feet from me when I left my position.

From there I went on down the hill to Casa Fuentes, to a hotel there, and attempted five times during the night to make my escape in woman's dress, but was unable to do so, as they fired on everything that moved.

The next day I was on the roof of the building, and looking over I saw Orozco's men shoot a little child about 8 years old for hollering "Viva Madero."

I remained hidden during the day. I had a 6-shooter, with two shells. I remained hidden in a room which was dark, expecting to shoot anybody who came in, or as many as I could with two shells. They had come to the house several times looking for me. As soon as it became dark I changed my clothes to civilian clothes, went up to the American consulate, and asked the assistance of the American consul—not as a citizen of the United States, but as a man; explained my predicament to him and asked him if he could assist me in making my escape, as it meant certain death to me if I was caught.

The American consul told me that officially he could not assist me, but as a friend he would do what he could. He instructed me to go to the Palmilla Mines and that I would receive assistance there. Thanking the consul, who wished me Godspeed, I left the consulate, passed through the sentries' lines of the rebels, and finally made my way to the railroad tracks, which I found about 2 miles from La Palmilla.

I was stopped by the rebel outposts, who challenged me, and I refused to answer the challenge. The challenge was "Quien vive?" I refused to say "Viva Orozco." They approached me, threatening me with their guns cocked, saying that it was a gringo, and to shoot him. Knowing that my only course was to bluff them, I laughed at them. So they began to search me for arms. After searching me thoroughly and finding none, one of them thrust his hand in my pocket and took out $140 Mexican money, and another one took off my watch and chain. I objected to this, and one of them insisted upon my identifying myself. I told them that it was impossible, and for them to come with me to Palmilla mine. They insisted upon taking me to the camandante. Knowing that if I went there I would be identified by Salazar, whom I know personally, and that I would be executed, I told them that they had already robbed me and insulted me, and that if they carried on their actions any further I would object to the consulate, not stating which consulate I would object to. One of them insisted upon shooting me, and his companions had considerable trouble in keeping him from shooting me. They were all drunk. I finally walked past them and arrived at the Palmilla, where I remained one day and two nights. I was there furnished with a horse and saddle, for which I gave a bill to the company, and rode to the mountains.

Approaching the top of a mountain, I noticed I was being followed by a band of 15 or 18 men, who called to me to halt. Knowing that they were rebels, I kept on. They fired upon me and killed the horse, and in falling the horse broke three of my ribs on my right side. I kept on going, and at the top of the hill there was a horse saddled, with no one present. The rider evidently had just gotten off or had been off for some time. His rope was on the ground. I crawled up to the horse and mounted, and rode off to the top of other mountains, and remained there for three days and nights without food or water, as I was unable to ride, owing to the injury to my side.

AFFIDAVIT OF J. S. McCRANIE AND J. D. KENNEDY.

EL PASO, TEX., August 3, 1912.

On May 11, 1911, we were conductor and engineer on passenger train No. 236 between San Luis and Anguas, and were caught by a bunch of Maderistas at Pena Blanco, and were forced to back up to Salinas. Before backing up to Salinas the Maderistas robbed all the passengers, abusing them and poking them with rifles, making them halloo "Viva Madero." I, the conductor, was robbed and called all the vile names in the Spanish language, and also spit on. After backing up to Salinas the soldiers all went over to the town of Salinas and got drunk, sent over a bunch of from three to five men about every 15 or 20 minutes, who would call us out, punch us in the ribs with rifles, hit us with machetes, make us halloo "Viva Madero," and then take us between horses and run us for about 100 yards. Treated the passengers in the same way. They also shot the train all to pieces. There were about 14 American men on this train. We got loose on the morning of May 13 about 9.30 a. m.

On May 12 Conductor Kane was running train between Silo and Guanata with Engineer McFarland. A rail was taken out by a bunch of rebels; the rebels held this train up; robbed passengers and all people on it. After Conductor Kane had given them everything he had and the brakeman was begging for his life—as Conductor Kane could not speak Spanish they shot Conductor Kane in the mouth and then shot the brakeman through the arm for begging Kane's life, also beat the engineer with machetes. This I did not see, but did see and help take Conductor Kane to the hospital on his arrival and ours. Also was told by people coming in that there was a lady on the train that they laid in the middle of the aisle and beat her on her feet with machetes trying to make her give up some diamonds and jewelry that they supposed she had. This was April 11, 1912.

Also Supt. Hamilton, superintendent of the Guggenheimer mines at Sandhill, was beat up by a bunch of rebels in May, 1911, until he couldn't sleep on his back for a week; abusing Mrs. Krutchneitt, also Mr. Krutchneitt and the rest of the Americans that were at the camp. This information I got from Mr. Hamilton before his back was well from the bruises.

J. S. McCRANIE,
Conductor.
J. D. KENNEDY,
Engineer.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this the 3d day of August, A. D. 1912.
[SEAL.]

H. E. CHAINIE,
Notary Public in and for El Paso County, Tex.,
United States of America.

[Translation.]

THE SAN LUIS POTOSI PLAN.

PLAN.

First. The elections for President and Vice President of the Republic, magistrates of the supreme court of justice of the nation, and deputies and senators, held in June and July of the current year, are declared void.

Second. The present Government of Gen. Diaz is not recognized, as well as all the authorities whose power ought to emanate from the popular vote, because, besides not having been elected by the people, they have lost the few titles of legality they might have by committing and supporting with the elements the people put at their disposal for the defense of their interests the most scandalous electoral fraud recorded in the history of Mexico.

Third. In order to avoid, as far as possible, the upheavals inherent in every revolutionary movement, all the laws promulgated by the present administration and their respective regulations, except those that are manifestly repugnant to the principles proclaimed in this plan, are declared to be in force, with the reservation to amend, in due time, by constitutional methods, those that require amendment. Likewise the laws, decisions of tribunals, and decrees that approved the accounts and management of funds by the functionaries of the Porfirist administration in all its departments, are expected; for as soon as the revolution triumphs the formation of investigating commissions will be initiated for the purpose of reporting as to the liabilities incurred by the functionaries of the federation, of the States, and of the municipalities.

In every case the obligations contracted by the Porfirist administration with foreign governments and corporations prior to the 20th proximo will be respected.

In abuse of the law on public lands numerous proprietors of small holdings, in their greater part Indians, have been dispossessed of their lands by rulings of the department of public development (fomento) or by decisions of the tribunals of the Republic. As it is just to restore to their former owners the lands of which they were dispossessed in such an arbitrary manner, such rulings and decisions are declared subject to revision, and those who have acquired them in such an immoral manner, or their heirs, will be required to restore them to their former owners, to whom they shall also pay an indemnity for the damages suffered. Solely in case those lands have passed to third persons before the promulgation of this plan shall the former owners receive an indemnity from those in whose favor the dispossession was made.

Fourth. Besides the constitution and existing laws, the principle of no reelection of the President and Vice President of the Republic, governors of the States, and municipal presidents is declared to be the supreme law of the Republic until the respective constitutional amendments are made.

Fifth. I assume the character of provisional President of the United States of Mexico, with the necessary powers to make war on the usurping government of Gen. Diaz.

As soon as the capital of the Republic and more than half of the States of the federation are in the power of the forces of the people the provisional President will issue a call for extraordinary general elections one month thereafter, and shall deliver the power to the President who is elected as soon as the result of the election is known.

Sixth. The provisional President, before delivering the power, shall make a report to the congress of the union of the use he has made of the powers the present plan confers upon him.

Seventh. The 20th day of the month of November, after 6 p. m., all citizens of the Republic will take up arms to remove from power all the authorities who now govern it. (The towns which are at distance from means of communication will do so the day previous.)

Eighth. When the authorities offer armed resistance, they shall be compelled by force of arms to respect the popular will, but in this case the laws of war shall be rigorously observed, attention being especially called to the prohibition against the use of expansive bullets, nor shall prisoners be shot. Attention is also called to the duty of every Mexican to respect foreigners in their persons and interests.

Ninth. The authorities who offer resistance to the realization of this plan shall be put in prison, to be tried by the tribunals of the Republic when the revolution is ended. As soon as each city or town receives its liberty the principal officer in command shall be recognized as the provisional legal authority, with power to delegate his functions to any other prominent citizen, who shall be confirmed in his office or removed by the provisional governor.

One of the first measures of the provisional government shall be to put all political prisoners at liberty.

Tenth. The appointment of the provisional governor of each State that has been occupied by the forces of the revolution shall be made by the provisional President. This governor shall be under strict obligation to issue a call for election of the constitutional governor of the State as soon as may be possible in the judgment of the provisional President. From this rule are excepted those States that have within two years had democratic campaigns for change of government, since in those States the person who was the candidate of the people will be considered as the provisional governor, provided he adheres actively to this plan.

In case the provisional President has not made the appointment of governor, this appointment has not reached its destination, or the person appointed does not accept for any reason, then the governor shall be designated by the vote of all the commanding officers who operate in the territory of the respective State, on condition that his appointment be ratified by the provisional President as soon as may be possible.

Eleventh. The new authorities will dispose of all the funds found in the public offices for the ordinary expenses of administration and for the expenses of the war, keeping accounts with due scrupulousness. In case the funds are not sufficient for the expenses of the war they shall contract for loans, either voluntary or forced, these latter only with citizens or national institutions. Of these loans scrupulous account shall also be kept and receipts in due form shall be given to the parties in interest, to the end that when the revolution triumphs the amounts loaned may be returned to them.

Transitory.—(a) The officers of the volunteer forces shall assume the grade that corresponds to the number of the forces under their command; in case military and volunteer forces operate together, the officer of the higher grade shall have the command of them, but in case both officers have the same grade the command shall belong to the military officer.

Civil officers shall have said grade while the war lasts, and, once it is ended, those appointments, on application of the parties in interest, shall be revised by the war department, which shall ratify them in their grade or reject them, according to their merits.

(b) All officers, civil as well as military, shall enforce the strictest discipline over their troops, and they shall be responsible to the provisional government for the misdeeds committed by the forces under their command, unless they show it was impossible for them to restrain their soldiers and that they had inflicted on the guilty the punishment they deserved.

(c) If the forces and authorities that sustain Gen. Diaz shoot prisoners of war, not for that reason nor by way of reprisal shall the same thing be done with theirs who fall in our hands; but, in exchange, the civil or military authorities in the service of Gen. Diaz who, once the revolution is started, have ordered, in any manner disposed, transmitted the order, or shot any of our soldiers shall be shot within 24 hours and after a summary trial.

Not even the highest functionaries shall be exempted from this penalty. The only exception shall be Gen. Diaz and his ministers, on whom the same penalty shall be inflicted in case they order said executions or permit them, but after having been tried by the tribunals of the Republic, when the revolution has terminated.

In case Gen. Diaz orders that the laws of war be respected and that the prisoners who fall in his hands be treated with humanity, his life shall be spared, but in every event he must answer before the tribunals as to how he has managed the funds of the nation and as to how he has complied with the law.

(d) As an indispensable requisite in the laws of war that belligerent troops wear some uniform or distinguishing mark, and as it would be difficult to uniform the numerous forces of the people who are going to take part in the conflict, a tricolored ribbon on the hat or on the arm shall be adopted as the distinguishing mark of all the liberating forces.

Fellow citizens, if I call upon you to take up arms and overthrow the government of Gen. Diaz, it is not only because of the unwarranted act he committed during the last elections, but to save the country from the gloomy future that awaits it under his dictatorship and under the government of the nefarious scientific oligarchy which, without scruple and in great haste, are absorbing and wasting the national resources, and, if we permit him to continue in power, in a very short time they will have completed their work; they will have led the people into ignominy and will have degraded them; they will have sucked all their wealth and left them in the most absolute misery; they will have caused the bankruptcy of our finances and the dishonor of our country which, weak, impoverished, and manacled, will find itself without arms to defend its frontiers, its honor, and its institutions.

In so far as concerns me, I have a tranquil conscience, and no one can accuse me of promoting the revolution for personal ends, for it is within the knowledge of the nation that I did everything possible to reach a peaceable arrangement and was disposed even to resign my candidacy, provided Gen. Diaz had permitted the nation to designate, although it be the vice president of the Republic; but, dominated by incomprehensible pride and unheard-of haughtiness, he did not heed the voice of the fatherland and preferred to precipitate it into a revolution rather than yield a point; rather than return to the people an atom of their rights; rather than comply, even at the end of his life, with a part of the promises he made at Noria and Tuxtepec.

He himself justified the present revolution when he said, "Let no citizen impose and perpetuate himself in the exercise of power, and this will be the last revolution."

If the interests of the fatherland had had greater weight in the mind of Gen. Diaz than the sordid interests of himself and his advisers, he would have avoided this revolution by making some concessions to the people; but, since he did not do so * * * so much the better; * * * the change will be more rapid and more radical, since the Mexican people, instead of lamenting like a coward, will accept the challenge like a brave man, and now when Gen. Diaz proposes to rely on brute force to impose an ignominious yoke upon them, the people will have recourse to the same force to shake off that yoke, to eject that woeful man from power, and to recover their liberty.

FRANCISCO I. MADERO.

SAN LUIS POTOSI, October 5, 1910.

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Thursday, December 12, 1912.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Smith of Michigan (chairman) and Fall.

TESTIMONY OF H. S. STEPHENSON.

H. S. Stephenson, a witness previously sworn, being recalled, testified as follows:

Senator SMITH. I want to ask you first to tell the committee about the ransom which had been exacted since you gave your last testimony.

Mr. STEPHENSON. I can not give the exact date.

Senator FALL. Just approximate it.

Mr. STEPHENSON. I went to Lordsburg on the 15th of October. It was on or about the 15th of October, 1912.

Senator SMITH. How much did you pay?

Mr. STEPHENSON. Five thousand dollars.

Senator SMITH. For what purpose?

Mr. STEPHENSON. It was paid for the release of Arthur McCormick, our superintendent.

Senator SMITH. To whom was it paid?

Mr. STEPHENSON. It was paid to Capt. Pedro Galvan and Lincho Miranda. It was paid to them in gold.

Senator SMITH. Who are they?

Mr. STEPHENSON. Galvan is a captain in the revolutionary army.

Senator SMITH. And this money was paid in the State of Chihuahua?

Mr. STEPHENSON. It was paid in the State of Chihuahua, about 15 miles south of Monument 60 on the international boundary.

Senator SMITH. I believe you received a letter from Gen. Salazar!

Mr. STEPHENSON. Yes. I have here the letter which I received.

Senator SMITH. I see he signs himself commander in chief.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Yes. The letter is as follows:

A translation of this letter is as follows:

[Translation.]

EL PALMAR, November 18, 1912.

To the MANAGER OF THE NOGALES Co.

MY DEAR SIR: From this date on all ranches or farms, which are found to be defended by the forces of the Autocrat Madero, shall be destroyed in accordance with my order, and with greater reason when we take them with blood and fire.

On no account will you be permitted to continue operations without previously consulting the government emanating from the revolution.

INEZ SALAZAR, General in Chief.

P. S.—None of your employees nor you yourself may enter Mexican territory without my permit. Farewell.

REPORT.

WASHINGTON, MARCH 1, 1913.

To the SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS:

Senate resolution 335, Sixty-second Congress, second session, provided that the Committee on Foreign Relations or a subcommittee thereof should be authorized and directed to inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report whether any persons, associations, or corporations domiciled in or owing allegiance to the United States, have heretofore been or are now engaged in fomenting, inciting, encouraging, or financing rebellion, insurrection, or other flagrant disorder in Cuba or Mexico against the lawfully organized Government of this country.

The committee was directed to report the result of its investigation and inquiry to the Senate during the first month of the next session of Congress.

In accordance with the directions of the Senate, Hon. William Alden Smith, William E. Borah, Porter J. McCumber, Benjamin F. Shively, and Gilbert M. Hitchcock were appointed a subcommittee to conduct the investigations directed. Later, by a resolution of the Senate, Senator Albert B. Fall was added to this subcommittee.

Upon the organization of the committee a resolution was adopted providing that any two members should have authority to conduct hearings, take testimony, etc. Senators Smith of Michigan, and Fall, of New Mexico, proceeded to the Mexican border, and committee hearings were opened on September 7, 1912, at El Paso, Tex. Such hearings were continued from time to time at El Paso, Los Angeles, San Diego, New Orleans, and other points on the border and in the United States, and finally in Washington, D. C.

It was never possible to secure the attendance of more than two members of the committee, that is to say, Senators Smith and Fall, until certain hearings were held in Washington in December, 1912. No meeting of the committee was ever held for the purpose of arriving at any conclusion as to the findings of facts, or general report either to the Committee on Foreign Relations, or to the Senate of the United States. Finally during the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, the testimony taken by the committee and the different members thereof, was printed for the information of the Senate and this printed report of testimony contains 918 pages, including indexes.

In the investigation of the main question at issue, it became necessary for the committee to go into conditions existing at the time of the hearings and prior thereto, from about the commencement of the Madero revolution against Diaz as tending to throw light upon the sources from which was obtained the necessary funds with which to finance that revolution, as well as the revolution against the Madero Government. In other words, in examining witnesses the committee proceeded to the best of its ability, to ascertain the sources from which the different revolutionists obtained their funds, as well as to ascertain directly whether any persons or corporations domiciled in or owing allegiance to the United States, had contributed thereto.

It is apparent from the general tenor of all the evidence taken, that as to the Madero revolution against Diaz, while there were very many rumors afloat throughout Mexico and on the border within the United States as to the source of the funds with which the revolution was being conducted, as a matter of fact, very few persons had any definite knowledge upon the subject.

The Madero family as is often the case in Mexico, owned very large land interests, were producers of Guayule rubber, owned Guayule lands, were interested in banks, owned smelters, etc. The head of the family was Don Evaristo Madero, and the family consisted of sons and grandsons and relatives, included among whom was Francisco I. Madero, jr., the leader of the successful revolution against Diaz. The Madero family generally was known as is customary in Mexico, and did business largely, as "the house of Madero."

Under ordinary circumstances and in ordinary times the Madero family would have been able to raise, if acting together, large sums of money. It is claimed, and the evidence seems to show, that other members of the family, with the exception of Gustavo and one or two brothers of Francisco I. Madero, jr., did not originally take part in inciting the revolution, and it is claimed, in fact, that many members of the family, including the heads, were never in sympathy with the revolution until after the capture of the city of Juarez and the overthrow of the Diaz administration.

It seems to be established by the evidence that a local outbreak having occurred in the State of Chihuahua under the leadership of Pascual Orozco, jr., against the State authorities, a coalition was made between Francisco I. Madero, jr., and Pascual Orozco, jr., through which coalition Orozco's armed forces were to some slight extent, at any rate, furnished with funds with which to purchase arms and ammunition.

Zapata, in the southern part of Mexico, had through various bands, all proclaiming him as the general leader, raised a so-called revolution about the same time and was harassing the authorities in several different States, as were Orozco and others in the northern States.

It appears that in some of the newspapers in Mexico prior to the capture of Juarez, as well as in the camps and councils of the revolutionists in the field, the question of the source of funds, which funds appear to have been limited, was discussed to a greater or less extent. There seems to have been a rumor about this time, more or less discussed, to the effect that the commercial rivalry between conflicting oil interests in Mexico was resulting beneficially to the cause of the revolutionists from a financial standpoint.

Subsequent to the capture of Juarez, and at various times during the administration of De la Barra, and later during the administration of Madero, and prior to March 1, 1912, the assertion was openly made in some of the newspapers in Mexico and by numerous Mexicans that American oil interests had assisted in financing the Madero revolution against Diaz.

Just before the Orozco revolution, which began about March 1, 1912, one Enrile undertook to have printed and circulated one or more circulars to the Mexican people, charging among other things that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., had furnished the money with which the Madero revolution was conducted.

After the outbreak of the Orozco revolution these charges were repeated and were the subject of considerable discussion in Mexico, as it was claimed that the Madero family were favoring the Waters-Pierce and Standard Oil interests against those of the English syndicate headed by Sir Weetman Pierson (Lord Cowdray), and the Mexican Oil Co., known as El Aguila, in which Lord Cowdray was largely interested. These rumors were so persistent that very many people in this country, as well as in Mexico, were convinced of the fact that there was more or less truth in the statements, and many believed positively that the Madero revolution had been incited and fomented by the American oil interests, and had, in fact, been financed by the same interests.

As a matter of interest, I may state that long before the capture of Juarez; in fact, just after the outbreak of the Orozco revolution, as I knew many of the revolutionists, including Orozco himself, and was to some extent interested in the Guerrero district where the revolutionists made their headquarters, I sent a confidential man to Orozco's camp, with instructions to ascertain and report to me what his purposes were and where he was getting arms and ammunition, if it were possible to obtain such information. This man whom I sent, was not able at that time to meet Orozco, whom he knew personally very well, but asked the plain question of some of his officers: Where are you getting your money for arms and ammunition? Who is financing you? and while no direct reply was made, one of these officers in the presence of others, said, "So long as the oil companies are fighting there will be plenty of money for our purposes."

Just prior to September 7, when the committee began taking testimony, articles appeared in the newspapers in the United States, as well as in Mexico, reiterating the old statements as to the American oil companies having furnished funds for Madero.

Juan Didapp, who had been a Mexican consul in Spain, and again had worked in connection with the revolutionary junta or committee at the outbreak of the Madero revolution, in various interviews published in the United States made the statement, as of his own personal knowledge, that H. Clay Pierce, of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., and the Standard Oil had furnished the funds through which the Madero revolution was financed. The Waters-Pierce and Standard Oil Cos. were spoken of generally in Mexico and until recently as the same concern.

The testimony of Juan F. Didapp, taken by the committee under oath, and set forth on page 458, etc., of the committee report, will show what this statement was as made by Mr. Didapp to the papers and repeated to the committee, and will give the general idea of the rumors and statements which have been published and made, as I have stated, although Didapp claimed to have more personal knowledge than did any other witness who testified upon this subject.

The testimony of J. Garcia Cuadra, page 292, and of Manuel Lujan, page 293, etc., and that of various other witnesses, as shown in the record, corroborate the statements made by my informant at the outbreak of the original revolution against Diaz—that the general rumor was in circulation that the American oil companies were inciting the Orozco-Madero revolution against Diaz.

Shortly after the taking of the testimony by the committee began statements were published broadcast with the press of the United States that the committee, or at least myself as one of the committee, had declared that the evidence showed that the American oil interests had financed the Madero revolution. These statements were not correct and the published statement in an authorized interview by myself in the Los Angeles Examiner, received no such wide publicity as was given to the statement which my interview endeavored to correct. In this interview which I authorized, I stated that evidence had been offered to the committee to show the connection of the American oil interests with the fomenting of the Madero revolution, and more evidence to the effect that the Madero Government had extended favors to the American oil interests, or at least had favored these interests as against the English oil companies.

I stated further that the evidence was certainly by no means conclusive, and that even if it were shown by conclusive evidence that moneys had been advanced to the Madero government or members of the Madero family after the capture of Juarez by any American interest, it might well be that such moneys were furnished for the protection of existing interests in Mexico.

In addition to the testimony taken as shown by the report I conducted a very thorough investigation of my own, which necessarily was of a private nature, and through such investigation and in connection with the testimony as taken by the committee I became convinced that the rumors as to the American oil companies, or Mr. H. Clay Pierce, having furnished any funds with which to incite or foment the Madero revolution against Diaz was concerned, that such rumors were without foundation in fact and could not be substantiated by any credible testimony.

I may say that some of the sources of my information were from Mexicans thoroughly conversant with public affairs of that country during the Diaz régime, and later during that of De La Barra and Madero.

From one or more persons who were in thorough sympathy with the Diaz government and close followers and personal and family friends of President Diaz, I became convinced that the money with which the Madero revolution was incited and brought to a successful conclusion came from another source entirely, that any American interests, from subscriptions made by various parties in the Republic of Mexico who were opposed to the Diaz government, and that the revolutionists largely supported themselves by killing and rustling cattle and sheep, by looting stores, and by securing forced contributions.

I have not been and am not at liberty, even in a confidential report to the Senate committee, to give the names of my informants, including those who were bitterly opposed to the Madero family personally and to the Madero government.

Recently, however, a statement has been published in the public press of Mexico, purporting to be a full disclosure of the sources from which the funds were obtained by the Maderos with which to conduct the preliminaries to and later the actual revolution against the government of Diaz. This story as published in El Pais, one of the principal papers of Mexico City, under date of Wednesday, May 21, 1913, contains the circumstantial account of what purports to be the true facts with relation to the financing of the Madero revolution. The story is told by Engineer Marcelino Velasco, a translated summary of which is as follows:

During the last years of the Diaz administration an American by the name of Cooper obtained a concession to build a railroad from Camacho, a station on the Mexican Central, to Mazapil, passing through Bonanza, all in the State of Zacatecas. Shortly afterwards Cooper transferred his concession to Gustavo A. Madero, and, on April 26, 1910, at Monterey, Gustavo A. Madero, Rafael F. Urbina, Alfonso Madero, and Francisco Madero, sr., organized the "Mexico Central Railroad Co.," the articles of incorporation being modified October 23, 1911, Monterey being designated as the domicile of the company, but later changed to Mexico City.

The original federal concession was dated May 6, 1907, and was modified by decrees of April 21, 1908, and November 20, 1909. The local concession from the State of Zacatecas was dated April 7, 1910. The federal concession was again modified May 21, 1912, by President Madero fixing June 12, 1917, as the time by which the road must be finished.

The capital of the company was 3,000,000 pesos, divided into 30,000 shares of 100 pesos each. Of these 25,000 were nonassessable and 5,000 assessable. The 25,000 nonassessable shares were given to Gustavo Madero in payment for the two concessions, federal and state, and for his labors in negotiating the sale of the provisional certificates of the mortgage bonds through the Franco-Spanish Bank of Paris. The other shares were subscribed as follows: Gustavo A. Madero, 3,900; Francisco Madero, sr., 500; Alfonso Madero, 500; and Rafael F. Urbina, 100, 10 per cent being paid in and deposited by the treasurer, Gustavo A. Madero, as declared by him, but in reality the 10 per cent was neither paid in nor deposited.

The Zacatecas State concession guaranteed 5 per cent interest on 18,000 pesos for each kilometer of road constructed, its date being April 7, 1910. In June, 1910, the interest on 26,000 pesos per kilometer constructed was guaranteed and authority given to issue provisional certificates or mortgage bonds of 100 pesos each to the number of 27,000 and later 12,000 additional certificates without other conditions than the subscription of 300,000 pesos for the construction and exploitation of the road.

The provisional certificates were issued and contained the statement that they were guaranteed by mortgage on the road. Of these certificates 27,000 were sold to the Franco-Spanish Bank of Paris at 72½ per cent of their nominal value, the contract being signed in Paris May 24, 1919, by Gustavo A. Madero, representing the Mexico Central Railroad and A. Manigne for the bank. The 12,000 additional certificates were sold to the same bank the following month. In this way the company raised 2,872,500 pesos, which the company obligated itself to the bank to use in building the railroad.

April 21, 1910, Gustavo A. Madero, Primitivo Gil Vega, Francisco Beltram, and Rafael F. Urbina organized a construction company, Gustavo A. Madero being the principal stockholder and supervisor (comisario), and on April 27, 1910, Gustavo A. Medero, as manager of the railroad company, signed a contract with Francisco Beltram, representing the National Construction Co. of Mexico, S. A., for the construction of the road, agreeing to pay the latter company 2,000,000 pesos or 10,000 pesos per kilometer.

The capital of the construction company was never paid in nor even subscribed.

Notwithstanding, Gustavo A. Madero and his father, Francisco Madero, sr., took 700,000 pesos of the funds of the company and used them to promote the revolution of 1910. The father withdrew the money from the Banco de Nuevo Leon and sent it to his son, Gustavo A. Madero. This is their own statement when the asked the Madero government to return the money to them. The federal district court in Monterrey issued a warrant for their arrest for this abstraction, but it could not be, or was not, served because the revolution won with Francisco I. Madero as its head. These 700,000 pesos were returned to them by the government, but only 350,000 pesos were restored to the company, the balance being retained by Gustavo A. Madero as commissions claimed by him.

There was a serious row in the Madero family over the disposition of these 700,000 pesos, and it was not until Ernesto H. Madero, then secretary of the treasury, intervened that the 350,000 pesos were turned over to the company October 8, 1912.

In the meantime, at the beginning of 1911, Gustavo A. Madero made a contract with Carlos A. Carbonneau for half of his interest in the railroad and construction companies and authorized him to proceed with the construction as he, Gustavo A. Madero, was occupied with the revolution. Carbonneau spent 459,280 pesos, how, is not known, except that a large part of this sum was given to Gustavo A. Madero, so that the company is out 1,159,280 pesos.

The organizers and managers of both companies were all members of the Madero family, and no work whatever has ever been done on the road.

Th concessions have passed to Engineer Marcelino Velasco and he has furnished the above data from the books and papers of the company, which is trying to recover the money and also save the concession for the French stockholders.

Long prior to this publication and from the information obtained from the private sources referred to, I became convinced of the truth of at least the statement that Gustavo Madero had obtained and used for revolutionary purposes the sum of something more than 700,000 pesos from the funds of a railroad company, which funds were furnished by certain foreigners. This was the amount, or the approximate amount, which was paid over to Gustavo Madero out of the public treasury during the De La Barra administration, through Ernesto Madero, the secretary of finance, and the amount so paid over to Gustavo Madero was supposed to be for the purpose of replacing in the treasury of this railroad company the amounts which he had taken from such treasury to use in carrying on the revolution.

Many rumors of the facts in this case have been in circulation for a year or more in Mexico, but no detailed statement such as this published in El Paiz has ever been given to the public.

I long since became convinced that while the American oil interests in the United States might not have been at all pleased with the favors shown by the Diaz administration to the Lord Cowdray Oil Syndicate, that yet they had not sufficient confidence in Madero's ability to overthrow the Diaz administration to justify them in advancing money for such purpose, even had they displayed any desire, of which I find no evidence whatsoever, to precipitate the revolution and overthrow Diaz.

My own conviction is that while Americans doubtless looked after their interests in Mexico during the Madero administration, and in doing so possibly conferred favors upon members of the Madero family at times, they did nothing more than to protect and promote their interests in a legitimate way, and that they should be exculpated of the charge that they incited or promoted the revolution against the Diaz government.

I have felt impelled to convey this conviction to the Senate by a sense of official duty to be performed, as well as by a sense of justice to American interests which have been attacked.

I have no method of knowing what the convictions, if any, of the members of the committee are upon this subject, but as I was appointed a member of this investigating committee by the Senate itself and not by the Committee of Foreign Affairs, of which I am not and have not been a member, while regretting that it was not possible for the committee of investigation to make a report of their findings, I have concluded to submit in this informal way my conclusions in the premises.

Respectfully,

ALBERT B. FALL.

[S. J. Res. 127, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

In the Senate of the United States. July 29, 1912. Mr. Fall introduced the following joint resolution; which was read the first and second times and by unanimous consent, considered, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION Authorizing the Secretary of War to supply tents and rations to American citizens compelled to leave Mexico.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be supplied, through the proper military officers at El Paso, Texas, all necessary tents, together with temporary rations, for the care and relief of American citizens who have been compelled to remove and are yet removing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, and who are seeking refuge in El Paso, Texas, and adjacent portions of the United States.

[S. J. Res. 129, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

In the Senate of the United States. August 2, 1912. Mr. Bailey introduced the following joint resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, considered, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION To provide transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to furnish transportation from El Paso, Texas, to such place in the United States as each shall elect, those American citizens fleeing from the Republic of Mexico who are now or who may hereafter be temporarily supplied with shelter and sustenance, in whole or in part, by the Government of the United States in or near El Paso, Texas.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, upon vouchers to be approved by the commander of the United States forces at Fort Bliss, Texas.

[S. J. Res. 138, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

In the Senate of the United States. August 10, 1920. Mr. Smith, of Arizona, introduced the following joint resolution; which was read the first and second times and, by unanimous consent, considered, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION Appropriating the sum of twenty thousand dollars, out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, for subsistence of American citizens now in Arizona feeling from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That out of the money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, providing transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for the subsistence of such American citizens as are now in Arizona, with no home except in the Republic of Mexico and from which they have been driven to the United States.

UNITED STATES—MEXICO—LABOR—THEIR RELATIONS.

(By Samuel Gompers.)

Individuals in the American labor movement who had encountered either Mexican fugitive labor organizers (so-called revolutionists) or who had been forced to see the danger to American workers through the masses of Mexican workers—who, because of their enforced low standards and their lack of information, were the agency by which American employers hoped to club their workers into submission—began to appreciate how closely the problems and welfare of the workers of the two countries were identified.

It was not the fault of the Mexican workers that they were pawns in the hands of employers. It was their lack of opportunity and information. That opportunity came as the result of years of agitation. Many a leader on both sides of the border had battled in vain against organized tyranny and oppression, but there was not an effort that was without influence. Out of it all there came the hope that freedom could be achieved.

THE REVOLUTION.

For years the liberal elements in Mexico were generally united in the Liberal Party, which had for its chief purpose the reestablishment of the constitution of 1857. As that constitution provided rights and opportunities for the people, those who were seeking freedom in all lines were in sympathy with the effort to restore it. Because it had an appeal for the workingmen as well as for other groups of citizens, workingmen, both in the United States and Mexico, gave aid and indorsement to the leaders of the Liberal Party, who were termed revolutionists by the Mexican Government and persecuted as political offenders. Often these men escaped across the border line for refuge.

The Mexican Government did not relinquish its persecution at the border line, but worked out methods whereby it pursued progressive Mexicans even in their political asylum in the United States. They endeavored to secure the extradition of fugitive Mexicans on criminal charges. The Mexican Government retained the services of detective agencies that were to seek out fugitives. When found the fugitives were arrested, put into jail, where they were held until the charges were either dismissed as groundless or evidence could be manufactured. Just as soon as the prison doors opened for these victims they were rearrested upon other trumped-up charges and again confined. Kidnaping was not uncommon.

POSITION OF A. F. OF L.

The persecution of these men aroused the sympathy of the members of the organized labor movement. The Denver, 1908, convention of the A. F. of L. adopted the following resolution:

Whereas Ricardo Flores Magon, Antonio I. Villarreal, Librado Rivera, and other members of the Mexican Liberal Party, were arrested in Los Angeles,

Calif., August 23, 1907, at the instance of the Mexican Government, and have since been detained in prison while extraordinary effort has been made to extradite them; and

Whereas the Mexican Government, as prosecutor, has succeeded in inducing the American authorities to hold them on varying criminal charges, ranging from petty larceny to that of murder; and

Whereas the several charges, in turn and of necessity, have been abandoned when fully refuted by legal testimony, and the one active charge remaining is that of endeavoring to invade Mexico with an armed force, all of which proves by court records that these men are not criminals in any sense—if offenders at all, political offenders only: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the A. F. of L. extends its earnest sympathy to the aforesaid Magón, Villarreal, Rivera, et al., and commends to all affiliated organizations the consideration of proper means for their defense.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 22, 1915.

SIR: In accord with the direction of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, the following is respectfully submitted to you and which we hope will commend itself to your favorable consideration and action.

There has been going on just across our southern boundary a battle which is part of the world-old struggle for freedom. Although that struggle may be associated with many things that are not in accord with our ideals, yet I am sure you recognize that these things are the first crude efforts of a people long accustomed to despotism and denial of the rights of free citizens to realize ideals of freedom. Nations, as well as individuals, as you well know, can not at once assume wisdom in the exercise of freedom. They must learn to be free. They have the right to this freedom without unwarranted outside interference even from those who seek their welfare.

The revolt of the people under the leadership of Madero against the Díaz government was an effort to realize ideals. The support given to the ideals of Madero was a proof that national virility and resourcefulness had not been crushed out by the rule of despotism. It was a proof that there were yet ideals and yearnings for the opportunities that rightfully belonged to citizens under a free government.

Under the Madero government there were beginnings of a labor movement and an effort of the workers to organize for the realization of their ideals and for the betterment of themselves and their fellow-workers. This hope was overshadowed by the barbarism of Huerta, but again grew strong and steady when Carranza asserted himself as the leader of the people.

Gen. Carranza is recognized as the friend of the working people and the real leader of the people generally of Mexico. He has granted to the wage earners the right of organization and has secured them opportunities for carrying out the legitimate purposes of organization. He has been thoroughly in sympathy with the ideals of greater opportunity and freedom of the masses of the people. The working people have been supporting him. They have adjourned as lodges and trade-unions to enlist in the Carranza army, with their union officials serving as the officers of their regiments.

The workers of Mexico have tried as best they could with the resources available to present their request and their right to be allowed to work out their own problems. They asked you and our Government for a little more patience and a little more time to prove that the Carranza government really represented the people of Mexico. You granted that request, and time has proved that Gen. Carranza is really the representative of Mexican democracy—that he represents their efforts to establish a government of the people and for the people. Gen. Carranza has demonstrated his sympathy with the ideals for which Madero gave his life, and has refused to compromise these ideals with Mexican revolutionists who were seeking their own personal interests. He has endeavored to secure for the Mexican Republic the dignity and the respect that ought to be accorded to any sovereign government.

The sympathies of the workers of the United States have been very deeply touched by the struggles of our fellow workers of Mexico. As recent events have drawn all of the countries of the two American continents more closely together, so the workers of these various countries have been more thoroughly aroused to the common interests and the common welfare of the wage earners who are citizens of the countries.

It is with the desire that we Americans, who have so much liberty and so much of opportunity, should use our influence to aid those who are less fortunate, that as representatives of the labor movement of America we urge upon you recognition of Gen. Carranza as the head of the Mexican Government.

The matter, we know, is receiving your most earnest and most conscientious consideration, and we are sure that your sympathies are very strong for any genuine effort to secure larger liberty for the people; therefore we wish you to have the assurance that the course we, as the representatives of the organized labor movement of America, urge upon you has, we are sure, the hearty approval and indorsement of the great rank and file of the citizenship of our country.

Very sincerely, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States,
White House, Washington, D. C.

On October 19, 1915, the United States Government notified the representative of the de facto Mexican Government in the United States that it would be pleased to receive formally in Washington a diplomatic representative of the Constitutionalist Government. The Carranza government was recognized.

MEXICO-UNITED STATES LABOR CONFERENCE.

The concessionaries, the American trusts in Mexico and the foreign capitalists who had invested money there became increasingly disturbed, as the Carranza government continued its program. They were in danger of losing the privileges that they had secured in devious ways. As these foreigners owned 75 per cent of the capital and land of Mexico, they saw no benefit to be secured through indemnities, for indemnities would be the result of taxation of Mexican property, the property to which they claimed title, consequently indemnities meant they themselves must pay.

Then began an effort on a gigantic scale to create "public opinion" for American intervention in Mexico. Nor were these efforts confined to press publicity. President Wilson, in a public statement, declared that interests hostile to international peace were inciting trouble along the border line between Mexico and the United States.

One of the most conspicuous of these efforts was the expedition sent from California into Lower California, Mexico, headed by Mr. Chandler, son-in-law of Gen. Otis, of the Los Angeles Times. Gen. Otis owns about 64,000 acres in Mexico, which was virtually an extension of the great Imperial Valley of California. Gen. Otis, as all the world knows, is actuated by far from idealistic purposes. The conditions connected with this expedition were brought to the attention of the grand jury of California. Indictments followed, and some of the men concerned in the expedition were sentenced to terms in the penitentiary. However, the men who planned the expedition and were to profit by it have so far escaped punishment. This case is known as California v. Chandler, Abilez et al.

When conditions became critical, in the name of the workers of the United States, the president of the American Federation of Labor sent the following letter to the Casa del Obrero Mundial of Mexico:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, 1916.

Secretary CASA DEL OBRERO MUNDIAL,
City of Mexico.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Permit me, on behalf of the American Federation of Labor, to send fraternal greetings to the Casa del Obrero Mundial, to the entire labor movement of Mexico.

The labor movement of North America has seen with what splendid courage organized labor in Mexico has, from the time of the presidency of the late Francisco I. Madero, demanded and obtained recognition for the cause of labor and justice in our sister Republic.

From time to time the American Federation of Labor has received confidential reports from delegates duly accredited by your organization and others who came to Washington in behalf of the Mexican labor movement and the Mexican cause. From these delegates the executive council of the American Federation of Labor has learned how deeply the spirit of international brotherhood has guided all your struggles in Mexico. We learned with intense interest of the historic agreement between the Casa del Obrero Mundial and the Constitutionalist government and signed on behalf of that government by Rafael Zubaran Co.

We have learned with what bravery and determination the Mexican miners in the State of Arizona organized and struck work with their brother Americans of the north and won advancement for themselves and the cause of international solidarity.

All these facts point to the necessity of a still closer understanding between the workers of all the Americas, particularly in this crisis in the world's history. To this end and to propose a practical method of mutual cooperation between organized labor in Mexico and in the United States, I suggest that, at a date to be agreed upon, representatives from the Casa del Obrero Mundial and as many other of the labor organizations in Mexico as possible meet for a conference in El Paso, Tex., with representatives of the American Federation of Labor. Matters for the mutual welfare of the sister Republic could then be discussed and a future cooperative policy outlined.

With you I agree that the future peace of the world rests in the hands of the wage earners, and this is most cogently expressed by the organized-labor movement of each and all countries.

I hope to hear from you as soon as possible as to the actual conditions of the Mexican-labor movement at the present time, and a reply to the suggestion I have made herein.

Faternally, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Copies of this letter were sent to President Wilson and to each member of his Cabinet and to the officers of the constitutionalist Government in Mexico, as well as to a number of governors of Mexican States, who were in a position and who would probably be disposed to give general publicity to the letter among the workers of Mexico.

Within a very short time there came telegraphic response from the labor organizations of Mexico heartily indorsing the holding of a labor conference and suggesting an immediate date. Within brief time came further telegraphic information stating that the labor organizations of Mexico City had elected delegates, who were instructed to proceed at once to the border to hold a conference on June 25. As June 26 was the date that had been set for the meeting of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor in Washington and not sufficient time was allowed for communicating with the workers of Mexico, it was impossible to have a time mutually agreed upon for the conference before these workers started for Eagle Pass, Tex. Immediately upon their arrival in Eagle Pass the delegates telegraphed to Washington. There were 20 representatives of various trade organizations in this delegation. The suggestion was made that the delegates who had come to Eagle Pass should proceed to Washington, which was considered a better place for a conference. In addition to affording an opportunity for the delegates to meet with the executive council of the American Federation of Labor. Conditions on the border were such as to make a labor conference there ill-advised.

The Mexican delegation elected two of their number to come to Washington. They were Luis N. Morones, an electrical worker, of Mexico City, and Mr. Salvador Gonzalez Garcia, a machinist. Both of these workers represented the Casa del Obrero Mundial.

In the meanwhile the Confederacion of Sindicatos Obreros had again sent their labor representative, Edmundo E. Martinez, to the United States and commissioned him to bring to the executive council of the American Federation of Labor a gold medal expressing the appreciation of the Mexican workers for what the American-labor movement had done for them in their struggle for liberty. This medal was formally presented in the conference which the Mexican delegates had with the executive council.

The State of Yucatan now has as governor Salvadore Alvarado, a man who has some understanding of the labor movement and is in sympathy with its needs and purposes and has done much to better conditions in Yucatan. It must be remembered that less than a year ago the workers of Yucatan were peons—slaves. In a brief while the revolution has given them a chance to be freemen, and they have used that freedom as best they could under the circumstances. What they have done at present in the way of industrial organization is perhaps not the ideal thing, but it represents their first efforts to bring about changes in the oppressive conditions that have so long prevailed.

However, democracy can not come in a year, but the people of Yucatan will learn democracy, and will gradually supersede autocracy, whether political or industrial. The governor of Yucatan believed so strongly in organized labor that he commissioned two representatives of the workers to come to the United States bringing an appeal from the workers of Yucatan. This appeal was for the purpose of establishing better relations between organized labor of Yucatan and the United States and all Pan American countries. These two delegates from Yucatan participated in the Mexican conference: They are Baltazar Pages, editor Voice of the Revolution, and Carlos Loveleira, chief of the department of labor. They had credentials signed by the following labor organizations of Yucatan: The Society of Dockers; the Syndicate of Machinists, Blacksmiths, and Boiler Makers; Union of Railway Men of Yucatan; Society of Sailors; Syndicate of Waiters and Assistants of Restaurants and Saloons; Syndicate of Carpenters; Syndicate of Mechanical Electricians; Clerks' Headquarters of Yucatan; Syndicate of Bakers; Syndicate of Molders; Syndicate of Coach Drivers; Mutual Beneficial Society of Truck Drivers; Syndicate of House Tenants.

The representatives of the Casa del Obrero Mundial had credentials from that organization and asserted that they represented 100,000 organized workers.

The purpose of this conference was the consideration of ways and means for the establishment of closer relations between our respective labor movements, in order that there might be better understanding and better cooperation. It was in recognition of the fact that their economic interests were identical and that there must be permanent relationship established between the economic organizations.

All parties to the conference agreed upon the principal of action, that the economic movement is the fundamental agency for the warfare of the workers, and that the economic movement must be made the instrumentality for establishing their freedom and promoting all of their interests.

As a result of the conference held in Washington the following declaration was formulated and signed:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1916.

The undersigned, the E. C. of the A. F. of L., and the representatives of the organized labor movement of Mexico, express our deep gratification in the consummation of this conference, which we hope and believe has laid the basis for better understanding and has welded ties that shall bind together the workers of our respective countries.

We are confident that personal conferences of the workers of the United States and of Mexico will be a constructive force in bringing about understanding necessary for better relations between our countries and for maintaining peace founded upon a proper regard for the rights of all. It is our opinion that this conference should be followed by another, in which the workers of both countries shall be more generally represented, for the purpose of agreeing upon plans for maintaining permanent relations and for the federation of the labor movement of all of the countries of the two Americas.

In view of the present relations between the United States and Mexico, we are of the opinion that such a general conference is for the present untimely, and we express the judgment that the holding of such a conference should be deferred until later in the year. However, in the event of an emergency which would make a general conference of advantage in averting an international crisis, such a conference could and should be called for the earliest time mutually agreeable. To carry this plan into effect, a joint commission shall be chosen, to consist of two members from both labor movements, to remain in Washington until the present crisis is passed, the said joint commission to have the power of calling a general conference if necessary.

We hold this to be fundamental: No relations between our countries can be permanent that are not based upon the will of the masses of the people and in accord with their concepts of justice.

We deem it an essential step toward democracy and justice that there shall be established for the masses who have hitherto been without regular agencies for expressing their views and desires opportunities that will enable them to have a voice in helping to determine international affairs.

The labor movements of the various countries constitute the instrumentalities that can best accomplish this purpose and give expression to national ideas and convictions that have been too long inarticulate and impotent.

We direct that the president of the American Federation of Labor and the official representatives of organized labor of Mexico should keep in touch through correspondence, and that they be authorized to carry out the purposes specified in this declaration.

In joint conference as the representatives of the workers, the masses of our respective countries, we urge upon our Governments to adjust existing differences without war and to establish conditions conducive to permanent peace with justice.

We appeal to the workers and all of the people of the United States and of Mexico to do everything within their power to promote correct understanding of purposes and actions, to prevent friction, to encourage good will, and to promote an intelligent national opinion that ultimately shall direct relations between our countries and shall be a potent humanitarian force in promoting world progress.

It is an unavoidable conclusion that present differences between our countries are the result of misunderstanding growing out of inadequate or incorrect information; that the unfortunate consequences of past relations between the United States and Mexico have formulated a national attitude that questions the good faith of our Governments; that existing agencies and methods of reaching an adjustment of these differences are unsuitable for dealing with those problems which are fundamentally humane problems; and that the relations between our countries ought not to be directed in accord with abstract standards of justice, but ought to be keenly sensitive and responsive to the human interests and moral forces. Therefore, we, the representatives of the organized workers, having the right to speak for all of the workers and in the interests of all of the people, urge upon our Governments the appointment of a commission to be composed of high-minded citizens, fully representative of our nations, to consider differences that have brought our nations to the verge of war, and to make such recommendations for adjustment as shall fitly express the highest ideals of the great rank and file of the citizenship of our two countries.

We direct that copies of this declaration shall be presented to the President of the United States, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, and to the First Chief of the Constitutional Government of Mexico, Gen. Venustiano Carranza, and that it be given the widest publicity among the workers of our respective countries.

For the organized workers of the United States:

Samuel Gompers, President; James Duncan, First Vice President; James O'Connell, Second Vice President; D. A. Hayes, Third Vice President; Joseph F. Valentine, Fourth Vice President; John R. Alpine, Fifth Vice President; H. B. Perham, Sixth Vice President; Frank Duffy, Seventh Vice President; Wm. Green, Eighth Vice President; John B. Lennon, Treasurer; Frank Morrison, Secretary.

For the organized workers of Mexico:

C. Loveira; Baltazar Pages; L. N. Morones; S. Gonzalo Garcia; Edmundo E. Martinez.

LABOR'S EFFORTS TO PREVENT WAR.

While the conference was in progress an actual clash between the American troops in Mexico and the Mexican Army had taken place, in which some American soldiers were killed and some were imprisoned and held in jail. The President of the United States issued an ultimatum demanding the immediate release of the American soldiers. No word was received from the Mexican Government as to their intentions in the matter, public opinion was aroused to fever heat, and it seemed as though war was inevitable.

In this great anxiety an appeal came from the Mexican governmental representatives in this country to the president of the American Federation of Labor, asking him to send a personal appeal to Gen. Carranza for the release of the American soldiers.

On the afternoon of June 28, about half past 2, the following telegram was sent:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 28, 1916.

Gen. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA,
First Chief Constitutional Government,
Mexico City, Mexico:

In the name of common justice and humanity, in the interest of a better understanding between the peoples and the Governments of the United States and Mexico, for the purpose of giving the opportunity to maintain peace and avoid the horrors of war upon the grounds of highest patriotism and love, I appeal to you to release the American soldiers held by your officers in Chihuahua.

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

On the evening of that same day extra papers on the streets announced that Gen. Carranza had just issued an order releasing the American soldiers.

On the following day was received from Gen. Carranza this:

[Telegram.]

MEXICO, June 29, 1916.

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor, Washington:

In replying to your message dated yesterday, I would state that the Government in my charge has ordered the liberty of the American soldiers whom the Mexican forces took as prisoners in Carrizal. Salute, very affectionately.

V. CARRANZA.

The executive council, which was at the time considering Mexican affairs, authorized the sending of the following:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1916.

Gen. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA,
*First Chief Constitutionalist Government,
Mexico City, Mexico:*

Your telegram of June 29 received and laid before executive council of the American Federation of Labor, in session at Washington, and we express to you our appreciation of your order releasing the American soldiers and thus helping to clear the way for a mutually honorable settlement of any differences between the Governments of the United States and of Mexico.

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

RECEIVED JULY 1 1916

STANFORD UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Stanford University Libraries

3 6105 010 209 638

STANFORD UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES
STANFORD AUXILIARY LIBRARY
STANFORD, CALIFORNIA 94305-6004
(415) 723-9201

All books may be recalled after 7 days

DATE DUE

JUN 2 1995
JUN 26 1995

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS

HEARING

BEFORE A

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS UNITED STATES SENATE

SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS

SECOND SESSION

PURSUANT TO

S. Res. 106

DIRECTING THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS TO INVESTIGATE THE MATTER OF OUTRAGES ON CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES IN MEXICO

PART 18

Printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1920

281431

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, Massachusetts, Chairman.

PORTER J. McCUMBER, North Dakota.
WILLIAM E. BORAH, Idaho.
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE, Connecticut.
ALBERT B. FALL, New Mexico.
PHILANDER C. KNOX, Pennsylvania.
WARREN G. HARDING, Ohio.
HIRAM W. JOHNSON, California.
HARRY S. NEW, Indiana.
GEORGE H. MOSES, New Hampshire.

GILBERT H. HITCHCOCK, Nebraska.
JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, Mississippi.
CLAUDE A. SWANSON, Virginia.
ATLEE POMERENE, Ohio.
MARCUS A. SMITH, Arizona.
KEY PITTMAN, Nevada.
JOHN K. SHIELDS, Tennessee.

C. F. REDMOND, Clerk.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

ALBERT B. FALL, Chairman.

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.

MARCUS A. SMITH.

DAN M. JACKSON, Clerk.

281431

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

Testimony taken at Washington, D. C., April 29, 1920, by Francis J. Kearful, Esq., in pursuance of an order of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

TESTIMONY OF MOTHER ELIAS DE STA SACTO.

Mr. KEARFUL. You may give your name.

Mother ELIAS. My name is Mother Elias de Sta Sacto. My family name is Maria Thierry. The Spanish name in the order is Maria Elias del Santissimo Sacramento.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your age?

Mother ELIAS. Forty-one.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your nationality?

Mother ELIAS. Mexican.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are you a member of a religious order?

Mother ELIAS. Carmelite, Discalced Carmelite.

Mr. KEARFUL. Known in English as "Barefooted Carmelite?"

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you connected with that order in Mexico?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir. I was living in the City of Mexico. From there we went to Queretaro.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you there during the time of Porfirio Diaz?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. And later during the time of Madero?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir. I was in the convent when Madero came in. I was already 15 years in the convent.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you there at the time of the revolution of Carranza?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; until six years ago we left.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you have any trouble during the time of Porfirio Diaz or Madero?

Mother ELIAS. During the time of Porfirio Diaz we really did not have any, because his wife was a Catholic, and he did not care. He did not do anything against the Catholics.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you molested during the Madero rule?

Mother ELIAS. No, sir; really not. He only passed through the place where we were. He passed through Queretaro, but he did not trouble us.

Mr. KEARFUL. When did your first troubles begin?

Mother ELIAS. I think in 1914, or 1913. We had to leave the convent, because we were sent away at that time for precaution. We had the sisters there, and I said, "Well, mother, it is better to leave the convent and go in small houses," and when we left the convent, in a few days after that they came and took possession of the convent.

Mr. KEARFUL. You mean the Carranza soldiers?

Mother ELIAS. The Carranza soldiers; yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you know about the reported desecration of churches by the Carranza soldiers at that time?

Mother ELIAS. Well, at that time, I, myself, saw many things they did. We had to go from place to place, in caring for the nuns, to keep them from taking the nuns up in the hills with the soldiers. Of course, we did not want to give up the nuns. We used to move from place to place.

Mr. KEARFUL. You were hiding from the Carranza soldiers; moving from place to place, were you?

Mother ELIAS. Moving from place to place, because they used to come through the roof, instead of entering through the door. I remember I spent 22 nights taking care of the nuns.

Mr. KEARFUL. What have you seen about the desecration of the churches and the holy sacrament?

Mother ELIAS. Well, I have seen several things. In the first place, when they took possession of a city, right away they took the keys of the churches, and they said the Government was the owner of the churches, and that the cities, and the holy communion would belong to the people. As soon as the Carranza soldiers entered the city they seized the keys of the churches, so the priests could not come from the houses and take care of the tabernacles and leave them empty. The soldiers took the ciboria and emptied the contents, which was the sacred Hosts, into the oats for the horses.

Mr. KEARFUL. Please proceed with your story.

Mother ELIAS. Many times the Catholic ladies used to come to me and say, "Mother, would you mind to go out with me? They have emptied the ciboria to give to the horses." I did not believe it. Surely, I could not believe such a thing. But I went with them, and we tried to find out. So I saw them trying to destroy them.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was your purpose in entering?

Mother ELIAS. To save the blessed sacrament from the profanation, you know. Of course, they left them there for profanation; gave them to the horses. We find many cases like that. They would take the vestments and put on the horses' necks, and different profanations like that.

Mr. KEARFUL. You mean they used the sacred vestments for saddle blankets?

Mother ELIAS. Yes; and shot the tabernacles in almost every church.

Mr. KEARFUL. The tabernacle is the receptacle in which the sacred Host is kept?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir. There was no place, no town, where there was not that kind of profanation, in every place, everywhere. Then I saw many times how they burned up the confessional. I was going down to Mexico, and we had to stop many times on the way, and I saw in a church where the blessed sacrament was exposed, and hundreds of men came and shot the ostensoria, and then disappeared.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did they do, if anything, with the chalices and other vessels?

Mother ELIAS. Several times widow women used to come to our door, because they knew we were nuns, and used to bring the chalices there to sell them. Many times they said, "Sister, will you buy a chalice?" I bought it sometimes for 10 cents, because there were places they used to drink from the chalices and the ciboria, and then threw them down in the street.

Mr. KEARFUL. You mean the soldiers stole the chalices from the churches and sold them to people for what they could get?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; and they would drink in them.

Mr. KEARFUL. Then they would be offered to you for sale by women on the street?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; in the house in Mexico we have some chalices that we bought at that time.

Mr. KEARFUL. According to the doctrine of the Catholic Church is it permissible for one other than a Catholic priest to touch the sacred Hosts?

Mother ELIAS. No, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is it considered the worst crime that can be committed by any person who violates those holy things?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; it is sacrilege.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is that the way that the Mexican members of the Catholic Church feel about it?

Mother ELIAS. Well, you know soldiers are so ignorant. They do what they are told to do.

Mr. KEARFUL. I mean apart from the soldiers, the inhabitants of the towns and members of the churches; is that the way they feel about the sacredness of those things?

Mother ELIAS. Of course, everybody thinks that way.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you know about the violation of the sisters, members of the order?

Mother ELIAS. When I was going down to Mexico to get my sisters—my younger sisters, Carmelite nuns—that I divided among their own families—when I was going down to Mexico to advise them how long I had to be absent from them—on the way I met with six or more of women who said they were sisters, and they said, "Have mercy on us." They said they were sisters. They said they spent two years up in the hills with the soldiers, and they did not know where to go; they could not find any convent or place to stay. They said they were about to become mothers. Of course, I did not know whether to believe it or not. I said to them, "Well, you had better go to some place, some maternity house, and pray to God and have more faith, because it is not your own fault." I did not see them any more. But afterward I went to the City of Mexico and saw a big crowd on the Calle de Berlin, in the Colonia Roma. When I saw so many people there I tried to find out what it was, and I saw imitation nuns, sisters, and priests, some of them wearing the sacred vestments. I never could believe they were real priests; but one of the ladies who was there said to me, "Don't you believe them when they say they are priests. They are just trying to make fun. That is the way they slander the priests, because they say the priests do nothing but drink and dance with the nuns."

Mr. KEARFUL. Is that true?

Mother ELIAS. I saw that.

Mr. KEARFUL. I mean is it true that the priests do those things?

Mother ELIAS. Indeed, no. You find in every place all kinds of people, but I can say that we have hundreds and thousands of good priests, very holy and very clever ones. This lady told me they were not good women, but they tried to dress in the sisters' dress to blame the priests.

Mr. KEARFUL. I understand the natural disinclination you would have to relate incidents of this kind, and I will ask you if you wrote a letter addressed to the archbishop of New Orleans, while you were in Habana, Cuba?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. KEARFUL. November 4, 1914?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you write that letter in English or in Spanish?

Mother ELIAS. I wrote it in Spanish.

Mr. KEARFUL. I have here what purports to be a translation in English, and I will read that portion of it and ask you whether the statements in that letter are correct.

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL (reading):

Since Francisco Madero declared war on Porfirio Diaz until the present day we have not had a moment of peace. Following Madero's example many others have arisen, some worse than others, and have attacked on all sides, so that not a single State in the Republic but is the victim of horrible outrages.

The Catholic church is attacked by the revolutionaries. They have closed the temples and prohibited the sacraments to the extent of shooting the priest who dares to hear confession or to administer the sacraments. The confessionals and some images of the saints have been burned in the public squares to the accompaniment of bands of music and impious speeches.

They have profaned the churches, entering them on horseback, smashing the images, treading the relics under foot, throwing the Hosts about the floor and even giving them to the horses to eat with the fodder. In some churches the Carrancistas themselves have pretended to say mass and have seated themselves to hear the confessions of a multitude of people.

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; the place I saw that was in the church of Santo Domingo, in the City of Mexico. I saw that myself.

Mr. KEARFUL (reading):

Dressed as priests they have heard the confessions of sick people and then in derision have revealed what they had heard in the confession.

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL (reading):

All this I have seen with my own eyes. The most beautiful temple in the Republic, the Church of San Antonio in Aguascalientes, has been converted into the legislative hall.

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; that is true.

Mr. KEARFUL (reading):

The Church of San Jose in Queretaro is now a public library.

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL (reading):

Our great convent of the Carmelites in Queretaro they seized and ejected the Christian Brothers who had a beautiful school and who lost over 50,000 pesos which they had spent in alterations, the total loss being over 500,000 pepos. The colleges of the Reverend Jesuit Fathers, and many others, have perished. The property of the church has been seized and some of the ecclesiastical archives have been burned. All the communities of nuns have been expelled from the entire Republic, being given but a half hour to leave and not allowed to take with them a change of clothes, and in many cases not even a breviary to pray. Many sisters have been taken to the barracks and police stations where their vows of chastity were in great danger. The furnishings of the Catholic schools and colleges have been stolen and in them have been planted the mixed lay schools with boys and girls together, from which there may be expected nothing but corruption and evil.

Immorality has increased to such a degree that they have profaned not only virgins but have violated nuns, carrying them away by force where they now suffer horribly.

To the great suffering of my soul I have seen in Mexico the sad and lamentable fate of many sisters who have been victims of the unbridled passions of the soldiers. I found many bewailing their misfortune and that were about to become mothers, some in their own homes, others in maternity hospitals. Others unable to flee from despair have surrendered to a life of evil and, filled with desperation and shame, have complained against God, declaring that He has abandoned them.

I have seen many sisters of different orders, dressed in the latest style, showing themselves on the balconies, losing the little spirituality remaining to them, and singing and playing the piano all day, saying that it is dissimulation to hide the fact that they are nuns for fear that they be carried away by Carranzistas, or Zapatistas, or Villistas, etc. Some priests, deserving of confidence, have told me that in a hospital near the ——— (I will give you the name in confidence) there are 50 sisters that had been seized by the soldiers, of whom 45 are about to become mothers, although they have religious vocations and are bound by vows.

In the ——— in Mexico and in the Hospital de Jesus there are others in the same condition. The Carranzistas deny this, saying that they went with them voluntarily because they were held in the convents by force. In Celaya and in Mexico I have seen others whom they have compelled by force to enlist in the Red Cross, and under this pretext holding them as slaves to serve them as though they were their own women, and if many look after the sick there are also others who have lost their chastity. In general, many young girls, after having been forced to live with them, have been thrown out, and many have been killed in the streets as though they were animals.

Do you remember that you wrote that letter?

Mother ELIAS. I wrote all that.

Mr. KEARFUL. And it is all true?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir. I wrote that when I was in Cuba. When I went back to Mexico they took me prisoner. They took me off of the train, and they said, "Are you the superior of the Carmelite Order?" Of course, I didn't deny it. I said, "I don't know what you mean." I didn't deny it. I didn't say, "I am not," but I said, "I don't know what you mean." They said, "Are you a sister? How many sisters have you?" "I have no sister." Of course, I meant to say my own sister. I was dressed with a dress like a widow. I was taken in a dark room with a novice, and we promised to each other we would not separate from one another. At 2 o'clock in the morning they called me and said, "Now, ladies, it is your last chance. Where is the money?" "What money," I said. They said, "The dowry of the sisters." I said, "I haven't any." "Well, how many sisters have you in your house?" "I haven't any." "Are you the superior of the convent?" "I am not." Because I resigned my office. I was not the superior at that time. They said, "Well, would you like something to save your life?" I said, "I would not do anything. You would make me happy if you kill me, because my husband died long ago." I meant our Lord Jesus Christ. "And sure I want to meet Him."

Well, they didn't know what to do with me, because they could not scare me.

We were left alone without eating anything, and the next day at 12 o'clock in the evening they called again, and said, "Now, ladies, this is your last chance." I said, "I hope it will be for good. Will you please finish now?" He said, "Well, there are some questions." They asked me the same questions about the money and the sisters, and I repeated over what I said before. Then they called the soldiers around me with their guns and told us to knell down, and we knelt down. The novice was so scared, and I said, "Make up your mind to die. What is the use to get scared? It is better to die now than to be like the other sisters," because we knew that some sisters were in the same place. The same questions were asked, and I gave the same answers. So the men shot like they would kill me. I was scared, but I didn't die.

The next day they called me again, the same questions, and the same answers. Then an Indian came to me and said, "Little sister, do you want to be free?" I said, "Why do you call me sister?" He said, "You have a mark on your forehead like every sister has, and you can't deny that you are a sister." Well, I didn't say anything more. He said, "Do you want to be free to-day?" I said, "I don't believe you. I don't trust anybody." He said, "I will open the door for you if you will give me some money." I said, "I have no money to give you." I had in my clothing about $1,400 to bring the sisters, to pay the expense of the sisters to bring them to the United States. So he opened the door for me, and we left.

Another Indian offered me a horse in order to run away. Well, I never did ride a horse, but I had to learn it that day. And then it started to rain so hard we could not see the way any more, but at last we reached the railroad, and we went into the City of Mexico about 3 o'clock in the morning. That was the last thing happened to me.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was before you went to Habana?

Mother ELIAS. After.

Mr. KEARFUL. After you wrote this letter in Habana?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. You returned then to Mexico with money to bring the other sisters out?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you successful in getting them out?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; I got all of them.

Mr. KEARFUL. Where are they now?

Mother ELIAS. In Grand Rapids, Mich. We have a house there.

Mr. KEARFUL. They have not returned to Mexico?

Mother ELIAS. I had to send four about two months ago, because they got consumption in that place, because they came from a very hot place, and on account of the cold they got consumption, and we sent four to Mexico. They are in a secure place.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are they in hiding?

Mother ELIAS. No, sir; they have a convent and a church. Right now they don't do anything. They are afraid. There is a funny thing that this morning I was telling to Monseigneur Kelley. The Indians are so simple and so ignorant.

The people was on the outside would scream, and they would say, "Kill the clergy." And the Indians said to kill them. Then they would say, "Kill the priests." The Indians said, "No, no; don't kill them." They are so ignorant, you know. They said, "Kill the clergy," but they would not say, "Kill the priests."

Mr. KEARFUL. The idea being that they were in favor of the cry "Death to the clergy"?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. But not "Death to the priests"?

Mother ELIAS. No, sir; not to the priests.

Mr. KEARFUL. They did not know what "clergy" means?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; that is it. I remember when Francisco Madero was in the City of Mexico, in order to please the people he brought thousands of pictures of our Lady of Guadalupe, and made the soldiers wear them on their hat in front, so the people would believe in them. They were taught to persecute the rich. Once when I was passing by I saw one of them trying to break a frame of our Lady of Guadalupe, because it was gold. I said to him, "Man, what are you doing?" He put it on the floor and stepped on it. I said to him, "What are you doing?" He said, "Well, I am trying to kill this lady." I said, "Don't you have that lady on your hat?" He said, "Yes; but that one is poor and this one is rich. I am going to kill this one." They deceived the poor Indians, because they could not speak the Spanish language well. They speak the Mexican or Indian language. There is only a few words they can say. That is what they mean, to kill all the rich. That is why they do that way.

Mr. KEARFUL. That is what they are taught, to kill the rich?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; to kill and persecute the rich.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you consider it safe for you to return to Mexico now?

Mother ELIAS. I have been to Mexico twice, because I disguised myself in different ways, so I am not afraid.

Mr. KEARFUL. Would you feel secure to go there openly, without disguise?

Mother ELIAS. No, sir; we can not. We have to disguise ourselves before crossing the river. I never take the habit. I put another dress on. That is the way we do. Six weeks ago I was coming from Mexico on the train with another dress on. Archbishop Orozco was on the train, and there was about 3,000 people clapping their hands and saying, "Viva Archbishop," and the Carranzistas were on the train. They didn't pay any attention. They couldn't do anything with the people. The people mean to be Catholic. They could not do anything.

My fear is this, that when the priests and archbishops are back in their places, they will have the houses burned again, and they will take them prisoner again and sell them as they used to do, because they many times sold them for a hundred thousand pesos.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you mean by their being sold?

Mother ELIAS. They took them prisoner and would offer to deliver them for many thousand pesos.

Mr. KEARFUL. You mean they were holding the priests for ransom?

Mother ELIAS. Yes, sir; for many thousand pesos in order to gain their release.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that after the nuns and sisters have reestablished themselves there that they are likely to have the same troubles that they had before?

Mother ELIAS. I am sure they will have them again, because they have no schools now, only the public schools, and the revolution has been going on 10 years. What will become of the boys who were then 10 years old, who now are men of 20 years? They will get worse and worse. That is what I think.

Mr. KEARFUL. Will you please explain more fully how the priests were held and money was extracted from them, and how the money was secured?

Mother ELIAS. I was in Zacatecas, when I came in contact with a lady who was my friend, and was a sister of one of the priests. She said, "What do you think? My brother is in prison to-day, and he is an old man of 65 years, and he has got to go to-day and beg for 100,000 pesos, otherwise he will be killed. He will be killed this afternoon, together with 14 other priests." They were sent out to beg, and about 5 o'clock they came back with 20,000. The men said, "It is not enough. Go and beg again." They had to go and beg again. They came back about 8 o'clock with some more money. That was not enough. They told them to go and beg again. The rest I do not know anything about, because I had to take my train to leave, but I heard that much.

Mr. KEARFUL. I believe that is all I wish to ask you. I am very much obliged to you.

AFTER RECESS.

At the expiration of the recess the following further proceedings were had:

TESTIMONY OF FRANCIS P. JOYCE.

(The witness was duly sworn by Mr. Kearful.)

Mr. KEARFUL. You may state your name.

Father JOYCE. Francis P. Joyce.

Mr. KEARFUL. And your occupation?

Father JOYCE. Chaplain, United States Army.

Mr. KEARFUL. To what church do you belong?

Father JOYCE. The Catholic Church, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you chaplain in the Army with the American troops when they landed at Vera Cruz in 1914?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you have occasion at that time to learn anything about the treatment accorded the priests and nuns and sisters in Mexico by the Carranza army?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Will you please relate that?

Father JOYCE. Sir, at Vera Cruz, during the summer of 1914 and immediately after the abdication of Huerta, there were between 600 and 700 sisters, refugees, in Vera Cruz, some clothed in the habit of the religious order, others in various disguises. I sent cablegrams to the cardinals, to the board of archbishops, to the Federation of Catholic Societies, to the Church Extension Society, and to Mr. Flaherty, of the Knights of Columbus, asking that aid and transportation be furnished to religious people who were then refugees in Vera Cruz. Besides the sisters there were many priests who were refugees also. These men were working in various places. Some were waiting upon tables at restaurants, others were working on the docks, all trying to earn enough money to get out of the country. There were also seven bishops and archbishops in Vera Cruz at that time.

When the church authorities in the United States received my telegram, I understood that they wired Mr. Tumulty, Secretary to the President, to know if my reports about the condition of these people were true, and that Mr. Tumulty informed them that there was nothing on record in the State Department that such a condition as I reported existed. Father Kelley, of the Church Extension Society, now monseigneur, wired me to prove my reports by getting affidavits from these women relative to church persecutions inaugurated by Carranza and Pancho Villa. Many of these women, although they had been outraged, were timid to sign their names to any history of any excesses committed by the revolutionists. There were no notaries public who could take the affidavits, but through the assistance of a military judge advocate, Lieut. Prosser, still in the service, we obtained affidavits from a great number of these religious women, and I sent them to Father Kelley, of the Church Extension Society, who published a good many of them, I afterwards learned.

Father Kelley was the only one who gave any assistance financially to these people in Vera Cruz, when he sent down $800. Mr. Flaherty cabled me that my reports were not believed, and, if true, to give name and history of every priest, sister, and bishop refugee in Vera Cruz. I wired back that the American forces were about to leave Vera Cruz; that many of these people had been scattered and lost track of; that I was not a census taker; that it was too late to do anything.

During this time I called on Mr. Silliman, personal representative of President Wilson to Carranza. I visited him in the office of Consul Canada, and asked that he take it up with the State Department and obtain a boat to ship these people out of the country. He said, "On what grounds?" I said to him, "If not on the grounds of religion, at least on the ground of humanity. These are women. The priests are men and will have to make shift for themselves." He then stood up and said, "It is generally admitted by everybody that the worst thing in Mexico, next to prostitution, is the Catholic Church, and both must go." To prevent a fight I was hustled out of the consul's office, and reprimanded in a military way for some words I had with Mr. Silliman.

During this time the poor regular soldiers organized a Holy Name Society whose object was through that organization to secure contributions from the forces then occupying Vera Cruz on each successive pay day to help defray expenses for shipping out as many sisters as possible.

Previous to the departure of the American troops the family of Senora Saturni, on the Calle Cincode Mayo, offered gold to an American Army officer to marry her beautiful daughter, in the hope that as the wife of an American officer she could secure safe conduct out of Vera Cruz.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was that daughter one of the women who had been outraged?

Father JOYCE. No, sir. She was said to be the most beautiful woman in the State of Vera Cruz. When that marriage did not materialize, I afterwards learned that when Candido Aguilar came into Vera Cruz as military governor he kidnapped this girl, and afterwards married the daughter of Gen. Carranza.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did Silliman take any steps to give any assistance to these refugees?

Father JOYCE. No, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he make any representations to the Washington Government in that respect?

Father JOYCE. Not that I know of, sir. Consul Canada tried to help them, I understood at that time, but was unable to do much.

Mr. KEARFUL. You say there were refugees in Vera Cruz. What was the reason for their taking refuge at that particular place?

Father JOYCE. Because the Americans were there.

Mr. KEARFUL. Where did these refugees come from?

Father JOYCE. From various parts of Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. What story did they relate as to the treatment they had received from the Carranza Government?

Father JOYCE. That some of them had become mothers; that others were about to become mothers; that many of them were diseased.

Mr. KEARFUL. From your observation of them at that time you believe that those statements were true?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. You have no doubt of it?

Father JOYCE. No, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the attitude of Gen. Funston and his staff with respect to these refugees?

Father JOYCE. Sympathetic, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he do anything to help you?

Father JOYCE. No, sir. He told me that he was unable to get any permission from the State Department to secure a boat.

Mr. KEARFUL. It has been stated that Gen. Funston deliberately delayed his departure from Vera Cruz in order that some of these refugees might have an opportunity to get away. Do you know whether that is true or not?

Father JOYCE. I do not, sir. The big mistake was made when our Government failed to recognize Huerta, who was the hope of Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. What knowledge have you of Mexico, besides that which you gained as chaplain at Vera Cruz?

Father JOYCE. I was with the Pershing expedition, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know Mexico in any way apart from those two experiences?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir; previous to that, but that was a long time ago.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was in the time of Porfirio Diaz, was it?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. What were you doing in Mexico then?

Father JOYCE. I was sort of prospecting, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. For minerals?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. About what time was that; what year or years?

Father JOYCE. In 1904.

Mr. KEARFUL. What were the conditions of the country as to security of life and property and travel throughout the country at that time?

Father JOYCE. At that time it was all right, the little I saw of it.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was it later?

Father JOYCE. As a man in vaudeville lately said, it turned out to be no longer a country, but a sort of shooting gallery.

Mr. KEARFUL. Why did you say the great mistake was made when this Government failed to recognize Gen. Huerta?

Father JOYCE. Because I knew Huerta and was his confessor. He was, I believe, the ablest soldier Mexico ever produced. He was scholarly, was an engineer, and for years had been in the mining-contracting business. He was a Catholic in a Catholic country, and a man I learned to esteem highly. His wife was my idea of what the Madonna might be like. She was a daily communicant, and, after his death suffered intensely, and is now, I understand, in poverty and ill health in Habana.

Mr. KEARFUL. Many statements have been made in this country attacking the moral character of Huerta. What can you say about that?

Father JOYCE. As far as I know, sir, like the charge that he killed Madero, much is untrue.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you think about the charge that he killed Madero?

Father JOYCE. I think Huerta was innocent of the charge.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you remember the circumstance of Huerta's return to this country from Spain?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you meet him here after his return?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir. He was put in arrest in El Paso.

Mr. KEARFUL. What kind of treatment did he receive from the American authorities on that occasion?

Father JOYCE. Very discourteous treatment, to say the least. He was thrown into the common jail, with negroes, drunks, and disorderly people, and left there, I think, over five days, at El Paso.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the charge against him?

Father JOYCE. As far as I could understand, he was charged with an attempted breach of neutrality.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was done with him afterwards?

Father JOYCE. He was afterwards put under $38,000 bond, which his wife furnished, a cash bond, and was sent out under guard of five civilian secret-service men to Fort Bliss. His prison there was cold and he became sick. I then wired the Department of Justice that he had a bad cold and was a pretty sick man, and I feared he would get pneumonia and die where he was. I asked that he be permitted to go down town and have the care of his family at the home which his wife had rented for herself and children on Stanton Street. That permission was granted. A few nights later Huerta sent for me and told me that a Mr. Dubose, whose office was in the Federal building, had visited him and said that he wanted $5,000 or he would have Huerta returned to the prison at Fort Bliss.

Mr. KEARFUL. Who was Dubose?

Father JOYCE. Dubose, I think, was chief of the civilian secret service in that district at that time.

Mr. KEARFUL. That secret service was under the Department of Justice, was it?

Father JOYCE. I think so. I told Huerta that Dubose could not do that, and Huerta said, "I don't want to be sent back to that place, but I haven't $5,000 to give him."

Mr. KEARFUL. You did not believe that Dubose would do such a thing?

Father JOYCE. No, sir. The next night Huerta sent for me again and said Dubose had again sent word that his price had been raised to $8,000, and if the money was not handed him the following day by 5 o'clock, he would send Huerta back to the prison at Fort Bliss. Again I told Huerta they were just teasing him, and was surprised the next evening to learn that Huerta had been sent back to Fort Bliss. I visited him there and told one of his guards, a civilian secret service man, to call up Dubose and have Huerta moved back to his home, where his wife could give him some care, otherwise I would endeavor to bring up charges for extortion against Dubose. Huerta was immediately returned to his home.

Some nights later his wife sent for me and said that she believed he was dying. She said the previous night at a late hour a man who spoke excellent Spanish and had whiskers, who said he was a physician and a great admirer of Huerta, visited him, examined him, and told him unless he underwent an operation immediately he would be dead in 24 hours. He alarmed Mrs. Huerta so much that she consented with Huerta to the operation. He said he had no anesthetic, and made some abdominal incisions in Huerta without administering any anesthetics. I went back to Fort Bliss and asked two medical officers, Maj. McAndrew and Dr. Norman, to come with me to see Huerta. That was the night after the operation. They examined him and said that the operation had been unnecessary; that if it had been sewed up immediately afterward, he would have lived, but now complications had set in and they gave him two days to live.

Mr. KEARFUL. How long did he live?

Father JOYCE. About three days after the operation, sir. The last he said was, "Help my wife to recover our properties in Mexico, and if she wins, remember that everything is for the poor." The bond that he was under has been lost to her.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the amount of that?

Father JOYCE. Of the $38,000 which she deposited Lee, Thomason & McGrady, a firm of attorneys in El Paso, pretended that $7,500 of it was theirs; Hosea Hattner, now in New York City, whom the banks considered a bona fide agent of the widow, secured $17,400; and the remainder, around $13,000, was lost in favor of the Government of the United States.

Mr. KEARFUL. What became of Mrs. Huerta?

Father JOYCE. She, with the children, is in Havana, destitute, ill, and broken hearted. She thinks that they have been maliciously persecuted, unjustly.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think she is correct in that?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Who do you think is responsible for it?

Father JOYCE. As a soldier, sir, I don't know.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you meet John Lind in Vera Cruz?

Father JOYCE. I may have met him. I met so many there, I can not remember.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you learn the opinion of people in Vera Cruz as to what the attitude of John Lind was toward the Catholic Church in Mexico?

Father JOYCE. The story was, sir, that John Lind said, "The thing wrong with Mexico is the Catholic Church, and they should keep the Catholic schools and the Catholic churches closed for a generation and they will be rid of the church in Mexico."

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you have any conversation directly with John Lind, that you remember?

Father JOYCE. I have forgotten, sir. It has been a long time ago.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you think personally about the charge that the Catholic Church is responsible for the ills of Mexico?

Father JOYCE. Nearly 70 years ago the Catholic Church was despoiled by Juarez in various parts of Mexico. Sisters were forbidden to wear their garb in public. It was forbidden to hold Catholic services in the open air. It was likewise forbidden for priests to wear any sort of religious garb in public. The mysterious hatred that crucified Christ, that persecuted the martyrs in the arena, that same hatred followed and still follows the Catholic Church in Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. You know something about the so-called reform laws instituted under the rule of Juarez, do you?

Father JOYCE. No, sir; not much.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your understanding in regard to the extent of the political influence that has been exerted by the church since the time of Juarez?

Father JOYCE. They have a Catholic party in Mexico, but I understood that it was not powerful. I don't know much about it.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that the priests and other dignitaries of the church in Mexico have oppressed and mistreated the Mexican peons?

Father JOYCE. I do not think so. Not to my knowledge. Rather, it was the one influence for good left in Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. Another question about those refugees. Did they finally escape from Mexico?

Father JOYCE. When the Americans evacuated Vera Cruz, I understood that more than 400 of the sisters were left behind. Afterward I was told that Carranza and Villa's army tried to have one prostitute to every four soldiers, and that many of these sisters were impressed as camp followers for Carranza's army.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know Mother Elias, who testified yesterday? Did you meet her?

Father JOYCE. I don't remember, sir. I met a good many.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the necessity to solicit funds for the benefit of these people?

Father JOYCE. To feed them and to pay their expenses on the ship. But the Catholic Church authorities failed to give the necessary assistance when it was most needed. Outside of $800 that Father Kelley sent, we received no other money, and there was no fund in the Catholic Church on which we could draw to pay these expenses.

Mr. KEARFUL. The Catholic Church in Mexico has been reputed to be quite wealthy. Did they not have enough money for those purposes?

Father JOYCE. It was not wealthy. I had to pay out of my own pocket transportation for the Bishop of Sinaloa and his two elderly sisters. The church was poor, I understood, ever since the days of Juarez. Bishop Valdespino, of Aguascalientes, was destitute in Vera Cruz, without a cent in his pocket. The Bishop of San Luis Potosi, whom I assisted to Vera Cruz, got to Habana, and was robbed there of the few pesos in his possession. Had the Knights of Columbus been organized at that time, as they now are, in welfare work, they might have succeeded in accomplishing much that was left undone at that time.

Mr. KEARFUL. You had your ordinary duties as chaplain to perform yourself at that time?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. You could not devote your time exclusively to that work?

Father JOYCE. I did all I could, sir. We obtained rations from the Red Cross for many of the sisters, took up collections from the soldiers, and bought supplies for them. In one adobe building we had 30 Army cots furnished by Gen. Funston, but there were more refugees there than we could get cots to supply, and they had to take turns sleeping on the same cot.

Mr. KEARFUL. What were the accounts given by these refugees as to the desecration of churches and the use of sacred things in churches by the Carranza soldiers?

Father JOYCE. That Carranza at his banquet board supplied each guest with a chalice for a wine cup; that vestments were used as saddlecloths by the revolutionists; that churches were used for dance halls and barracks; that statues were taken down from their high places and nude women put there; that tabernacles were shot open and the sacred Hosts trampled upon; and that the furnishings of gold and silver and jewelry were stolen; that men were shot for no other reason than that they were Catholics; that it was commonly reported at the time that Huerta was told if he would renounce his Catholic faith his government would be unmolested.

Mr. KEARFUL. When you were in Vera Cruz do you remember in particular a certain train coming into Vera Cruz loaded with sisters and what happened to the train?

Father JOYCE. Many times sisters were taken off the trains and never reached Vera Cruz. I remember receiving a telegram from the mother superior of the Good Shepherd Sisters, at St. Louis, asking me to meet and safely conduct eight American sisters of the Good Shepherd Order through Vera Cruz. I met the train frequently, but the sisters never arrived.

Mr. KEARFUL. You say these were American sisters?

Father JOYCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Citizens of the United States?

Father JOYCE. I suppose they were, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were there among the refugees that went through Vera Cruz any Americans?

Father JOYCE. A good many Americans, mining men, oil men.

Mr. KEARFUL. I mean among the priests and sisters?

Father JOYCE. Oh, were there many Americans?

Mr. KEARFUL. Were there any Americans?

Father JOYCE. Oh, I don't remember, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. They appeared to you to be Mexicans, as a rule, did they?

Father JOYCE. A good many of them spoke English. I don't know what nationality they were. I suppose they were various nationalities.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is there anything that occurs to you along the line of my questions that have been asked that you would care to state?

Father JOYCE. No, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Then I thank you.

(Whereupon, at 3.45 p. m., the committee adjourned, to meet again on Saturday, May 1, 1920, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

Testimony taken at Washington, D. C., May 1, 1920, by Francis J. Kearful, Esq., in pursuance of an order of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

TESTIMONY OF FRANCIS C. KELLEY.

(The witness was duly sworn by Mr. Kearful.)

Mr. KEARFUL. Please state your name.

Monsignor KELLEY. Francis C. Kelley.

Mr. KEARFUL. And your place of residence?

Monsignor KELLEY. Wilmette, Ill.

Mr. KEARFUL. Please give your office address.

Monsignor KELLEY. One hundred and eighty North Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your profession?

Monsignor KELLEY. Clergyman and journalist.

Mr. KEARFUL. To what church do you belong?

Monsignor KELLEY. Catholic.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your official position with the Catholic Church?

Monsignor KELLEY. President of the Catholic Church Extension Society of the United States of America.

Mr. KEARFUL. What title do you have?

Monsignor KELLEY. Prothonotary Apostolic to His Holiness. The common title is monsignor.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is and has been your connection with the Mexican situation?

Monsignor KELLEY. My first connection with the Mexican situation was in relief work for the exiled clergy, who began to come out of Mexico a short time after the beginning of the Carranza revolution. I started to collect a fund for the purpose of helping these exiles, and succeeded in getting together about $75,000 collected from all parts of the United States. That money was used to clothe and feed these exiles, send them to their destination in the United States, and take out a number of the seminarians, who were studying for the priesthood, from the seminaries that had been closed or destroyed; and later for establishing a theological seminary in the United States, where they might continue their education. That seminary was continued for about three years. We staffed it by using the exiled professors who were driven out of the religious colleges and schools of Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you give the date of the beginning of these activities of yours?

Monsignor KELLEY. No; because it is a long time ago and I do not know the exact date. I said about the time of the beginning of the Carranza revolution.

Mr. KEARFUL. Very well.

Monsignor KELLEY. About 100 of these students were received into the seminary, which was located at Castroville, Tex., and as a consequence about 100 hundred Mexican clergymen to-day are working in Mexico who have graduated from that American institution.

I then took up the work of trying to inform the American people of the truth about church conditions in Mexico, and acted also in some matters as the representative of the exiled Mexican bishops. The first part of my work brought me into contact with public men in an effort to have them understand that all the church in Mexico wanted was liberty of conscience as it exists in the United States, the general feeling being that the church in Mexico wanted special concessions; there being also a general idea that Mexico had had a union of church and state. That about covers the field.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did you find to be the condition of those you referred to as the refugee clergy during the Carranza revolution?

Monsignor KELLEY. Practically every one of these priests and religious people came into the United States quite penniless, some of them in rags and tatters. The archbishop of one of the greatest sees in America, which happened to be in Mexico, came across the northern desert disguised and dressed as a peon. Some of the bishops came in wearing mustaches, which is a perfect disguise for a bishop. Some of them were in such a condition that when they arrived in San Antonio their own schoolmates and college friends were unable to recognize them. Two archbishops who were very close friends were talking to one another quite a while in San Antonio before they knew one another, they were in such a miserable condition.

In spite of the reports that these men were rich I had to go to a wholesale store in San Antonio, and later to a wholesale establishment in Habana, and buy clothing, complete outfits for a great number of them. In fact, most of the money in the beginning was spent for clothing. Later on we arranged so that each of the exiled priests would have enough money to pay his board, with a few dollars a month extra for his little wants, and while they were here they depended absolutely on the money that was given to them regularly from Chicago.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you make an investigation of the reasons why they were exiled from Mexico, and if so, what was the result of it?

Monsignor KELLEY. Many of these men were driven out of Mexico by force. Some of them had come out voluntarily, but they had left Mexico, not because they wanted to leave, or in order to avoid persecution, but simply because they were being used to extort money from the people. For example, a certain archbishop—indeed, two or three archbishops—were sent from door to door, with soldiers beside them, to tell the people that they were going to be executed unless they raised a very great amount of money. When the revolutionary authorities believed they had raised all they possibly could, they were sent out of that town and word was dispatched to the next large place to look out for them. On arriving at that place they would be rearrested, again fined a large amount of money, and sent out with soldiers to collect. That was a common practice, and after it had been done two or three times the archbishops decided to leave, because they did not want the poor people robbed out of pity for their chief pastors and to save their lives.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did you learn about the persecution of the sisters and nuns in Mexico?

Monsignor KELLEY. There were very few nuns who came to the United States. I never knew the reason for that until I heard Capt. Joyce's testimony yesterday, though I suspected that they were scattered around Mexico. A few communities like that of the Carmelite Sisters, of which Mother Elias was the head, came to the United States and received some help from us. Two or three communities settled down and opened schools or other institutions in the southwest. The Carmelites came north, and though they were absolutely penniless, Mother Elias succeeded in securing a foundation at Grand Rapids, Mich., where a house was given through the charity of the bishop and priests. Her community has prospered and she has now a number of American sisters and is opening a new house in Buffalo. Most of the other sisters, I understand, are teaching.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did you learn in reference to the financial condition of the refugees who passed through Vera Cruz, and the efforts of Capt. Joyce to assist them?

Monsignor KELLEY. When I got word from Capt. Joyce of the number of priests and sisters at Vera Cruz, I started from Galveston to go there, to get a boat for that part of Mexico, but I received a telegram, I think from Capt. Joyce himself, telling me that the refugees were leaving and that I would probably find them in Habana. I went to Habana and found those who came out of Yucatan, and who had been expelled by Gen. Salvador Alvarado, who closed, I understand, every church in Yucatan.

The refugees from Vera Cruz, however, went for the most part to the United States. I began to meet them in New Orleans on my return from Habana. The first one I met was the bishop of Campeche. He was penniless, and I gave him assistance right on the street. I met a number after that. There were over 100 of these refugees, if my memory serves me right, and I do not think there was an average of $3 apiece among them.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you learn what assistance they received in Vera Cruz?

Monsignor KELLEY. At Vera Cruz Capt. Joyce interested himself in them. I inquired about his work there, and was informed that he had spent all the money he had and had gone into debt to take care especially of the poor nuns. I understood that the American Army officers gave them cots, that some of the clergy slept on the balcony of some public building. I also learned that Gen. Funston was particularly kind. But everything depended upon Capt. Joyce. In fact, the money which he mentioned my having contributed was really returning what he himself had either spent or had borrowed. Although we were organized for Mexican relief at that time, we knew nothing about conditions at Vera Cruz until we got the telegrams from Capt. Joyce, and as he was the only American priest on the ground, it was up to him to do the best he could, which he certainly did.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you know about the vicissitudes of Mother Elias, who testified the other day, and as to her financial condition and as to those under her charge.

Monsignor KELLEY. I met Mother Elias in Habana. She told me the same story that she told under oath the day before yesterday to this committee. She was in a Carmelite convent in Habana, where the sisters gave her shelter. She had one companion with her. I do not know if there were any others, but I do not think there were. The sisters of her community in Mexico were scattered. She wanted to go back to get them. I remember trying to dissuade her from making the attempt, but it was quite useless. She had no money and she would be arrested and expelled on sight in Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. If recognized?

Monsignor KELLEY. If recognized; yes. I did not know that she had actually been arrested until I heard her testimony here. It is true that I gave her the money to go back to get her sisters. I did so with some misgivings, because I feared for herself if she returned to Mexico, but at the same time I felt it my duty to rescue the sisters if I could. Mother Elias was a very brave woman, and her successful foundations in the United States are very well deserved.

Mr. KEARFUL. Does she or her institutions have any endowment?

Monsignor KELLEY. No endowment of any kind.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have they any money on deposit or property that they can resort to?

Monsignor KELLEY. No; not a cent.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did they have in Mexico?

Monsignor KELLEY. Whatever they had in Mexico, of course, was taken from them. Religious orders in Mexico are not supposed to have property. In fact, religious orders are not supposed to exist, so that the Carmelites can have no property in Mexico. I understand that Mother Elias has a house rented there for four of her sisters who could not stand the rigors of the northern climate and became consumptive. She sent them back to Mexico, and as a consequence of that and other sicknesses she is about $3,000 in debt.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are you prepared to give the committee the benefit of your investigation and knowledge with reference to the basic causes of the troubles in Mexico?

Monsignor KELLEY. My judgment as to the basic causes of the Mexican trouble will perhaps be a surprise to you. Most people claim that the cause of revolution in Mexico is either social or economic.

It is my judgment, based on a study of Mexican history and the information that I have received from learned men from Mexico, that the seat of Mexico's difficulty is anticlericalism, which has resulted in a denial to the people of liberty of conscience. There has been no liberty of conscience in Mexico since the constitution of 1857, and particularly the laws of reform. For the constitution, I understand Juarez was responsible; for the laws of reform, Lerdo.

The reason that I believe anticlericalism is at the root of Mexico's difficulties is because of the dissatisfaction of the people, who have been deprived of their religious rights. Mexico is only a democracy and a republic in name. The only honest election I ever heard of in Mexico was the one at which Francisco Madero was the successful candidate for the presidency, and even in that election the Catholic candidate for vice president was arbitrarily set aside, although he had received a large majority of the votes.

Now, in a democracy religious liberty is a necessity. In a letter written to me by Mr. Bryan, on March 20, 1915, on the Mexican situation, a letter which I was told was really dictated, if not written, by the President himself, I find these words:

Above and beyond all, the full flower of democracy lies religious freedom, the principle which the builders of our own republic made the crown of the whole structure. To this freedom political freedom has seemed, at many of the most important crises of history, to be only the handmaiden and servant.

That is the American view. The constitution of 1857 and the laws of reform, diametrically opposed religious liberty, suppressing religious institutions, closing religious schools, taking away even the liberty of men and women to wear a religious dress, forbidding all religious services of every kind outside of churches. It descended to such pettiness that even bishops have been arrested for laying a cornerstone, and a Protestant American railroad man in Monterrey told me that a bishop there was arrested by Gov. Reyes for presiding at a Christmas tree festival for poor children which the American had arranged at his own expense. It appears that the bishop had worn his house cassock and his sectoral cross. It would take a long time to go into the consequences of this, but as a detail I may mention that it would be against the constitution of 1857 and the laws of reform to hold religious services in graveyards, and therefore, unconstitutional for a clergyman of any denomination to wear any distinct garb, or even in his street clothes, to carry out a burial service. Of course, the Salvation Army would have no chance whatever for a street service in Mexico, if the constitution were enforced. Clergymen are even barred from all public institutions, thus depriving inmates of hospitals, asylums, barracks, and other such places, of the consolation of religion when sick or dying. Only people of wealth and influence could procure access to even sick for the clergy.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is the religious sentiment of the mass of the people in Mexico? Is it Roman Catholic?

Monsignor KELLEY. Luis Cabrera, who is no friend of the church, stated himself that practically all of the people were Catholics.

Mr. KEARFUL. In view of that fact, how do you account for the persecution of the church, beginning, as you say, with the constitution of 1857 and the so-called laws of reform?

Monsignor KELLEY. The first reason for the persecution of the church in Mexico was because of the adoption, by the politicians of Mexico chiefly, of the principles of the French Revolution.

That revolution had its effect in every Latin country. It was decidedly antireligious, and as the Catholic Church was the only church they knew anything about its sympathizers vented their hatred on her. Then the difficulty was helped along by a misunderstanding on the part, first of Juarez, and later of other upholders of the succeeding revolutions, as to the attitude of the people of the United States. They looked upon the American Republic as a consequence, not so much of the desire of the people for freedom from Great Britain, as of the ideas of the French revolution. They believed that the same principles were at the bottom of it, as of the outbreak in France. They thought that America was a Protestant country, and that Protestants hated Catholics. They supposed that anything they could do against the Catholic Church, even to the extent of murdering the priests and outraging the nuns, would gain sympathy for them in the United States. The fact that the United States did help Juarez seemed to confirm the so-called Liberals of Mexico in their error. As a matter of fact every time there has been an anticlerical outbreak, some people in the United States have always been careful to keep the rioters fed up with that idea. For example, a court of the Guardians of Liberty down on the Texan border passed a wonderful series of resolutions commending Gen. Villa because of what he had done in the way of torturing priests and nuns. Later on the general justified their confidence in him by invading the United States and proceeding to enlarge on his assassinations so as to include American soldiers.

Mr. KEARFUL. What motive, if you know, politically or historically was behind the hatred that you speak of against the church on the part of politicians in Mexico?

Monsignor KELLEY. I am glad that you said "politicians." The people of Mexico do not hate the church. They love the church. The Mexican people attend church as well as any people in the world. They are a pious people. The church has existed since 1857 on their charity and their little offerings. The church has practically had no real donations, never made a drive for millions of dollars. The church has existed in reality on the pennies of the poor. When we opened schools they were always too small. That certainly proves that the people of Mexico do not hate the church, but the politicians do, simply because from the beginning the church has stood out against looting and murder and such like. The politician fears the church. He wants to make a living through politics. He can not keep himself in power by constitutional means, because elections are a joke. He intends to appeal to arms and stir up revolution. The power that could destroy him is the power of the church, if the church descended to his kind of tactics; so he fears the church as the one thing that is stronger than himself, if she exerted her power in ways she abhors.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you believe that if the church in Mexico were left unhampered to pursue its course under a democratic constitution, that the result would be beneficial to the people and democratic government?

Monsignor KELLEY. I certainly do. I believe that if Mexico had religious liberty as it exists here, and honest and fair elections, Mexico's troubles would be at an end, and the soldier politician would be out of a job.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that would result in a union of church and state, so that the church would be in control of the state?

Monsignor KELLEY. No; because the church does not ask for such a union. Leaving principles and theories aside, practically, unions of church and state have not frequently been successful, except for the state. They seem to work out in the same general way, putting affairs of the church under the the control of the state, and thereby injuring the church. I have spoken to all, or practically all, of the exiled bishops of Mexico, and I have asked every one what he thought would be the result of the adoption by Mexico of religious liberty as it exists here. Without exception they said that the idea was so good that they could not even hope for it. It was too much to hope for.

Mr. KEARFUL. We have often heard in this country that the trouble with Mexico was it has been priest-ridden. What can you say in reference to that?

Monsignor KELLEY. The best answer to the charge that Mexico is priest-ridden is to give the figures. Some of them were given by Navarro y Noriega, published in the Buletin de la Sociedad Mexicana de Geografia y Estadistica, 2a Edoca, volume 1, pages 290-291. He places the number of clergy in Mexico in 1810 as 7,341. Of that number 3,112 belonged to orders devoted to teaching, hospital, and other public service. There were 2,098 sisters, most of them teachers. The Mexican population in 1810 was 6,122,354. The proportion of the clergy to the population was then 1 to 834.

Now, in 1917, according to the account of the United States Census Bureau, the number of Catholic clergymen in the United States was 20,287, and the Catholic population was 15,742,262, a proportion of clergy to population of 1 to 776. But in the whole United States in 1917 there were 191,722 clergymen of all denominations, and 42,044,374 church members. So that in the United States in 1917 there was a clergyman to every 219 church members, while in Mexico in 1810 there was only one clergyman to 834 of the entire population. If you consider only the clergy of the United States other than Catholic, the proportion is one clergyman to every 153 church members, and in some of the non-Catholic bodies the clergy are as numerous as 1 to 35. Of course, these latter are very small denominations.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you later figures for Mexico than 1810?

Monsignor KELLEY. I have used 1810 because I think that year saw the largest number of clergy in Mexico. It has diminished since that time. The clergy were relatively more numerous then than at any other period. The number has now declined to about 5,000, which gives a relative proportion to population of one priest to every 3,000 people in Mexico. That is my answer to your question.

Mr. KEARFUL. We have also sometimes heard of the inordinate wealth of the church in Mexico. What about that?

Monsignor KELLEY. I saw no evidence of wealth in those priests who came here, and I have had considerable to do with what business some of the Mexican bishops had in the United States since their return. Although I am not authorized to speak about their business affairs, nevertheless, I feel that it is only a matter of justice to them to say, that the church of Mexico has practically no endowment and no wealth. When charges were made that the church in Mexico was wealthy, these charges usually hark back to Spanish times.

I have here in my hand part of the manuscript of an unpublished book by Mr. Eber Cole Byam, who happens to be a non-Catholic and a Free Mason. Mr. Byam has made a study of the religious question in Mexico, and will shortly publish his book on that subject. I would like to read a few things on that point in reference to Spanish times into the record:

The main sources of church income were the tithes, interest from invested funds, and rentals from productive real estate. The productive real estate consisted of rented city properties and farms, and the funds were "laid out," as Humboldt says, "on farms of small cultivators." He further says: (1822 edition, vol. 3, p. 102) "These capitals are usefully directed and increase the productive power of the national labor." These loans drew 5 per cent and so long as the interest was paid there was no concern about the principal.

Dr. Mora, an apostate priest, who sought the confiscation of all the church property, says of this wealth (Mexico y sus Revoluciones, vol. 1, p. 121) that it formed a character of loan bank which contributed greatly to the development of agriculture and the prosperity of the country.

Ramos Arizpe, a radical, a York Rite Mason, and Secretary of State for Victoria, made a report to the Mexican Congress in 1826 in which he said of the clergy and these funds: "Limited in numbers, select in origin, and most moderate in the acquisition of large country estates, without compare they devoted the greater part of the riches that piety had placed in their hands to the purpose, and in a manner, of public benefit for the encouragement of agriculture, commerce, and every industry." (Boletín, etc., la Epoca, vol. 1, p. 137.)

Another writer, José Guadalupe Romero (Boletín, etc., 2a Epoca, vol. 3, p. 556), says, in 1860, regarding the church, the clergy, and the funds handled by them: "They formed a perennial loan bank for agriculture and commerce. There has not been in the Republic a laborer or worried capitalist who has not remedied his needs or increased his business with the capitals of the church loaned at so moderate a charge that, while these funds existed, the loan sharks were unable to effect a rise in the rate of interest."

Matias Romero tells us that "The wealth of the church was loaned out at a moderate rate of interest * * *, and to its credit be it said was not at all usurious, exacting only a fair rate of interest, and being hardly ever oppressive in dealing with delinquent debtors." (Mexico and the United States, p. 93.)

And this is what Juan A. Mateos had to say:

"In the days of the old régime, when the clergy possessed a great number of city and country properties, year after year went by without the shameful evictions to which so many poor families are the victims to-day. The sordid avarice of the landlords of to-day has no compassion in contrast to the clergy who, animated by a spirit truly Christian, overlooked and excused. The church loaned its capital at a low rate of interest, 4 per cent, 5 per cent, or at 6 per cent, which was called the legal rate, a rate unknown to-day. Very rarely was a foreclosure notice published against a property pledged for a loan from these funds. For this reason I proposed, at the time of their confiscation, that a bank for the poor be established from the millions of the clergy, but my voice was drowned in the midst of the tumult of passions of the revolution. Because of this, the selfish interests and exactions of to-day have left homeless the many families who formerly enjoyed the tolerance and charity of the clergy." (From a speech by Juan A. Mateos in the Mexican Chamber of Deputies on the 20th of October, 1893.)

The invested funds of the church amounted, in 1804, to $44,500,000 and consisted of what were known as "capellanías" and "obras pías." The capellanías were chaplaincies supported by donations amounting on the average to about $3,000 each and returning $150 yearly in interest. (Mora. Mex. y sus Rev. vol. 1, p. 121.) The chaplain benefited thereby was usually employed by some institution or by some wealthy family, which thus found a place for some poor relation who, in many cases, acted as tutor to the children of the family. On the death of the beneficiary the fund often passed to some pious work or obra pía. The obra pía was a fund that accomplished any good purpose other than the support of a chaplain.

From these funds a large number of pupils were supported in boarding schools, where the cost averaged about $100 per year. In other words, a great many of these funds were in reality scholarship foundations.

The funds were therefore trust funds administered by the clergy as trustees in conformity to the wishes of the donors who had placed them in their hands to be used for specific purposes, mostly educational and charitable.

Taking Mr. Byan's figures, the wealth of the church at that time was about $44,500,000.

Mr. KEARFUL. At what time?

Monsignor KELLEY. That was about the time of the first or partial confiscation, in 1804. The confiscation by Juarez deprived the people of their loan banks. Our own Federal farm loan arrangement is an attempt by our Government to give to the United States what the church gave to Mexico without cost. Here in the United States we have come to the very thing that the Mexican clergy gave the people long years ago. The confiscation of that money gave the loan sharks an opportunity in Mexico. So they proceeded to gouge the natives, and that practically caused the economic ruin of the country.

It has been ascertained by biased writers that the clergy of Mexico exacted great fees. I again quote from Mr. Byan:

The fees which the clergy generally were permitted to receive for marriages, baptisms, burials, and masses were fixed, and those accepting anything in excess of the sums allowed were fined double the sum accepted. These fees varied with the pomp of the ceremony desired, nothing for the simple ceremonies for the poor, and graded to suit the purses of the well-to-do. The fees also varied with the diocese. In that part of Mexico one peso was allowed for baptism. Marriages performed in the parish church occasioned no fees whatever. If the priest performed the service elsewhere he was permitted to accept 4 pesos. For burials no fees were accepted unless accompanied by ceremonies requiring extra services. The Indians paid no fees for any of these services unless extra ceremonies were desired, and then the fees were expressly stated to be the half of those accepted from the Spaniards.

In addition to the foregoing the laws of the Mexican Church expressly prohibit exacting any fee whatever from the Indians for any religious service."

Dr. Mora was, as I have already pointed out, one of the enemies of the church. In 1833 Dr. Mora estimated the wealth of the church at as high as $179,163,754, but he figured it out in a very peculiar way. From his own works we find out his method. He stated that the amount of the tithes collected in 1829 was $2,341,152. He multiplies that by 20 and charges the product to the church as capital, capital which, of course, never existed. Then he assumes that every parish priest collected $600 a year in fees, and charges that to an income account. He multiplies the grand total by 20 and charges that up to the church as capital. Then he submits the alms received to the same process, and so on down the line, which certainly is an original way of finding out what an institution is worth. Imagine the figures for the United States with the small incomes of over 100,000 clergies is figured into capital by the Mora method.

Divesting Mora's tabulation of its fictitious values we have left less than $100,000,000 for all properties, both productive and unproductive. According to Mora, the unproductive properties amounted to some $50,000,000. Mora gives the church income as $7,465,593. Divesting his figure of its fictitious values, we have a remainder of $4,782,153. Nearly half of this was the tithing. When the various educational and other beneficent enterprises are considered it will be seen that the Mexican clergy accomplished remarkable results with the money available.

Mr. KEARFUL. What became of the actual property that was confiscated?

Monsignor KELLEY. In 1866, when the confiscation was practically complete, the State recorded the receipt of property worth $62,365,516.41. Instead of establishing loan banks with that property, as had been suggested by Mateos, the "patriots" were permitted to browse in the green fields and pastures new. One great "patriot" bought 50 houses in Mexico City worth $525,528 for $1,832.42 in cash, and Government due bills which had cost him $40,077.90. That was the foundation of one of the largest fortunes in Mexico. The only reason why I do not mention the name of that family is because it has become so distinguished in Mexico, and there is no particular reason for selecting one family when so many of the members of the liberal party received fortunes through the same dubious means.

The buildings of public benefit, such as schools, colleges, academies, and such like, were turned into city halls, court houses, barracks, stables, and jails. All the property of the church confiscated in France within this generation produced nothing but a couple of million of francs, with some prison sentences for those who handled the confiscation. The same statement applies in Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. Except as to the prison sentences?

Monsignor KELLEY. Except as to the prison sentences.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you desire to make a statement contrasting the present wealth of the church in Mexico with similar institutions in this country?

Monsignor KELLEY. I would like to do that. I have some figures here that are very interesting, but when I select one Protestant denomination in America for the comparison I did not mean to be at all discourteous. I had to take one prominent Protestant religious denomination, and I selected the Baptist because I happen to have the figures from their yearbook for 1916; and the church wealth in Mexico can best be appreciated by comparing it with that of a religious body in the United States which has approximately the same number of adherents. That happens to be the Baptist. I take the figures from the yearbook mentioned.

Baptist adherents in 1916 were 6,107,686 in number, which closely approximates the estimated population of Mexico in 1810, which was 6,122,354. I again call your attention to the fact that I am taking the year 1810 because at that time the clergy were most numerous in Mexico. The Baptists in 1916, according to the figures given, had 6,107,686 adherents in the United States; Mexico, in 1810, had a population of 6,122,354. Baptist churches, 1916, in the United States, 51,248; Catholic churches in Mexico, taking the figures in 1889—which were the only figures that I could get, but when the population was still greater than in 1810—10,112. Baptist ministers in 1916, 36,926; Mexican priests in 1810, 7,341. Invested funds and productive Baptist property of the United States in 1916, $98,453,844; for Mexico I have had to take the figures of 1804, six years before 1810, which are $72,873,473, and include several millions of unproductive properties, the population about the same. The annual income of the Baptist Church of the United States in 1916, probably including everything, was $43,055,067; Mexico, in 1810, $7,692,807. Church values, Baptists, $173,705,800; Mexico, $30,031,894. The Baptist income, it should be noted, is largely through contributions, which takes the place of the Mexican tithes, which are voluntary donations.

Now, it must be remembered that Baptist properties and income accumulated as a result of a little more than 100 years of work. In 1812 there were only 173,072 Baptists in the United States. Even in 1906 the figures are only a little more than half the figures for 1916. The church in Mexico was a going and prosperous concern when Roger Williams fled to the wilderness, and it took nearly 300 years to accumulate its property.

The exact figures to-day are not available, but in round numbers they will closely approximate the following: Clergymen, Baptist, in the United States, 50,000; Mexican, 5,000. Baptist churches, 60,000; Mexican, 10,000. Baptist income, $50,000,000; Mexican, very small. Baptist clergymen are relatively 20 times as numerous as the Mexican. Baptist churches belong to the Baptists. In Mexico the churches belong to the Government; and as for income, the Mexican clergy are living to-day on the charity of their friends and relatives, for the people have been bled white.

Mr. KEARFUL. Does that mean the people have been bled white by the church?

Monsignor KELLEY. No; the people have been bled white by revolutions, for the revolutionists live on the people.

Mr. KEARFUL. The same revolutionists that have driven the priests and nuns out of Mexico and desecrated the churches?

Monsignor KELLEY. The same revolutionists; and the end is not yet.

I would like also to call your attention to this fact, that in all these charges about the practices of the church in Mexico, the church never dreamed of possessing the power to make a drive for over $300,000,000, which the Protestant churches of the United States are making right at this time. The amount of money asked by the Protestant churches of the United States from the State of New York alone in this drive would be considered fabulous wealth for a period of 10 years for the church in Mexico.

Again, I would like to call your attention to the fact that the endowment of a single American church, Trinity in New York, if the stories I hear about the wealth of that church are true, would almost, if not quite, surpass the entire assessed valuation of the confiscated church property in Mexico. The University of Chicago (Baptist) is said to have received over half that sum from one man alone.

It has been held by some that the possession of even $62,000,000 endowment and other values of the entire church in Mexico with her hospitals and educational work was a menace to the country. If that is the case, what about the wealth of so many Americans who individually are worth more than $62,000,000? And what about the Rockefeller, Sage, and Carnegie funds—far more heavily endowed than the church in Mexico—and which are not only chartered institutions under our laws, but very generally considered as most beneficial institutions? Yet the people who look with favor on these institutions often thoughtlessly take their cue from revolutionists in Mexico and condemn the Catholic church for what little endowment she had.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. John Lind, in his testimony the other day, denied that he had ever attributed the ills of Mexico to the influence of the Catholic church, but stated that he had become convinced that the church had not done as much as it ought to have done in the position it occupied toward the education of the people. What can you say about the educational work of the Catholic church in Mexico?

Monsignor KELLEY. It must be remembered that the educational question in Mexico at the beginning, and for a good many years after, was purely an Indian question. The church had to take savages and civilize them through religion and education. In order to do that, the church often had to fight the officials of the State who did not think the Indians should be educated. It is said there was once a discussion in Mexico as to whether or not an Indian had a soul. If such a discussion ever took place, it was because churchmen had to rebuke such ideas on the part of those who did not care to have the Indians educated. From the beginning the missionaries of the church insisted upon instruction going with religion, and they were successful. The first university on this continent, it must be remembered, was established in Mexico, and there were schools of higher education, as well as professional schools in Mexico, before Harvard was born. The most beautiful architecture on the American Continent is still in Mexico. Mexico was far in advance in the early days of her northern neighbor, which is our country to-day.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was that due to the work and influence of the church?

Monsignor KELLEY. Absolutely due to the work and influence of the church. The educators in Mexico were the priests. It is perfectly true that they did not teach many branches in the little Indian mission schools, but schools were attached to every mission. They taught reading, writing, singing, religion, and politeness, and if they have lost all the rest, they have kept at least the religion and the politeness. That was all work done for Indians. It was a work of devotion that meant many sacrifices. It was a work endowed only by the flesh and blood of the missionaries and teachers. These went out to the Indians, whether there was money to help them or not. In our own northern colonies little attention was paid to converting the Indians to Christianity, none at all in the beginning. Practically nothing was done in the early days of the colonies. But when we did get going here, a good deal of money was spent on our Indians. If Mexico had spent in the same proportion as the United States, it would require $400,000,000 a year, and out of that $90,000,000 would have to go for schools. In other words, Mexico would be required to spend a sum greater than all its revenue, municipal, State, and national, for the Indian in Mexico forms a very large majority of the population. The colonial authorities in Mexico never collected more than $20,000,000 a year, and if I mistake not, Mr. Carranza is not collecting half of $400,000,000 a year. As to the method of the educational work, I should like to quote from Mr. Byam:

Regarding the labors of the missionaries, Garcia Icazabal, in his biographical notice on Friar Gante, has this to say: "The task was tremendously difficult because the means were entirely disproportionate to the ends. They were confronted not with the education of the children as they arrived successively at the proper age, as in our day, but with an entire and numerous generation, big and little, men and women, who all at once were in urgent need of religious and civil instruction from the very foundations, and without knowing even the language of their masters. The friars were few, and realizing that if they attempted everything they would accomplish nothing, they decided to divide their time between the conversion of the adults and the education of the children. Endeavoring thus to take care of the emergency, leading the adults from their errors, and giving the children, who were docile and not yet imbued with the old beliefs, the new religion with their education. They counted, moreover, that once the little ones were instructed in the faith they would serve to bring in their elders, and they were not deceived in their hopes.

That shows somewhat of the difficulties the early missionary educators had to face. The same authority, speaking of methods, says:

The schools were generally low halls with dormitories and other rooms adjoining. There were schools in all the principal convents, and so large that some of the held 800 to 1,000 pupils. The most famous of all was that of Mexico, founded by Friar Pedro de Gante. As customary it was behind the convent church extending toward the north. * * * In this school there were soon gathered a thousand Indians. In the morning they were given lessons in reading, writing, and singing, and in the afternoon were given religious instruction.

The friars were thus the discoverers of the fact that the only way to obtain satisfactory results in the education of the Indians was to catch them very young and place them in boarding schools where they would be out of contact with their parents. Otherwise they form attachments for their old home life that are impossible to break, and when their education is finished they return to the ways of their fathers and all the work is wasted. Even some of those who had been in boarding schools relapsed and returned to the tepee.

We have had the same trouble, by the way, in the education of our Indians.

Moffett, in referring to the Winnebagoes of Wisconsin, says:

The Winnebagoes of Wisconsin are a backward people. They have been given homesteads of 40 acres for each male adult, but few of them live on their allotments. The children who attend the school do not usually finish the course, and upon returning to their people lapse back into many of the old ways.

The friars had to face that trouble with their Indians, too. Now, as to the result of all this, quoting again:

An eloquent witness to the educational labors of the clergy and the happy results therefrom is one Geronimo Lopez, who appears to have been a person of some importance and who wrote, in October, 1541, to the King, apparently at his command, about affairs in Mexico. (Coleccion de Documentos para la Historia de Mexico, vol. 2, p. 148.) Lopez was opposed to educating the Indians and takes occasion to complain bitterly of the efforts of the friars to do this. He declares that the friars have taught large numbers of them to read and write and that they are such excellent penmen that "It is a marvel to see them" and that "there are so many and such good scriveners" that he can not count them. Again, he charges that the friars have taught the Indians Latin so well that they speak it like another Cicero, "and every day the number grows."

As to the law for the education of the Indians, the laws of the Indies (Recopilacion de Indias, Lib. VI, Tit. I, Ley XVIII) states that "where possible schools must be established to teach them to read and write Spanish and at no cost to them."

On the 7th of June, 1550, the King wrote a letter to the provincial of the Dominicans charging him to see that the Indians were taught the Spanish language. (El Clero de Mexico Durante la Dominacion Española, Genaro Garcia, p. 106.)

The church law also takes account of schools by declaring that every curate must "procure with all diligence" the establishment of schools in their towns where the children may be taught to read and write Spanish.

Humboldt visited the city of Mexico in 1803 and of it he says: (Political Essay on the Kingdom of New Spain, New York, 1811, p. 159) "No city of the new continent, without even excepting those of the United States, can display such great and solid scientific establishments as the capital of Mexico."

Joel Poinsett was sent to Mexico as a special agent by President Monroe in 1822. Poinsett was an ardent partisan of the radicals who were trying to overthrow Iturbide. He was also a bitter enemy of the church and the Spaniard. He remarks that most of the people in the cities can read and write and that he frequently remarked men clothed in the garb of extreme poverty reading the gazettes in the streets. (Poinsett, Notes on Mexico, London, 1825, p. 122.) He was there only a few months, which he spent mostly in the City of Mexico. In his journey to and from the coast he had occasion to observe the peasantry, whom he says (Op. cit., p. 266), are "a kind and amiable people possessing the utmost good nature and great natural politeness. They are, I think, a virtuous and an orderly people, attentive to all the ceremonies of their religion and observant of their moral duties. Thefts are so uncommon among them that our baggage was generally left under a shed; and assassinations are extremely rare, and when they do occur may always be traced to drunkenness."

He observes the effects of the then recent revolution, and says (Op. cit., p. 240): " * * * the mines have been destroyed, villages and farms have been burnt, whole districts laid waste, and the resources of the country utterly exhausted."

After such destruction it is not surprising that he should find (Op. cit., p. 173) that—

"The habitations of the people on the roadside are miserable indeed. The walls are of stone, piled up loosely, like the fences, and not much higher; and the roof is a wooden shed, and sometimes ornamented by ranges of pumpkins.

Poinsett is caustic in his criticism of the church and clergy. It was among the middle-class Mexicans that the revolutionaries came, and with them he foregathered. He says that they are "exempt" from the influences of the clergy, but "unfortunately, too many, who were educated in the forms of the Catholic Church, have emancipated themselves from its superstitions only to become skeptical and infidels." (Op. cit., p. 164).

This judgment of Poinsett is echoed by a later observer, R. A. Wilson, who visited Mexico in 1853. In speaking of the same class he says that they turn "to infidelity and socialism."

Coming down to more recent times, I quote further as follows:

Justo Sierra was the minister for education under Diaz. He was a radical and an atheist. He was a bitter enemy of the clergy and sought to produce in the normal schools a body of teachers that would spread his radicalism and atheism among the youth of Mexico. This is what he has to say of education in Mexico (Mexico—Its Social Revolution):

"Educational work was begun in Mexico by Juan de Tecto, Juan de Aora, Juan de San Miguel, and Pedro de Gante; followed by the 12 Franciscans who formed the Mexican apostolate. They established schools for the natives, both children and adults. The common people as well as the more important natives, were cared for, and the children of the chiefs were taken care of in boarding schools. The missionary teachers secured the passage of laws compelling attendance at school.

In 1522 Pedro de Gante founded a school in Texcoco for poor Indians, and later that of St. Francis in Mexico City, which grew to number 1,000 pupils. (Op. cit., vol. 2, p. 478.) Bishop Zumarraga founded in the villages schools for girls like that of Texcoco. In 1536 he created near the convent of the Franciscans at Tlalotelco, the famous College of the Holy Cross, where religion, writing, reading, Latin, and rhetoric were taught. (Op. cit., p. 479.)

Other institutions founded were:

College of San Nicolas at Patzcuaro by Bishop Vasco de Quiroga, College of San Miguel at Guarangareo by Friar Juan de San Miguel. The Jesuits established colleges at Valladolid (Morelia), Patzcuaro, Tepotzotlan, Huisquillucan, and numerous missions in the north and east. In Mexico City they opened a school for natives called San Gregorio, which remained until closed in the first half of the nineteenth century.

In addition to the schools named, there were a considerable number of private schools. Many children were prepared for college in their homes. The Franciscans devoted themselves mostly to primary education. The secondary schools were shared equally by the Jesuits and the Augustinians. (Op. cit., p. 483.) The Augustinians founded a college in Tiripitio in 1540, removed later to Atonilco; also St. John's College, founded in 1575, which depended on alms for support. This college was founded by Father Alonzo de la Cruz, who "bought the grounds, directed the building, formed the constitutions, deposited in the college 60 chests of books brought from Spain. He also set up there a collection of globes, maps, and scientific instruments." (Ibid.)

The Jesuits arrived in 1572, September 28, and at once started a school for natives. The venerable Jesuit, Pedro Sanchez, caused Dr. Francisco Rodriguez de Santos to found, on November 10, 1573, the Colegio Mayor de Santa Maria de todos Santos in his own house, where pupils were boarded and housed. Closed in 1843. Also to F. Sanchez is due the College of SS. Peter and Paul, January 10, 1573. Later, three, San Miguel, San Bernardo, and San Gregorio, in 1575-1576. A second college of SS. Peter and Paul in 1576; Espiritu Santo, in Morelia, in 1587; also colleges in Yucatan, Zacatecas, Caxaca, Vera Cruz, and Guadalajara. (Op. cit., p. 484.)

When the Jesuits were banished in 1767 several colleges were closed. (Ibid.) The Jesuits numbered 528, and their departure struck a severe blow to education in Mexico.

Sierra goes on to say:

The laws of December 12 and 14, 1872, completed the confiscation of the endowment funds which had been created to support the educational institutions of the Republic. The great private foundations, which had accumulated through three centuries, were thus swept away, and no others were created to replace them. The wealthy Spaniards had been one of the greatest sources of those endowment funds; and as the Spaniards were expelled in 1828, that fount was definitely closed. The attacks upon wealth, and particularly upon the clergy, completed the work of preventing any further donations for the support of educational institutions; and as the Government itself was penniless, the result is obvious. (Op. cit., p. 538.)

During the revolution chaos that prevailed with growing intensity, from 1810 until almost 1880, there was little opportunity for the extension of educational facilities or works of public benefit. The church was under constant attack and by the time Diaz had established a character of order it had been robbed of every dollar and every piece of property. In fact, the educational, financial, and benevolent institutions of the country, built during 300 years, were reduced to utter ruin.

I would like also to put into this statement, that in later years, under the constitution and laws of reform, Catholics have been obliged to be very reticent regarding the number of schools they had in Mexico.

For example, officially in Puebla it was reported, at the primary educational congress in 1911, that the clergy had 24 schools in that State. In the United States, however, it was not so necessary to allow people to do guesswork, and the number was given as 300. The same report gives 69 as the number of schools directed by Catholics in Michoacan. However, in the United States it was known that there were 270. The archdiocese of Mexico had over 230 schools with about 50,000 pupils, and there were a number of private schools conducted independently by the clergy.

In addition there was a large number of private schools conducted by Catholic citizens employing lay teachers.

In the absence of exact data only round numbers can be given for the whole country. There were several thousand schools caring for upwards of 300,000 pupils. That this number is not an exaggeration is evident by the complaints of some of the revolutionary pamphleteers, who urged the large number of Catholic schools as one of the pretexts for revolution.

The oppressive effect of the anti-Catholic laws was particularly apparent in the case of the professional schools. Civil engineers or doctors educated in Catholic colleges were barred practically from practicing their professions by reason of the numerous and exasperating difficulties placed in their way merely because they were Catholics. The purpose and effect of these hampering regulations was to force students into the government schools where an active propaganda was carried on against religion.

I want to emphasize the fact that all the work that was done since 1857 was done in spite of an adverse law. I want to put it in the record without having had the question asked, because I want it known that what the church did since 1857 for education it had to do by stealth and at its own risk. That covers the educational feature.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is it the result of your investigation that whatever educational work has been accomplished in Mexico prior to the confiscation of church and school property was done by the Catholic Church?

Monsignor KELLEY. Prior to the confiscation the amount of educational work done outside of the church and its influence, I think, was practically nil.

Mr. KEARFUL. And since that time your answer to the criticism of John Lind is that the church could not, under the law, do even what it has done in the way of education?

Monsignor KELLEY. My answer is that I have been told time and time again of Catholic schools that were selected for raiding, by the State authorities, because complaints had been lodged with President Diaz against them, the complaints being simply Catholic religious communities were in existence and teaching. President Diaz knew that these schools were necessary for the people. He ordered the raids in accordance with the law, but somehow, in most cases, advance information was received and there was nobody in the school building when the officials arrived.

Mr. Lind charges that we have not done enough to promote popular education in Mexico. It was under these conditions that we have worked since 1857, robbed of our endowments, robbed of our buildings, so that everything that we have done was contrary to the law. And yet we have produced, purely through Catholic education in Mexico, an Indian race that we do not hesitate to compare with our own Indian races in America. This country has spent millions of dollars in schools and colleges for the North American Indians. I can not remember the name of one single North American Indian who has come to the front in any line of endeavor, except as a military leader, such as Sitting Bull. But the blood of the Mexican Indian is in probably 85 per cent of the Mexican people, and they have produced a governmental genius like Diaz, soldiers like Mejia, surgeons like Urrutia, philosophers like Bishop Mungia, scientists like Carrillo y Ancona, theologians like Alarcon, poets like Altamirano, political savants like Estagnol, journalistic lights like Sanchez Santos, artists like Panduro and Velazques, and lawyers like Jose Vereas. In every walk of life, in every profession or trade, in education, science, art, statesmanship, the Mexican Indian has had his place, while his teachers are charged with having neglected him.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you anything to say about the relationship of the church and state in Mexico from a historical viewpoint?

Monsignor KELLEY. The only union of church and state in Mexico was during Spanish times, with a loose bond for a few years after. From my reading of the history of Mexico, I judge that, while the union in many cases helped the missionaries, and while under some governors it worked well and for the benefit of the people, in general it only enabled colonial officials to retard the work of the church. As I have stated already, the church in Mexico is not asking for a union of church and state, and in my judgment, the bishops of Mexico would run very far away from any such thing, if they feared that it might be offered. What they want is religious liberty, and let it go at that; not religious liberty for themselves alone, but religious liberty for all, just as it exists in the United States of America.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. Lind, in his testimony, mentions the Catholic party in Mexico as a political influence. What do you know about that Catholic party?

Monsignor KELLEY. The Catholic party was founded shortly before Madero took office, as a conservative party, to try by constitutional means to do away with the irreligious clauses of the constitution of 1857 and the laws of reform. In other words, the Catholic party was trying to bring about in Mexico that same religious liberty that we have here.

Mr. KEARFUL. And that Mr. Byam wrote about?

Monsignor KELLEY. And that Mr. Byam wrote about. In all other respects the Catholic party was simply a conservative party. It was a departure in Mexico from the ordinary to have a party which intended to appeal to the people at the polls, and to rely upon its strength with the people to secure the adoption of its policies. Naturally, the leaders went to see Madero. They told him what they intended to do, and get his opinion. Madero praised them, welcomed the party as one of the first fruits of his own policies, and told the leaders to go ahead, which they did. No one knows the actual result of the election, because while the voting was honest, nevertheless the count was a different matter. It is generally supposed that the Catholic party won the election, but it was assigned only a small number of seats, because Madero's brother immediately started a group called La Porra, which was formed to shout the Catholics down. The conservatives took the name "Catholic" so that, when they went before the people, all would know that that was the body trying to do away with religious disability. The church had nothing whatever to do with it officially. It was a movement among Catholic citizens, and I should say that if, in any republic of the world, the same oppressive laws were made against Protestants that were made against all religions in Mexico, there would be no question but that a Protestant party would be organized.

MR. KEARFUL. Have you read the testimony given by John Lind the other day?

MONSIGNOR KELLEY. Yes, sir; I read Mr. Lind's testimony yesterday.

MR. KEARFUL. Have you noticed any statements made by him that you would like to answer?

MONSIGNOR KELLEY. There are a few statements that I would like to refer to in a short way.

MR. LIND stated: "Outside of the towns there was not a schoolhouse to be found in Mexico at that time." Now, I don't know whether Mr. Lind is referring to the time when he himself was in Mexico, or whether he is referring to the time when the Catholic church was supposed to be in control of education in Mexico. I presume the latter, because Mr. Lind says, "The policy of the church has not been to foster popular education of the masses." Now, if Mr. Lind means there was no schoolhouse to be found in Mexico when he was there, outside of the towns, I answer that he must ask his revolutionary friends the reason. If he means that there was not a schoolhouse outside of the towns before the confiscation of church property, I can only pity Mr. Lind as being completely ignorant of what he is talking about, or an intentional prevaricator.

Again, Mr. Lind says that "more schools were established under the Carranza government than ever before." You asked him whether more schools were established under the Carranza government than ever before. He answered "yes." I do not know where Mr. Lind got his figures. My information is the opposite. He mentioned a certain number of Mexican girls who were sent up here to be instructed in teaching. These girls were sent up by the governor, Gen. Salvador Alvarado, of Yucatan. And yet many schools of Yucatan have been, according to all the information that we can get, in charge of people who can neither read nor write, and who were purely political representatives of the socialistic government of Alvarado. I heard that some Mexican young women had been sent up here, but I also heard that they did not remain. There are no more schools in Yucatan than there were before the revolution, and there are few schools of any value even now. There are fewer schools in all Mexico than before the revolution.

MR. LIND stated, in answer to a question as to whether or not the Catholic Church was responsible for the difficulties of Mexico, that he felt that a State church in politics is a misfortune to any country. As I have already pointed out, the Catholic Church in Mexico is not a State church, nor has the Catholic Church in Mexico been in politics. If you go back to Spanish times, when the church had a connection with the State, you will find the most glorious period of Mexican history, the one period during which actual progress toward civilization and enlightenment was made. Since the confiscation of the church property and the persecution of the church, anyone reading the history of Mexico can see the country has reached the depths.

Mr. Lind referred to the Catholic party also, but I have answered that question.

Mr. Lind also said that he did not say to Mr. Frisbie that the Catholic Church should be driven out of Mexico. I do not know Mr. Lind personally, but I have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Frisbie. To me the question is one of veracity, because Mr. Frisbie told me that Mr. Lind had made that statement to him.

Mr. Lind also says he thinks it a misfortune that a larger effort by those in a position to exercise power had not been made to establish and maintain popular education. Inasmuch as he had just been talking of the church, I presume his reference is to the clergy. The only power the clergy exercised in establishing and maintaining education was exercised, as I have already shown, in spite of the law. If we had exercised any more of zeal in the same way we would have had more special representatives coming back to say that the Catholic Church got what she deserved, because she was violating the law. Now, when Mr. Lind regrets that we did not exercise our power more, does he regret that we did not violate the law more, or what? I don't know.

Mr. Lind also stated: "In the south, if Spanish writers and historians are to be believed, the cultural stage of the Mexican people was very nearly as high at the time of the conquest as it is to-day." If American writers and historians are to be believed, later investigation has shown us that this wonderful civilization of the Aztecs was largely based on the imagination of the Spanish conquerors. It was to their advantage to report great things done, and they did so report to the King of Spain. Every victory won was a great victory; every town captured was a great town; every bit of loot they had was untold wealth. Later on the Spanish governors desired to have Spain make large appropriations for the colonies. It was still their business to exaggerate, and they exaggerated. The best authority on the subject is Bandolier. Prescott is no authority. Placing him side by side with Bandolier on the question of the aboriginal Mexican, he descends to the position of a gossip.

Mr. Lind also stated, in answer to a question as to whether or not he had anything to say regarding my "Book of Red and Yellow," that he did not want any controversy with any "Jesuit or anyone else." I should like to register the fact that Mr. Lind flatters me by calling me a Jesuit. I wish I were pious enough and learned enough to be classed as a Jesuit; but if it will reassure Mr. Lind, I now tell him that I am not a Jesuit, and never was one.

Mr. KEARFUL. I believe those are all the questions I wish to ask you at this time. Is there anything further that you care to state?

Monsignor KELLEY. No; I believe I have covered all that I had in mind.

Mr. KEARFUL. Then you will be excused. The committee is very much obliged to you.

(Whereupon, at 12.30 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

(At 2 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the adjournment taken, the committee reconvened, and the following further proceedings were had:)

TESTIMONY OF EBER COLE BYAM.

(The witness was duly sworn by Mr. Kearful.)

Mr. KEARFUL. Please state your name in full.

Mr. BYAM. Eber Cole Byam.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your business?

Mr. BYAM. At present I am writing and translating.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your office address?

Mr. BYAM. I have no office. My residence is 7023 North Paulina Street, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. KEARFUL. How many years' residence have you had in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. I went to Mexico in 1895, and with the exception of various trips to the United States on business, I was there until 1907.

Mr. KEARFUL. To what extent have you been a student of Mexican history?

Mr. BYAM. Well; I may say that I have been a student of Mexican history since I first took an interest in the country, which was before I went there.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was your business in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. I went to Mexico first and obtained employment in a lumber camp located in the mountain range bordering on the valley of Mexico and near the town of Ixtlahuaca. I was also engaged in building railroad, grading and laying track. From there I went to the State of Chiapas, where I was employed in plantation work.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you traveled considerably over Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. In the central highlands, in the States of Mexico, Hidalgo, Queretaro, Oaxaca, and the States of Chiapas and Tabasco. Most of this in the saddle.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you become pretty well acquainted with the plantations and the mode of operation in the southern part of Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. I did.

Mr. KEARFUL. What experience did you have with the Mexican laborers and with the Indians on and about those plantations?

Mr. BYAM. My first experience with Mexican laborers, and particularly with the Mexican Indian, was in the lumber camp and in the railroad work. In the latter I had the direction of as many as 600 Indians. These laborers I secured myself by traveling through the interior, in the country located between the Mexican Central and the Mexican National railroads. These Indians lived in their villages, and came to work for varying periods and would then return to their homes. At this particular time the wages paid them varied from 25 cents to 35 cents per day.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mexican money?

Mr. BYAM. Mexican money. I always found them very satisfactory as laborers, good workmen, loyal and satisfied with the conditions of labor and the pay. I may say that the pay represented to them just that much velvet, because they possessed their own homes and fields from which they secured subsistence.

Mr. KEARFUL. How did the wages that were paid to them for railroad work compare with the wages received for plantation work from the Mexican plantations?

Mr. BYAM. In the plantation work, we secured the Indians by sending men into the mountains among the Indian villages. These Indians came to work at a wage of $1 per week, and were supposed to furnish their own rations. However, we did not insist upon the latter part of the agreement, and I always fed them, giving them all that they desired to eat of the rations which they themselves preferred. After these Indians had once come to the plantation to work we would keep them there by paying them 50 cents per day. They would remain for irregular periods, and return to their homes. After remaining in their homes for a number of weeks they would again come to work. The wages in that particular section gradually increased until these laborers were receiving 75 cents and $1 per day, including their rations.

Mr. KEARFUL. What have you to say in regard to the testimony of Mr. John Lind to the effect that the operation of Americans on the plantations in southern Mexico was injurious to the Indians?

Mr. BYAM. I did not find it so.

Mr. KEARFUL. You are an American citizen, are you?

Mr. BYAM. I am an American citizen.

Mr. KEARFUL. And you are one of those operating there?

Mr. BYAM. I am one of those operating there.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did you observe to be the effect upon the Indians, of the operation of the Americans in that region?

Mr. BYAM. Distinctly to their benefit.

Mr. KEARFUL. In what respect?

Mr. BYAM. It gave them the opportunity of regular employment, and by paying them and introducing money into the country it increased the circulating medium of that section.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was there any improvement in the condition of the Indians with respect to the methods employed by them in agriculture, and also in their mode of living?

Mr. BYAM. No. The Indian has his own way of living that he prefers to follow. I observed that the money which he earned would be spent in the villages, a portion of it; some for articles of various kinds to which they were not accustomed. They would supply themselves with new machetes, for example, and would purchase cotton prints, and these articles they would take to their homes. They would take away with them a good deal of cash, which served to rejuvenate the commerce of the interior of the State.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the attitude of the Indian in those days toward the American operators?

Mr. BYAM. It was friendly. I can give an example of the attitude of the Indian toward the Americans. At one time when I was at work in the lumber camp I was given charge of several hundred Indians to go to a distant point where there was a forest fire, and on the way thither we were compelled to stop and rest. I lay down at the foot of a tree to sleep, wrapped in my cloak. I slept for some two hours. The altitude was above 10,000 feet and the temperature was below freezing. When I awakened, I discovered that the Indians, some of the Indians that accompanied me, had slipped up after I had gone to sleep, and covered me with their blankets. If there had been an unfriendly feeling toward Americans they hardly would have taken such action.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is that an illustration of the feeling of the Indians generally toward Americans?

Mr. BYAM. I would say that was the feeling generally throughout Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. At that time.

Mr. BYAM. At that time. The Mexican Indian, and by that I mean every Mexican possessing enough Indian blood to be imbued with Indian characteristics, does not consider class or racial distinctions. To illustrate: If an American were to mistreat a Mexican Indian that Indian would not dislike all Americans in consequence.

He would consider only his individual persecutor and endeavor to avoid him. During the recent revolution they were taught by the socialist agitators to shout, "Death to the clergy!" But this meant only an individual to the Indians. So they hunted for a mythical Mr. Clergyman from Sonora to Yucatan without finding him. Meanwhile they showed every respect to the priests. The outrages against the clergy were committed by the socialist leaders and their criminal, vagabond following.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you know about peonage in that portion of Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. In the central highlands I never discovered any signs of peonage. The Indians came to work, did their work, and received their pay. Peonage existed at that time amongst some of the tropical plantations, and in the southern part of the country; and that peonage, I may say, was similar to the peonage in the southern State of the American Union.

Mr. KEARFUL. You are not referring to the black slaves, are you?

Mr. BYAM. No; I am referring to the present condition of making advances to laborers of wages which they later work out.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you observe the method of treatment that was accorded to those peons?

Mr. BYAM. Methods of treatment on all the American plantations were distinctly favorable. They were given houses rent free in which to live; they were furnished rations which were sufficient for their subsistence, and if they desired, they were given the privilege of planting as large an area of ground as they desired to plant and cultivate, at no cost to them. Then, all of them had their chickens and pigs.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were they discontented with their lot or otherwise?

Mr. BYAM. Very much contented.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you know of any attempt being made by American plantation managers to imprison them, keep them against their will, or to keep them at work by fraudulent means?

Mr. BYAM. In no case.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you have occasion to observe the operation of a good many of those plantations?

Mr. BYAM. I did.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was the system employed by the Americans the established custom of the country?

Mr. BYAM. The Americans merely followed the established custom of the country.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was there any other way in which the large plantations could be operated?

Mr. BYAM. There was no other way to keep a permanent force. The peons on the plantations—that is, those laborers to whom advances of money had been made—formed the permanent labor force on the plantation. They lived on the plantation. The other laborers, who came in from the outside, who would work and go away and then return again, were not peons in that sense.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is it true, as has been charged, that the peons of whom you speak were kept in a condition of slavery by the plantation managers?

Mr. BYAM. I never observed anything of the kind. I do not believe it to be true. In every case under my observation these so-called peons received advances of wages, or their debts owing to others were paid, and they came to work voluntarily, understanding fully all the conditions, and they looked upon the amounts they were permitted to owe as being, in a sense, an indication of their social standing and the confidence which their employer placed in them. Indeed, I have heard these laborers discussing the amounts which they owed, and I have heard one and another of them bragging to their fellows of the amounts which they owed as being indicative of their character and honesty.

Mr. Lind, in his testimony, admitted that he had visited but one plantation in Mexico and took occasion to state that this was an American plantation and that the laborers were locked up at night and otherwise severely treated. The plantation that he visited was one of the few in Mexico employing convict labor, much in the same manner as I understand that Mr. Burleson, the Postmaster General, has employed American convict labor on his plantation in the United States.

Mr. Lind's strategy and tactics follow the precedents established by the propagandists of socialism in general and the Mexican revolutionists in particular. They select some isolated incident, tell half the truth about it and present it in a manner calculated to mislead people into accepting it as representative of the country at large.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you read a book by John Kenneth Turner entitled "Barbarous Mexico"?

Mr. BYAM. I have.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you any comments to make upon that book?

Mr. BYAM. The very best that I could say for Mr. Turner is that he permitted himself to be misled to an extraordinary degree. I understand that Mr. Turner spent only a few months in Mexico; that he spoke no Spanish; that he was conducted through the country by a well-known Mexican socialist. From my own knowledge and experience I am satisfied that the statements which he makes in the book as to the conditions in Mexico, social, economic, and religious, are mostly false, and those which are not false are greatly exaggerated. He has taken individual instances and has multiplied them to appear as being representative of the entire country.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you any information as to whether or not he personally wrote those parts of the book in reference to social, economic, and religious questions?

Mr. BYAM. I have been informed that a large part of it was written by a Mexican in Spanish, and was later translated.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was that the Mexican socialist to whom you referred?

Mr. BYAM. I believe so.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is his name?

Mr. BYAM. Gutierrez de Lara.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is and was his reputation as to extreme radical socialism?

Mr. BYAM. That he was an extreme radical, extremely radical socialist. I think Mr. Turner's connection with the Socialist Party or organization in this country has been fairly well established. He has written a good deal on Mexico since he published his book called "Barbarous Mexico," and I believe he is still writing for socialist publications.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do his writings indicate with respect to his connection with the radical socialists?

Mr. BYAM. In his book called "Barbarous Mexico" he gives the names of a number of Mexican radicals who were at one time or another compelled to seek refuge in the United States, men who later became active in the Mexican revolutions.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do his later writings show?

Mr. BYAM. That he is just as radical as any of the Mexican radicals. For some time he was an accredited correspondent for the Socialist paper called the Appeal, and in that paper he has published articles in which he has mentioned so-called secret trips to Mexico to communicate with the Mexican radicals. In one article published by Mr. Turner in the Appeal, he stated that he had made a secret journey to Mexico to confer with the revolutionists. The time of that visit corresponded with the activities of the Mexicans attempting to put into effect the plan of San Diego.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was that the plan which contemplated an invasion of the United States, and about which the committee recently took testimony on the border?

Mr. BYAM. It is.

Mr. KEARFUL. In this country we hear a good deal about the agrarian problem in Mexico, to the effect that the troubles in Mexico would disappear when the great estates are divided up into small individual holdings. What have you to say in reference to that?

Mr. BYAM. I never heard of any land question, such as is understood by your question, in Mexico. Amongst the many Indian villages that I have visited I have always found them in possession of their community fields, with which, so far as ever came to my knowledge, they seemed to be perfectly contented. In the central highlands of Mexico, which is the most densely populated portion of the country, where approximately 70 per cent of the population of Mexico lives upon some 30 per cent of its area, the land is well divided. I have the figures for the number of farms in the State of Jalisco, and a tabulation of the number of farms in the United States, which I will leave with the committee.

Mr. KEARFUL. This is a table showing, with reference to each of the States of the American Union, the area in square miles, population, number of farms, number of persons to each farm, number of acres to each farm, and the density in population per square mile; and at the foot corresponding totals with reference to all of the States of the American Union taken together. Then follows the same data with reference to the State of Jalisco, which shows that this Mexican State compares approximately on an average in area and population with the States of the American Union; that in that State there are 165,816 farms, which is very much more than in a majority of the American States; that there are persons to one farm, 7.3, which is very much less than the average of persons to one farm in the States of this Union; that the average acreage of each farm is 130, being much less than the average acreage of most of the States in the American Union; and that the density of population per square mile is 36.2 as against 30.2 in the American States. From what source was this table compiled?

Mr. BYAM. The tabulation regarding the United States was taken from the census returns of 1910; regarding the State of Jalisco the data is taken from the assessment list for the fiscal years 1912 and 1913.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you the data for any other Mexican State than Jalisco?

Mr. BYAM. Not completely. That is the only data which I have complete.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you consider the data given here as to Jalisco a fair illustration of other Mexican States situated upon what you have called the highlands of Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. It is fairly representative. The State of Guanajuato is even more finely divided than the State of Jalisco, but I have no official data at hand to substantiate that statement.

Mr. KEARFUL. If you have no objection, the table referred to will be inserted in the record at this point.

Mr. BYAM. Very well. I would like to call attention to the fact that for lack of exact figures on farm acreages I was compelled to divide the total area of each State by the number of farms to arrive at the relative proportion shown. The same was done in the figures for Jalisco.

(The table referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

	Area, square miles.	Popula- tion.	Farms.	Persons to 1 farm.	Acres to 1 farm.	Density of popu- lation.
Alabama.....	51,998	2,138,093	290,000	7.6	118	41.7
Arizona.....	113,956	204,354	13,000	15.8	5,612	1.8
Arkansas.....	53,335	1,574,449	230,000	6.8	148	30
California.....	158,297	2,377,549	98,000	24	1,034	15.3
Colorado.....	103,948	799,024	60,000	13.4	1,110	7.7
Connecticut.....	4,965	1,114,756	27,000	41.2	118	231.3
Delaware.....	2,370	202,322	11,000	18.3	137	103
Florida.....	58,666	751,139	58,000	13.4	668	13.7
Georgia.....	59,265	2,609,121	330,000	7.9	114	44.4
Idaho.....	83,848	325,594	38,000	8.6	1,420	3.9
Illinois.....	56,665	5,638,591	245,000	23	148	100.6
Indiana.....	36,354	2,700,876	215,000	12.6	108	74.9
Iowa.....	56,147	2,224,771	215,000	10.3	166	40
Kansas.....	82,158	1,660,946	180,000	9.4	290	20.7
Kentucky.....	40,598	2,289,905	270,000	8.5	96	57
Louisiana.....	48,506	1,656,388	123,000	13.4	252	36.5
Maine.....	33,040	742,371	60,000	12.4	355	24.8
Maryland.....	12,327	1,295,346	50,000	25.9	158	130.3
Massachusetts.....	8,266	3,366,416	37,000	91	142	418.8
Michigan.....	57,980	2,810,173	209,000	13.5	177	48.9
Minnesota.....	84,682	2,075,708	157,000	13.2	344	25.7
Mississippi.....	46,865	1,797,114	295,000	6.1	102	38.8
Missouri.....	69,420	3,283,335	275,000	12	162	47.9
Montana.....	146,997	376,063	38,000	10.4	2,550	2.6
Nebraska.....	77,520	1,192,214	135,000	8.8	365	15.5

	Area, square miles.	Popula- tion.	Farms.	Persons to 1 farm.	Acres to 1 farm.	Density of popula- tion.
Nevada.....	110,660	81,875	3,000	27.4	25,000	.7
New Hampshire.....	9,341	430,572	27,000	16	221	47.7
New Jersey.....	8,224	2,537,167	33,000	77	160	337.7
New Mexico.....	122,634	327,301	45,000	7.2	1,740	2.7
New York.....	49,204	9,113,279	215,000	42.2	146	191.2
North Carolina.....	52,426	2,206,287	275,000	8	122	45.3
North Dakota.....	70,837	577,056	95,000	6	475	8.2
Ohio.....	41,040	4,767,121	270,000	17.7	97	117
Oklahoma.....	70,057	1,657,155	220,000	7.6	205	23.9
Oregon.....	96,699	672,765	52,000	12.8	1,182	7
Pennsylvania.....	45,126	7,665,111	218,000	35.2	130	171
Rhode Island.....	1,248	542,610	5,000	108	160	508.5
South Carolina.....	30,969	1,515,400	190,000	7.9	104	49.7
South Dakota.....	77,615	583,888	95,000	6.1	522	7.6
Tennessee.....	42,022	2,184,789	260,000	8.4	104	52.4
Texas.....	265,896	3,896,542	540,000	8.7	379	14.8
Utah.....	84,990	373,351	24,000	15.5	2,275	4.5
Vermont.....	9,564	355,856	35,000	10.8	185	39
Virginia.....	42,627	2,061,612	195,000	10.6	140	51.2
Washington.....	69,127	1,141,990	70,000	16.5	635	17.1
West Virginia.....	24,170	1,221,119	100,000	12.2	154	50.8
Wisconsin.....	56,060	2,333,880	182,000	12.8	197	42.2
Wyoming.....	97,914	145,965	15,000	9.7	4,150	1.5
Total.....	3,026,719	91,641,197	6,717,000	13.6	487	30.3
Jalisco.....	33,486	1,202,802	165,816	7.3	130	36.2

Mr. BYAM. In the district of Tlalnepantla, near the City of Mexico, the assessment list for the year 1870, as I recall it—I have not the official data right at hand—gives more farms than families resident in the district.

Mr. KEARFUL. What significance do you attach to the data you have just furnished with reference to the land problem, so-called?

Mr. BYAM. That it refutes the claims made by those favoring the Mexican revolutionists, that there was a land problem, and that it was a legitimate pretext for revolt. I may mention incidentally that the revolutionists have represented, and even officials of this Government, or those speaking for them, have stated that the land question was a fundamental cause of revolution in Mexico; and that one particular writer, Mr. George Creel, stated in a book called "Wilson and the Issues," that all the land in Mexico was divided among 10,000 owners.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you recollect if Mr. George Creel had occasion to revise some of his statements with respect to the operation of the American oil men in Mexico and retracted what he had said on that subject?

Mr. BYAM. I have so observed, but I have not yet discovered any retraction regarding the land business. In the State of Chiapas, in which the population is largely Indian, every village possesses an ample area of land for the use of the inhabitants. I know of a number of villages whose public lands, called "ejidos," are occupied and made use of by only a few families. There are vast areas of very excellent, rich and fertile public lands, in addition to these lands belonging to the villages, which have been available to the public at very cheap prices, prices set by the Government, and which, at the time I was in Mexico, could have been obtained from the Government by any Mexican so desiring for from a few cents to a dollar per acre.

Mr. KEARFUL. How did the opportunity to procure valuable homesteads compare with similar opportunities in the United States?

Are you acquainted with the system of disposing of public lands in the United States to settlers at a small sum per acre, with the obligation of five years' residence?

Mr. BYAM. I am.

Mr. KEARFUL. How did the opportunities in Mexico compare with the opportunities of settlers in the United States to procure public lands at a nominal price?

Mr. BYAM. The Mexicans had equal opportunities.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did they avail themselves of it, largely?

Mr. BYAM. Not that I could ever discover.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you ever discover a general, insistent demand in Mexico among the lower classes of the natives for land to settle upon and own as their homes, individually?

Mr. BYAM. Not at all. I think I can illustrate that by an instance which came under my own observation. One particular piece of property in the State of Chiapas had on it some three hundred families of squatters. The owners of this piece of property endeavored through a number of years to induce these squatters to accept title to their farms. After much effort less than half were induced to accept an average of some twenty-five acres each. The remainder refused absolutely to accept title. The only charge to which they were subjected was that of the survey, a charge that was merely nominal. And I may say that nearly all of these squatters were prosperous, to the extent that any one of them could obtain credit at any of the stores in the village for as much as $500.

Mr. KEARFUL. According to your observation and experience, what would be the result if the large plantations were divided up and distributed among the natives who work those plantations?

Mr. BYAM. It would be to the advantage of nobody and to the distinct disadvantage of the natives themselves, outside of the Indian communities where possession of the land is common.

Mr. KEARFUL. And where they are exempted from taxation?

Mr. BYAM. And where they are exempt from taxation. In fact, the Indians in Mexico have escaped practically every character of taxation.

Mr. KEARFUL. You are speaking of conditions outside of community property?

Mr. BYAM. Yes, sir. Outside of the community property the laborers on the plantations are distinctly better off when not owning property, because they escape any burdens which might come through the ownership of such property and are free to cultivate here and there as the conditions may be best for such cultivation. In the central highlands, where plows are used, the owners of the property furnish them with the implements for such cultivation. It has always been customary on the plantations in Mexico to permit the laborers to cultivate such extensions as they may please.

Mr. KEARFUL. For their own use and without charge?

Mr. BYAM. For their own use, but not always without charge. In some sections a system has been pursued somewhat similar to that followed in the southern United States with the negroes, of cropping on shares.

Mr. KEARFUL. In addition to the cropping on shares, the Indian is employed on the plantation? Is that the system?

Mr. BYAM. He finds employment on the plantation.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you think would become of the titles to the small tracts, if the large plantations were divided up into small tracts and turned over to the Indians?

Mr. BYAM. I would expect the Indians to pursue much the same course that they have pursued in Mexico, and that has been pursued in the United States—that they would sell the properties.

Mr. KEARFUL. And would be forced to sell on account of the burdens of taxation and necessity of going into debt to maintain themselves through a bad year or something of that sort?

Mr. BYAM. Yes; and often to satisfy some childish caprice.

Mr. KEARFUL. So that, after a division of these lands, they would be sold and necessarily revert to that form of operation which by experience is known to be most economical, namely, operation in large tracts?

Mr. BYAM. Exactly.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you know about the schools in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. As regards the Government schools, when I was in Mexico I discovered schools in nearly every village which I visited. They were primitive, the equipment was very primitive, and the teachers were poorly paid, as teachers seem to be everywhere, but an effort was being made to educate the people.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you know about the education of Mexicans by the Catholic church?

Mr. BYAM. The Catholic church at one time had charge of practically all the educational institutions of the country, but after the enforcement of the constitution of 1857 all of these institutions were seized and the church deprived of every means of educating the people, and every impediment placed in its way by the Government.

Mr. KEARFUL. That is since the constitution of 1857?

Mr. BYAM. That is since the constitution of 1857.

Mr. KEARFUL. Referring to the period of the educational work of the church among the Indians in Mexico, how did the system compare in its results with the system which has been followed in this country by the Government in educating the Indians?

Mr. BYAM. The first efforts of the church in Mexico toward the education of the Indians began shortly after the conquest, and the work was undertaken by the missionaries. They were the only individuals available for teaching. They established schools and gathered Indian children in those schools, where they were housed and fed and clothed according to the Indian standard of luxury. They were taught to read and write, given religious instruction, and kept from contact with their parents as much as possible, to avoid the perpetuation amongst them of the native idolatry. There is one fact that I would like to mention here, and that is that the Mexican Indians that were discovered and conquered by the Spaniards were cannibals, and that the Spaniards, both lay and clerical, had considerable difficulty in eradicating the custom of human sacrifices and their cannibalism. The Mexican Indians practiced cannibalism to an exaggerated degree. That that cannibalism was a part of their religious ritual has been urged by some in extenuation of it, but it would appear from the available data that when the Mexican wanted meat, he found some occasion to make a sacrifice to the Gods and thereby obtain a feast. In the dedication of the principal temple in the City of Mexico in 1487, the Aztecs, according to their own records, sacrificed 20,000 victims in a four days' carnival of killing.

Mr. KEARFUL. One of the problems met with in the education of the American Indian in this country has been that the young Indians, after having been graduated out of the school, returned to their tribes, and reverted to the condition of savagery from which they came, and sometimes became more vicious because of their education. Has that been true of the Mexican Indians educated in the Catholic Church schools, and if not, what was the reason?

Mr. BYAM. The Catholic missionaries in Mexico were faced with the difficulty of the pupils reverting to the mode of life of their parents. To overcome that they established as many boarding schools as possible. Those that could not be kept in the boarding schools naturally returned to the villages, but the moral and religious training which was given by the missionaries, in addition to learning to read and write, established a devotion to religion, which 100 years of revolutionary radicalism has had little effect upon.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think the moral and religious training, in addition to the popular branches, constitutes the main difference between the education of the Mexican Indian and the education of the American Indian?

Mr. BYAM. I believe it to be so.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that accounts for the fact that the Mexican Indian has not been so prone to revert to the old mode of life?

Mr. BYAM. That has been my observation.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. John Lind, in his testimony, found fault with the educational activities of the church in Mexico, because it had not done more than it did do of late years in the way of popular education of the masses. What have you to say on that subject.

Mr. BYAM. During the colonial period the church in Mexico was in reality a dependency of the State. It was subject to the State. It could make no move whatever without the permission of the home government and the colonial government. The numbers of the clergy were limited. In reports that have been rendered to the Spanish Government by agents sent out by the Crown to investigate conditions in Mexico we find that a proportion of one priest to 5,000 of the population was the average sought. That refers particularly to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

During the colonial period the Government officials and the ecclesiastical authorities were continually urging and recommending the continued establishment of schools and the education of the Indian. Every priest was required to maintain a school.

Mr. KEARFUL. The particular question was as to whether or not Mr. Lind was justified in his statement that the church in Mexico, of late years, had not done all it might have done in the position that it occupied to advance the popular education of the masses. Do you think he was justified in that statement?

Mr. BYAM. I do not think he was justified.

Mr. KEARFUL. For what reason? Do you think the church did all it could have done since the constitution of 1857?

Mr. BYAM. The church did all that was possible to do under the constitution of 1857, and even went to the extent of violating the law in order to educate the children. Schools were established and the buildings and equipment placed in the names of private individuals, because it was against the law for the church to own any property. It was against the law for any religious orders to be in the country. Nevertheless, religious orders existed for the purpose of teaching in those schools.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you understand that was permitted particularly by Porfirio Diaz because he understood that was for the benefit of the people?

Mr. BYAM. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Even though it was against the law?

Mr. BYAM. Exactly.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you come in contact with any Protestant missionaries in Mexico and the work they are doing there?

Mr. BYAM. I came in contact particularly with two of them. One was a missionary who was stationed at Guadalajara. He always treated the subject quite pessimistically, and in the course of our conversations expressed his discouragement at the lack of conversions. He informed me that when it became necessary for any reason to show that he had a congregation that he was accustomed to send out the Mexican servants of his household with small coins that they might hire their friends and relatives to appear and act temporarily as a congregation. Attendance at meetings also was obtained by the distribution of coins at the door at the close of the services. I met a missionary who had been working, so he informed me, for nine years in the State of Tabasco. He was still hopeful of results, though during the nine years he had secured but 11 converts. However, one of these converts had died, and before dying had recanted.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. Lind, when he testified, was asked about a booklet of which he is the author, entitled "The Mexican People," in which he gives an account of the high state of civilization existing among the Mexican aborigines at the time of the Spanish conquest, and his attention was called to the fact that Monseigneur Kelley had subsequently, in his Book of Red and Yellow, charged that the historical matter given by Mr. Lind had been shown by subsequent and more thorough historical investigation to be very largely imaginary. In the Book of Red and Yellow by Monseigneur Kelley there is a deadly parallel in which the account given by Mr. Lind is placed in juxtaposition to very similar matter contained in an old edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Apparently to avoid the effect of this circumstance, Mr. Lind brought here a volume entitled Historia de La Conquista de Mejico, by Don Antonio de Solis, published in 1666. He then undertook to show that the historical matter which he had used had been taken from that book. Are you familiar with the book referred to by Don Antonio de Solis?

Mr. BYAM. I am. I have a copy of it.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you read it?

Mr. BYAM. I have.

Mr. KEARFUL. What have you to say with reference to the authority of that book?

Mr. BYAM. That it is not accepted as authority by any historian. It is largely a rehash of Bernal Diaz.

Mr. KEARFUL. What can you say with respect to the view of authoritative historians as to the high standard of civilization of the Mexican aborigines?

Mr. BYAM. Bandolier made a very exhaustive study of that particular subject, and the result of his labors and his conclusions are accepted to-day by all historians as being practically the last word upon the subject. He refutes definitely, and gives a large number of authorities in support of his conclusions, that there ever existed among the Mexican Indians any such a condition as pictured by Mr. Lind. As a matter of fact, Mr. Bandolier tells us that they were a very barbarous people; that they had no conception of a nationality. Every village was practically autonomous. There was no empire, consequently there could have been no emperor. The Aztecs, living in what is now the City of Mexico, where a marauding, warring tribe, dependent for their subsistence upon the spoils of war and upon the tribute which they exacted from conquered tribes. These conquered tribes bore no relation to the Aztecs politically, other than tribute payers. The Aztecs did not interfere with their internal government. The so-called Aztec governors which the Spaniards found among the tribute-paying tribes were discovered later to be only the tribute gatherers. There was no political organization among the Mexican Indians in any way resembling a nation.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was finally found to be the truth about the early glowing account of a system of courts and schools and fine arts, etc.?

Mr. BYAM. They had been either nonexistent or exaggerations of mistaken ideas, mistaken impressions received by the first Spaniards.

The native traditions tell that in the distant past, long before the discovery of America, bearded white men came to Mexico, and the aborigines of that period are pictured as extremely primitive beings, living like the wild beasts whose flesh they ate raw, for it is said they knew not the art of making fire. According to these traditions the white men introduced a character of civilization. This civilization appears to have endured until the white blood became too widely diffused among the savage masses. Then began a degenerative process leading the people back toward their ancient savagery. In this state of retrogression the Spaniards found them. There are no evidences of a development of culture. The most ancient remains are the most highly developed.

The importance and extent of the work undertaken by the Spaniards to gather the people into villages and to induce them to adopt a sedentary life indicates their nomadic character. According to their own traditions, the Aztecs of the Indian pueblo of Mexico were nomads but a relatively short time before the coming of the Spaniards. Southern Mexico is dotted with ruined cities, yet few were inhabited at the time of the conquest. They appear to have been occupied in much the same manner as a tribe of Parisian Apaches might set up their gods of murder and thievery in the ruins of the cathedral at Rheims. From Palenque southeastward up the valley of the Usumacinta stretch group after group of ruins like beads upon a string. They were buried in the jungle and forgotten long before Columbus sailed. They are but the dry bones of a civilization dead these many centuries.

The Spaniards brought with them the civilization and culture of Europe, which flourished in Mexico until the revolution of 1810. Since then their civilization has been struggling to keep its head above the rising flood of barbarism let loose upon it by the socialist agitators. The relatively short respite during the rule of Diaz served but to show what might be done. The recrudescence of savagery under Carranza and his socialist following has thrown the Mexican people back into a raging sea of anarchy from which they have cried in vain for rescue during seven long, hungry, and bloody years.

Mr. Lind's mission gave to his pamphlet an importance which its text fails to sustain. To expose its errors would require practically the repetition of it in its entirety and the citation of numerous authorities to refute the false and misleading statements with which it is filled.

Mr. Lind, in his testimony, claims that certain portions of his pamphlet are taken from Solis and not from the Encyclopædia Britannica as charged by Monsignor Kelley. An examination of Solis will discover no paragraph nor phrase remotely resembling those of Mr. Lind. The Encyclopædia Britannica, however, contains a number of phrases too exactly like those of Mr. Lind to be claimed as mere coincidences.

Mr. Lind's unfamiliarity with Mexico and its history, and apparently its language, have led him into some strange errors. He states, on page 7 of his pamphlet, that "The laws and records of the court were set down and kept in the picture writings which were in use." And that "Some of these records are still preserved in the National Museum." Solis distinctly declares that "They had no written laws." If Mr. Lind knows of any preconquest law records, either in the Mexican National Museum or elsewhere, he has made a momentous discovery whose proofs he has neglected to reveal.

In the same paragraph Mr. Lind declares that "The criminal code was very severe. Fraud, the removal of landmarks, and adultery were punished by having the offender's head crushed between stones or by cutting out the heart." Regarding this subject Solis says that "Murder, theft, adultery, and any disrespect to the king or religion were capital crimes. Other crimes were readily pardoned because the religion itself, permitting iniquities, disarmed justice."

On pages 5 and 6 Mr. Lind says that "The kings were elected in the royal families." Solis says that "They observed always the custom of electing the greatest soldier as their king without regard to the succession, although in an equality of deeds they preferred the royal blood." The true significance of this will be apparent to those who have studied the American Indian.

The Spanish writers used terms intended to be understood by their readers rather than to convey an exactness of meaning. They wrote of Reyes or kings and caballeros or gentlemen. The latter term literally means horseman. The application of this term to the warrior class among the Aztecs did not mean that they possessed horses. Neither did the use of the word king mean that they possessed kingdoms.

Nearly every one of the 29 pages of Mr. Lind's pamphlet affords examples as glaringly inexact. It is quite evident that he failed to read Solis, or any other writer, with the care the subject merited.

In closing his pamphlet, Mr. Lind takes occasion to praise the Germans, thereby giving us some interesting evidence of how difficult it is for an immigrant to forget the prejudices brought with him from Europe. Sweden is strongly socialistic and pro-German. These characteristics have marked the Carranza faction and doubtless account, in part, for Mr. Lind's espousal of the Carranza cause.

In addition to Mr. Lind, I would like to cite a few instances illustrating how the American people have been misled and deceived by prejudiced propagandists in the interests of the Mexican revolutionists and against the Spaniards.

They are all agreed that Cortes, the conqueror, was an inhuman butcher who grievously oppressed the Indians. Yet when we examine the records of that period we discover that Cortes was charged with being altogether too popular with the Indians, and that he had curried favor with them, the alleged purpose being to cut loose from Spain and establish himself as an independent ruler. This was a contributing cause to his disfavor at court.

Bancroft, the historian, claims that the Spanish civil and ecclesiastical authorities exercised a rigid censorship to prevent the writing of anything unfavorable to their rule. Yet he supports his charges against them by numerous references to works that indicate not only extreme laxity in the alleged censorship but equally extreme looseness in Mr. Bancroft's statement.

Terry, in his guide book, prefers serious charges against all the Spanish viceroys in general. Yet when he reviews their individual terms in office he is compelled to praise many of them highly and can find cause for censure in only two, who ruled the country for but 6 years out of nearly 300.

When Charles Cullen translated the works of Clavigero he interpolated a whole paragraph at an important point, entirely reversing the meaning of the author. Subsequent writers have cited this spurious paragraph to support their claims.

William Butler, a missionary, went to Mexico in the early seventies. Some 20 years later he wrote a book in which he repeated many of the old calumnies. In closing his work he caps his mendacity by telling of the alleged discovery in Puebla of 13 mummified bodies of victims of the inquisition that had been buried alive. Mr. Butler himself claimed to have been present at the discovery of the thirteenth body. To prove his assertions, he published a photograph of four of the alleged victims. This picture has been his undoing, for the mummies shown in it are easily identified as those of some Dominican friars whose remains, to the number of 13, were discovered in 1861 in the burial vaults of their convent in Mexico City. They had died, like good Christians, in their beds.

In its entirety Mr. Butler's statement is absolutely and utterly false. How close a scrutiny the balance of Mr. Butler's book might stand may be left to the imagination. Nevertheless, Butler and his ilk have helped largely in the molding of American opinion about Mexico and the Mexican people.

In treating of events of the Juarez revolution, the historian Bancroft mentions Ampudia, one of the generals of Juarez, as though he were a civilized human being, and he dismisses the killing of the priest of Zacapoaxtla with a couple of lines. The priest in question was seized in his home and badly beaten. Covered with blood and bruises he was dragged before Ampudia, who demanded that he take the oath to the constitution recently adopted by a triumphant military faction. Because he refused to do this, Ampudia caused his ears to be cut off, his eyes to be plucked out, his tongue to be torn out, and unmentionable mutilation done besides. He was then dragged to the courtyard where he was shot and his body cut into quarters. The Juarez revolution differed only in detail from the Carranza revolution. Its general character was the same. The outrages committed and the animus inspiring them were the same.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was there any reason to believe that some of the first Spaniards rendered untrue reports in regard to conditions?

Mr. BYAM. There is every reason to believe it.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is that generally accepted by the later historians who have investigated the subject carefully?

Mr. BYAM. Yes, sir; it is accepted among them to-day.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are the works of those historians open to anybody who cares to investigate the subject?

Mr. BYAM. They are.

Mr. KEARFUL. They would be open to Mr. Lind, if he should go into the library and ask for them, would they?

Mr. BYAM. They would.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. Lind's attention was called to a very glowing description given by Mr. Bryan of a certain plantation in the State of Oaxaca, devoted to the cultivation of rubber, which Mr. Byam described as one of the American centers of civilization in Mexico, and Mr. Lind tried to avoid the effect of that by saying that the rubber enterprise in Mexico had resulted in failure and substantially was of no benefit to Mexico. What can you say about the rubber industry in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. Mr. Lind's statement that the rubber plantations were failures was incomplete. He failed to state why they were failures. The greater part of the rubber planting done in Mexico was done at a time which brought the trees into bearing at about the time of the outbreak of the revolution. The consequence has been that these rubber plantations, which might have been shipping a large quantity of rubber during the past seven years, have been unable to market their stuff because of the disturbed conditions.

Mr. KEARFUL. According to the testimony of a number of witnesses such plantations have been destroyed, the owners or managers having been driven out of the country. Would that have any effect upon the successful outcome of the rubber industry?

Mr. BYAM. Most decidedly. There are a number of rubber plantations in the northern part of Chiapas which have been abandoned, their equipment has been destroyed, their buildings burned or suffered to fall into decay, the planted area grown up in weeds, and the plantations generally have returned to the primitive forest which existed prior to the commencement of operations by Americans in that neighborhood.

Mr. KEARFUL. Whatever may be the truth about the success or failure of rubber enterprises in Mexico, what has been their effect upon the Mexican natives of the attempt to establish rubber plantations?

Mr. BYAM. To better their material welfare.

Mr. KEARFUL. Has it given them work and secured money for them and benefited them in that way?

Mr. BYAM. It has, most decidedly. In the district where I was for a time, a large number of the farmers in the neighborhood found employment on these plantations from time to time, either as individual laborers or as small contractors. As small contractors, they would contract to clear and plant a few acres, and would hire some of their less prosperous neighbors to assist them, and they would utilize some of the labor from their own farms.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you any observations to make upon the effect upon the cost of living in the United States by reason of the destruction of Mexican cattle ranches and plantations in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. I believe that that has had a very decided effect in increasing the cost of living. We pay more for our beef because the great herds of northern Mexico have been destroyed. We are paying more for our sugar because the sugar plantations in Mexico have been destroyed. Because of the disturbed conditions there we pay more for our chocolate, more for our vanilla, more for our bananas.

Mr. KEARFUL. How about coffee and tobacco?

Mr. BYAM. The same may be said with equal justice for coffee and tobacco.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you any theory which you could give for the benefit of the country, based upon your observation and experience and study, about the cause for the revolution in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. From my study and observation the fundamental cause is antireligious agitation. We find the beginning of it in the French Revolution. It spread to Mexico, through Spain. The first Mexican revolution, or so-called war for independence, was really a civil war. Spain sent relatively few troops to Mexico. The most of her efforts were directed toward preserving the Spanish colonies in South America. The cause of the Spanish Crown was sustained in Mexico by the Creoles; that is, the Mexican-born descendants of the Spanish conquerors. There was no objection by them to independence of itself. What they fought for was to sustain a government of law and order. They fought the revolution because the revolution of that day sought to destroy wealth, and, in fact, it was what we would call to-day a bolshevik revolution. When the time came, independence was secured by the very elements that had fought to sustain the Spanish Government.

We find that the agitators of to-day are compelled to justify their efforts, and to do it they assume to attack the Spaniards as a class or as a race, and they endeavor to show the Spanish Government or the ecclesiastical authorities had oppressed the people.

The extreme radicals gradually gained control until the complete triumph came to Jaurez with the constitution of 1857. They endeavored, and successfully, to secure the moral and material aid of the American people. The American people misunderstood the movement and the object of it. If it had been known by its true name, and if the true purpose had been understood, the American people would have refused their aid or sympathy.

The Mexican revolutionists have called themselves "liberals," when in point of fact they were socialists, and we know to-day that socialism does not differ greatly from bolshevism. Socialism is the theory, bolshevism the fact. The Mexican revolutionists have claimed that they sought to establish religious liberty, when in point of fact they have sought to establish an atheistic tyranny.

Mr. KEARFUL. In your study of Mexican history, and in arriving at the conclusions that you have stated, are you influenced in any way by your individual religious convictions or sentiments?

Mr. BYAM. Not in the least.

Mr. KEARFUL. As a matter of fact, are you a member of the Catholic Church?

Mr. BYAM. I am not.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you ever been?

Mr. BYAM. I never have been, nor any of my ancestors for 10 generations.

Mr. KEARFUL. You say that you believe that the fundamental cause of the revolution is anticlericalism, antireligion?

Mr. BYAM. Antireligion.

Mr. KEARFUL. How do you account for that, in view of the fact that the Mexican people, almost as a whole, are members of the Catholic Church?

Mr. BYAM. I account for that from the fact that the revolutionary activities in Mexico have always been confined to a very small percentage of the population. It had its root in the revolution begun by Hidalgo. Hidalgo's personal history is a partial explanation of what he sought to accomplish. According to his own confession, he misled his people, misled his following, and his following consisted very largely of ignorant Indians. His career was short, and was marked by extreme excesses, assassinations, destruction. According to his own confessions he personally gave the order for or permitted the execution of some 700 unarmed civilians whom he had captured in different places.

The activities of Hidalgo and his successors created a spirit of lawlessness among certain classes of Mexicans and encouraged still others to defy the government. About the time that independence was secured many thousands had become scattered, and were living as vagabonds or pillagers, and it has been the perpetuation of that element which has furnished the forces for every revolutionary movement in the Republic of Mexico to the present day.

Mr. KEARFUL. If the influence of the Catholic Church in Mexico has been good, why was it necessary, in order to maintain the Government of Mexico, to assail the Catholic Church?

Mr. BYAM. Because the church stood for law and order. By referring to the pastoral letters issued by the Mexican bishops during the past 100 years we find a constant and repeated admonition to keep the peace, to avoid disorder or violence, to obey the law. The result of that has been that the great majority of the Mexican people, who are Catholics, and who obey their pastors, have not resorted to violence or force to defend themselves against the attacks made upon them by the minority.

Mr. KEARFUL. You believe, then, that the revolutionary movements and governments founded upon such movements in Mexico have proceeded upon principles that were destructive of law and order?

Mr. BYAM. Entirely so; entirely so.

Mr. KEARFUL. How do you account for the reign of law and order under Porfirio Diaz?

Mr. BYAM. Porfirio Diaz was, to a certain extent, an exception. He found his country in its normal state of disorder and exhausted, but throughout his rule he was ever on the alert against threatened revolt; and Porfirio Diaz had one defense which the others did not have and which was worth more to him than all his armies, and that was the threat of intervention.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that another element that contributed to his success was that he favored the activities, especially the educational activities, of the Catholic Church?

Mr. BYAM. He did, to a certain extent, but only to a limited extent. In place of repealing the antireligious laws, the antiproperty laws, he preferred to encourage the violation of those laws, and from time to time exerted such pressure or influence in enacting such inimical legislation as would remind the Catholic people of Mexico that he and his government were opposed to their principles and their desires.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is it your idea that he took the course of permitting the church to operate contrary to the law, instead of repealing the law itself, so that he might be able to use the law as a means with which to curb the activities of any Catholics who might form a party against him?

Mr. BYAM. That would be the result, and the result would indicate the intent.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you any opinion that you care to express in regard to what this country ought to do, if anything, to prevent a recurrence of recent outrages in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. There is only one obvious remedy, considering present conditions. I do not want to be understood as advocating intervention or the exercise of force, but when we consider accomplished facts, when we consider the actual conditions existing in Mexico, there appears to be but one certain remedy. From my knowledge of Mexico and my acquaintance with the Mexicans I am satisfied that if the majority element be given an opportunity it can and will establish a satisfactory form of government, a government that will discharge its international obligations as all civilized governments do. But to do that they must have protection; to do that they must have back of them some force which will prevent their overthrow by some capricious military adventurer.

Mr. KEARFUL. You mean some military adventurer, followed by the predatory element that has existed since the time of the Hidalgo revolution, as you have described it?

Mr. BYAM. Exactly, the vagabond element, the criminal element, the restless element, that exists in every community in the world, which has been attracted for 100 years in Mexico to follow any military adventurer that would promise pillage. The history of Mexico is filled with incidents of that kind.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think the reason the Carranza revolutionists have been able to proceed is largely because of the opportunity to pillage that was offered the followers of the revolution?

Mr. BYAM. Precisely.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think the government Carranza has formed upon that revolutionary movement has been based upon the opportunity for graft and private gain of the officials of the Government?

Mr. BYAM. I believe it is entirely so.

Mr. KEARFUL. And you think it is precisely that element that must be curbed, and against which it is necessary to give the better element protection, in order that the better element, the large-majority element, may have an opportunity to establish a civilized Government in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. Exactly so.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you believe that the great majority of the people possess the potentialities of good citizens if they are given a fair chance?

Mr. BYAM. I certainly do. They are law-abiding, they are industrious, they are thrifty, and they do not resort to violence.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you believe such efforts would be well expended and would progress in the direction of good government?

Mr. BYAM. I believe they would.

Mr. KEARFUL. I have reached the end of the questions I had in mind to ask. Is there anything further you care to state?

Mr. BYAM. Mr. Lind stated that the church was opposed to public schools. The opposition of the church in Mexico to the Government schools was not to the Government schools as such; that is, as Government institutions. The opposition was, first, to the Government prohibition against church schools, and, second, opposition to the atheistic teachings of the Government schools.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. Lind compared the sentiment in that respect to the sentiment of the church in this country in opposition to public schools. Is there any such sentiment that you have observed in this country that is comparable to what you have just stated in reference to Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. My observation of the position of the Catholic Church toward public schools in this country has been that the Catholic Church is not opposed to public schools per se—the Catholic Church wants its own schools.

Mr. KEARFUL. The same condition that exists in Mexico, whereby the Government of Mexico does not permit the Catholic Church to have its own schools, does not exist in this country, does it? In this country the Catholic Church is permitted to have all the schools it can establish; is not that correct?

Mr. BYAM. That is quite correct.

Mr. KEARFUL. So, therefore, the same condition that exists here does not at all compare with the conditions in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. Not at all.

Mr. KEARFUL. That is the point I desired to make.

Mr. BYAM. The Catholic Church in Mexico would be very glad if it were permitted the same liberties that it enjoys in this country.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. Lind referred to the Catholic Party in Mexico, in connection with his idea about the sentiment of the people toward the church, and that they had their opportunity through the Catholic Party to assert their rights. What do you know about the so-called Catholic Party in Mexico as a political party?

Mr. BYAM. The Catholic Party as a political party was organized at the time of the triumph of Madero, and by his encouragement. It was organized by Mexican citizens who were Catholics. The church authorities had no official connection with it whatever. The name "Catholic Party" was chosen to avoid any charge by their enemies that they were attempting or endeavoring to conceal their purposes, had another name been chosen. The Catholic Party in Mexico was organized for the express and announced purpose of securing, by constitutional and lawful means, the repeal of the anti-religious laws in Mexico. The Catholic Party nominated Madero as its candidate for president. As its candidate for vice president, however, it nominated De la Barra. I have not at hand any official figures, but speaking from memory, De la Barra secured some 60 per cent of the votes of Mexico. He was not, however, permitted to assume the office. That office was given arbitrarily to Pino Suarez, who had divided some 15 per cent of the vote with a number of lesser candidates.

Mr. KEARFUL. What knowledge have you in regard to the ability of the Mexican people to hold fair and free elections, if they were permitted to do so by the central government?

Mr. BYAM. I would say that they are entirely competent to do so. In the State of Jalisco, in the election of January, 1912, 74 per cent of the voting districts of the State reported a total of over 92,000 votes. Over 64 per cent of the votes cast were cast for the Catholic Party candidates. The significance of these figures will be more apparent when it is remembered that the opposition counted the votes.

Mr. KEARFUL. How do you account for such a result, in view of the reports and testimony we have had in regard to the unjust and unfair elections that have prevailed in Mexico?

Mr. BYAM. I think that is due largely to the fact that the subject has not been given the study it merited. During the rule of Porfirio Diaz it was commonly understood that elections were a polite fiction, but considering the prevailing security of life and property, the people generally did not concern themselves with the niceties of democratic elections. The majority of the people were not favorable to the policies of Diaz, but so long as he gave them law and order they were submissive.

Mr. KEARFUL. This election in Jalisco that you have mentioned; was that held under the supervision of the Federal authorities, or was it purely a State election?

Mr. BYAM. That was purely a State election; that occurred during the rule of Madero, but Madero's political organization had not been sufficiently perfected to control all the elections in the manner that Diaz had managed affairs.

Mr. KEARFUL. It is one thing for a candidate to be elected and another thing for him to take office, as you have illustrated in the case of De la Barra.

Mr. BYAM. Exactly.

Mr. KEARFUL. So what is the use of fair elections in one or more States, if the result of it is not to be carried out?

Mr. BYAM. It is utterly hopeless, unless there is back of it some force that will compel a just and orderly observance of the will of the people as expressed at the polls. That particular election in the State of Jalisco is significant from the fact that the opposition had not developed force to attack the result of that election. Therefore, the governor and legislature elected were enabled to take their seats, to assume office, to exercise all the functions of government, to pass laws, which laws were enforced, but, of course, only for a short time, because there came the revolution which eliminated Madero, and following upon the heels of that the Carranza revolution. Nevertheless, during the rule of Huerta, that element in Jalisco remained in power. Huerta did not disturb them in the State government, though he did change governors. They continued in power until the revolution of the Carranza forces. The governor was driven out and the legislature dispersed, the laws annulled, and a military dictator appointed by Carranza established in their place.

Mr. KEARFUL. If there is nothing further, you will be excused. The committee is very much obliged to you.

(Whereupon, at 4.30 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned, to meet again on Monday, May 3, 1920, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

MONDAY, MAY 3, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

Testimony taken at Washington, D. C., May 3, 1920, by Francis J. Kearful, Esq., in pursuance of an order of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

TESTIMONY OF NELSON O'SHAUGHNESSY.

(The witness was duly sworn by Mr. Kearful.)

Mr. KEARFUL. You may state your name.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Nelson O'Shaughnessy.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your present address?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. University Club, New York.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are you a native-born American citizen?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I was born in New York City on the 12th of February, 1876.

Mr. KEARFUL. What connection have you had with the Diplomatic Service of the United States?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I entered the service on the 17th of March, 1904. Then I was successively secretary of different grades in the Diplomatic Service at Copenhagen, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Bucharest, and Mexico City.

Mr. KEARFUL. When did you go to Mexico, and how long did you remain there?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I went to Mexico in 1911, arriving there the 4th of May, 1911, and I left Mexico City on the 23d of April, 1914.

Mr. KEARFUL. Shortly after the landing of the American troops at Vera Cruz?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was your position in the Diplomatic Service in Mexico?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I was first second secretary of the embassy, and then I was promoted to first secretary, and when the ambassador left I became chargé d'affaires.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you there during the time of Porfirio Diaz?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Just toward the end for a few weeks.

Mr. KEARFUL. You were there throughout the rule of Madero, were you not?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I was there throughout the rule of Madero: yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you come in contact with Madero considerably?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; I came in contact with Madero very often; saw a great deal of him.

Mr. KEARFUL. What character of man was Madero, with reference to his mental capacity?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Madero was a dreamer. I think that is the best description of Madero. He was a very unpractical person.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was his attitude toward Americans, especially with reference to official representations made to him with respect to American rights?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Madero was a great procrastinator. I think that he accepted in theory the demands of the American Government as just, but he continually put off a solution of anything. I remember when the question of these claims for the people killed during his revolution on the border came up, I suggested to him that these were very small claims, but they are very irritating to the American people, and some day you will get congressional action from the United States on these claims which will embarrass you still further. Why do you not pay them? Find out what will satisfy these people and settle them up, and I think it will save you much further embarrassment." He said that was a very good idea, but he never took any action until about a year afterward. Then Señor Pedro Lascurain took it up with Señor Calero, Mexican ambassador at Washington. I think Madero was willing to act promptly, but he did not have a well-organized government with him. You know he was sort of playing a lone hand; I mean he was not well supported. You remember how very irritating those claims were, for people who were shot on this side of the line during the Madero revolution, at Douglas and El Paso.

Mr. KEARFUL. What were Madero's ideas with respect to the Mexican Government? You say they were impracticable, and he practically stood alone.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. What were his ideas?

Mr. KEARFUL. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, he wanted a division of a good many of the large estates, and he wanted to do it in a summary manner. At least, that was what he wanted to do in the beginning. Of course, there was a national organized opposition to such action.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was anything done during his rule to carry out that plan?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think, if my memory serves me right, that they passed a law in Congress appropriating large sums of money to buy certain lands, and distribute it among the peons, but I do not think that it was ever consummated. So far as the public domain went, those were very often the lands the peons did not want. The peon wanted the lands he was living on. The Mexican Indian is generally very fond of the land.

Mr. KEARFUL. They wanted the cultivated or improved land?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; but I think the whole Mexican land situation has been very much exaggerated.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is it a fact that much more was heard about it in this country than in Mexico?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; much more.

Mr. KEARFUL. What influence was exerted during the Madero rule by Gustavo Madero, the brother of the President?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think Gustavo practically ran the Government. I know the entire patronage of the Mexican Government was in his hands.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was his method of running the Government in accordance with the ideas of the President?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; I do not think they were. Madero, as he went on, became less theoretical and more practical. He was a much more practical politician toward the end than he was at the beginning, which, I suppose, was natural.

Mr. KEARFUL. How did the rule of Madero toward the end approximate the rule of Porfirio Diaz as to autocratic measures?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. It became very much the same toward the end.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the reason for that?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Because it is the only way you can rule the country.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you in Mexico at the time of the overthrow of Madero?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; I was not. I was on leave then. I was appointed first secretary on the 12th of December, 1913, and I arrived back in Mexico on March 3, 1914.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was after Huerta had assumed the presidency?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. What opportunity did you have to become acquainted with Gen. Huerta?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, after I arrived in Mexico and Senor de la Barra became president ad interim I met Gen. Huerta just as he was going out to Morelos on the first Zapata campaign.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was in 1911, was it not?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. Then I met him when he came back, had lunch with him several times. Then I saw him just before he went off on the Orozco campaign. That was in 1912, and our military attachés went with him in that campaign. So then when I went back to Mexico I knew Huerta well. I mean as one can know an official in a foreign Government.

Mr. KEARFUL. What opportunities did you have to become further acquainted with him after he assumed the presidency?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I found that the only way that I could get any results out of the Government was to get them through Huerta, so I was thrown in contact with him very often. In fact, upon one occasion I was instructed by Mr. Bryan to see the President and make a certain request.

Mr. KEARFUL. When you returned to Mexico as first secretary had Henry Lane Wilson, the ambassador, left?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No. I returned on the 3d of March, and I think he went some time in April. I can not remember the date.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was in 1913?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. That was in 1913.

Mr. KEARFUL. What character of man was Gen. Huerta?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, Huerta was a strong character. He had always been very much feared by Diaz. Diaz considered him the strongest man in the Mexican Army. You know the old Diaz fear of a successful general. Huerta always kept his word with me. He liked Americans. In fact, of all the Mexican public men I knew I never saw one who really was so friendly toward Americans. I do not say toward the policies of our Government, but I mean toward Americans. He liked Americans. He realized that the progress of Mexico depended upon the amity of the United States.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was his attitude toward Americans with respect to affording them protection for property and other interests?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I never requested protection from Huerta that he did not give it, if it was physically possible. Of course when the American Government requested protection for people who were in rebel territory he could not give it, but anywhere within the territory in his control he always extended protection.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was his attitude toward Americans after the taking of Vera Cruz?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I went to see him the morning that it was taken, and I spoke to him of the danger of an outbreak in Mexico City, and he said: "I shall see that that does not occur. I will have the evening papers censored and have the streets patrolled," which he did, and which I think shows a very broad spirit on his part, because the whole action was taken against him personally.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the condition in Mexico City upon the taking of Vera Cruz with respect to actions of the mob?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, they paraded about, sang patriotic songs, pulled down the statue of George Washington, and there were a few street fights, and they serenaded the embassy, but I went around the streets on all the days I remained there after the taking of Vera Cruz; went out every day.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you know of any American being killed or assaulted?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that protection was due to the action taken by Huerta?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; I do. If Huerta had not issued the instructions that he did, there would have been very serious quarrels and riots. Of that I am convinced.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you know John Lind?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you at the embassy when he was sent to Mexico to deal with Gen. Huerta?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; I was in charge of the embassy.

Mr. KEARFUL. Can you state briefly what you understood his mission to Mexico to be?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I understood that his mission in Mexico was to force the resignation of Huerta, to eliminate Huerta from Mexican politics.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was his mission further with respect to Huerta's successor?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, Mr. Kearful, I really do not know that. I know that Mr. Lind was firmly convinced, at least, he gave me every reason to believe he was, that the only solution would be the triumph of the revolution under Carranza. Yes; Gov. Lind was a strong Carrancista.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you present at an interview between John Lind and Mr. Gamboa, Huerta's foreign minister, when Mr. Lind presented his demands and instructions from President Wilson?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the nature of Lind's attitude in his demands, with reference to their being peremptory or otherwise?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Mr. Lind had a document signed by the Chief Executive of the United States, which he presented.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he have anything to say in addition to presenting the document?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Lind saw Gamboa on several occasions. I think I was present twice, and the other times I was not present.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you remember whether Mr. Lind made any threat as to what would occur in case the demands made by him were not complied with?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. Mr. Lind gave the Mexican Government to understand that, after exhausting the various remedies which the American Government thought proper, they would use force. X

Mr. KEARFUL. Shortly stated; did you understand him to say to Mr. Gamboa that if these demands were not complied with the United States would intervene by force?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. That was my understanding.

Mr. KEARFUL. When Mr. Lind arrived in Mexico, did he have any knowledge of Mexican conditions?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I do not think he did.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he know any Spanish?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No. At least not to my knowledge.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he undertake to inform himself upon any subject before he presented his demands to the Mexican Government?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, Mr. Lind did his work, drew up his papers and documents, without any aid from me whatsoever, and I do not know what he studied or what he did.

Mr. KEARFUL. He presented his demands within a very short time after his arrival, did he?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. In a very short time; yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Within a day or two?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. Within a day or two. The first interview, I think, was the second day after he arrived.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you ever have any conversations with Mr. Lind in which he expressed his views in regard to what the trouble was in Mexico?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; I had a good many conversations with Mr. Lind along those lines.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did he say on that subject?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, he was very bitter against the large English interests there, the large English oil interests, and he attributed Mexico's ills very largely to the religious situation and to the oil companies, especially Lord Cowdray.

Mr. KEARFUL. He thought the ills of Mexico were largely due to the influence of the Catholic Church?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; he stated that to me.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he give any expression of his sentiments as to what should be done to remedy that condition?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; he did not.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you have any conversation with him with reference to the persecution of the church and the killing of priests by the Carranza revolutionists?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I told him that I thought it was a very great mistake for the Government of the United States to ally itself with people who did those kinds of things, but I think he considered such acts were incident to a revolution.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you remember, after he had failed in his dealings with the Huerta Government, that he went to Vera Cruz, and while he was there he made a trip to Pass Christian to see President Wilson?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I do.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you have any conversation with him after that, in which he expressed to you the sentiments of himself and President Wilson with respect to the killing of priests by the Carranza army?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes; I did. He did not say those were the President's sentiments.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did he say? What was the conversation, and where did it occur?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. That occurred in Mexico City, after he came up the second time. You remember he came up, I think it was in November. He came up there for a few days, and returned to Vera Cruz.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the conversation?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I do not remember the conversation very much in detail. Mr. Lind at that time was very prejudiced and very much under the influence of the extreme radicals in Mexico. He seemed at times overwrought and nervous.

Mr. KEARFUL. Can you state the substance of what he said on the subject mentioned?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I had so many conversations with Mr. Lind, I saw him so often, as he lived in the embassy, that I can not remember in an exact manner exactly what he said.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were you present with him when something was mentioned about the persecution of priests by the Carranzistas?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. What, if any, remarks did he make expressing his sentiments in regard to it?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I considered that it was pleasing to him.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you judge that from what he said?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I judged that from what he said; yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you get any impression from what he said as to whether President Wilson agreed with that sentiment on his part?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; that I did not. I can not go that far.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he say anything that gave you to understand that he was not shocked by the fact that the Carrancistas had killed priests in the interior.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; I do not think it shocked him. The Carranza people evidently thought that these atrocities were not unpleasing to the American Government, and I do not think at that time that this Government made any protest to its accredited representatives with the revolutionists.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you know of any expressions on the part of Members of the Cabinet or President Wilson excusing the excesses of the Carrancistas against the church?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. Secretary Baker, in the autumn of 1916, when these atrocities were mentioned in the campaign, made a statement that even our soldiers in the Revolution against England committed analogous acts, which, of course, is not borne out by history.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did he take the position that the Carranza revolution was on a par with our revolutionary movement?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you come in contact with a great many Americans who were living and operating in Mexico while you were there?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. A great many of them.

Mr. KEARFUL. What character of people were they?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, miners, lawyers, doctors, people in trades, oil operators. I think generally they were very representative and a very good element, and did more to make Mexico a modern country than any other foreigners.

Mr. KEARFUL. How did they compare with their fellow citizens in this country engaged in similar pursuits?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think they compared very favorably.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know whether they demanded or received any special privileges which gave them advantages over Mexicans or other foreigners operating in Mexico?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I never knew of any. All the privileges were granted under general laws.

Mr. KEARFUL. Which were open to anybody who desired to take advantage of them?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Which were open to anybody who desired to take advantage of them. The Government merely had to be petitioned and the necessary form gone through and they were open to the world.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were the Americans there generally a class of law-abiding people?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. While I was there there were exceedingly few cases where an American citizen was arraigned for any disorderly conduct or any breaking of the regulations of the Mexican Government.

Mr. KEARFUL. From your knowledge and experience in Mexico, what is your opinion with respect to the policy pursued by this Government toward Huerta?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think it was fundamentally wrong. Until the 4th of March, 1913, I was taught that the paramount interest of the country is the protection of the lives and property of its citizens, not the reforming of foreign governments or siding with the revolutionary movements against a foreign government, which have nothing to do with the interest of its citizens or their property; but the present administration does not seem to think so. By the recognition of the Huerta government we would have continued in Mexico an organized government which we could have dealt with and which would have lived up to its international agreement with the United States, for the Huerta government was exceedingly anxious to have the good will of the United States, and Gen. Huerta realized that without the good will of the United States no Mexican government can exist, as has been amply proven by the history of Mexico during the last six years.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you ever know of any other incident in the diplomatic history of the United States in which this Government undertook to eliminate the de facto head of a foreign government and to say what sort of a government the people should have?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No. Of course, this Government did take action against Maximilian, which was perfectly natural, as the establishment of Maximilian's government there would have been very repugnant to our ideas and would have been an infraction of the Monroe doctrine. It was a case of self-protection.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was the establishment of a government in Mexico by European powers, was it not?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. But with respect to the establishment of a government by the people themselves?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Never. But we seem to be in an era of meddling.

Mr. KEARFUL. What have you observed to be the results of the policy that were produced with respect to the eliminating Huerta and the substitution of a government of our own choice?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, the present chaotic state of Mexico. That is the best answer to that, I think.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did Gen. Huerta ever give expression in conversations with you to his estimate of what the revolutionists would do if they should come into power by the aid of the United States?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. He said that by his overthrow organized government would cease to exist in Mexico, and that the revolutionary party would never be able, in his opinion, to bring about organized and orderly government. I telegraphed the Department of State once a statement that Huerta made along those lines. I can not remember the exact wording of it. I likewise informed the Department of State fully as to the anti-Americanism and dislike of the United States of Carranza.

Mr. KEARFUL. The anti-American attitude of Carranza?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes. I mean his dislike of the United States.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you remember in one of Huerta's conversations with you, of which you made a memorandum, he stated something like the following: "The present task in Mexico is not one of establishing democracy, but of establishing order. Before peace can be established in Mexico there must be a general reconstruction of the system of government, as opposed to that established by Porfirio Diaz, whose government, however, was a necessity of the times and circumstances. I do not criticize the rebels of the north thoughts, but they will never, in the event of their triumph, be able to establish a government in Mexico, and one of their first acts, if they ever do triumph, will be to turn upon the United States, whom they are now praising"?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I remember that perfectly; yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know whether the rebels, after they triumphed, did turn upon the United States?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think that it is a known fact that they did. They did not join with this country in the war, but did what they could to give comfort to its enemies. They passed laws which have embarrassed foreigners, and, of course, Americans, in the carrying out of their business. They have certainly shown no friendship toward the United States in any way. More Americans have been murdered in the last six years than ever before. I think that is a fact, is it not? None of the outstanding questions have been settled.

Mr. KEARFUL. The records show that. Did you ever have any reason to believe that our ambassador to Mexico, Mr. Henry Lane Wilson, was concerned in the effort to overthrow Madero, or had any knowledge of the assassination of Madero until afterwards?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I am convinced that Mr. Wilson had no fore knowledge and nothing to do with it in any way whatsoever, and I never found any evidence of such knowledge during my time in Mexico. Mr. Wilson simply did what was the best to do at the time, and he should have received the thanks of the administration instead of the treatment which he did receive.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know what the feeling was among the Americans in Mexico as to the work that was done by Henry Lane Wilson?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. The feelings of Americans in Mexico, without exception, was one of satisfaction and commendation.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you any opinion that you care to express as to what this country ought to do, if anything, to protect Americans in Mexico or prevent the recurrence of the outrages that have been perpetrated upon them?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. If this Government had held the present Mexican Government to its obligations, and not let the matter slide along and merely protest, it would have had much more effect. If they can kill Americans with impunity and only receive protests, of course, it does not deter them from doing it in the future.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your opinion as to what ought to be done in the present state of affairs, if anything?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, at the present moment I do not know very much about the relationship of this Government to the Mexican Government, nor do I know how far the Mexican Government is able to protect Americans. I do not believe that the present Mexican Government worries itself very much about the protection of Americans, if it could I doubt if it would do better.

Mr. KEARFUL. But you believe that American citizens who have gone to Mexico on the invitation of the Mexican Government, guaranteeing them the protection of its laws, are entitled to receive it, do you not?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Certainly, I believe they are entitled to receive it, but if their own Government will not support them how can we expect the Mexican Government to take its obligations very seriously?

Mr. KEARFUL. What, in your opinion, ought to be done to remedy that situation?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. The Mexican Government should be told that they must live up to their international obligations or the United States will follow out that which may be best in its opinion to enforce those obligations.

Mr. KEARFUL. Would you stop at telling them that?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; I would not.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that such a statement would be respected by them?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. If they believed that it meant action, it would be respected.

Mr. KEARFUL. After many demands which have not been followed up by action, what do you think would be necessary to make them believe that action would follow?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. A time limit; that certain things must be done within a certain time.

Mr. KEARFUL. If there is nothing done, what should follow?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. That would have to go to Congress.

Mr. KEARFUL. Would you be in favor of armed intervention by this country in Mexico, if the present attitude of the Mexican Government should be continued?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I would only be in favor of a temporary intervention as a very last resort, after the exhaustion of all other remedies.

Mr. KEARFUL. What course do you think that such intervention should take, other remedies being exhausted?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Blockading of their ports, closing of the northern frontier, various coercive measures which could be brought to bear upon them. I think it is a very remote necessity, and I trust that we will get a Government in Mexico in the near future that will be prepared to live up to its obligations, and that we will be able to establish an era of good feeling between the two countries. I have never been an interventionist, and I like the Mexican people exceedingly, and I believe they have within their borders men who can govern the country properly.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you think about the large number of Mexicans who are exiled from their country; as to whether they are of the type that can be relied on for the establishment of a Government?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think some of the best men in Mexico are exiled. The Mexican Government should grant a general and unconditional amnesty to all refugees.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you believe it would be worth while to take coercive measures merely for the temporary purpose of compelling a compliance with demands?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; I do not.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think that any measures that might be taken should be toward the establishment of permanent peace?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Toward the establishment of a permanent government, with which we could do serious business.

Mr. KEARFUL. What have you observed as to the influence of the Catholic Church in Mexico upon the natives, as to whether it has been good or bad?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, the Catholic Church is the traditional church of Mexico and the majority of Mexicans, of course, are Roman Catholics. So far as the educational system of Mexico is concerned, that was taken out of the hands of the church in 1857 and taken over by the Government, and if the Mexicans are uneducated it is because the Government has not lived up to its promises.

Mr. KEARFUL. Has it been your observation that the principal educational work that has been done in Mexico has been done by the Catholic Church?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, all the famous men in Mexico before 1857 were educated by the church, by the Catholic schools. There has never been real popular education in Mexico. There are many parts of Mexico where the school houses were built by the Government but no teachers provided. Huerta told me that the crying necessity of Mexico was teachers.

Mr. KEARFUL. In view of the fact that the great majority of the Mexican people are Roman Catholics, and the further fact, as I understand you, that the influence of the Catholic Church in Mexico has not been a bad thing for the people, how do you account for the persecution of the Catholics as an organization on the part of the Government of Mexico?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, that is a traditional matter. That comes down from the days of the Wars of Reform, and from the time when the great Catholic organization owned the richest lands in the country. In Mexico that is traditional.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. Lind, in his testimony, referred to the Catholic party in Mexico as a political party, which, if its principles were supported by the people, might very well control the Government. What do you know about the Catholic party?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. The Partido Catolico was in a way the successor of the old conservative party in Mexico but I think it was very short lived.

Mr. KEARFUL. When was it established?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I do not really know. I know that in the Madero elections of 1911 they played a certain part and worked for Madero, and I think took a certain part in several of the subsequent elections, but I never knew. I was never intimately connected with any of the leaders of it. I could not very well be connected with any political movement in the country.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know whether it was a party dominated by the church, or whether it was a party of citizens?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think it was a party of citizens who were opposed to religious persecution, which exists in many Latin countries where anticlericalism is active.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you understand to be the basis for anticlericalism?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think anticlericalism has a traditional basis, and comes from the days of the clerical domination and participation in the civil affairs of the country. It is also anti-Christian, and not only anti-Catholic.

Mr. KEARFUL. It has been testified here that the basis of anticlericalism in Mexico is that the church teaches morality and stands for law and order and is opposed to revolutionary movements and revolutionary governments founded upon loot and graft.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. That is true. The Catholic authorities in Mexico have always stood for peace and order.

Mr. KEARFUL. What do you know about the methods of holding elections in Mexico? Did they ever come under your observation?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I know that very few people vote, and a good many people do not vote because they are afraid if they vote, and the party they vote against gets into power, they fear reprisals. The Indians fear that it will lead to their being taxed and conscripted for the army.

Mr. KEARFUL. In holding elections, every man must state publicly for whom he votes?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. They have not the secret ballot there, as far as I know. I never investigated their forms, but I do not think they have the secret ballot. The votes are in most cases not counted. I remember after the Madero election, when no other serious candidates were in the field excepting Madero, I went into the House of Deputies, where I saw in a room there stacks and stacks of ballots which had come in from various parts of Mexico and had never been opened or counted.

Mr. KEARFUL. After the result of the election had been declared?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you observe the manner of holding elections that took place during the time of Huerta?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Well, I know that an election did take place. I presume it was very much along the same lines as other elections in Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. You did not visit any of the polling places?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; but I believe it represented the will of the people as much as any other election.

Mr. KEARFUL. In other words, you think that the elections in Mexico generally do not represent the will of the people?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Up to the present time they certainly do not.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think it is possible to hold an election in Mexico which would be free and fair as it is understood in this country?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I think it would be possible, but I think it would be very difficult and improbable.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you believe it would be possible for any candidate who might be opposed by the governmental authorities to take his seat as a result of the expression of the will of the people?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. No; I do not.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. Buckley, in his testimony before the committee, referring to the attitude of Mr. Lind, said:

In a conversation with Mr. O'Shaughnessy, on a remark of the latter that he had just received a report to the effect that several Catholic priests had been killed, Mr. Lind stated that this was good news, that the more Catholic priests they killed in Mexico the better it would suit him, and the more pleased the President would be.

When Mr. Lind was testifying he was asked whether he made any such statement to you, and he denied having made any such statement, most positively and emphatically, and further testified that he had never stated that he attributed the ills of Mexico to the Catholic Church, and denied that he ever entertained such sentiments. Is it true or not that Mr. Lind made any such statement to you in respect to the killing of Catholic priests?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I regret very much to say that Mr. Lind did make that statement. I must add, however, that he did not, to my memory, bring in the name of the President of the United States. He did not say anything about the President.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did that conversation occur after his visit to the President at Pass Christian?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you receive any impression from his conversation with you as to whether the President disagreed with him in regard to his sentiments?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. I have no impressions along those lines. The whole policy of the administration toward Mexico from March 4, 1913, to the present day, and especially the taking of the Port of Vera Cruz, by which we broke a treaty, is so preposterous and so damaging to our good international name that the sooner we forget about it I think the better. It was brutal, unwarranted, and stupid, and has harmed us greatly in Latin America.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are there any other matters you care to mention?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Not that I can think of at the present moment.

Mr. KEARFUL. That is all I care to ask you.

(Whereupon, the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

Testimony taken at Washington, D. C., on May 5, 1920, by Francis J. Kearful, Esq., in pursuance of an order of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

TESTIMONY OF G. W. BARTCH.

(The witness was duly sworn by Mr. Kearful.)

Mr. KEARFUL. You may state your full name.

Mr. BARTCH. G. W. Bartch.

Mr. KEARFUL. Where do you live?

Mr. BARTCH. Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mr. KEARFUL. What is your profession?

Mr. BARTCH. Lawyer.

Mr. KEARFUL. You have been summoned to give the committee the benefit of your knowledge of Mexico, based upon your experience and your investigations. What opportunities have you had to learn conditions in Mexico?

Mr. BARTCH. Before the revolution I was in Mexico a number of times. The first time I went down to Mexico was in 1907, to make an examination of some mining districts and the mining law in Mexico, and mining districts in the State of Oaxaca, with a view to the tonnage that would come to a railroad. I was sent there by some people in New York, or in the East. I made an examination and a comparison of the mining laws of Mexico with our own mining laws and reported to them. I believe I stated that was in August, 1907. I went down in July and came back in August.

Mr. KEARFUL. What sort of experience did you have in Mexico?

Mr. BARTCH. The parties then obtained a concession from the Mexican Government to build a railroad from Salina Cruz to Acapulco, and from the junction of the Rio Verde River to the City of Oaxaca, and I became general counsel. After that I made a number of trips down to Mexico City and to the City of Oaxaca and that southern country, until October, 1911, which was the last trip I made in the interests of the company.

Mr. KEARFUL. What sort of experience did you have personally in the country?

Mr. BARTCH. Well, I organized a holding company for them, for the railroad company. The railroad company was organized under the laws of New Jersey, and the holding company under the laws of Arizona. Then I went with them over the line of the road, and was sent down afterwards to purchase the Oaxaca and Ejutla Railroad, which I did purchase. I looked over the line in the Valley of Oaxaca, and visited several other mining districts a number of times, and in the course of my employment I had considerable business at Mexico City with the department of the Government, and I became acquainted with a number of leading Mexicans, including President Diaz and Senator Tomacho, Senator Jose Castelasos, and Gen. Aguilar, who was chief of President Diaz's staff. I became acquainted also with a number of attorneys there. Lic Gande was one, and Lic Vasconcelos.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the nature of the railroad concession that you mentioned?

Mr. BARTCH. The railroad concession gave the corporation the right of way over the national lands, along the entire line, and also facilities at Acapulca and Salina Cruz, and in harbors along the coast, and made connections with the City of Oaxaca and the Mexican Southern road there, and a narrow gauge running into the City of Oaxaca from Puebla, for a period of, as I now recollect it, 10 years. It may have been longer. It also provided that they should take in all their material from foreign countries free of duty and exempt from all taxes, state or national, as I now recollect, for a period of 15 years. It was quite a valuable concession.

Mr. KEARFUL. And in consideration of those privileges and exemptions, what was the concessionaire required to do?

Mr. BARTCH. He was required to build the road and complete it within a certain time.

Mr. KEARFUL. What security did he have to give, if any?

Mr. BARTCH. To put up, as I recollect it, $96,600 in Mexican internal bonds. I am not sure of that term, but it was Mexican bonds. I think it was internal bonds. They bore 3 per cent interest, I think. That was put up by them.

Mr. KEARFUL. What became of that security?

Mr. BARTCH. It is still there, so far as I know.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was the road ever built?

Mr. BARTCH. The road was not built.

Mr. KEARFUL. Why not?

Mr. BARTCH. On account of the revolution. I might say here that during my visits down there in President Diaz's reign we found everything very agreeable. There seemed to be peace everywhere. We were not disturbed. In fact, so far as my own personal treatment was concerned, it could not have been better. I do not recollect of ever having an improper word said to me. I felt perfectly free. I slept with the people in the mining camps and on the ranches, where they had no locks or doors, and never had anything disturbed. In the city of Oaxaca, I used to sleep with my doors and windows open, and when I went away for a number of days or for a longer period I left my things right in my room and had nothing disturbed. The country was under admirable control, as I thought. I felt just as safe there as I did in Salt Lake City, as far as that is concerned. That continued until after the revolution broke out.

Mr. KEARFUL. Just a moment, before you go into that. Are you more or less familiar with the policies of the American Congress in the past in granting aid to the construction of transcontinental railroads across the western part of the United States?

Mr. BARTCH. My recollection of that is that the American Congress issued bonds to the Union Pacific from Omaha to Ogden in the sum of $25,000,000, and to the Central Pacific from Ogden to San Francisco in the sum of $27,000,000, and in addition to that granted them every alternate section of Government land on each side of the railroad for a distance of 20 miles.

Mr. KEARFUL. And in the case of the disposal of any of these lands before the definite location of the road, lands to a further extent were granted in lieu of those?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir; that is my understanding.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you remember whether it was a general practice to make these large land grants to aid in the construction of railroads?

Mr. BARTCH. I think so.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were there any grants of land, or grants of money or bonds to the railroads that you had to do with in Mexico?

Mr. BARTCH. No; we had no subsidy. I might say now that it was understood that we had one of the best concessions that had been granted there, but there was nothing of that kind granted.

Mr. KEARFUL. That is, the concession you obtained was considered more favorable than those under which the other roads had been constructed?

Mr. BARTCH. It was considered quite favorable. We were better protected than others, and we had these exemptions from taxation.

Mr. KEARFUL. What would have been the results to the country, by way of benefits or otherwise, by the building of that railroad you have mentioned?

Mr. BARTCH. Well, the building of that railroad would have made a connecting link between the Guatemalan Railroad with the Mexican Central and other roads in Mexico City, connecting at the City of Oaxaca with a narrow gauge, but in contemplation finally for us to build to Mexico City. However, we had no concession for that. Under Diaz's administration, though, I think we could have gotten it. That would have meant a transcontinental line through both countries clear up to Canada, and to my mind would have established a great transcontinental line which would have been of great benefit to the two countries, and would have been of immense benefit and interest to Mexico in getting a market for the produce of that southern country, and also to this country in getting the advantage of the Mexican products, and Mexico's other resources, hidden resources, that were not yet developed.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you ever personally have a conversation with Porfirio Diaz, in which he expressed his sentiments in regard to the desirability for Mexico of encouraging Americans and American capital to come into that country?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Please state what sentiments he expressed in that regard.

Mr. BARTCH. Gen. Humphrey and I and several others, I do not recollect them all, now, called on Porfirio Diaz in 1907, and had an interview with him, through an interpreter. The President could talk English some, but in his interviews he generally talked through an interpreter. The interview was very pleasant and very satisfactory. He said, referring to the people there, "We like you Americans. You are a progressive people. We like to have you come among our people, so that our people will learn your ways. Our people don't know. They have not had the opportunity and they are not educated as your people. We must educate them."

On another occasion, a friend of mine said to me, and I am not sure whether that was not also stated in that interview, that in reference to the political conditions there, "Our people can not vote as your people. They are not educated. We must educate them, and then they can vote the same as the people of the United States."

He expressed himself quite forcible to me frequently, in regard to our colonies of Americans, or American colonies. He said they were industrious, and if I mistake not he said they were the best colonists they had had, and spoke of some of the fruit and various things they cultivated in tilling the soil. It was not alone Porfirio Diaz, but those who were interested with him. They seemed to be very friendly.

I talked with Senator Jose Castelasos many times on that subject. He had been three times President of the Mexican Senate, and was a scholarly gentleman, a man that probably understood Mexican affairs as well as any other man in Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. By the way, do you know where Senator Jose Castelasos is now living?

Mr. BARTCH. The last I heard of him, I had a card from him not long ago, he was still in New York.

Mr. KEARFUL. He is living there as an exile from Mexico, is he?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. He was well versed in governmental affairs, and he took me on several occasions to the Mexican Senate, when it was in session, and I met quite a number. At that time they had some strong men. There is no doubt about that. There were a number of other men I became acquainted with, among them Francisco de la Barra.

Mr. KEARFUL. He also is exiled, is he not?

Mr. BARTCH. That is my understanding. Limantour was a strong man, a strong financier. So was Gamboa. Gamboa was a great statesman, in my opinion.

Mr. KEARFUL. He was Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Relations?

Mr. BARTCH. He was the secretary under the Huerta administration.

Mr. KEARFUL. He was subsecretary under Diaz?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes. There was a strong coterie of men there that were capable of running the Government.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the attitude of Porfirio Diaz and the other official Mexicans toward the Mormon colonies in the northern part of Mexico?

Mr. BARTCH. Quite favorable, as far as I could ascertain.

Mr. KEARFUL. Were they glad to have them there?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you had special occasion to know just what the Mormon colonies did in Mexico?

Mr. BARTCH. Well, in my investigation as an attorney. I never was at the colonies.

Mr. KEARFUL. What did you learn in respect to the number and extent of the colonies, and what they were doing for themselves and for the development of the country?

Mr. BARTCH. In my investigation I learned that when they first went there the country was generally barren, much the same as our own country was in the West. The same great range of mountains, the Rocky Mountains in our country, extends down through Mexico and becomes the "Sierra de Sur and Sierra Madre." They began to cultivate the land and build homes, and soon began to have large tracts of land under cultivation, and they organized town sites and built up towns.

The towns of Colonia Diaz, Colonia Juarez, Colonia Dublan, Colonia Garcia, Colonia Pacheco, Colonia Chuachupa, Colonia Morelos, Colonia San Jose, were all towns of that character, which were built up principally by the Mormon people, although, of course, a good many Mexicans live there also. When they went in there at first, especially at Colonia Pacheco, and Colonia Chuachupa, they had a good deal of trouble with the Apache Indians. That was in their early history. They got rid of those, and got the country in a condition that it could be settled.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was back in the eighties, was it not?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes; that was a long time ago. But some of them went into that country at that time. At that time it was a dangerous thing. The Mexicans themselves at that time could not do anything.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did they use modern methods of farming and bring blooded stock and things of that kind into the country?

Mr. BARTCH. The evidence shows that decidedly. They had very good stock, cattle, and horses. I think the record shows in that line perhaps about the same as it would in our own country. And they planted orchards, and had an abundance of fruit, and raised all sorts of things that are raised in that climate.

Mr. KEARFUL. What kind of houses did they have, compared with the Mexicans?

Mr. BARTCH. Some of them had very fine houses—many of them had, compared with the Mexicans. Of course, you would say the Mexicans had huts, while you would say the others would be dwellings. Gen. Salazar himself said the Mexicans lived in huts while the Americans lived in mansions.

Mr. KEARFUL. What sort of people were those Mormons, as to being peaceable and law-abiding?

Mr. BARTCH. The Mormons, as far as I could ascertain, were generally peaceable. They are a peaceable people, they are an industrious people. As far as I could ascertain, they were the same in Mexico, and as far as my research went they complied strictly with the laws of Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did they ever have any trouble with the Mexicans up to the time of the Madero Revolution?

Mr. BARTCH. Not that I ever heard of. I don't think I have in the record anywhere any serious trouble. The fact is, up to that time the Mexicans and the Americans were friendly. There was a friendly feeling among them. Quite a number of Mexicans joined the Mormon church and they had their representatives among them, and they seemed to live in peace and harmony with each other. There was very little difficulty in any way, either between this Government and the Mexican Government, or between the people.

I might suggest here that under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo there are strong provisions between the two countries, and it seems to me that at the time when that treaty was made that it was made to induce people of the one country to settle in the other, for the purpose of establishing commercial relations between the two countries, and they were to enjoy the protection that would be due to any first-class nation, and the right to be inviolate in their homes and in their religion.

The result was that many of the Americans settled in Mexico, and a great many Mexicans settled in this country. They have had our protection; they have had the same recourse to our courts that the American people have had. That was probably true during the Diaz administration in Mexico. I might say that in my interview with him I became impressed with him as one of the greatest rulers of that day. He understood his people. He handled them the only way that I have been able to figure out how they could be handled, and under those circumstances there was very little trouble.

And further, he developed the country. When Porfirio Diaz became President of Mexico, I think all Mexico had about 385 miles of railroad. That was, I believe, in 1885. When he was forced to abdicate there was, as I recollect, 17,000 miles of railroad. When he went into power the mining interests, so far as smelters and such like were concerned, if there were any, they were very few, and they were of an inferior character. When he left there they had some of the best smelters that are found in either country. As is well known, the American Smelting & Refining Co. had large interests there. Mexico was being developed rapidly.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. William Jennings Bryan has this to say, in the Commoner of January 30, 1903, stating of Porfirio Diaz:

With the exception of one term he has been President since 1876, during which time he showed wonderful ability, and it is doubtful if there is in the world to-day a chief executive of greater capacity and devotion to his people. Certainly, no people have made greater relative progress than the Mexican people have made under the administration of Porfirio Diaz. Education has been promoted, law and order established, agriculture developed, commerce stimulated, and nearly every section of the country connected by railroad with the capital.

Does that accord with your knowledge of President Diaz?

Mr. BARTCH. It does. I will say here that President Diaz's intention was to establish a system of education throughout Mexico. He had established many schools in the southern part of the country. I visited one about 5 miles east of the city of Oaxaca. It was taught by a bright Spanish girl. She had excellent decorum, and they seemed to be getting along nicely. The children were dressed nicely. That was the only school that I visited. I simply wanted to see what they were doing. But I was informed by different parties there that they were pretty well established in that southern country at that time, and I saw a number of photographs that were taken of schools that showed them very nicely. I also was invited to an interview with Archbishop Keilo of the city of Oaxaca, and he gave me a great deal of information in that respect. He stood high with the Mexican Government at that time, under President Diaz. He also described those schools in a similar way, and what they intended to do, and what ought to be done.

Mr. KEARFUL. What have you observed as to the influence of the Catholic Church in Mexico; whether it was good or bad for the people?

Mr. BARTCH. I never investigated that subject to any considerable extent. I became acquainted with a number of them, and among them Archbishop Keilo, who was a very high-toned gentleman, and from the sentiments that he expressed to me I would think that their influence would be good, would not be detrimental to the Mexican people. The church itself, however, in the past, as is well known, influenced the nation politically and otherwise, no doubt about that, but I think there was a great change after President Diaz took hold of reins.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you remember that the change took place during the time of President Juarez, and the adoption of the reform laws?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you judge from your contact with the church dignitaries as to whether they stood for law and order and morality and education?

Mr. BARTCH. They always expressed themselves that way to me. In some respects their laws are better than ours. Their mining laws are decidedly better, in my judgment.

Mr. KEARFUL. In the course of your investigations, did you learn of a plan on the part of certain radical elements in Mexico to drive out the Americans and take away their properties?

Mr. BARTCH. I did.

Mr. KEARFUL. When was that plan originated?

Mr. BARTCH. As near as I can locate it, it was conceived about the time of the fomenting of the Madero revolution.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was the plan, as you learned it?

Mr. BARTCH. The plan was to overthrow the government of Porfirio Diaz and to drive all the Americans out of Mexico and divide their property.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was the slogan under that plan, "Mexico for the Mexicans"?

Mr. BARTCH. "Mexico for the Mexicans," and "The United States for the Gringos."

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you understand that the phrase "Mexico for the Mexicans" as they used it meant property of the Americans and other foreigners for Mexicans?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir; their entire property.

Mr. KEARFUL. Prior to that time, what was the relation as to good feeling or otherwise between the Americans and Mexicans?

Mr. BARTCH. There was a very good feeling, as the evidence shows, a very good feeling between the Mexicans and Americans. They mingled among each other, and there seemed to be no difficulty, as far as I could discover. In fact, I have taken a good deal of evidence to support that.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was it about the time of the conception of this plan that this feeling on the part of the Mexicans began to change?

Mr. BARTCH. Right after the breaking out of the revolution in 1910, when the first of it became known, the feeling began to change. When the rebel soldiers began to make their invasions through those northern district they created an anti-American sentiment, and it was part of their plan to do that. Their first invasions were not so bad as they become afterwards.

Now, on that subject, with your permission I would like to refer to the testimony of a few of their fights to show you what I base my conclusions on. Some time before the breaking out of the Madero revolution a committee of prominent Mexicans called upon a gentleman by the name of Henry A. Martineau, who was an American, and wanted him to join their cause. They told him there would be a revolution, and they wanted him with them. They divulged their plans to him. He did not remember the exact date when they came to him and told him there would be a revolution to overthrow the government of Porfirio Diaz and to drive the Americans out of Mexico, except those who would be with them, and they wanted to know whether he would join them. All those who favored President Diaz were to be run out. He replied that he could not join them; that he himself was an American, and in case anything of that kind occurred he would remain neutral. He said he tried his best to get them to desist from it, told them that it would mean a great loss of life and a vast expenditure of money, advised them not to attempt it, that the country was doing well, and strongly advised against it. They said, when he told them he could not join them, it made no difference, the revolution was bound to come. Then he asked them when it was to break out. They would not give him the date, but said it would be soon. He was at the town of Madero at that time.

From the talk he had with them he was very deeply impressed. He felt that he could make no impression on them to desist from it; that they were determined to proceed. He then went to his home at Chuachupa to watch events. He said that when the revolution broke out the proceedings of the military forces were substantially as they had outlined them to him; that is, their proceedings toward the Americans and foreigners. They created an adverse sentiment against foreigners, a hostile sentiment, and that was directed especially against Americans. After the breaking out of the revolution, they began hostile invasions. Their armies would appear at the homes of Americans, at their fields, cut the fences, tear them down, and turn their army horses into their crops, growing crops, and into their gardens. They became more and more violent as time passed, and the Americans found that their appeals to the officials were useless. They were received either with indifference or insolence, and they could get no protection.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was during what was known as the Madero revolution?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. And, subsequently, after Madero came into power and the Orozco revolution started, what acts were then committed showing the carrying out of this same plan, if any?

Mr. BARTCH. They continued just the same. I would like to refer to several of these people to show what I base my conclusions on in that respect. The plan was afterwards on various occasions announced publicly in speeches of generals and leading Mexicans, leaders in Mexico, and I wish to refer to a few of those. The officials, military and judicial, all seemed to be imbued with the same spirit.

Gen. Jose Inez Salazar at that time was one of the leading generals in the Madero revolution and had charge of that district. He made a speech at Pearson, which I can probably better state in the language that was testified to than to state it otherwise.

Mr. KEARFUL. It was reported verbatim in Spanish and translated into English, was it?

Mr. BARTCH. That speech was not, but it is given here, and I will simply state this as the witness has stated it.

As an instance of the speeches made by Mexican leaders, calculated to incite Mexican soldiers and subjects to violence against American citizens, I refer to a speech made by Gen. Jose Inez Salazar at Pearson, July, 1912.

Now, that particular speech was reported to him by Hiram Turley, who was at the meeting, and several other Americans were also at the meeting. His speech impressed Turley and all of them very much, because they saw there would be trouble. In the course of his speech he said that Gen. Salazar stated:

Look at the homes that these gringos live in; look at the huts that you Mexicans live in; look at the fine clothes that these gringos wear; look at the rags you Mexicans wear. All of this property belongs to you. These gringos must be run out of the country, and the property divided among Mexicans. Mexico is for Mexicans, and the United States for the gringos. We have tried to make them fight. We have killed their people and robbed them, ravished their wives and daughters, and done everything we could to make them fight, but they dare not fight. They are all cowards, and their President is a cowardly dog and dares not defend them. Under Diaz they flourished, but now there is a change in the Government and we will drive them out of the country.

The witness stated that when Turley reported the speech to him, which was afterwards corroborated by other Americans who were there, it impressed him very much from the fact that this committee of prominent Mexicans had divulged their plans to him and this was in line with what they had stated would be the result of the revolution.

Now, on that same line, I refer to the case of Albert D. Webb. He stated that about the middle of June, in 1912, when the army of Gen. Augustin Sanjilez was invading Colonia Morelos, in the State of Sonora, there was one of his officers boarding at the same place of the fight, and the officer in talking to a lady guest asked her, "How would you like to see the colony of the Mormons made desolate?" She said that she thought that she would not like to see it. The officer then stated, "You will see it in a short time. It will not be long before it is done."

He states that all along until the Americans were finally driven out of Mexico their actions and conduct had the appearance of a concerted movement among the Mexican military forces and hostile nationals that were operating with them to drive the Americans out of the country, who were subject to the command of Gen. Jose de La Luz Blanco, and they informed him that the plan of the Mexicans was to drive the Americans out of Mexico and own their property and homes, and that they described to him certain concessions of land granted by the Mexican Government to Americans, and lands acquired and owned by Americans, and stated that they would all have to leave Mexico.

Now, while we are on this subject, I presume we may as well dispose of these different points?

Mr. KEARFUL. Yes.

Mr. BARTCH. The testimony that I wish to refer to is that of Milton G. Trejo. Mr. Trejo was an old gentleman—I think he was past the age of 70. He lived in Colonia Chuachupa. He was there when the Mexican Army drove the Americans out of that town. He was the only American that was left in the town. He had a Mexican friend who was with him, and he had charge of his farm, a tract of 80 acres, and was living at his home. He found that while the Mexican had charge of that when he was there he felt safe, and that condition continued until about the 1st of March, 1913.

There were a number of raids made upon Chuachupa. They were driven out of that town on the 31st of July, 1912. At that time Gen. Antonio Rojas with a hostile army invaded the town and called a meeting at which there were a large number of Mexicans, and he also was there. The officer next to Gen. Antonio Rojas made a speech at the meeting. Mr. Trejo was a Spaniard by birth and education, and understood the Spanish language thoroughly and talked it, and I have here an excerpt of his statement in Spanish and also in English. I take it that all that is necessary is the English, but he also gives it in Spanish.

As I said, the officer next to Gen. Antonio Rojas made a speech at the meeting, and in that speech he stated:

The Monroe doctrine in America for Americans, and our revolutionary plan is Mexico for the Mexicans. The lands which the Americans have was never paid for by them to the Government. Consequently it is ours, and in consequence this village, Colonia Chuachupa, belongs to us, with all its improvements and every kind of property left by the Americans. Madero is dead. The Government is ourselves now.

Mr. KEARFUL. That was in March, 1913?

Mr. BARTCH. That was about the 1st of March, 1913. I could not give the exact date.

Mr. KEARFUL. Madero was killed on February 22, 1913, was he not?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. Under Madero Gen. Rojas declared he was going to support the Government as it was, and, of course, at that time there was no change, so I take it he would still be a federal officer.

Gen. Rojas was there and acquiesced in those speeches, and stated that he was going to support the Government of Mexico, that he was going to be general in chief in the State of Sonora, and that Gen. José Inez Salazar would be commander in chief in the State of Chihuahua, and would carry out the plan they were then organizing in the towns, and donate the property owned by the Americans, including the land owned by Mr. Trejo, to the Mexicans. So that he then became the owner of Mr. Trejo's property, and the witness then stated that in a few days after that speech at that meeting his Mexican friend or tenant, who had been professing great friendship for him, said that he must abide by the law as announced at that meeting, and that he, according to that, was the owner of the property, and then made a firm demand upon Mr. Trejo that he should turn over the land and his personal property to him. Mr. Trejo tried to reason with him, but the more they talked the subject over the more determined the Mexican friend became, and he saw that he was determined to have that property at all hazards, and finally was compelled to pack up his grip that he had and go to the railroad and flee to the United States, and was deprived of his property.

Mrs. Laura A. Meacham resided in Colonia Juarez, and about the middle of February, 1912, a detachment of Mexican soldiers invaded that town. The detachment was under the command of Gen. Salazar. The officer made a speech in which he said: "The Americans have to go, and those beautiful homes will be ours, and we will appropriate these homes." Then he pointed to a house owned by H. C. Bentley, an American, and said, "A Mexican can have that home." He pointed to the home of Henry C. Harper and said, "A Mexican shall have that home, and we will divide all the property among ourselves."

Mrs. Meacham impressed me very strongly as a lady of considerable talent, and of truth, and there is no question in my mind about that, and the manner in which she was treated was shameful. She also stated that after the speech the soldiers openly insulted the ladies in the streets and abused them—that is, the American ladies—and they appealed to the officers but could get no redress.

Now, I wish to refer to the case of Samuel W. Jarvis, an American. This incident occurred about the 25th of July, 1912. Mr. Jarvis had occasion to call on Gen. Salazar respecting some depredations that had been committed against him, and he got no satisfaction from him, but the general directed him to order Julius Romney, an American, to appear at his headquarters the next day at 10 o'clock. That would be the 26th. It was about that time. I would not be positive as to the exact date. I think that is correct, however.

The next day Mr. Romney and Mr. Jarvis and several other gentlemen appeared at his headquarters at the time named. The general then notified Mr. Romney, in the presence of this affiant, that all guarantees for the safety of life and property of American citizens were withdrawn, and commanded him to have all the citizens deliver their guns and ammunition to him at headquarters immediately, and stated that he would furnish them no protection. Mr. Romney said to him that he had no authority to make such an order. Then he placed him and his companions under arrest. Mr. Romney said to him, "We will not deliver our guns. We want them for the protection of our families." Gen. Salazar replied, "I notify you that I have the city of Colonia Dublan surrounded by my soldiers, and my cannon trained on the town, and unless you agree to deliver the guns and ammunition we will blow your town and your wives and children into eternity." Mr. Romney had told him that they had the guns to protect their wives and children, and he made that reply. Mr. Romney then said to him that he did not wish any evil to befall their families, and that he would leave the matter before the people and would advise them to give up their guns and ammunition.

He then released them from prison and sent Mr. Romney to Colonia Dublan with an escort of about 50 soldiers. When they got there they called a meeting of the citizens, and the meeting was held in one of the American's houses. I will quote from his statement:

While they were holding the meeting in the American's house the house was surrounded by about 75 soldiers in hostile mood and commanded by Col. Lino Ponce, who was subject to Gen. Salazar. He gave them but a few moments to decide, and at the same time a force of about 50 soldiers were drawn up in hostile attitude in front of the Union Mercantile Co.'s store. Another force of about 400 soldiers was drawn up in line in hostile attitude in the western parts of the town, and another force were unloading cannons at the railroads and training them on American homes.

Those present at the meeting, seeing the forces against them, decided to advise the people to deliver up their guns; and as they emerged from the house each one, as the witness stated, was covered by a rifle until they began to deliver the guns. The guns were delivered to Gen. Lino Ponce, and in receiving those guns now and then he made an occasional sarcastic remark.

The testimony also shows that when the army came in and invaded the town some of the soldiers gathered in the saloon, I think—at all events it was a building—and were talking over the situation. Some of the Americans were in the place and heard them. They understood Spanish. They said they were going to ravish every American woman from 8 years up, as he places it here, "women and girls." but I remember that was the testimony of a number of witnesses.

Mr. KEARFUL. What effect did that have upon the exodus of people?

Mr. BARTCH. They reported the circumstances to the other people, and the vicious attitude of the soldiers in destroying other property of Americans and the abuse they were giving to the people satisfied them that they were in danger. They at once got together and decided to send all the women and children out of the country on the next train. That was on the 28th of July, 1912. But when they got to the station, there was no building there, but where trains stopped, the train that came in was already overcrowded with other Americans fleeing from other towns, and they could not get on. They then laid all night at the railroad waiting for a train. Another came along, as I now recollect, about 9 o'clock, possibly 10, a mixed train, consisting of a few passenger coaches and the balance box cars, and they all boarded that train with an escort of men and left. They were not permitted to take anything with them except what they carried in their arms. After that train left the railroad was torn up. They had not sufficient clothing and effects with them to make them comfortable, and a committee waited upon Gen. Salazar and appealed to him to permit them to take some of their trunks and effects by wagon overland to make their families comfortable, but he obstinately refused to permit them to take anything.

Mr. KEARFUL. What became of those people, if you know, when they arrived in the United States, at El Paso?

Mr. BARTCH. They lived in tents, the most of them.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did they have means with which to provide for themselves?

Mr. BARTCH. No; as I recollect it now, the United States Government furnished them about $100,000 to aid them while there. I don't know that I ought to give my opinion on that. My own thought was that they ought to have made an appropriation sufficiently large to hold them in Mexico and protect them.

Mr. KEARFUL. Can you give a description of the outrages that were perpetrated on the inhabitants of those various colonies?

Mr. BARTCH. Well, on the night of the 28th of July, when they were there, it is clearly shown that the women and children were abused and insulted in the most shameful way, so that when they were left they were perfectly terror stricken. Now, that incident occurred on the 29th of July.

Now, in answer to your last question, I will endeavor to give the condition of the other colonies at the time they were driven out. The Americans were driven out of Colonia Diaz on July 28, when the army appeared in Colonia Dublan. Some of the Americans at once sent out couriers to all the other settlements to tell them what was going on. They learned that they were going to send detachments of soldiers to all of them, and the couriers described at Colonia Diaz what had taken place at Colonia Dublan, and a detachment was then on its way to that town, and they got out by the time the army arrived there.

Another detachment of the same army was sent to Colonia Juarez, and invaded Colonia Juarez on the 29th of July. The women and children were also sent to the United States in safety.

I should say, with reference to Colonia Dublan, that after the women and children had been sent from the town, the men, except an escort, remained there to try and protect their property, and they were there on July 30 and 31. In the meantime, the soldiers had been destroying their property at random, as they saw first, broke into the houses, smashed their furniture, and appropriated their belongings. On the 1st of August they learned that they were about to determine what they were going to do; that is, the Mexican soldiers were about to determine what they were going to do, and they became fearful of the result. They gathered the people together in the nighttime, and early in the morning they started from town to go into the mountains, where they could protect themselves, and they succeeded in getting out of the town, but when they got out a distance of about four or five miles, some of them observed there a dark cloud in the road, something like a cloud of dust. They detailed a detachment to wait and ascertain what that was. Pretty soon the soldiers came in sight, and finally within shooting distance. As soon as they got within range of the rifles they began to fire upon the Americans, and they divided into two or three columns, trying to capture them. The Americans then headed forward to those comrades in advance, and did not return the fire until one of them was hit in the leg. The bullet, however, was spent and did not break any bones. Then they delivered their guns; they had secreted some of their best rifles and ammunition, and had taken those with them. They then stopped and opened fire on the Mexicans. As soon as the Mexicans found they were armed, they stopped and retreated.

Now, it does not show, it does not appear whether or not they killed any of the Mexicans. I take it, however, that they did, from the fact that Gen. Salazar, in his speech in Colonia Morelos stated that they had killed some of the Mexicans, and that they should pay or words to that effect.

Then then went to a place called "Estajos" in the mountains, which was very difficult of access and where they could protect themselves, and send couriers to other towns, to the men who were remaining back to meet them there and they would leave the country together.

But they were advised of another speech of Gen. Salazar in the evening, in which he stated that they had slipped through his hands this time. "They have slipped through our hands this time, but we will get them yet." Then they sent two couriers to Hachita, New Mexico, and to El Paso, to advise their families where they were, and to look for the best route they could get, so as not to come in contact with Mexican military forces. I should say that these scouts were to return to town. After that speech, however, they left, and on the way back the scouts learned that Generals Salazar and Blanco were in the town of Ojitos, where they had a force of about 3,000 soldiers. They related to them what had occurred and how they were driven out of Colonia Dublan, but neither of them concerned themselves about it. They received their appeals with indifference, and neither offered or gave them any help.

Mr. KEARFUL. These officers you mention were federal commanders?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Under Madero?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. And the others who had committed the depredations were rebels under Orozco?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. The number of rebels at that time in all that region, as near as I could determine, as the witnesses stated, was about 1,700. So that the federals had a force sufficiently large to protect the colonies, if they had willed to do so.

Now, to further show their attitude I wish to refer to the affidavit here of Derenda B. Farnsworth, filed in the case of Gaskell Romney, which contains a copy of a letter of Gen. Blanco wrote to Mr. Farnsworth. Mr. Farnsworth knew him very well. Shall I read that letter?

Mr. KEARFUL. If you think it is important.

Mr. BARTCH. I think it is. It reads as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., July, 1913.

Mr. D. B. FARNSWORTH.

DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry I have the honor to say that Gen. Santinez and I left Agua Frieta on or about July 2, 1912, on our way to Casa Grandes, arriving at Colonia Morelos on or about July 4. We went from there to Colonia Oaxaca, and I left Oaxaca about July 7, 1912, arriving at Ojitos about six days before Gen. Santinez, who arrived there about July 17, 1912, with 750 well-armed and well-equipped Federal military soldiers, 600 of which were mounted cavalry and 200 were armed infantry. We had with us two extra good cannons, Schmierder-Canet of 75 millimeters, two well-operated machine guns, two fusilez, reccor, with plenty of ammunition for the same as well as plenty of provisions for the men. Our men and horses being fresh when we arrived at Ojitos, I was anxious to go back and protect the colonies, but Gen. Santinez decided to stop there, and we remained until the 28th of July, 1912, when we were attacked by Gen. Salazar's combined forces from Casas Grandes.

That was one of the forces that had operated there.

Mr. KEARFUL. Operating against the Americans?

Mr. BARTCH. Well, I don't know whether it is the same force, but he had charge of the entire army there.

We easily repulsed their attack, pursuing them into within 20 miles of Casas Grandes, having taken their provisions and all their artillery, which consisted of five pieces. We remained at Ojitos until about the middle of August, when we started for Casas Grandes, arriving at that point about the 15th of August, 1912.

Respectfully, your friend,

JOSE A. BLANCO.

From that it appears that their army was there all the while these depredations were being committed.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was there any defense of the attitude shown by the Federals or the rebels at any period?

Mr. BARTCH. Not that I ever knew of.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you recollect that during the time of Madero permission was given by this Government for the troops of Madero to go through the territory of the United States in order to attack the rebels under Orozco?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes; I remember that. I remember that very well.

Perhaps I would get this in better order if I would now proceed to give the rest of these outrages in accordance with the line on which I started out.

Mr. KEARFUL. Very well.

Mr. BARTCH. The army invaded Colonia Garcia on July 31, 1912, and the women and children were sent to the United States on that day, the men remaining to try and protect their property. On the way returning from the railroad station the men who had taken the women and children to the station were intercepted by the army and disarmed, and then the army proceeded to the town to disarm them there. They remained there a couple of days to see whether they could protect any of their property, but were finally notified that they were in great danger, that the officers had made serious threats against Americans, and they left in the night and finally also reached the United States.

I should say further, in regard to Colonia Garcia, after they had broken in the homes and seized, destroyed, and appropriated what property they wanted, and had generally devastated the town, a detachment of them proceeded to a large reservoir in the canyon above the town, where they deliberately blew up the dam with dynamite, releasing a large amount of water which rushed down the canyon and destroyed all the mills and buildings that were erected along the stream.

A detachment of the same army invaded Colonia Pacheco on the 29th of July, 1912, and the women and children were also sent away to the United States in safety, and the men were driven from that town on August 3.

Another large detachment of the army proceeded to Colonia Chuachupa. It was a very hostile army, according to the evidence, and a courier was sent to that town to advise the Americans to flee at once before the army reached them. The women and children were taken to the station, and the men that took them there with their guns were disarmed. All except the scouts remained at Chuachupa to try to protect their property. About the 1st of August another courier was sent there to advise them to leave the town immediately, that they were in danger. The parties that were still there gathered up their saddle horses and what provisions they could and hid them in the mountains, and then several of them appeared at the top and watched the army as they came into the town through field glasses.

When they arrived at the town they went in squads from house to house—American homes—broke in the doors, devastated the homes, smashed furniture, turned the horses into the garden, tore boards from the buildings, and built bonfires in the yards of Americans and in the streets with the furniture that they broke up and fence material and boards they tore from the buildings and fences. There were some friendly Mexicans there. The Mexicans kept the Americans advised of what was going on. The Americans remained there until August 6. The friendly Mexicans finally told them that they were searching for them, and if they found them they would kill them, and advised them to flee. Before going, they sent two of them to town—William E. Williams was one of them, as I recollect the evidence—in the nighttime, when the soldiers were all asleep, to ascertain what the real facts were and the devastation that had been committed, and they in a quiet way went to the different homes and saw that they were devastated and plundered, as they had seen through the field glasses. They then gathered the horses and provisions together that they had secreted and started overland for the mountains, and as they passed over the ridge near Colonia Pacheco they said they saw quite a large force of soldiers in the town who were occupying the homes of Americans that had been deserted. They thought there were about 500 in that military force.

They then proceeded on the way to the United States, and some distance from the town of Ojitos they met Gen. Blanco with an army of about 1,500 soldiers, and had a conversation with him. They told him what the rebels had done, and said that he listened to them with marked indifference, and told them they had had similar reports from Americans who had fled from Colonia Juarez and other towns, and said that Gen. Santinez was about 20 miles distant and had also about 1,500 soldiers, but gave them no satisfaction whatever, and made no effort whatever to protect them. They then proceeded from there to the United States.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did the United States make any effort to protect them?

Mr. BARTCH. None whatever, so far as the evidence shows. They were driven from their homes, many of them penniless and without sufficient clothing and material to make them comfortable. When I was taking the evidence of a good many of them, they were living in tents over in Tucson, Ariz., and in covered wagons. I remember one scene that impressed me quite forcibly. I had a lady client, and she sent me word that she could not come to town, and so a gentleman took me down to her home, and when I saw her, I saw that she had seen better days. There was considerable refinement about her, and she was standing at a washtub, washing, doing that to support, I think, a family of six children. She was a widow, had lost everything in Mexico. She has a considerable claim against the Mexican Government. I saw a number of those, and the manner in which they were treated and the way in which they were left was shameful.

Now, the Army, after they were through with the colonies of northwest Chihuahua, then marched over the Pulpito Pass into Sonora. The people that were driven out of Colonia Dublin sent an emissary to those colonies, H. S. Harris, to inform them of the character of the army and to advise them to flee the country. He appeared at Colonia Morelos the first of August. I do not remember the exact date. I recollect the testimony pretty well, however. They called a meeting and he told them what they had done in Colonia Dublan and other towns, and advised them to flee from the town before the army arrived. They sent a courier, James W. Ray, to watch the movements of the army, and he located where they were, and then proceeded to Agua Prieta to confer with Gen. Santinez, for the United States Government had permitted the conveying of troops across American soil from El Paso to Douglas and then across the border to Agua Prieta, and he was encamped there. He told him where the army was, and asked him to protect the colonies.

As I recollect it, that was his mission, to protect that country, and I take it that the reason that the United States Government permitted him to pass through on American soil was because that was the purpose of his doing so.

He made no effort whatever to furnish any protection. He remained there, permitted the army to cross the mountains, and on the 12th of September they arrived at Colonia Morelos. The army of Gen. Antonio Rojas passed within five or seven miles, I think, of Gen. Santinez's army. They also proceeded to Colonia Morelos, arriving there on the 18th of September.

Mr. KEARFUL. Rojas was the rebel commander?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes; and so was Salazar at that time.

Mr. KEARFUL. And Santinez was the Federal commander?

Mr. BARTCH. Santinez was the Federal commander. A committee also waited on Gen. Santinez trying to get him to protect the colonists, but they could make no impression on him. On the way to Colonia Morelos, on the morning of the 11th of September, 1912, Gen. Salazar had scouting squads out to apprehend Americans that might be returning to Mexico. Four Americans who had fled from Colonia San Jose, after locating their families in Douglas, returned to get some of their horses. One was Moroni Fenn and Preston H. Jones was another. I think Moroni Fenn had secured two and the others had secured several of their horses. About 7 o'clock in the morning one of those squads apprehended them and arrested them. They at once took everything they had and marched them before Gen. Salazar at a ranch there. I don't remember the name of it. It is a peculiar name. It is between Agua Prieta and Colonia Morelos. The general at once gave his men orders to guard them and not let them get away.

They then took them before an army of about 800 men and marched them back to Colonia San Jose, without anything to eat, and when they got to Colonia San Jose, they rifled Mr. Fenn's house, one of the first, killed the chickens, about 200 of them, smashed his furniture, gave flour and things that they had to the Mexicans, and did not give them anything to eat all day. When they killed the chickens they even wanted a small piece of those chickens, and they told them they might have that. Then they encamped and looted the different homes during the night, and secured poultry and whatever they wanted. Gen. Salazar made a speech to a large meeting of soldiers and nationals.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you a report of that speech?

Mr. BARTCH. I have, of extracts of it. The American prisoners were under threat of death all the while, and they abused them in the army in marching them, and made no effort to protect them at all. In the speech he said:

"Your President, Howard Taft, is a vile dog, a low-down coward. Your Nation is rotten. The Americans took the territory of Mexico—Arizona and New Mexico—by treason and now they are going to pay for it with big interest compounded. We are going to run all the Americans out of Mexico. We will kill those who do not run before us. The plan of our revolution is simply to run the American dogs out of this country, confiscate their property and divide it among Mexicans. There is no liberty for us. Porfirio Diaz gave them our lands and favored them, despising us. Times have changed. Mexico is for the Mexicans and the United States for the Gringos. Formerly they were the owners of this country and they made us slaves and killed us. Now we are going to kill them or run them out of the country. We have executed their men, we have ravished their women, we have insulted their men and their women in every possible way to force them to take up arms and fight us. They do not fight because they are cowards and afraid of us. Their own Government despises them and abandons them, and dares not protect them, and orders them to run away and escape.

In Colonia Dublan and all the other American colonies in Chihuahua we have taken all the homes from Americans, killing some of them, and we have outraged their women, seized their lands and their houses, and all of their property, and we forced them to flee from the country with nothing but the clothes they had on. But they do not wish to fight and run like dogs. We will not let them return. We will kill all who try to return to their lands. We divided their lands and their property among Mexicans, and now they have nothing to return to Mexico for. We are going to do the same here in Colonia Morelos, Colonia San Jose, and Colonia Oaxaca. We are going to divide all the property among you Mexicans, among those who swear to kill every Gringo that returns here.

The general also stated that when the Americans were fleeing from Colonia Dublan they shot at his soldiers and killed some of them, and that he was going to get revenge on them for it. The affiant states that he afterwards learned that when the Americans left Colonia Dublan they were pursued. I have already stated about the soldiers who fired on them. That was the first that the witness knew anything of that, and from that I take it they probably did hit some of the Mexicans.

The general also stated that President Porfirio Diaz had given the Americans the title to their lands falsely, and that the lands really belonged to the Mexicans and that now things had changed and that Americans would have to suffer the consequences, and repeatedly stated that Mexico was for the Mexicans, and that all the Americans would be driven out and their property confiscated and divided among Mexicans, and referred to Americans as "gringos," "perros," and "cabrones," and using other vile epithets to characterize them. He said that what they were fighting for was to drive the Americans all out of Mexico and secure the freedom of the country. All the while the prisoners were under threat of death, and were compelled to remain submissive and listen to his speech. The large crowd of Mexican soldiers and nationals surrounding them frequently shouted "Viva Salazar," "Muera los Gringos," "Viva Salazar, Chinga los Gringos."

Then, after he had finished his speech, he said to his soldiers: "Take care of them and guard them all night and do not let them get away."

Mr. KEARFUL. What reason did you find to believe that that speech was correctly reported?

Mr. BARTCH. Mr. Fenn appeared to understand the Spanish language very well: talked it fluently, and he was corroborated also by Mr. Jones, Preston H. Jones, and, I think, he stands well as a citizen, as far as I can ascertain. I made some inquiries about him. He said that it impressed him so, while he was making the speech, that, expecting to be killed, he made notes of it afterward, immediately afterwards, and put down these statements. Of course, he had quite copious notes of what he states, but I did not take any more than I have given.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you believe the speech of Salazar was reported with substantial accuracy?

Mr. BARTCH. I do. I would not have permitted it to go on the record if I had not satisfied myself as to that. You will also notice the speech is in line with what so many other witnesses state was his speech, and his conduct and actions.

Of course, in my statement here, that is based on the evidence that I heard. It is understood that I was not one of the parties there. I can only speak from what I have heard from the witnesses.

Mr. KEARFUL. You have had considerable experience as a judge of a court, have you not?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Of what court?

Mr. BARTCH. Of the Supreme Court of Utah.

Mr. KEARFUL. For how many years were you judge of that court?

Mr. BARTCH. I was nearly 14 years on the supreme bench. I was on the bench there, though, about 17 years altogether. I was appointed first by President Harrison.

Mr. KEARFUL. On the Territorial bench?

Mr. BARTCH. On the Territorial bench, and then I was reelected, and reelected after statehood, and finally resigned as chief justice on October 1, 1906, and went back to the bar.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you pursue the same methods in making this investigation that you did as a judge of the supreme court?

Mr. BARTCH. In examining witnesses?

Mr. KEARFUL. Yes.

Mr. BARTCH. I did. I examined them with a great deal of care.

Mr. KEARFUL. You conducted your examination judicially and with a judicial mind? You did not undertake to conduct it in a partisan way, did you?

Mr. BARTCH. No.

Mr. KEARFUL. But only to get at the truth, as a judge would do?

Mr. BARTCH. Only to get at the truth. I might say that some statements were made that I did not permit to go in the record. They were absolutely unmentionable.

Mr. KEARFUL. You mean statements describing the acts of the Mexican soldiers?

Mr. BARTCH. Their acts and conduct.

Mr. KEARFUL. In reference to their attacks upon women?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did you do that because you believed the statements to be untrue, or because they were too outrageous to be in the record?

Mr. BARTCH. I did not, sir; they were unspeakable.

Mr. KEARFUL. You did not believe they were untrue?

Mr. BARTCH. No; on the contrary, I believed they were true from the character of the men who made the statements.

Mr. KEARFUL. What information have you as to the attempted return of some of the colonists to save some of their property, and what happened to them after they returned?

Mr. BARTCH. Well, I think the most of them were driven out of there; had to leave, on account of the acts of violence continuing and the unsafe conditions. Some of them were killed, and various outrages committed.

Mr. KEARFUL. Did these colonists make any representations to the authorities at Washington for the purpose of getting protection?

Mr. BARTCH. That I could not say. I did not go into that subject. There is one case where they did; the case where four were killed in the town of Alamo.

Mr. KEARFUL. In Lower California?

Mr. BARTCH. In Lower California. I remember that. They appealed to the consul, but they did not seem to be able to do any good.

Mr. KEARFUL. They made those appeals to the consul while these depredations were being committed?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. I recollect that in the case of Mr. Arthur Evans, who was imprisoned at Ascencion, that there was an application made to the department, and the consul was instructed to look into the matter and investigate it.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know whether the same anti-American attitude existed on the part of the Carranza revolutionists that existed before? Has there been any change for the better under the Carranza government?

Mr. BARTCH. I know of no change.

Mr. KEARFUL. You have heard about the Carranza doctrine, have you not, which was epitomized by the expression, "Mexico for the Mexicans"?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is that the same old cry of "Mexico for the Mexicans"?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir; all the way through.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you any reason to believe that the American State Department had knowledge as to the depredations that were being committed and the plan that had been inaugurated against the Americans down there?

Mr. BARTCH. I do. I believe they had it in many instances. I take that to be true from the fact that the Secretary of State, in reply to a note from Carranza in May, 1916, I believe it was the 22d of May, 1916, wherein he made some charges against this Government, and in reply, which was submitted to the Mexican Government about the 20th of June, the Secretary of State enumerated a number of instances of atrocities that were committed, and I noticed that I had taken evidence respecting, I think, about all of them. I would not be positive whether all or not, but I know in most of them, and also some that he did not mention. I take it from that that they had knowledge of many of those atrocities.

Mr. KEARFUL. Have you filed with the State Department copies of the proceedings showing the testimony that you took in your investigations?

Mr. BARTCH. I have filed the final documents, consisting of memoranda and depositions, in 115 cases, I think. One of those, however, is an English case, which I prepared under the English law. That is, I had them filed through my associates here in Washington. I prepared the documents.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are you able to state the number of American Mormon colonists who were driven out of Mexico from these various colonies you have mentioned?

Mr. BARTCH. I could not state the exact number, especially of the Mormons. There were some who were not Mormons. Some of my clients were not Mormons.

Mr. KEARFUL. You are not a Mormon yourself, are you?

Mr. BARTCH. No; but I take it that there were several thousand of them. It occurs to me I saw somewhere there were about 4,000 driven out of Mexico from those colonies, but that may not be correct. I did not take the number in the evidence.

Mr. KEARFUL. As far back as June 20, 1916, judging from Secretary Lansing's note to Carranza, you think the American State Department has had full knowledge of the anti-American outrages in Mexico, do you?

Mr. BARTCH. And their knowledge extends previous to that time.

Mr. KEARFUL. But certainly since that time?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. Of course, there might be some, such as I gave you yesterday. I could not say whether they had any knowledge of that or not.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you know of anything being done by the American Government in any case for the protection of American lives or American property or American rights in Mexico, other than the writing of notes?

Mr. BARTCH. I know of nothing effective that has been done. There have been instructions given in our notes from the President to the consuls and officials in Mexico, but to my mind they were not effective.

Mr. KEARFUL. Nothing has been done aside from correspondence, has there?

Mr. BARTCH. Not that I am aware. There is one case that it might be well to refer to, showing that the Mexican Government, from the executive down, had knowledge of what was going on as to Americans.

Mr. KEARFUL. What was that?

Mr. BARTCH. I refer to the case of Ingwald C. Thoresen. Mr. Thoresen, about 1905, went to Mexico to make an examination respecting the beet-sugar industry in Mexico. He examined various districts in the State of Mexico and elsewhere, and in about 1906 he became convinced that that industry could be established there. He had interviews with President Porfirio Diaz, according to his evidence, and laid his plan before him, and Diaz approved of it. He engaged experts to make examinations of the soil, and purchased beet seeds, distributed them among the natives, and his experts taught them how to plant and cultivate the beets. Then he had analyses made of the beets, and through the Mexican Government analytical chemists, Prof. Foex, who made an extensive examination in the State of Mexico, Puebla, I think in Jalisco, Sonora, and Chihuahua, and several other States, with a view to the climatic conditions; the soil, the sites for factories, and the cost of production, labor, and whatever would enter into that kind of an enterprise. Diaz encouraged him and told him that the Government would give him a concession on the best terms that they could.

In 1908, I believe it was, in the spring, he organized a company under the laws of Arizona, capitalized at $2,000,000, and he engaged Dyer & Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, to make plans for the initial factories, at a contract price of $10,000. He made a formal application, and afterwards made a final application for a concession, and was granted one. The concession, I think, was granted July 4, 1906, and he was then given a period of two years in which to put them into effect and prepare them. He paid in stamps $254.30, United States currency, put up $5,000 Mexican 3 per cent consolidated internal-debt bonds. Those were the same character of bonds that I spoke of before that were deposited, in reference to this railroad project. That was at the expense of $2,500 United States currency. His plans were submitted and approved by the Mexican Government within the time allowed, and he continued his explorations, and finally his expert chemists made an analysis that showed that Mexico produced an excellent grade of sugar; that there was no country in the world that produced beets that contained a higher per cent of saccharine matter and pure sugar than Mexico.

He submitted his data and plans to capitalists and they pronounced them feasible. Among those capitalists were representatives of Mr. Harriman, the railroad magnate, and bankers in Utah. He continued negotiations; some of them finally became interested in the project. He carried on the negotiations with them until September, 1910.

He kept his experts in the field. During 1907, 1908, and 1909 he made preliminary examinations of sugar factories in the State of Idaho, devoted his time to the enterprise, and in September the capitalists got together and fixed the day as the 25th of November, 1910, the day they would finance the first factory, and they began this factory.

The concession that he had procured from the Mexican Government was quite favorable. He could erect factories anywhere in Mexico, and it permitted him to take in duty free all of the material from foreign countries, and also exempted it from taxation for a certain number of years—I think it was about 10 years. The experts who filed affidavits in his case, some of them fixed the value of the concession at $2,000,000. Hon. H. H. Ralapp, who was at one time associate justice of the Supreme Court of Utah and was at the head of the sugar business in the United States, stated in his testimony that he thought it was worth $5,000,000.

Mr. Thor Cutter, one of the ablest experts on sugar in the country, also made an affidavit in that case, and said it was worth at least $2,000,000. The data he secured showed the Mexican Government that in that line of business the country is susceptible of great resources, and, of course, the data was of immense value to the Government.

Now, after they had fixed the day as the 25th of November, the revolution broke out in the early part of October, and the revolution at once attained such proportions that the capitalists were unwilling to put up the money until peace would be restored, and they then postponed the day for that. He made application for an extension of time, setting up the reasons growing out of the revolution. In his concession contract there was a clause that in case of any disturbance or any impediment that might be created by superior forces over which he had no control the terms of the concession might be extended, or should be extended, for a time equal to the impediment and for about two months longer. There was another clause in article 23, that no forfeiture should be declared without a notice to the concessionaire to make a defense. On the ground of impossibility of his proceeding to construct the initial plan with the time limit, the chief authorities of the Mexican Government granted the extension; and in that way held the concession good until the 12th of January, 1913.

They had made a promise that they would extend the time of the concession until peace would be restored so he could proceed. He relied on that promise and on the extensions that had been granted previously. Before the last extension expired on January 12 he again made application to the chief executive for another extension. In the meantime he had also applied to the Mexican Government to transfer the concession to a company that he had organized in the State of Arizona, and to have the Mexican Government approve of it. There was nothing in the concession to prevent that. Under its terms he was entitled to it. But he was informed that the Government had made a ruling that only Mexican corporations could acquire that kind of property and they refused to approve of the transfer.

The capitalists then, not being willing to convey the rights that they had acquired to a Mexican corporation, which would bar them from appealing to this Government, sold this concession to Mr. Thoresen, and he became the sole owner. He still kept on, as I have stated, getting extensions, until his last application, made in the latter part of December, 1912, relying upon their promises and the several clauses in the contract providing for its extension. Instead of giving him any notice whatever they canceled the concession about the 15th day of January. The time of the extension had expired on the 12th.

Mr. KEARFUL. 1913?

Mr. BARTCH. 1913. At that time the whole country was in a state of insurrection that rendered it impossible for him to do anything. The plants were located in the Texcoco district, not far from Mexico City, and the country became in such a chaotic condition that a battle occurred in Mexico City about the early part of February, and Madero was deposed on February 19, and finally shot on February 22, 1913.

Now, they canceled that deliberately, as the testimony shows, in the face of those provisions of the contract, in violation of the contract and without any notice to him whatever, and declared a forfeiture of his bonds and all of the money and property that he had. That was done by the chief executive, through his minister of fomento, right from the head of the Government. He had no recourse. The courts at that time and almost during the entire revolution were under the control of the military. Appeals of Americans to the courts were useless. As the witness clearly states, the officials, military, civil, and judicial, were imbued with the same anti-American sentiment that actuated the military forces in acts of violence.

Mr. KEARFUL. In your investigations were there instances given of the futility of appeals to the court for protection?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was any protection ever afforded to these Americans who were outraged?

Mr. BARTCH. In none of the instances that I have on record. In fact, that is quite an interesting subject, and there are numerous instances to which reference can be had, and also with regard to the threats that were made, and afterwards executed, threats of violence and death.

Mr. KEARFUL. Is there any place outside of the State Department where the documents showing the results of your investigation can be found, in case the committee or other Members of the Senate who are interested wish to examine them as to details?

Mr. BARTCH. They can be found with Lexkie, Cox, and Sherier, Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

I should have stated in connection with this concession that the concession contained a clause that all disputes arising between the concessionaire and the Government should be adjudicated in the Mexican courts. While a concession of that kind can not bind a foreign Government, still in that case the chief executive of the nation, through his minister of Fomento, canceled the concession, and declared a forfeiture of the bond without any reference to the courts whatever, also violating that clause of the contract.

Mr. KEARFUL. Has any effort been made to have that matter adjusted since then?

Mr. BARTCH. No; not through my client. It would be utterly useless. As I have already stated, in the first place, under Porfirio Diaz they had a good government. That was overthrown. The rebels then became the Federals, under President Madero. The government of President Madero was overthrown, and the rebels again became the Federals, under Carranza.

Mr. KEARFUL. First under Huerta.

Mr. BARTCH. First under Huerta. Huerta was forced to abdicate, and then Carranza became the President. The country during all the time was in a state of turmoil. It finally drifted into a state of chaos. The courts were under the influence of the military. Under those circumstances I know of no principle of international law that would require an alien who was injured to apply to the courts. In the case of Mexico in my own judgment, especially through northern Mexico, it would be useless, and the courts do not require a useless thing to be done.

Mr. KEARFUL. This committee is proceeding under a resolution requiring it to report its recommendation as to what, if anything, should be done by this Government to prevent a recurrence of the outrages such as you have related in Mexico. What do you think should be done, if anything, to that end?

Mr. BARTCH. This Government ought to proceed at once to appoint an international commission, if it deems the Mexican Government of sufficient stability to warrant it. If not, it ought to appoint an American commission to adjust the claims that arose through the outrages in Mexico, and then compel the Mexican Government to pay those claims. In cases where the Mexican Government permitted outrages to be committed against American citizens, they ought, in addition to the payment of those claims, compel the payment of such indemnities as would deter that Government in the future from permitting such outrages to be committed. That could be done on the ground that many of the outrages that were committed in Mexico were an affront to this Government, as well as an injury to its citizens. I think, in an examination of the principles applicable under the law of nations to that class of injuries, that that would be the proper course to pursue. Extremists have gone so far as to hold that where a foreign country permits its government to drift into a state of chaos, whereby it loses control of its forces, that it should be held responsible on that ground. Now, while it may be said that principle is too broad, and while it may be admitted that it is too broad, still I take it that the weight of authority is that the Government had a right to compel proper indemnity, not only to the individual, but to deter the foreign government from permitting such injury to be inflicted.

Mr. KEARFUL. But if the foreign country is in a state of chaos, what procedure could be followed to enforce the proposed indemnity?

Mr. BARTCH. Of course, the procedure would be to intervene.

Mr. KEARFUL. Take possession of the country?

Mr. BARTCH. Take possession of the country and establish a government. It would not necessarily follow that the country would be taken over, but I do think this: That it would be an act of humanity to the Mexican people themselves for this Government to go there and establish a proper government and to maintain a protectorate over it until such time that they can govern themselves.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you see any other course that is open?

Mr. BARTCH. I do not. From the investigations that I have made I do not believe that the different warring factions in Mexico can get together on any one man. I do not mean to say they have no men to-day that could control that Government if they were permitted to do so; that is, who have the intelligence to do it. I wish to say that in my acquaintance in Mexico, I have found that, especially in southern Mexico, the Mexicans are susceptible of a high degree of culture, but they have no advantages. The only time they ever had a government that tried to raise them up at all was in President Diaz. If he could have continued long enough they would have finally worked out of that.

In my investigation in the State of Oaxaca, and examination of the ruins of Mitia, I noticed that centuries ago they must have had intelligent people, and, as I said, they were descendants of Aztecs. The ruins would show that they had a good deal of latent ability in architecture. In fact, I saw plainly in one of the ruins there, a building that had crumbled, some of the sculptured columns still standing there. It looked almost as though it had been put up recently, and the enamel just the same. That required intelligence at the time.

Mr. KEARFUL. Mr. John Lind thinks that the better class of Mexicans are in the north, and that the salvation of Mexico depends upon their success. Do you agree with him?

Mr. BARTCH. I do not agree with him. My reason for that would be this: In southern Mexico, as I say, they are descendants of that ancient civilization. They have been kept down. Diaz himself was simply a typical Mexican Indian, as you might call it.

Mr. KEARFUL. From Oaxaca?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. The term "Indian" is not a term used there as it is in this country. It has an entirely different significance, a different type of man. Now, I became acquainted with Mexicans there that were highly educated, and, I say, they are susceptible of a high degree of education if they have a chance. In northern Mexico we have a mixture. We have had in the west a great many renegades who committed crimes in the United States, and it is easy to go across the border. They could commit depredations in this country, steal cattle and commit other offenses, and go across the border, and before you could get any requisition papers they would be out of reach. The same way with Mexicans coming over to this country, flying back and forth. So you have a mixture there that you could not class as a pure-bred Indian you will find in southern Mexico; that is, when you take that class. Of course, you take the mountains there about Vera Cruz, the State of Vera Cruz, and in some places in Mishoacan, in the Sierra Madre and Sierra del Dur Mountains, there are people in there that could not be classed with the Mexicans generally. But I could not agree with that idea that the better class of people in Mexico are in the northern part.

Mr. KEARFUL. You do think that the Mexican people have the qualities, that, if they were given a chance, backed by the United States, for example, they could form a good government and be a nation of good citizens, do you?

Mr. BARTCH. I do. And I wish to state that, from my investigations, I feel that they, the better class of Mexicans, would hail the day when this country would establish a good government there.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do they say so openly?

Mr. BARTCH. Well, they dare not, but I have had Mexicans confer with me on that subject. In fact, before this on one occasion I was requested to come here to Washington, and had a long interview with some of those people. They regret very much that this Government did not do something for them. You take the Mexicans in the southern country, and they have many good qualities about them. It is useless to denounce them as a class. You can not say that Mexico is a thoroughly civilized country in the sense the United States is, but there are civilized Mexicans there who would like to have their country in the same condition that this country is, and I think it would be a great act of humanity for this Government to establish a civilized government in Mexico.

Mr. KEARFUL. Do you think this Government owes any duty to its own citizens, and not simply a matter of self-protection?

Mr. BARTCH. I certainly do. This Government has got 2,000 miles of border to protect. It is bound to keep its eye on the ports on the Gulf coast and on the western coast. They have very good seaports on those coasts. The port of Acapulco is considered the second or third best natural port in the world, and in case of a foreign invasion this country, of course, would be concerned. At present this Government has no control over the part at Magdalena Bay nor the Gulf of California. Ships of considerable size can sail up the Gulf of California and land almost in the heart of this country, in Arizona. Why shouldn't this Government be concerned about Mexico? Why would it not be its duty to put that country in such shape that the two countries together could form one great council nation and be of assistance to each other? The railroads are here, the natural means to do it. You can construct a railroad so that you could connect Mexico with Canada and with Hudson Bay. Not only Mexico with the United States but Canada. It would be a great benefit to the whole country if Mexico would have a government that would be a substantial modern government, that would protect the rights of foreigners as well as their own people.

Mr. KEARFUL. Are you prepared to give instances of murders and atrocities committed in the carrying out of the anti-American plan to which you have referred?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEARFUL. Will you proceed to do so?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. In the spring of 1907, sometime, A. L. Foster and three other men were killed in the town of Alamo, in Lower California. I examined a Mr. Church, who was one of the intended victims. They had five men in an adobe house at the outskirts of the town, and they had accused Dr. Foster of giving medical aid to rebels. These were federal forces that did that. The others were accused of having given information to the rebels of their movements. They had them in a room, and they took them out and lined them up against a wall. I am giving this from Church, who escaped. Church was imprisoned in the house, and he noticed an opening in the rear of the building, and he got out through that into the jungle, and as he left the house the shots went off that killed the other four. Then he came across the line, and he said he took the matter up with the State Department and had some correspondence back and forth, and then the matter was dropped. He used some pretty strong epithets against the United States—was very bitter against the United States, the flag, and everything. He had me promise I would not use the evidence unless it was necessary, and so I never did. I never filed the affidavit, but his story is a very interesting one.

On March 4, 1911, or about that time, a military force under Gen. Blanco invaded the ranch of Robert O. Grewell and seized a lot of his property. He appealed to the officer to return his horses, and he refused insolently. Then he overtook Gen. Blanco himself and appealed to him to return the horses so that he could pursue his business. Blanco, instead of granting his appeal, took him along with his army into the battle of Agua Prieta, and during the battle he got an opportunity to escape, and they took a snapshot of Blanco and got him in the picture, and after he escaped, the other side began to search the country for him to execute him because they thought he was a spy. In fact, both sides thought he was a spy. Then they began to commit acts of violence against his family, and he had to move them out.

In January, 1912, James N. Walker, an American citizen, was killed by Mexicans in his own home at Colonia Dublan. Several Americans investigated the case and found the Mexican who had killed Walker. They got the evidence, so that they said there was not any question about his guilt, and then went to the judge and reported the case. They brought the culprit in, and the court set the time for trial, and the American who had obtained the testimony against him appeared there. Then the judge held a secret conference with the culprit and investigated the case himself, would not permit them to testify at all, and discharged the culprit, and that was all that was done about the murder of Walker.

About the middle of June, 1912, Col. Rivera—some called him colonel and some general—appeared in Colonia Morelos with a force of 750 soldiers and camped in the yards of Americans and in the main streets of the town. They began to shoot cattle and chickens that were owned by Americans and leave the offal laying in the hot sun to putrefy. They kept on with their depredations, and in a few days another force of 250 more soldiers appeared under Col. Obregon, who also camped in the same way, and the depredations were continued. Afterwards, Gen. Santinez himself appeared with about 750 more soldiers, camped in the streets and in yards of Americans, and, as stated by the witness, if possible, the conditions were worse than before.

Mr. KEARFUL. Was he the general whose forces were permitted to go through American territory?

Mr. BARTCH. He was the general whose forces were permitted to go through American territory to protect the colonists.

And Mr. Charles W. Lillywhite appealed to Col. Rivera to remove the soldiers from the streets and yards to a place at the outskirts of the town, a very good camping ground, and his appeal was received with insolence and had no effect, but later Rivera removed a small group of soldiers immediately from the front of Mr. Lillywhite's house into another part of the street. Then their depredations and indecencies were continually committed until a committee of citizens waited upon Obregon and Rivera and were received with insolence, and they were permitted to continue in the same way. They were permitted to bathe in the nude in the ditches in the streets, right in the view of women and children, and polluting the water, so that the people had to carry water from about a mile distant for culinary purposes, remaining there about three weeks.

Another victim of threats by those forces was William Adams. His wife died in Colonia Diaz. Mr. Arthur Evans took several relatives and a friend over in an automobile to attend the funeral. They crossed the border at Palomas, and the officer in charge examined the baggage in the automobile and told them they could go on and travel anywhere in Mexico; that no written pass was necessary.

When they arrived at Colonia Diaz the relatives alighted, and Mr. Evans drove his car to one of the places of Mr. Sanford at Ascencion and retired for the night. After he had retired, Mr. Chides, the justice of the peace, who was also commander of a force of soldiers, appeared at the house and demanded to know where Evans was. They told him he was upstairs, and they called him down. He arrested him, then took him over to the adobe hut and imprisoned him there, and Mr. Sanford also. In a few hours they released Mr. Sanford and allowed him to go. They held Evans there until morning, and then compelled him to take an armed guard and the justice of the peace over to Colonia Diaz to see the relatives and to see whether or not they had a written pass. When they got there they did not have the pass, and about that time Mr. Adams stepped up and wanted to know of Mr. Evans what was the matter. He told him they had arrested him because he had no written pass. He took the matter up and interceded for Mr. Evans, and the officer at once flew into a rage and drew his gun on him. He grabbed the muzzle of the gun, and with that he pulled his revolver out of his pocket, and while his daughter was trying to protect him he shot him. She was trying to protect Adams, her father. He shot him, and he was dead in about five minutes, as the evidence showed.

Then the officer ordered Evans to drive on to Ascencion and compelled him to drive at top speed over the ditches and rough roads, and finally his engine gave out. They drew their guns on him and threatened to shoot him if he did not get that engine and car to go. He expected to be shot every moment, as he stated. Then when they got pretty close to Ascencion a wagon came along, and they hooked on to that, and they took him over there and locked him up again.

The next day they took him to court without arresting the accused or the culprit, and there, surrounded by armed policemen and officers, the judge himself took up the case for Chides, the justice of the peace, asking Evans questions tending to exonerate him from the crime and to put the blame on Adams. Evans, of course, was terror stricken and tried to answer the questions as the judge wanted him to, but he failed to do so. They kept him there that day, and the next day they brought him in again and went through the same performance. The third day they brought him in and then permitted the culprit himself to examine him, and finally they drew up an affidavit in Spanish and had him sign that. He could not read Spanish, did not know a thing about what was on it.

Then about that time the officer at Palomas had got word from Mr. Sanford, who escaped at the time of the shooting, and told him what had been going on. He came over to Colonia Diaz and finally got Evans out. The evidence showed that he was completely frightened, and of course signed the affidavit trying to save his life. I should say in regard to Mr. Adams that the same officer had threatened to kill him before, and the threat was carried out.

Mr. J. D. Harvey was killed at his home by Mexicans without any provocation. A Mrs. James Mortenson lived in that vicinity, and several Mexicans with the same force appeared there, and she, as I was told in the statements from the witnesses, saw them coming and barricaded the door. They came up against the door and could not open it. They tried to burst it in. They threatened her with death unless she opened it. She opened the door finally, and then they ordered her to get dinner or supper. She prepared the meal and told them it was ready now. She then took a coffee pot and turned to go to the stove, presumably to put more water in it, and while she did so they shot her in the back and killed her. The little girl escaped.

Marina Scott was also killed at the same place.

On August 1, 1912, a detachment of about 25 soldiers appeared at the home of Joseph I. Clawson, in Colonia Dublan, and forced their way into the house. He was in the room. His family had been driven out on the 29th of July previous. They told him to leave. He said, "No; this is my home." The captain told him, "This was your home once, it is ours now, you will have to leave." He still insisted on staying. He ordered his men to take aim at him, and they all took aim, and he said he looked up those guns and into their faces and he saw it was all up with him. The captain told him he would give him one more chance, and he told him to give him time to put on his coat, and he did, and he left. He said there was a gang outside looking over his home. He had a fine home there. Before he got away any distance he said they had a free fist fight there in front of his house to determine who should have that place.

Joshua Stevens was killed about August 26, 1912. He had persisted in remaining there, after the Americans had been driven out, to take care of his property. The Mexicans appeared one day at his home, and he had several daughters there, and the way his statement showed their object was to molest those daughters. They were out in the field, and he was there, too. He went down there with them and talked with them. Then they started on down together, and as he went along one of them turned around and thrust a dagger into his breast, and they left him. I think he shot one of them, as I recollect it. But by the time the others got there he was dead, and the other one escaped.

Now, in none of these cases was I able to find that any of these culprits were punished, or that the Mexican Government made any reasonable effort to apprehend or punish them.

On September 18, 1912, when Gen. Salazar invaded Colonia Morelos, Daniel H. Schnall and several companions remained there to care for their property after their families had been driven out. The soldiers at once went from one American home to another and looted and pillaged them. Schnall and several companions approached Gen. Salazar and asked him to prevent his soldiers from pillaging their homes and destroying their property, saying that they would be willing to furnish them flour and provisions that they needed if they would not destroy them. Instead of granting their request, he held them there under duress while he went into the store and ordered the clerk—that happened in front of the store. He had a number of soldiers drawn up in line in front of the store. He took him in the store and held him there while he ordered the clerk to tie up various articles as he designated them, to quite a large extent, and they carried them away, and when they were through they finally released them.

They had tied horses behind the store, and he went to get his saddle horse, and as he got the saddle horse a Mexican, one of the soldiers, stepped up and took hold of the reins and said, "That is my horse." Mr. Schnall said, "No; that is my saddle horse." He said, "You keep your hands off." He saw he meant it, and, of course, he walked away and they took the saddle horse. That night couriers were sent from Douglas to Colonia Morelos to warn them that Gen. Rozoran would appear there and they were in danger, and to leave the town forthwith for the United States. They got there in the morning about the break of day. Their saddle horses were gone and they got such horses as they could get, and about noon the army appeared up over a hill, and as soon as they got in sight they began to shoot. They got on their horses in a hurry and got out and left their pack animals, and finally got into the brush and escaped to Douglas.

Gen. Avila, in the latter part of February, 1913, captured a number of Americans in Colonia Chuchupa and held one of them there for ransom in the sum of $1,000, and threatened to kill him, but finally he turned over everything he had, and they let him off.

Afterwards, in the fore part of March, 1913, Gen. Rojas appeared with a command of soldiers and held William E. Williams and other Americans for ransom also to the extent of 100 head of cattle with a value of about $3,000, and they turned over 90 head of cattle to get rid of him.

Findley Merrill, in the latter part of 1913, was hung up by his thumbs by a detachment of soldiers. They drew him up and let him down a number of times and punished him shamefully, and finally took everything he had. He turned over all his money and everything and they let him go. He had remained there also to protect his property.

In the spring of 1914 about 12 men and some women and children returned to Colonia Morelos to try to protect what property they could and cultivate their land. About April, 1914, the situation became very serious. The United States had taken possession of Vera Cruz, and they were preparing, under advice of this Government, to return to the United State for safety. They intended to depart in the nighttime, but the soldiers learned of their intention and then ordered them not to depart. They obeyed the orders, and in the nighttime they broke into their sleeping apartment where the women and children were lying and used all sorts of vile language, until the women were perfectly terror stricken. Then in the morning, after being warned that they should take no property with them, and being given to understand that the property they had belonged to Mexicans, and on pain of being killed, they should take no property with them, and if it was found they did they would kill them, they finally permitted them to go, and they came back to the United States.

When the President issued his proclamation in August, 1913—that is, the present administration—advising them to leave Mexico, it had the effect of aggravating the situation. The Mexicans taunted the Americans with the fact that their own Government would not protect them. The conditions simply became worse. It had that effect. It had the same effect as when President Taft advised them to leave the trouble zone, and again when the Secretary of State advised them to come out in 1914, about April 23, I think it was.

Mr. KEARFUL. Those were orders, rather than advice, were they not?

Mr. BARTCH. Yes, sir. They were proclamations, as I understood. About August 27, 1914, Charles W. Witten and several companions returned to Colonia Garcia to see if they could not secure and protect some property and cultivate some of their land. When they got there they found that the town was occupied by a force of soldiers, and the soldiers found they were there. They had tried to conceal themselves. They at once arrested them, although they had passes from Gen. Ochoa, I believe was the name, and their passes were ignored.

They stated that they lined them up under the eaves of a house while it was raining very hard and kept them there for a considerable time, letting the water run onto them. Then they took them out about 4 or 5 miles from town and were going to take them to an officer higher up and see what would become of them. When they got there they told them they wanted to go to the United States, and after parleying with them a long while they took everything they had and finally let them go, on the condition that they left the country.

(Whereupon, at 6.45 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned, to meet again on Thursday, March 6, 1920, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

Testimony taken at Washington, D. C., May 6, 1920, by Francis J. Kearful, Esq., in pursuance of an order of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

TESTIMONY OF G. W. BARTCH—Resumed.

Mr. KEARFUL. You may proceed, Mr. Bartch, where you left off yesterday evening.

Mr. BARTCH. I testified in regard to Moroni Fenn and others, and I wanted to refer again to that subject.

On the morning of September 12, 1912, Gen. Salazar made another speech of the same vicious character as the one made on the evening before. During the speech in the evening, while he was abusing and insulting Mr. Fenn and his companions, and the President and the citizens of the United States in general, evidently to impress upon his prisoners more forcibly his contempt for citizens of the United States, the general had his interpreter repeat his vicious utterances in English, although he knew that all of his prisoners could speak and interpret the Spanish language fluently.

On the morning of the 12th the army and the prisoners moved over to Colonia Morelos, they having been encamped at Colonia San Jose. There, under the command of Gen. Salazar, the soldiers and his officers, without disturbing a single Mexican residence, proceeded from house to house owned by Americans who had fled from the country in fear of his army, pillaged their homes, destroyed their property at random. Mr. Fenn and companions stated that they saw them break into the houses of American citizens, smash the windows, damage the floor and walls, break up the furniture, throw it into the street, shoot into the houses, cut and tear down fences and gates, utterly destroy the fruit, and generally devastate the premises, all the while saving harmless the property of Mexicans.

During his speech inveighing against the prisoners, the President, and citizens of the United States, he was cheered vociferously by his Mexican hearers. He informed them that the property of the Americans belonged to Mexicans and would be distributed to them. The Mexicans frequently appealed to him to give them American property. He replied to their entreaties by saying that the distribution would be made later, that he had not time to do it then. He boasted frequently of having killed Americans, and of having driven them out of Colonia Dublan and other American towns in the State of Chihuahua, and his prisoners heard the soldiers boast of how they had ravished American women, and they declared, as the evidence shows, that if they caught any American women in that region they would make use of them.

These confessedly leading Mexican military officers and their armies committed offenses, abuses, cruelties, larceny, robbery, rape, murder, treachery, and other hideous crimes, Americans being the victims, with the barbarous design of running law-abiding citizens of a friendly nation out of Mexico, or of exterminating them, and then seizing and appropriating their properties, and all this with immunity from punishment by the Mexican Government thus far by this Government.

In reply to the question asked yesterday as to how many Americans were driven out of Mexico: When the Americans were driven out of Mexico they were, through the Mexican military forces and nationals encouraged by and operating with them, as shown by the evidence which I have taken, compelled to abandon all of their possessions, millions of dollars' worth of property, which had been lawfully acquired under the laws of Mexico while they were peaceably carrying on their business and maintaining a strictly neutral position as to the Mexican belligerents. They were so forced, through the acts of violence of the military forces, to abandon their homes and property, without any cause that I was able to ascertain except that they were American citizens, the hostile Mexicans being evidently actuated by race hatred, created by the military forces in accordance with the concerted plan to rid that country of Americans, and actuated by an insatiate desire for rapine and plunder and to acquire the accumulations and possessions of American citizens. It appeared that a hostile sentiment was created against foreigners generally, but was especially directed against the Americans, and rebel forces and federal forces alike were arrayed against the citizens of the United States in Mexico. All appeals to governmental officers were received either with indifference or with insolence, and no protection was granted. Mexican officers, civil, military, and judicial, in that region, appeared to be imbued with the same spirit that actuated the military in their violence.

The instances during the years 1911 and 1912 of the seizure, destruction, and appropriation of property owned by Americans are too numerous for specific mention; and the instances of the cruelty, abuse, and insulting Americans, including women and children, during 1911 and 1912 and thereafter, are likewise too numerous for specific mention. The testimony, however, which is on file in the Department of State of the United States, will show many of these instances, and the outrages which rendered the American families completely terror stricken and kept them constantly in fear of personal injury.

Counsel asked me yesterday respecting my opinion as to the Mexicans in northern Mexico and in southern Mexico. I wish to add to what I said that while there was a strong anti-American sentiment created by the military forces in northern Mexico, still there were better classes of Mexican citizens who were of humane disposition, and were friendly to the Americans; but those who expressed their friendship in speech or acts were in danger of the violence of the military forces and the hostile nationals operating with them, the same as the Americans were. This, I take it, is true as to the friendly Mexicans, throughout the northern and southern portions of the country, at least, as far as I was able to ascertain.

As an instance to show the hostility toward friendly Mexicans, I will refer to the case of Marcos Calderan. For some years he had been in the employ of Isaac W. Pierce, an American who owned a gristmill and considerable other property at or near Colonia Diaz. He was a faithful employee, and when Mr. Pierce was compelled to flee for safety, he left his property in charge of Mr. Calderan.

When the military forces invaded Colonia Diaz, a detachment invaded the gristmill and the home of the American, on or about October 15, 1912. Finding that Mr. Calderan was caring for the property of an American, they maliciously and brutally marched him to the cemetery, compelled him to dig a grave, and then to stand on the edge of it, and they then shot him to death so that he fell into the grave, and they covered him up. A few days thereafter they shot and killed another faithful Mexican, an employee of Mr. Pierce. In this way they gave notice that Mexicans must not befriend Americans.

Another instance which occurred at Colonia Morelos, where a Mexican was also a faithful employee of an American. Upon being found trying to protect the property in his charge, he was shamefully maltreated by a military force, and upon fleeing into the hills to secrete himself, he was trailed and brought back and compelled to reveal some of the property and effects of the American, including money, but finally upon ascertaining that the Americans had fled with their money, and no effects being found, they permitted him to go.

There were numerous instances which I ascertained where, during the years 1911 and 1912, up to the time of the flight of Americans, Mexicans appeared at the homes of Americans and informed them of the plan to drive them out, in a friendly way, and the danger that was imminent.

In numerous other cases Mexicans of hostile disposition appeared at their homes to determine which Mexican should receive this property or that property, showing that they generally understood the plan to run the Americans out of Mexico much the same as revealed by Gen. Salazar and Gen. Rojas and other leaders in thought and action in their speeches.

To show the manner in which they treated the effects and property of Americans, I refer to a raid that was made by military forces on a store that was owned by Charles W. Lillywhite & Bros., in Colonia, Morelos. That was in the early part of September, 1912. The soldiers, while invading the town of Colonia Morelos, broke into the store, smashed the doors and windows, and, as the evidence shows, completely destroyed the showcases and fixtures, smashed the furniture, seized all of the merchandise, destroying the greater portion of it, threw large quantities of canned goods and groceries, hardware, and drugs, in a mixture upon the floor, destroying cans, bottles, and vials of drugs, and scattered upon the mixture poisonous substances which are carried in the mercantile business, consisting of strychnine, quinine, rough on rats, cyanide, and other poisonous articles, breaking the bottles that contained them, and the ruins were still visible when the owner returned to see if he could not secure and protect some of his property. I discovered various instances of that character in taking evidence.

In another instance, in the same town, they invaded a flour mill, appropriated what flour they wanted, and threw the balance on the floor of the mill.

When the military forces were invading Colonia Morelos and that region, as the testimony which I have taken shows, they summoned the Mexicans in the region to a meeting, at which Gen. Salazar presided. It appears that the General informed the Mexican residents that the time had come when the possessions of the Gringos were to be divided among the Mexican people, to whom he claimed it belonged; and he proceeded to distribute the lands among the local Mexicans who would announce their allegiance to the rebel cause and swear vengeance against the Gringos. That was done after the Americans had been driven out, and was reported to the witness whom I examined by a friendly Mexican, an employee of the American.

One of the witnesses also stated that in the town of Colonia San Jose, when it was invaded by Gen. Rojas, notices were posted on the street corners warning the Americans who were in that region, having returned to try to secure some of their property, to leave Mexico and not return.

About May 1, 1914, J. D. Lillywhite and Lee J. Huber returned to Colonia Morelos to take charge of what property of Lillywhite Bros. might be remaining, including the grist mill, and to harvest their crops, if possible. On arriving there they found the hostility and violence of Mexican officers and soldiers and hostile nationals continuing unabated. Several soldiers appeared at the mill with a small roll of Mexican scrip, constitutional money, and offered it in exchange for flour. Lillywhite and Huber, aware that the scrip had no value in the United States, declined to accept it and informed them that the flour in the mill had all been contracted to be delivered to the El Tigre Mining Co. Shortly thereafter a detachment of soldiers arrested Lillywhite and Huber, took them to the office of the commissario, and they were informed by the commissario and other leading Mexicans that they had committed a very grave offense and insult against the Mexican Government by refusing to accept the scrip, and that it was the prerogative of the commissario to fine them in the sum of $500 each, or sentence them to jail for one year, or force them to enter the constitutionalist army, and that they were at liberty to take their choice of these penalties. While pronouncing the sentence the commissario was exceedingly abusive, in the presence of armed soldiers, and boastfully exclaimed, "You are in Mexico now and are subject to Mexican authority." The prisoners made no resistance, deeming it useless, but tried to explain to him that they simply acted in accordance with their duty to their employer. The commissario, however, accepted no explanation, but gave them an opportunity to raise the $500 fine, instead of going to prison, and permitted them to return to the mill, which was patrolled by armed soldiers. They took advantage of the permission to raise the money, and finally effected their escape into the United States, by securing saddle horses and riding all night.

In the latter part of 1914 Charles W. Lillywhite and Horace F. Lillywhite, although hostilities still existed and the anti-American sentiment was intense, returned to Colonia Morelos to care for any of their property that might be remaining, intended to plant crops, and to endeavor to operate their mill. While endeavoring to conduct their business, or the business of Lillywhite Bros., they suffered various losses through hostile invasions of military forces, and nationals operating with them, until about January 23, 1915, when an advance guard of Gen. Jesus Trujillo and Gen. Sosa arrived under the command of Col. Tomas Rosas, and about February 2, 1915, the main army of Gen. Sosa, consisting of about 3,000 soldiers and officers, arrived. Gen. Trujillo having arrived previous to that.

The two Americans had procured passports from the counsel representing Gov. Maytorena. The passports purported to give guarantees for protection for person and property, and were also approved by the counsel of a Mexican general. About that time there were about 17 American men and relatives, or families, in the town. They were all arrested by the advance guard of the army, and held as prisoners, with the town for a jail, during a period of 10 days, until the arrival of Gen. Sosa. In the meantime, Charles W. Lillywhite was commanded to furnish them flour and other products from the mill, and the soldiers seized and appropriated the grain, flour, groceries, and other supplies and personal property which the Lillywhite Bros. and other Americans had, and seized and appropriated the horses and live stock, shot two milk cows owned by the Lillywhite Bros., pillaged their homes, and left them destitute of provisions.

Charles W. Lillywhite was seized upon for special attack by officers and soldiers, and especially by Col. Rosas and Gen. Trujillo, who were among the invaders of the town. Upon seizing their property, Charles W. Lillywhite appealed to Col. Rosas to permit them to retain some of their horses. The colonel flew into a rage, flashed his six-shooter at Lillywhite and called him vile and abusive names, among his epithets being "You gringo, low-lived coward, you son of a bitch, you are a robber."

Afterwards Col. Alfredo Frigosa arrived and used similar epithets against them; both of the colonels stating, as the evidence shows, that the Americans had robbed the Mexicans of their lands, as they had purchased them from President Porfirio Diaz, and that the time had come when the gringos would have to submit to their demands willingly, or they would take them over the border line where they belonged, and that that country belonged to the Mexicans. Col. Sosa, in boasting terms, declared that he had been assigned the duty to distribute the lands of "gringos" among these "Mexicans," waving his hand at a large crowd of natives who had gathered by. Then, shoving his fist in the face of Lillywhite, he said, "Speak! Are you agreeable to that or not? Answer quick." To all of which Lillywhite had to submit.

On January 26, 1915, Charles W. Lillywhite, already under arrest, with the town as a jail, was taken by a detachment of soldiers under command of a captain, as prisoner, and cruelly and shamefully prodded with their bayonets, as they were taking him to a warehouse, and upon their arrival there, Col. Frigosa wantonly and brutally shoved him over a barbed-wire fence, then imprisoned him in the warehouse and held him under guard incommunicado during the rest of the day until late at night. While there as a prisoner, he was afterwards informed, that the Mexicans designed to take him as a prisoner across the country to Fronteras, a distance of 30 miles, and on the way incidentally have him attempt to escape, when they would shoot him to death under the pretense that he had attempted to get away from his guard.

The timely arrival of Col. Haro, with several hundred troops, however, frustrated their designs to kill Lillywhite. That colonel was of humane disposition and did all he could to save him from further violence, until Gen. Trujillo arrived, who was superior in command to Col. Haro, and then the situation of Lillywhite again became desperate. He was taken before Gen. Trujillo on the 27th of January, and on the 29th he was taken twice before the general, and each time was abused and held under threats of death.

On the last occasion, on the 29th, Gen. Trujillo himself flew at him in a rage, and among his abusive epithets said, "You gringo rascal son of a bitch, robbing brute, the greatest robber in the colony. Run the flour mill and send flour to this Cuartel or I will kill you." Then the general viciously and brutally kicked him in the presence of his officers.

For the claimant to have attempted to reason with either Col. Frigosa or Gen. Trujillo, as he stated, would doubtless have cost him his life, for when the general so brutally kicked him, they were on the point of striking him down, Col. Frigosa with his pistol and Gen. Trujillo with his sword, as appears from Lillywhite's testimony. To save his life he was compelled to submit to their cruelty and abuse, convinced that resentment meant death. He was constantly in great stress of mind, not only because of his own safety, but because of that of his family, and except, as he asserted, for the arrival at that time of Gen. Sosa, who appeared to be a humane gentleman, and who was general in chief of the army, Lillywhite would doubtless have fallen the victim of that Mexican violence.

About July 4, 1913, a force of Mexican soldiers operating under the command of Gen. Salazar brutally assaulted and killed a Mexican, who was friendly to Americans, on the Bavi Cora ranch near the town of Madero, because they had learned of his friendliness to Americans. They first beat him, then shot and killed him; they piled wood on him and burned his body, except a small portion thereof, which was afterwards buried by William E. Williams and some companions.

MR. KEARFUL. Have you had occasion to take testimony respecting the massacre at Santa Ysabel?

MR. BARTCH. Yes, sir. I prepared the documents in the case of Mrs. Helen Hintz Coy. She now resides in San Francisco, Calif. Her husband, John Pope Coy, was one of the victims of the massacre at Santa Ysabel. He had been employed by the Cusi Mining

Co., and was on his way to Cusihiuriachic. He was a gentleman of fine attainments and a competent mechanical engineer. He had not been in Mexico previously. On his way he stopped at El Paso and there joined a number of other Americans.

On the evening of January 8, 1916, at a banquet, leading Mexicans assured the Americans that the country where they were going was safe and peaceable, and Mexican officials in authority issued passports to them, purporting to permit them to travel in Mexico in safety. On the morning of the 9th of January they boarded a train and traveled in safety over the railroad to the city of Chihuahua, where Mr. Coy and his companions were joined by several other Americans. At Chihuahua some of them were apprehensive that trouble might ensue. They had been assured, however, by Government officials at El Paso that there was no danger, and that they could safely travel from El Paso to Cusihiuriachic. At Chihuahua they were again assured of the safety along the Mexican Northwestern Railroad from Chihuahua to Cusihiuriachic, by the governor of that State, by Gen. Jacinto de Trevino, the commander of that military zone, and other Government officials.

Notwithstanding those assurances, however, some of the Americans were apprehensive of danger, and C. R. Watson applied to Gen. Trevino for Government troops to guard the train the next day. The general replied that it was unnecessary; that the country was under the control of Government troops, and that he would send out more troops the next morning, and if danger arose they would be protected.

Their apprehension was also indicated by a letter which Mr. W. D. Pearce wrote to his brother, S. L. Pearce, at Laymond, Calif. A photographic copy of that letter, I am informed, is on file with the Department of State of the United States.

In the letter, among other things, he states:

Watson has arranged for a special car to take us out in the morning, and I have decided to go. There will be about 20 Americans in the party. Some of them are a little nervous, as it is rumored that all is not quiet out that way. Watson saw the commanding officer here and offered to pay for troops to accompany the train, but was assured that Carranza troops are in control along the railroad and at Cusihiuriachic, and that he was sending more out this way to-night or early in the morning. So I hope to be able to work for a while without interruption.

Mr. Carranza is more to be feared than was Villa. Villa, at least, had courage to enforce orders, which is more than I can say for Carranza. Carranza fears Villa more than anything else, and if he can make trouble for us Americans, and at the same time make it appear that it was Villa who made the trouble, you may be sure he will do it.

The next morning, on January 10, 1916, Mr. Coy and his companions boarded a train and started for Cusihiuriachic. They traveled in safety to Santa Ysabel. When they arrived at that station two armed Mexicans rode up to and along the train, viewed it, and rode away.

After the train left Santa Ysabel and had traveled about 8 kilometers it was stopped by another train, the front car of which had been derailed in a cut near the river. That was a troop train that had preceded the ill-fated train, the two trains traveling about 10 miles apart. When the ill-fated train stopped a force of Mexican soldiers shot into the car in which the Americans were traveling.

'They wounded some of them, then forced them all out of the car, and while doing so C. R. Watson, R. P. McHatton, and Thomas V. Holmes ran toward the river, attempting to escape, while the Mexicans were shooting at them. Holmes tripped and fell into the brush, and the Mexicans then, evidently assuming he was dead, turned their attention to Watson and McHatton, and shot and killed them. While they were shooting at them, Holmes crept through the brush and into the river, then followed the bank down until he escaped. The other parties were lined up against the car and brutally shot to death. Eighteen were killed and one escaped. The Mexicans who were on the train were then permitted to depart.

The occurrence was described by the conductor, J. Guadalupe Gardona, of the ill-fated train, which affidavit, as reported in the public press of the United States, was given to the British consul at Chihuahua City and telegraphed to the British consul, H. C. Miles, at El Paso. As reported in the press it read as follows:

The train arrived at Santa Ysabel at 1.15 p. m. On arriving at kilometer 68, 8 kilometers beyond Santa Ysabel, we encountered a train, national engine No. 57, off the track. When I got off to see what happened the shooting started. Afterwards Gen. Rayna placed us under guard, searching us and also searching the car. All the money on the passengers and in the car was taken. After that had taken place we left, the Americans having been killed. Some of the foreigners were first shot on the train, and a number, including one Mexican, who were wounded in the car, were later taken off and murdered. Some of them jumped off and ran toward the river. These included Watson. They were followed and fired upon.

A messenger from the city of Chihuahua, after arriving at El Paso, January 13, 1916, made a statement, in which, as published in the public press, he said:

The mining company's train had been preceded Monday by a troop train carrying from 500 to 1,000 Carranza soldiers. The two trains were traveling 10 miles apart. At 1 o'clock p. m., it was reported to Chihuahua that the troop train was derailed in a canyon, and at 4 o'clock reports of the hold-up of the passenger train with a number of Mexican women and children aboard returned to Chihuahua City with the first news of the massacre.

One Vasquez, a Mexican in the employ of C. R. Watson, who was a witness to the tragedy, made a statement in which, as published in the public press, among other things, he said:

They left our car, placing guards at the doors, and went into the next car. The foreigners were driven out. Some of them had been wounded by their shooting into the train. Outside the soldiers pointed their guns at them and forced them to strip themselves of their clothing. That was done by the Americans, and they stood there in their underclothing. The soldiers then ordered them to line up along the side of the railroad track, and then the most horrible part began. Two soldiers using Mausers were told by Col. Lopez to kill the Americans. One of them went up to the first foreigner and shot him, and as he died the second one fired his Mauser at the second foreigner, standing in line. A general confusion began when the first two were killed, but the two men ran along the line, taking turns shooting the Americans. Some of the foreigners attempted to break away, but they were forced back by the soldiers until the entire line had been killed. Only two men did the executing. The others stood around cheering and crying, "Viva Villa." I saw the dead bodies of the Americans as they lay after the shooting. Their underclothing was covered in blood, and they lay in all kinds of grotesque positions. Some had fallen forward, while others fell over one another. The top of one American's head had been shot off.

I obtained no direct evidence showing to what arm that force of soldiers who did the shooting belonged. It is shown, however, that a troop train carrying from 500 to 1,000 government soldiers preceded the ill-fated train; that one car of that train was derailed; that the two trains were traveling about 10 miles apart; and it was shown that no soldiers were in sight except those that did the shooting. According to the public press, the government authorities claimed that they were Villa's soldiers, but I have observed no intimation anywhere or from any source as to what became of all those government troops within the short period of time between those trains, or as to what would induce them to leave the train when their car was derailed, nor have I seen any showing by Mexican authorities as to what became of those soldiers. Under the circumstances, the conclusion seems inevitable that the soldiers on the troop train committed that massacre. I see no escape from that conclusion.

It has cast a dark cloud upon Mexico and it was and is the province of the Mexican Government, in order to escape condemnation for that massacre, to show what became of the government soldiers. This, so far as I have been able to ascertain, it has failed to do. That government, and those government officials who gave the assurances of safety, were aware ever since the Madero revolution of the villainies that were constantly perpetrated against American citizens up to the time of the massacre. They were aware, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence would have been aware, at the very time when they gave those assurances of safety, that the country was overrun with soldiers, and nationals operating with them, whose hostility against Americans had no bounds.

Nor have I been able to secure any evidence that the Mexican Government made any reasonable effort to apprehend and punish the criminals, notwithstanding the inhuman outrage that was committed on inoffensive, law-abiding American citizens. The massacre of those 18 American mining men was an atrocity which, in brutality and inhumanity, closely resembled, except in numbers, the barbarous massacre of more than 300 Chinese subjects at Torreón, in the State of Chihuahua, in May, 1911, and, like that massacre of the Chinese, the massacre of the 18 Americans beggars description. No language can adequately portray the inhumanity and inherent brutality of the perpetrators, and the barbarity of that Mexican army which forced those Americans from the car and train and barbarously shot them to death, while they were begging for mercy, mercy at the hands of soldiers and officers steeped in brutality, lost to all sense of humanity or decency, given over to race hatred created by military forces and hostile nationals, and acquiesced in by government authorities. And the events succeeding the massacre, which culminated in the awful crime committed at Columbus, N. Mex., on March 9, 1916, when Americans were massacred in their own homes, on American soil, shows a complete chaotic condition of the local government of the State of Chihuahua, and a lamentable delinquency on the part of Mexico to permit the Government to drift into such a state.

Notwithstanding the fact that numerous grave offenses have been perpetrated by Mexican military forces and nationals cooperating with them, encouraged by leaders in speech and action, the Mexican Government has, in my judgment, made no reasonable attempt to apprehend and punish the culprits. Governmental authorities have attempted to make it appear through the public press, and otherwise, that Gen. Villa and his army were in revolt against the Mexican Government. Still the circumstances unequivocally indicate that whenever American rights were infringed upon by the alleged command of Gen. Villa, and whenever Americans were killed by military forces or outraged, the Mexican Government, it appears, not only failed to punish the perpetrators of the offenses, but, with the use of its own governmental troops, as in the case of Gen. Villa, who was alleged to have committed the outrages at Columbus, N. Mex., actively interfered when the military forces of the United States attempted to apprehend and punish the criminals, for it is now a matter of history that when the United States Government, recognizing the delinquency of the Mexican Government in its failure to apprehend and punish the perpetrators of the crimes committed at Columbus, sent its troops across the border into Mexico to apprehend and punish the offenders, the Mexican Government by use of its government troops actively interfered and engaged, at the city of Parral, in the State of Chihuahua, the American forces in battle, in which a number of American soldiers were killed, and thereby prevented further pursuit and permitted the guilty persons to escape.

Thereafter, about June 21, 1916, another detachment of American soldiers, sent in pursuit of a detachment of the army of Gen. Villa, was ambushed near the town of Carrizal, in the State of Chihuahua, by a force of governmental troops under the direct command of Gen. Felix de Gomez, who was subject to the command of Gen. Jacinto de Trevino, the federal general commanding that military one, and an attack was made by order of the chief executive of the nation, Gen. Venustiano Carranza, as reported in the public press. In that battle a number of American soldiers were killed, including Capt. Boyd and Capt. Morey.

It thus seems clear that the facts and circumstances show unerringly that the acts and conduct of the Mexican Government and its government officials, respecting the vile and villainous acts and barbarousness of its military forces against American citizens, are wholly inconsistent with its official pretenses and utterances.

If this Government should establish a protectorate in Mexico, similar to that in Cuba, it would be advisable, in my opinion, for the Government to appoint a commission to adjust all American claims, and to assume the payment of them, and liquidate them by the issuing of Government bonds, and also provide sufficient funds to put the Mexican Government in position to liquidate the other foreign claims against it, and maintain a proper government.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS

HEARING

BEFORE A

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS UNITED STATES SENATE

SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS

SECOND SESSION

PURSUANT TO

S. Res. 106

DIRECTING THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS TO INVESTIGATE THE MATTER OF OUTRAGES ON CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES IN MEXICO

PART 19

Printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1920

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, Massachusetts, Chairman.

PORTER J. McCUMBER, North Dakota.

WILLIAM E. BORAH, Idaho.

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE, Connecticut.

ALBERT B. FALL, New Mexico.

PHILANDER C. KNOX, Pennsylvania.

WARREN G. HARDING, Ohio.

HIRAM W. JOHNSON, California.

HARRY S. NEW, Indiana.

GEORGE H. MOSES, New Hampshire.

GILBERT H. HITCHCOCK, Nebraska.

JOHN EHARP WILLIAMS, Mississippi.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON, Virginia.

ATLEE POMERENE, Ohio.

MARCUS A. SMITH, Arizona.

KEY PITTMAN, Nevada.

JOHN K. SHIELDS, Tennessee.

C. F. REDMOND, Clerk.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

ALBERT B. FALL, Chairman.

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.

MARCUS A. SMITH.

DAN M. JACKSON, Clerk.

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met pursuant to call at 11 o'clock a. m., in room 128, Senate Office Building, Senator Albert B. Fall presiding.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM TEITLEBAUM.

(The witness was duly sworn by the chairman.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may give your name in full.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. William Teitlebaum.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Teitlebaum, you telegraphed to the chairman of this committee a few days since from New York City expressing a desire to appear before the committee and make a statement with reference to the subject of this investigation.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In answer to your telegram, you were notified that the committee would hear you either then, the latter part of April, or early this week.

Are you a citizen of the United States?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In the eyes of the law, I am not, Senator; in service and love, I am a very fair one.

The CHAIRMAN. Of what country are you a native?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am a Hungarian by birth.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever been naturalized as a citizen of the United States?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you reside?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I reside in New York City at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your business?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am engaged in one of the various businesses that is known where a scavenger is clean alongside of it—broker.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not expressed as fully as you might, I presume, what is your business?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. General broker of food products, sugar, and coal.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is your place of business?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. At the present time I have none. I am simply a free lance.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you associated with any firm or with any other person in business?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your occupation at the present time?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Brokerage. for instance, the first money for some little while that I have had I made last week, of $150, which I am using to bring this service before you.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your occupation in 1910 and 1911?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had interests in San Antonio in the amusement field, and prior to that in irrigation.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean San Antonio, Tex.?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of irrigation were you interested in?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The air lift.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean lifting the water from wells by air pressure?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was that? Was that at Pearsall, Tex.?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the extent of your activities in the irrigation line at that time?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, I had organized that Pearsall undertaking, and after that tried to further it through parties in San Antonio.

The CHAIRMAN. You have expressed a desire to give this committee information about Mexico. Just proceed. I would like to ask you to make your story just as concise and short as possible. The time of the committee is limited. We would like to have any facts that you have upon which you may base any suggestions that you have to make. Just proceed in your own way.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Unfortunately, I am not as direct in speech as yourself, and I have to beg the committee's indulgence a little bit. I am very reluctant in coming before the committee with the broken life, but I feel the responsibility of investigations which I have conducted, research that I have made in the Mexican situation, that I can not escape that responsibility in bringing it before your committee.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you happen to make such investigations?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I organized while in San Antonio the American Anti-Intervention Association.

The CHAIRMAN. What year?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think it was in 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the other organizers?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Dr. Brumley.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did he live?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. He lived in San Antonio.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does he live now?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think in Austin.

The CHAIRMAN. Who else?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was all.

The CHAIRMAN. Just Dr. Brumley and yourself?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he a citizen of the United States?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. He is one of the board of health commissioners of the State of Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. Residing then in San Antonio?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In San Antonio.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you and he happen to organize the Anti-Intervention Association?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, it was I who organized it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, but you and he composed it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I am asking you. Who composed that association?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I did myself, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you organized it, he joined you, and you composed it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. There is a photograph of the float, which was the initial float, and accompanied by those persons. I hand you also a few of these cards.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice that you apparently printed and sent out post cards addressed to the American Anti-Intervention Association, 304 East Side Alamo Place, San Antonio, Tex., with no other address, containing neither your name, nor that of your associate, Dr. Brumley.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. Dr. Brumley at that time had no connection with it.

The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to get a starting point. You say you organized that association. How did you organize it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. My simply starting that float from the Alamo.

The CHAIRMAN. The sending out of a float on the street is not the organization of an association?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was the organization of it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an activity of an association; that is not the organization of an association.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was all there was to it.

The CHAIRMAN. You just constituted yourself the association?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you secured a float drawn by horses?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And containing signs; for instance, here is a sign bearing on the top the words, "You can stop the war with Mexico," and on the side various other signs. And you started that around the streets of San Antonio? Is that it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then along with your other activities you had these post cards printed and sent them out?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who printed them? I mean, who paid for them?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I paid for them, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I am asking you these personal questions to get you started.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; that is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to cut this short, if possible.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am afraid it will be very difficult to do it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. We will do it. It will not be difficult. We will give you ample opportunity to tell what you know, but the committee has its own method of procedure.

On the back of this post card I noticed printed :

You are requested to place my name on your honor roll as favoring the blessings of peace as against intervention, which means war with Mexico. I also desire you to use my name to a petition directed to my Congressman and Senators in Washington, to vote and work zealously for the recognition of belligerent rights to the insurgents of Mexico as the safest and quickest way to accomplish permanent peace in our sister republic.

Then follows "name, address, remarks."

The particular post card which you have handed me, and which I am reading from, has opposite the printed word, "name," in writing, "George J. Dewey" or "Denny," "jr." or "sr." Do you know what that name is ? Opposite the word "address" is written "401 Gibbs Building." Opposite the word "remarks" is written "recognition of belligerent rights means Diaz's end, then comes peace. Hurry it along." The name is of no importance. These are the cards you sent out, and these which you have handed me are some of those which were returned to you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. I distributed them myself, mostly, and these were some that were mailed in.

The CHAIRMAN. You distributed them personally?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the date when you were distributing these cards?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think it was about May 3, 1911, from a clipping that I have here from the press of that date, where is said, "Peace movement started."

The CHAIRMAN. On or about May 3 is when you were distributing these cards?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. I think for about a week or 10 days, some such matter after that.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know Francisco I. Madero, jr., prior to that time?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I met the gentleman just a little while before that.

The CHAIRMAN. You became acquainted with him?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I became acquainted with him; met him at his hotel in San Antonio.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you talk with him at that time about Mexican affairs?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I did; yes, sir. He spoke to me, rather, explaining the situation in Mexico, and won me to his cause.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you were distributing these post cards in the interest of the cause of Francisco I. Madero, jr., were you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You said you were won to his cause?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked you why you distributed these cards?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had early in life set myself the task of earning American citizenship, and I had made a number of efforts in different lines prior to that.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you come to the United States?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In 1880.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you apply for citizenship papers, first papers?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever made application?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what do you mean by "earning" American citizenship?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I wanted to try to have it given to me without applying for it.

The CHAIRMAN. At this time you speak of, when you were engaged in these activities, there was a recognized government in the Republic of Mexico, with Porfirio Diaz as president, was there not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no trouble between the United States and Mexico at that time that you knew of, was there?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The insurrection.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I am speaking of the United States of America with Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What did the United States have to do with this insurrection in Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, there was a movement on foot then to intervene, if I recall right.

The CHAIRMAN. What movement? Directed by whom?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. My memory does not reserve me as well as it might, but I think I have something that might refresh it.

The CHAIRMAN. What are you proposing to refer to in order to refresh your memory?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Some clippings that I have here of some of the activities of the organization.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Or rather, of the movement. I see that on May 6, Pearsall held a meeting of citizens in an effort to have the rebels recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. That had nothing to do with the Government of Mexico, or any trouble between the United States and the Government of Mexico. I presume you attended that meeting or had something to do with it; did you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not attend it. I suppose I did have, indirectly, a hand in it.

The CHAIRMAN. You have referred to this memorandum, and in answer to the question you said there was a movement on foot for intervention in Mexico. I have asked you what difficulty there was between the United States and Mexico, and you, in attempting to answer that, have said there was a movement on foot for intervention at that time. Now, the only movement that appears as yet is the one you were attempting to organize, and concerning which you refer to the meeting at Pearsall, which was the scene of your activities.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; that was in San Antonio.

The CHAIRMAN. You were distributing these post cards in San Antonio?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In an attempt to refresh your memory you have referred to a newspaper clipping concerning a meeting at Pearsall, where resolutions were adopted requesting the recognition of the insurgents in Mexico against the regular Government?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. May I read that?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not care to have that newspaper clipping read into the record. I take your word for it, that it is something concerning your activities. Now, what I am getting at—

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I see what you are getting at, Senator, and I am very anxious to try to give it to you as near right as I know it.

The CHAIRMAN. You stated that you were desirous of proving your right to become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have never made an application for citizenship, although you came here 30 years ago, or something like that, and you have never made any attempt to become a citizen, still you are trying to prove your right to become a citizen by your efforts in behalf of the insurgents against the regular recognized Government in the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The situation, strange as it may seem, is so, notwithstanding. Here is the way of it. I set myself to try to earn that citizenship. Lafayette is the only man to whom that citizenship has been offered, and he refused it. I have set myself to earn that citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. That you might refuse it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; not that I might refuse it; that I might have it so.

The CHAIRMAN. Lafayette did not undertake to earn his citizenship by getting this country into trouble with any other country; did he?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No; and I did not either; I did not either, sir. I had imparted this secret of mine to Mr. Bonillas, who was the first man I told it to; and Mr. Long, here in Washington; Mr. Bryan; Mr. Wright, editor and publisher of the Globe; and Mr. Dittamore, of the Times, before the World War brought on by Germany, and before it had become fashionable for men to find excuses of not being citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not followed the fashion, have you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Not in that respect; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But you have never made application for citizenship?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. I had held this: After having told of this secret of mine, I have set myself to finding there is nothing in the Constitution against a man trying to earn to have the flag covering him when he is no more, that he may be able to do that, having failed in the other, and that is why I am here. I have felt, Senator, that the question of service, and not what we get, but what we give, is the basis of citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Let us put that question of citizenship aside for a moment. What else did you do besides distributing these post cards and also to hold meetings and endeavor to bring about the meetings in favor of the belligerency of the Madero faction in Mexico at that time?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. From time to time we had sent messages to the President.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you know about Mexico at that time?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. Only what Mr. Madero had told me.

The CHAIRMAN. How long had you been on the border or near the border when you met Madero?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. I was there several years. I don't remember just how long, probably three years, two or three.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. You had done nothing with reference to Mexico until you met Madero, had you?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How many conferences did you have with Madero?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. I only had one conference. It was not a conference.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there an understanding between Madero and yourself as to what you should do, if anything?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. No, sir; not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, what you knew of Mexico at that time you learned from conference with Madero?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. Yes, sir; and from San Antonio, being in San Antonio.

The CHAIRMAN. From whom else in San Antonio did you learn of Mexico?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. No individual person that I knew of.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you read anything about Mexico?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. Most assuredly.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the source of your reading?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. Newspapers was all.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you made any study of conditions of Mexico or the people of Mexico prior to that time?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make any afterwards?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. No, sir; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you made any study of Mexican history or conditions or ethnology?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. In a very vague kind of way. I mostly obtained my knowledge first hand.

The CHAIRMAN. How?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. By investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. How? What investigation?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. Well, I went down to Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. January, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. With whom?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. With Mr. Jesus Aguilar.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was he?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. He was a nephew of Mr. Madero.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you go?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. I went with him to Culiacan.

The CHAIRMAN. Where else?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. From there I traveled with him to the first chief.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the first chief?

Mr. TETTLERBAUM. Carranza.

The CHAIRMAN. You are getting Carranza and Madero mixed, are you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. You asked me when I went down to Mexico and with whom.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't go during the time of Madero?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you speak Spanish?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the date that you went to Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am trying to give it to you. I think it was January 31 or February 1, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you happen to go there at that time?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I was very anxious to have the Constitutionalists lend themselves more to the American need.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you know of America's needs? You are not a citizen.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I probably have studied the needs as closely as any man in the task that I have set for myself.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say "America's needs" do you mean the needs of the United States of America?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The United States of America.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, you went to Mexico with Aguilar, a nephew of the first chief?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, Carranza?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. And he acted as my interpreter.

The CHAIRMAN. Aguilar acted as your interpreter?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That you might impress the Constitutionalists with the needs of the United States of America?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, there was considerable friction at that time that I had hoped to be able to help avert.

The CHAIRMAN. That friction with the Constitutionalists?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the Constitutionalists?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, Carranza—

The CHAIRMAN. Was the first chief?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Was the first chief.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the Constitutionalist movement? Do you know?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have a rough idea, but the question of time, and place, and history, and geography does not mean anything to me in the investigations that I was making and had been and am making in regard to character and needs and adaptability.

The CHAIRMAN. You don't know what the constitutional movement in Mexico was, do you, and you didn't know at that time?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes; I had some knowledge of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, what was it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The Constitutionalists having rebelled against the treachery and treason of Huerta, and wanted to get back to the constitutional form of government.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. What constitutional form of government?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The government that had been drawn up in the movement for Madero.

The CHAIRMAN. The aims and objects set forth in what is known as the plan of Guadalupe?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that plan was to return to the constitution of 1857?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the foundation of the Carranza movement in Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you went there to convey to them knowledge of the needs of the United States, or did you go there to investigate their movements, the desires, and intentions of the Carranzistas themselves?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. I have tried to express, as well I can, just what my object was.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were you at the time, or just prior to the time, you went into Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I was in San Antonio.

The CHAIRMAN. How long had you been there?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think about three years.

The CHAIRMAN. You had remained there from the time you had met Madero?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You had not returned to New York or to the East?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You had remained in San Antonio?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you come in contact with Aguilar and the Carranzistas?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Through acquaintance in having met Aguilar and a number of Mexicans in sympathy with the movement that I had underfoot.

The CHAIRMAN. What movement did you have underfoot?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. This peace movement.

The CHAIRMAN. But Madero's movement had been successful, and had been elected and inaugurated President.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean to say you kept up the antiintervention movement all the time during the Madero administration?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. Not at all. I say I had occasion to meet the different Mexicans after that.

The CHAIRMAN. In the meantime, during these three years, had you been studying Mexican history and conditions and people?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had.

The CHAIRMAN. What have been the sources from which you sought information upon that subject?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. From the Mexicans themselves, and what I was able—

The CHAIRMAN. You talked to individual Mexicans in the English language?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. And the American papers.

The CHAIRMAN. The San Antonio Press, and the Light, and other papers?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The Light, and others.

The CHAIRMAN. La Prensa? You could not read La Prensa?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I could not read La Prensa.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the Mexican paper published there.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you happen to go down there with Aguilar?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I was very anxious to go and try to see whether I could in an individual capacity try to have the Mexican leaders lend themselves to what I felt and knew to be the needs of the United States, to bring peace and a lasting peace in Mexico and the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. You were of independent means at that time, were you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I was, but I have spent practically all of the money that I have had in this same matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but did you have independent means without having to work at the time you went with Aguilar into Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I took it out of my business.

The CHAIRMAN. You had a business, did you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. I was associated in the amusement business in San Antonio. I not only paid my expenses, but also those of Aguilar.

The CHAIRMAN. You went to Culiacan?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did you see at Culiacan?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. First Chief Carranza.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you undertake to do with Mr. Carranza?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I did not get to have any audience with Mr. Carranza for three or four days, until he was on the return from Culiacan, at Cuernavaco, and I had a conference with him on the lines for which I went down.

The CHAIRMAN. That is exactly what I am driving at. What were those lines? What were you trying to do?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In a letter before I went down—

The CHAIRMAN. Did that letter express what you wanted to do?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that express what you were telling him or were trying to impress upon him?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Then refer to it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In a letter dated January 31, 1914, to Col. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, among other things, I said:

Noting the great need for better organization through more appropriate lines of thought and concerted thought to facilitate and recognize the constitutional movement, and movement to repudiate strict adherence to law, like the effort to extradite Gen. Salazar, which necessarily must be an act detrimental to the constitutionalists, I also wish to try to introduce the wish for rapid reconstruction in Mexico of her family affairs and the immediate failure of any future revolution that may be launched on the outside of Mexico. I also wish to urge a more humane warfare in their civil life.

The CHAIRMAN. What did Bryan reply to that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Bryan did not reply.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you have reference to in condemning the efforts of some one to secure the extradition of Salazar?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I say the chance for a constant effort at revolution.

The CHAIRMAN. What did the extradition or proposed extradition of Salazar have to do with it and why do you condemn the efforts toward his extradition?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I can not at this moment refer just to the circumstance in connection with it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know Salazar?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know anything about him.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; with the exception that I know or did know the circumstances at the time of Salazar.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not know them now?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I don't recall now.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever meet Salazar?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not; not that I know of. The names did not mean much of anything to me. No, sir; I don't know now.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know that he was cursing and abusing American people, daring them to fight, spitting in their faces, slapping their jaws, murdering the men, ravishing the women, and driving some 1,200-odd women and children out of Mexico, did you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think it is to extradite him back to Mexico, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. You were opposing his extradition, were you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. As I say, without trying to find out as to just what the situation then was, I am not able to pass on it for the moment, with the exception of my record in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. January 31, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know that Salazar ordered the execution of an American citizen named Fountain, or caused his execution, although the President of the United States, through the consul at Parral, placed Fountain under the protection of the United States and demanded of Salazar that he should not execute that American citizen? You knew nothing of that, did you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. You are a good deal more familiar in regard to men and their history, etc., than I am.

The CHAIRMAN. I am asking you if you knew about that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am simply trying to give you credit for these things, because I have not the situation on those things firmly in mind as yourself, and as you have expressed that you have but very limited time to give me I prefer to try to get it on some lines that have a direct bearing on which I have in mind, rather than the question of personnel of certain men.

The CHAIRMAN. The object of these questions, Mr. Teitlebaum, is to show whether you know anything about the subject, and whether it is possible for this committee, and through the committee to the American people, to obtain any possible information from you.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You were writing to Mr. Bryan, the then Secretary of State, ostensibly from the standpoint of one who knew something about Mexico and the Mexican people. You were referring to Salazar and to his extradition. The questions propounded to you are to ascertain what knowledge, if any, you have of Salazar, why you should interfere in his behalf, what intimate acquaintance with Mexican affairs you possessed upon which you propose to enlighten this committee and the American people. For that reason I have asked you the specific question of whether you knew of certain acts of Salazar?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not. I did know at the time, because I based that statement—but I do not recall at the moment.

The CHAIRMAN. I am recalling it to you.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Because you are one of the men in the United States who have criticized the committee, and particularly the chairman, who is now addressing you. The chairman of this committee was stating from the record to the people of the United States that Salazar, in defiance of the command of the President of the United States that he should not murder an American citizen, did proceed to murder that American citizen. And I was criticized by you for such general statement. Now, you were writing to the Secretary of State in reference to Salazar, and in his behalf, and still you say you knew nothing about Salazar or his actions?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I would probably be able to give you a more and better understanding of that and better explanation of it than I am able to give you at the moment, because my memory is very treacherous.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; I will refresh your memory.

Lieutenant, have you the files of the Secretary of State in reference to the Fountain case?

Lieut. FLIPPER. I think so.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That would not have any bearing, Senator. I beg your pardon, but I don't want to be sidetracked.

The CHAIRMAN. Then get to the main issue. What do you want to say? Go on.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I want to make a plea for a square deal for the masses of Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you know of the masses of Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had occasion to observe in six months' very close application considerable of the masses.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the result of your observations?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am trying to give it to you.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Get to something concrete.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have felt that they were more sinned against than sinning; that they have failed to have at least one hand on the side of virtue and honor for the others; that the large part of Mexico's troubles is outside of Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is it? I can make a speech, and so can you, but we are trying to get information. Where is the trouble with Mexico that is outside of Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, I think the financial interests, oil interests, and other people do not understand the Mexican situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you understand it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, what is it? That is what I am trying to get at. What is it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am trying to give it to you in my humble way, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let us get the facts, and not speeches.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The indictment I make of it is that no intelligent program, and no honest effort has been made to keep the peace of Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you are indicting the President of the United States, and the people of the United States.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am indicting anybody for the duty as I see clear to me, and I want to make my case on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you can make a case on the facts.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. All right; I am trying to make it so, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Mr. Conova, who was the former director as to Mexican and the Latin American Department or Division in the State Department, had smuggled out General Iturbide from Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the source of your information upon that subject?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had that from Mexican sources, Mr. Uranta, who was representative of the Villa forces in Washington, or was at that time, and I had occasion since to check up.

The CHAIRMAN. That is something concrete. Mr. Uranta, representing the Villa forces, stated to you that Mr. Conova, lately in charge of the Department of Latin American affairs in the United States in the Department of State, had smuggled out Mr. Iturbide from Mexico City?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. You got that from Mr. Uranta?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He is now in New York?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think he is in New York. The last I knew of him he was.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. That is one of the grounds of your indictment against the President and people of the United States. Go ahead.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. On August 17, 1915, I wrote to Mr. Wright—

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Mr. Wright;

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The editor and publisher of the Globe, in New York:

On several occasions during the past week I have discussed with you the serious charge being made by Mr. E. C. Uranta, the accredited representative of the Mexican conventional forces in Washington, that Mr. L. J. Conova, chief of the Mexican Division of the State Department, is secretly advancing the candidacy of Eduardo Iturbide for provisional President of Mexico. The impressions created by Mr. Conova's affiliations serve as a great obstacle to setting the various factions in arms together, and if possible communicate with the Latin American conference.

The CHAIRMAN. That was your statement at that time. Now, you are making a statement to the committee. What did you know about Iturbide?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I personally knew that he was associated with Huerta, and that Huerta turned his forces to him in Mexico City, and he in turn surrendered them to the Constitutionalists.

The CHAIRMAN. The Constitutionalists were the Carrancistas?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In Mexico City.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you know about the different factions in arms in Mexico? You say in that communication that Mr. Conova's efforts in behalf of Mr. Iturbide would prevent the getting together of the different factions in arms in Mexico. What did you know about that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The Carrancistas and Villistas.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you acting as a go-between and in the confidence of both of those factions in Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Iturbide faction formed another faction, did it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I didn't mean it in that sense. I was trying to compose the two factions then, because there was no other faction at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes; there was.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, I had in mind the two principal factions.

The CHAIRMAN. You had in mind the two principal factions, and you were attempting to act as a go-between for those two factions?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; to compose their differences.

The CHAIRMAN. And you were simply making a statement at that time of your conclusions?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that activities in behalf of Iturbide prevented the getting together of the Villa faction and the Carranza faction;

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What other indictment have you against the United States?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. "Neither the Carranza, Villa, or Zapata factions can be persuaded to accept Iturbide."

The CHAIRMAN. How did you know that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had worked with these people with the sincere desire of trying to do service to this country in bringing those factions together, to save the blood and treasure of this, my country.

The CHAIRMAN. And when you found that some other American citizen, holding a high office in the department of the Government, thought that some other solution was better than yours, of course he was not actuated by the high motives which governed your conduct?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; I think if you will let me——

The CHAIRMAN. I am not going to let you go ahead and talk generalities.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That is not a generality; that is a direct charge on which I base my testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. You have made your charge.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am reading it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you have made it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am trying to do it by reading.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not care to have you read all of your correspondence in this record. I have not the time for it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Get down to something concrete.

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. This is concrete.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. If this is not acceptable to you to want to try to get the information that I am trying to give you——

The CHAIRMAN. I do not care anything about you, sir.

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. That is all right, sir. I do feel considerably about you, just the same.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. I have come here feeling my duty clear and at great personal sacrifice of all that I have represented, and I don't like to get it distorted to the degree where it can not be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not going to be distorted, so far as the committee is concerned.

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. Yes, sir. Having made that charge, I recognized how serious it was. I had, through Dudley Field Malone, waited on our department here. Through Mr. Wright I had interested him to try to get Mr. House. I tried to work through Mr. Wright in getting down in this Iturbide matter and trying to bring it to the attention of the department. I did not know how serious a situation it was. I have made an effort to do so with Secretary Lansing, and with a letter of introduction to him from Dudley Field Malone, and I did not succeed in doing so. I have made these same charges in the open in seven cities two years ago, in which I have sent them copies of the addresses I was going to make, including Mr. Conova, to gainsay the truth of the charges I was making.

The CHAIRMAN. And he did not do it?

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. He did not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, sir; go ahead.

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. I had known Mr. Conova in Mexico. He asked me up here to give him a report of what I had done down there, and said instead of saying what I had done I was making recommendations, and I will not read it to you, Senator, since it is not acceptable.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have anything that you did there, any fact, it is perfectly acceptable. So far as your recommendations or policies are concerned, based on the past or any acts of Mr. Conova, who is out of the department, I do not care anything about them.

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. He is not out, but he had occupied that same position for nearly two years, and as to what part he played I have here a statement from the Associated Press:

Eduardo Iturbide, one of those often mentioned as a compromise candidate for the presidency, joined the diplomats at the Argentine Embassy for a brief conference. He is a grandson of Iturbide, the Liberator, and was governor of the Federal district of Mexico City during the last days of Huerta's régime, and was instrumental in helping Americans. His candidacy has been opposed by both Carranza and Villa.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did you oppose him?

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. Because he stood in the way of composing the differences between the factions that I felt were absolutely necessary for the people.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. He has been eliminated. Were their differences ever composed?

Mr. TEITTLERBAUM. They were not, because the proper effort was not taken, and Mr. Conova was to a very great measure responsible for it.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Because I know that they could have been, because I myself had brought Mr. Arradondo and Mr. Urana together two or three days before the A. B. C. conference met here, and I know that they had pledged to each other to make every effort to have the factions get together, and Iturbide was again in the end used for an excuse for their not having got together.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the proposition on which they were to get together? You were acting for them. What proposition did they have upon which they could have gotten together?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. To settle their differences.

The CHAIRMAN. How?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was up to them to do. They had that means when they were gotten together, which I did in an automobile on the stormiest night I have ever known, and I fell asleep. I could not understand what they were saying. I did not want to understand it. I knew it was necessary for them to simply have a heart to heart talk, which they did.

The CHAIRMAN. You know they did, do you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I do, because I was a party to it and brought the two factions together. And had it not been for having shifted all responsibility on to the Latin American A. B. C. conference, I am satisfied they would have got together.

The CHAIRMAN. What A. B. C. conference do you have reference to?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. There was only one conference that was called the A. B. C. conference. That was the conference of Argentine, Brazil, and Chile, and the other three. I think there were three other countries from South America in it. I am trying to point to the mistakes that we have made.

The CHAIRMAN. I know, but you are telling us about the efforts that were made, and you are mistaken about your facts. The A. B. C. conference was the Niagara conference, between representatives of Carranza and the United States. The conference of the Central American States is the conference you referred to, to which the A. B. C. was invited or asked an audience.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Your memory serves you better than mine.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; considerably.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; I wish I had it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you had the record and the facts, they would serve you, and you would not have to simply rely upon your memory.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. But you know just what I mean.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know, Mr. Teitlebaum, what you mean. For instance, you give this committee a lot of stuff about Salazar, when the committee has the official record about Salazar.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I beg your pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. I am referring to that as one matter, because you dwelt upon it in your letter to Mr. Bryan.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I simply called attention to it, but it was yourself, if you will permit me to make the statement, who particularly referred to it.

The CHAIRMAN. It was myself who referred to the record. I am referring to the record again to correct you when you say there was only one A. B. C. conference. I am trying to get you straightened out so you may proceed. What took place at that last conference, the A. B. C.? Did you have anything to do with that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know anything about it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I know enough about it to know that the American Government's hand was forced, and they did not want to recognize Carranza.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you have made a statement. I want your facts. Upon what do you found the statement that the hand of the American Government was forced and who forced it? Now, please answer that.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I will try to do that, Senator, in an appropriate manner. In an Associated Press report—

The CHAIRMAN. What are you reading from?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The Globe.

The CHAIRMAN. What Globe?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The New York Globe.

The CHAIRMAN. A newspaper published in New York?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not suppose, Mr. Teitlebaum, that the committee had access to the Globe as well as you had?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I can not help it. I am making certain statements, and I want to try to verify them, since you have asked for proof. It simply says:

The Latin American diplomats had a series of conferences among themselves to-day before they resumed their conferences at the State Department. They covered their deliberations with the same secrecy as was thrown about yesterday's meeting. The diplomats met at the Argentine Embassy and later proceeded to Secretary Lansing's office.

I think you will see that, in view of the fact that certain statements and promises were made to Gen. Angeles, through Dudley Field Malone—

The CHAIRMAN. What promises were made to Angeles through Dudley Field Malone?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That the United States Government did not intend, and had not in mind, to recognize either faction to the trouble in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that done?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was done probably a couple of weeks before Carranza was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you know it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I was in the conference at the Hotel Knickerbocker with General and Mrs. Angeles and Dudley Field Malone.

The CHAIRMAN. Gen. Angeles—Felipe Angeles?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And his wife?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And Dudley Field Malone?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And did Dudley Field Malone convey to Gen. Angeles the assurance that the American Government would never recognize either faction?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. There were two meetings. At one of them Gen. Angeles had explained to Mr. Malone, for the President, the attitude and position of the Villistas, with his own statement and deductions, or rather conclusions, saying that it was his belief that neither faction should be recognized; that no man having taken part in military operations should be permitted to aspire to the presidency; that he himself would pledge himself not to do so, and if it was advisable he would withdraw himself from the country.

The CHAIRMAN. You were present, were you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I was present.

The CHAIRMAN. In what capacity was Mr. Malone present?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. It was through Mr. Wright that Col. House was asked to meet Gen. Angeles, and he, I think, had Mr. Malone take his place.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Now then, Gen. Angeles stated that in his opinion no military man from either faction should be recognized as President?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, there was another conference, was there not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Then Mr. Malone had come down to Washington, for the day, I think, the President came from, I think it was New Hampshire, and met him here, and he came back to New York expressing the comments of the President, and the statement that it was not his intention, and thanking Gen. Angeles for the information that he had given, and that it was not the intention to recognize either faction, or something of that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Gen. Angeles did not object to the recognition of the factions, but he objected or thought it best not to recognize as President a military man in either faction?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did Gen. Angeles think it was best to recognize?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. He did not say.

The CHAIRMAN. And the President replied, through Mr. Malone, as you understood it, that he, the President, was not going to recognize either faction?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he say what he was going to do?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; but Gen. Angeles went back and reported to his convention, or the people who sent him, the representatives to the peace conference from which he was invited by the Government, and not more than two weeks thereafter President Carranza was recognized. In view of that Associated Press report I made the statement that the Government's hand was forced.

The CHAIRMAN. But that states nothing about the Government's hand being forced.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, I think the fact of the promise having been made by the Government itself, there was no other excuse that I could see, even though I didn't have that version coming from the Associated Press.

The CHAIRMAN. What man did you favor at that time between the factions?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I didn't favor anybody. I didn't think it was my place.

The CHAIRMAN. What solution did you offer to Mr. Malone and Gen. Angeles, of the problem, if any?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I didn't offer any. It was simply to urge both sides to help to compose their differences and get together. For that purpose I had made other trips to Mexico and had put my life in danger.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think it was in November, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. After the recognition by this Government of the Carranza Government? The recognition of this Government of the Carranza Government took place on the 9th or 19th of October, 1915. Was it after that or before that? Was it November, 1914, or November, 1915?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. It was 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you go then?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I went to Vera Cruz, and from Vera Cruz to Mexico City.

The CHAIRMAN. That was prior to all this Angeles matter you were talking about, was it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. I was very anxious then to try to serve in that capacity, because there had been——

The CHAIRMAN. In what capacity?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In trying to bring them together.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did you see?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I saw Mr. Carranza.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you find him?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I found him at Mexico City, and then went to Puebla, and it was in Puebla that I had a conference with him.

The CHAIRMAN. With whom?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. With Mr. Carranza, and Mr. Cabrera acted as interpreter.

The CHAIRMAN. Luis Cabrera?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Present Minister of Hacienda?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He did not represent any other faction, did he?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not represent any other faction?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; but I had tried to see both sides.

The CHAIRMAN. That was one side.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who else did you see?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. On the other side I saw Gen. Angeles and his followers.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you see him?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. At Aguascaliente, at the convention.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you say to Carranza and Luis Cabrera?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That I thought that the peace of Mexico and the peace of the United States depended on their composing their differences.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you suggest how they could compose their differences?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; with the exception of to try to be charitable for each other's faults, and they being brothers, having fought for the revolution, and having won it, that they ought to get together.

The CHAIRMAN. You went to Aguascaliente, and there you saw Angeles and members of the convention?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who else did you see besides Angeles?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I saw Zapata's representative, I saw Villa, I saw most of the leaders on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make a proposition to them?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell them you had seen Carranza and Luis Cabrera?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What proposition did you make to them, or to Angeles?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The same that I had made to the First Chief, Venustiana Carranza; I had but one song to sing in Mexico, and that was harmony.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell them who you represented?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Whom did you represent?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Myself.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. What happened?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. There was not anything that happened, with the exception that Gen. Angeles told me, as he told me since, that had I been there 24 hours before I was probably they would have tried to see my recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he mean he would have tried to carry out your suggestion?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The song that you had to sing?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. But as the convention had already elected Guerterrez as president, he was powerless to do anything then.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew that Gen. Angeles later did try to compose the differences between the factions, did you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He was one of the organizers of the liberal party here in this country, was he not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know the result to him when he undertook to get these people together in these different factions?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The ultimate result, yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is where he found himself [handing witness a photograph], and that is his latest picture.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. There was one of God's noblemen, if ever there was one, so far as I was able to see.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know under whose orders he was executed?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. I know we could do nothing that would bring him back. It is a case of not sending any more than is necessary to follow him, that is all. I knew the man to be as great a patriot as any I have known.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know any of those men who composed the court-martial that tried Gen. Angeles, shown in that photograph, where he appears before them?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. From the photograph I can not very well make out. I can not tell that is Angeles. I suppose it is him standing there.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever heard of Gen. Gabriel Gavita?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have heard of him?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know under whom he holds a commission?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what faction he represents?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know to whom the members of that court-martial claim allegiance in Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I suppose to Carranza. No, sir; I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you hear or have you heard that the court-martial itself telegraphed to the City of Mexico, with reference to their verdict, before they found it? You seem to think very highly of Gen. Angeles. Did you know the court-martial which sentenced him to death, and caused his execution, prior to pronouncing sentence upon him, and instructions from any higher authority?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; but I would not be surprised that they did. I know I sent a cablegram to Carranza asking him to spare him.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive an answer?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is this that you have handed me?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That is a photograph of Gen. Angeles; and the reverse side, if you don't mind looking at it—perhaps you can translate it better than I have it.

The CHAIRMAN. If you can not read Spanish, I expect I could make a better translation of it than you could, if it is written in Spanish.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I do not read Spanish. The translation is not very long:

To my dear friend, Mr. Teitlebaum, with my sincere wishes for the success of his work toward strengthening the ties of friendship between our two sister nations.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that is substantially correct.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had it from Mr. Bonillas.

The CHAIRMAN. Bonillas, the ambassador to the United States from Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Mr. Bonillas, the ambassador to the United States and representative of the Carranza Government, join in your efforts to save the life of Felipe Angeles?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. After Mr. Carranza was recognized, I addressed a letter to Mr. Lansing on October 20, 1915:

I sincerely hope that the Government's abandonment of its persistent insistence that the factions in Mexico compose their own differences does not prove to be the greatest of all the succession of errors that has been committed by the United States in its Mexican policy.

The step of recognizing either faction having taken, the need for harmonizing and getting them together is more pronounced than ever.

Unless my limited individual campaign, in its devoted endeavor for an early and necessary restoration of confidence and good will between the neighboring countries for the safety and welfare of both peoples interferes with the work of your department, I propose instead of doing aught to encourage my fears to follow duty and continue to exert every honorable effort to minimize the result of charges of bad faith made by leading Mexicans that American promises and acts do not parallel.

That is why I say, sir, that we did not keep faith.

The CHAIRMAN. What promises did we make?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I told you the promises that were made through Mr. Malone.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are the promises you refer to?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And because we did recognize Carranza, that is a violation of the promise you refer to, is it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That is one of them. I had been under more obligations to Mr. Carranza than all the others put together, in courtesies I had received, but I recognized with Gen. Angeles the great mistake that would be committed by either side being recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was to be recognized, if anyone? They would not have any government under your suggestion. Did you propose to form a government or have a government down there?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I wanted the Carrancistas, the Zapatistas, and the Villistas to get together in the convention which they had left in Aguascaliente and agree on the man whom they wanted. It was not for me to say as to who they should have or should not have.

The CHAIRMAN. They did do that, did they not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; not that I recall.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a man elected or appointed by that convention as President of Mexico.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know Eulalio Gueterrez?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. That was before that. That is when Gen. Angeles said had I come 24 hours before that it might have been done. Forty-eight hours after that convention elected Gueterrez the Villa forces had started to take the field.

The CHAIRMAN. The Villa forces were supporting Gueterrez, were they not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; they were before that.

The CHAIRMAN. He was the man supported by the convention?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; he was, but the Carranzistas did not recognize him, and he telegraphed, asking both Carranza and Cabrera with whose consent had I went to the Aguascaliente convention.

The CHAIRMAN. But you asked them to recognize Eulalio Gueterrez?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I had not. He was recognized while I was on the way over there.

The CHAIRMAN. You did telegraph them suggesting that in the interests of peace and harmony they should?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you telegraph them suggesting they should recognize Gueterrez?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive an answer?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. I don't know that it ever reached them.

The CHAIRMAN. Before we get away too far from the question, you have been giving us some information with reference to the efforts of Gen. Felipe Angeles. Were you at all familiar with the organization of which Gen. Felipe Angeles was elected president, of which there were various juntas in different cities in the United States in 1917 and subsequent to that time?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. I tried not to work with either faction at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you knew there was such an organization, did you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know what the name of it was?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I don't recall it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know what its purpose was?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. It was to bring the factions together.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it not a unification of all political refugees against the Carranza government and to bring about an adjustment of the troubles in Mexico without bloodshed?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, I did not know that that embraced the Cientificos. I think probably it had others besides the Cientificos.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Enrique C. Llorente?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Enrique Santibanes, of New York City?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I don't know him by name.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know J. F. Del Valle, of New York City?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Not by name.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Felipe Riveros, Antonio P. Rivera, Adolfo M. Azueta, Manuel Lcasa, sr., Rosenda Garza, Bernardo Escobosa, and Arnoldo Ceballos, or either of them, of San Francisco, Calif.?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Samuel Gandara, Manual Arriola Adame, Rogerio A. Silva, Enrique Cisneros, and Francisco Placencia, or either of them, of Philadelphia?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Roque G. Garza, of San Antonio, Tex.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Ismael Palafox?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not know who he represents?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think I probably know Ismael Palafox.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Andreas L. Farias, Matias C. Garcia, Francisco Olicares, Jose G. Nieto, and Jesus P. Flores, of San Antonio, or either of them, all of San Antonio except Matias C. Garcia?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I know Gonzales Garcia.

The CHAIRMAN. There were two brothers?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I know both of them.

The CHAIRMAN. One was known as Gonzales Garcia and the other Matias Garcia?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Jesus Santos Mendiola, Antonia Valdeez, Rafael Trujillo, Juan Jose Gomez, Adolfo F. Farias, Enrique Miranda, and Jose Luna, or either of them, of Laredo, Tex.?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Not that I recall, but there were thousands of them—or hundreds—that I know, that I do not know their names. I was only concerned with the men at the head.

The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to get at the head, because these men were the official heads of the movement.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I don't know much of anything about the movement, with the exception that I know that there was an organization perfected by Angeles and somebody else.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know Antonio I. Villareal?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not know whether you know him or not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I do not. I think, if it is the same party I have in mind in San Antonio, that I know him.

The CHAIRMAN. At this convention that you attended in the interest of harmony, who was president of it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I don't know, sir, who the president was, but they had elected Guerterrez as President.

The CHAIRMAN. He was elected President of the Republic of Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether any of those there at the time belonged to the revolutionary junta of Mexicans organized in 1905 in the United States?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I do not. That was way ahead of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it may be, but you are trying to give this committee information about Mexico.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am trying to give the committee information about facts I have.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with the testimony of this witness the chairman of the committee will file with his testimony the report made to the committee on the Felipe Angeles movement in the United States, organized in 1917, continued until his death, and supposed yet to continue. This report contains the names of the officers in the United States, contains various letters, contains the declaration of principles, containing references to Angeles's statement when he entered Mexico, and his convocation and address to the Mexican people as to his purposes, together with the constitution and laws of the Mexican liberal alliance. This is not to be printed in the record, but filed as a part of the testimony of this witness.

(The document referred to is herewith filed as a part of the testimony of this witness.)

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. So you see that it was not that I tried to play any part in making Mr. Carranza president, or Gen. Angeles, or anybody else.

The CHAIRMAN. I was wondering what you proposed to do.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. When they get together, let them say, as long as they approach the program with the proper spirit. That is all that was necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Obregon, Villa, Zapata, representatives of all the factions in Mexico, those who had fought with them for the recognition of Carranza in Mexico, those who were opposing Huerta in arms, all got together in a convention, and the outcome of that was the election of Guertterez as president by the convention.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You attended the convention? You were trying to get them together, and the only people who would not get together were Carranza and Luis Cabrera?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Very true. Now, then, I will give you a sequel to that, and here is where I have placed my life between the teeth to bring harmony, even after that.

When Eulalio Guertterez was elected, the Villa forces had marched toward Mexico City. In my talk that I had with Mr. Guertterez he said that he would be very glad to step aside, as long as he stood in the way and was not acceptable to the Carrancistas. I applauded his stand, and knowing as to what Gen. Angeles had said in regard to my appearing late on the scene, too late for what he did, I took an overland trip to get into the Carranza camp, and bring the matter to the attention of some of the leaders on the side of the Carrancistas. I went down to Santa Maria, from Guertetaro, and at that place I had occasion to have a second man shot for misappropriating property.

The CHAIRMAN. You had occasion to have him shot?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That is, the occasion of one of the men being shot.

The CHAIRMAN. What business was it of yours?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. It happened to be that he had appropriated one of my bags.

The CHAIRMAN. And you saw that he was shot?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I didn't see that he was shot. He was a paymaster in the army, a very handsome, fine-looking fellow. Part of the forces were ordered from Santa Maria eastward, and I discovered that one of my grips was gone. Somebody had suggested that the man had gone with those forces eastward, and I took the train, as they were on horseback, to try to recover my grip. When I got to that point I had several telegrams that they did find my grip, and to come back. There are some of the telegrams. I took the train back, and I found that the man was sentenced to be shot in the morning. I plead with the commandant in charge, and thought I had succeeded in saving him, and several hours afterwards he told me I would have to choose between them, that he had his orders and had to report on this man being executed by 9 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. What did he mean by saying you had to choose between them?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was what he had said. Whether that he intended to take his own life, or not, I don't know but his advisers had evidently showed him that he could not be in the military without he obeyed those orders, and it was too late for me to be able to get word to President Guertterez and try to intervene for him, and the boy was shot.

I have here the mute evidence, consisting of a part of the coat, with the bullet holes, of another boy, who was shot at Aguascaliente for having stolen tools from an American concern. There are four or five places where the bullets entered the boy's body, and there is his life blood. I want to offer that simply as proof of the statement that no penalty is exacted of Mexicans for things that they do.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean you want to offer that as a refutation of that statement?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Refutation. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know of one being shot for killing an American?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; but I haven't any doubt but what they don't make any more ceremony on some of those than they did on these two boys.

The CHAIRMAN. You had no occasion to know that. did you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; but I am bringing this to you, sir, for this purpose: Because I myself could not serve either of these boys, and I want their spirit and the spirit of the Americans and the Mexicans who had so needlessly lost their all, including Gen. Angeles, to have it serve the purpose for which I am here before your committee.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the purpose? What do you have in mind? What do you want to do? Let us proceed and see if we can not get at what you want by question and answer.

Following all this you have just testified to, the Government of the United States, in October, 1915, recognized the de facto government. In 1917 they sent an ambassador and recognized the Carranza Government officially. Since that time they have continued to recognize the Carranza Government. Those are the conditions existing up to this time. The Carranza Government is still recognized?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it that you want to tell the committee to throw light on the Mexican question? What do you want done?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I respectfully suggest the appointment of an international commission, whose province would be to pass on all these depredations that were committed and lives taken on either side of the border.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by "an international commission"?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. An international commission of, for instance, a high court of both Mexicans and Americans, to see just what the situation is and to find out just how far it reaches; instead of trying to cover certain graft of people higher up, particularly on the American side, that they should get down to it as far as it is possible to do.

The CHAIRMAN. What have you reference to when you say "particularly on the American side"?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Because I know that a very large number of our representatives were responsible that certain crimes were committed and punishment condoned for it, if they did not father it.

The CHAIRMAN. Get down to something concrete. What are you talking about?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am talking about raids.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean raids on this side of the border, or raids from this side over on the other?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Both sides.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to know what raids you have reference to, organized on this side of the river at any time, or brought about in any way by any individual or combination of individuals or any other concern, which resulted in injury to anyone on the other side of the river. Just give us an illustration of one case.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. My testimony is directed to tracing those raids, Senator, because those people higher up can tell us betted when they are going and what method they will use to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not make a statement with reference to raids from this side to the other side unless you had something back of it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I don't mean any Americans raiding Mexicans. I mean Mexicans being hired by Americans to do the raiding.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have not the data on that; but here is a resolution that several of us had drafted in San Antonio with a view of holding a public meeting to indorse the stand:

We recognize that America's greatest contribution to an early and lasting peace in Mexico lies in discouraging the practice of using American soil to foment and breed further disputes in our sister Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that have reference to your efforts in furthering the Madero revolution?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. It says:

Whereas the President of the United States has honored our State and the city of San Antonio by selecting Mr. Duval West, one of our foremost citizens, as his personal representative to aid, as far as may be consistent with our neutrality and declared policy of nonintervention, in suggesting a just basis upon which the people of that Republic may settle the differences which are now causing internal war and fratricidal strife within her borders.

The CHAIRMAN. What had that to do with the statement you made with reference to Americans employing Mexicans to raid the other side?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Just as sure as I am of knowing that it is daylight, now, Senator, that many Americans that have been filled with bullets that were brought in there ostensibly to use on Mexicans that were used on Americans. Unfortunately, I myself have it in my heart in having helped the best I could to remove that.

The CHAIRMAN. That has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. It has this to do.

The CHAIRMAN. You answer the questions I propound to you. I asked you what you know, what information you have, what leads you to make the charge of a most serious nature that Americans have been raiding or causing to be raided Mexican soils, resulting in the death or injury of any person in Mexico or the robbery or stealing of any property in Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That is an absolute conviction based on the knowledge of the general situation, and I say I am just as certain of it as I know I have got a little gray matter. I have not seen it, but I think I have it.

The CHAIRMAN. You must have some foundation for it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Just the general natural cussedness——

The CHAIRMAN. Of yourself?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. All right, sir; of myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Exactly just the disposition——

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Of some financial interests, sir, who would stoop to anything.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an infamous accusation, unless you can prove it. If you have any proof of this I want you to give it to this committee. Have you anything to substantiate that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I will be able, if you want to, to get you the proof. I will set myself to bring it.

The CHAIRMAN. You came here with an armful of papers.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You came at your own request to make a statement.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I did, am I am making it, and I will give you what I have in connection with it.

The CHAIRMAN. You joined other people in making such an accusation, and I want some substantiation of it. Are you prepared to give it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am trying to give it to you now. I didn't take part in some of these things, and I can't give them to you. I am making it as a general charge.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon what do you found it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. On my own knowledge of the general situation, just the same as I know it is daylight now.

The CHAIRMAN. Then give us the facts. Give us any facts, any information within your knowledge.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. If you want facts on that particular thing, I will set myself to get them for you, sir, and I will be able to get them for you.

The CHAIRMAN. What have you been doing for eight years?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have not taken part in that industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will not sit here and listen to such representations of stuff as you are now repeating, unless you will give your foundation for it, and give the committee something upon which they can act.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. All right. We will go to something else.

The CHAIRMAN. No; I want that right now.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I promise to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. I want it now.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I can't give it to you now.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the committee declines to hear you any further, sir.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. All right, sir. I thank you very much for your courtesy and patience. I would like real well to have this to the end, because I believe there is much good to come from it, if we approach it in the proper spirit, but it does not always serve our purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. You have paid your own expenses, have you, in connection with your Mexican investigations?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; I have spent the only money I have made for some time to come on this trip down here.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has in its possession a good deal of information respecting the financing of similar matters.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That is all right. I don't blame the committee for asking the questions, and I am very glad you state it frankly, because I believe that is the only way to get any results.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee declines positively to listen to vague accusations, for which you do not submit the proof.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think I have enough other matter I can give you tangible evidence on.

The CHAIRMAN. Tangible evidence of what? Give us tangible evidence of anything and we will listen to you.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have been furnishing you evidence, but it is not acceptable to you. I can furnish you tangible evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidence of what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The chairman of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Now, let us have it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I did not come prepared for that, but I find that at our conference yesterday, which I did not expect, I have something on it. I simply want to say that so far as I am able to see, that I have some clippings here and statements and addresses made by him from the time Madero, that the chairman has not been in sympathy with all the efforts made by Mexicans or kept the spirit of neutrality.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman has never been in sympathy with evidence from a man who is not a citizen of the United States, not in any official position, who interferes with the affairs of a foreign country, where it might drag this country into some action, whether that action might be beneficial or not. The chairman has never had any sympathy with any movement of that kind or any person of that kind. Now, you have made a statement that is something concrete. You state that you have information with reference to the chairman of this committee. Now, give it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. All right. Do you want me to quote the speeches that you have made at various times?

The CHAIRMAN. Where? When?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. At different places, in New York. Here is one.

The CHAIRMAN. From what are you intending to quote?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. A speech made at the Mexico Society of New York, at the Hispanic Society's building, and this press report says:

Following Senator Fall's speech the society adopted resolutions congratulating Ambassador Wilson upon "the ability, patience, and courage" he has shown in the recent crisis and expressing hope that the Mexican "patriots who are fighting to establish and maintain a constitutional government" will succeed.

That is one.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that? It is a resolution, is it not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; but you probably recall as to when it was. I have not got the case marked here.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recall the date at this moment.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; I will be able to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. What are you reading it for? What is the purpose of it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am trying to show that the chairman is not now and has not been in sympathy with these poor benighted devils who are trying to bring some organized government out of Mexico and without embroiling us in the end and saving our boys from having to go down there, with the consequent loss of blood and treasure, because there is no man that has been in the position that the chairman of this committee has been in for doing the things that this Mexican situation would never be in the shape that it is in, except for the chairman of this committee, I think, and the heart of this country, W. R. Hearst.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your purpose in reading that newspaper clipping?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. To simply show you that. There is another.

The CHAIRMAN. Just confine yourself to answering the questions.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. To show the chairman is not in sympathy with me in attempting to get at what I am trying to get at.

The CHAIRMAN. I admit that in the record. I am not in sympathy with you.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, go back and answer the question. What is your purpose in reading that clipping?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. For the purpose that I say, that it appears to me that the chairman holds a grouch against those people, which endangers the good will and sympathy and confidence between the two nations.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that clipping? Read it again, to yourself. You need not read it aloud. How does it apply? What are you talking about?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I read it as evidence of what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. Just read it and answer the question.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I only want to use it as proof in regard to the chairman's position, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. What proof is it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. And with the best of feeling and kindness in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. What proof is it? You have read a resolution which was adopted after the speech of the chairman.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. You make it impossible for me to follow it. When there is a chance of leading up to something, it is diverted in another direction instead of following it along certain lines.

The CHAIRMAN. That is absolutely untrue. The chairman has exhibited the utmost patience with you, sir, and will continue to do so, on any line you may desire along this subject; but I want to know what your conclusion is from this resolution you have just read. What do you think about it? Upon what do you base your conclusion?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think that the meeting at which the chairman spoke was certainly not in sympathy with trying to help compose the differences.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, read that resolution again. I asked you to read it. Now, see what it says.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was, sir, at the time when one of the men who was most responsible for the trouble of Madero, and an accredited representative who was withdrawn and recalled for the dirty work he had done.

Following Senator FALL's speech, the society adopted resolutions congratulating Ambassador Wilson upon "the ability, patience, and courage" he has shown in the recent crisis, and expressing hope that the Mexican "patriots who are fighting to establish and maintain a constitutional government" will succeed.

By "constitutional patriots" is not meant either faction to the revolution, and neither have I seen anything at all that I have had occasion to observe where the chairman has done the thing to bring those relations which he is in such an excellent position to bring.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you opposed to the recognition of the Huerta government by this Government?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not know that speech was made in answer to a speech by Henry Lane Wilson, in which Mr. Wilson advocated the recognition of Huerta and the chairman opposed it?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Is that so? I am very glad to have you give me that information. Quoting yourself:

Not one member of the prominent families, the white class, of Mexico has taken part in upholding the hands of either Diaz or of Madero. None of these answered Madero's call for volunteers. Now, if prominent Mexicans will not uphold the hands of a strong government, what can they expect for their country?

Everybody acquainted with conditions in Mexico knows that if universal suffrage were established there to-day Zapata would be elected against all other candidates. Everybody knows that the overthrow of a strong government in Mexico means anarchy. The army? The army to-day is drinking pulque. While Gen. Huerta was fighting the revolutionists, 3 miles from the line, 447 bridges were burned on the railroad south of Juarez, and bandits were camped nearby feeding on beef stolen from the cattle companies. No attempt was made to drive them out. When some of these bands surrendered useless guns they were immediately pardoned by Gen. Blanco, permitted to keep the horses they had stolen, and equipped with modern rifles. When the victims of their depredations complained and threatened to report them, they replied that they were working for Huerta and Blanco.

All of these bands, it has been ascertained, receive support from socialists in San Diego, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Sacramento, and Cleveland—militant socialists and anarchist organizations here, which have been supplying $1,000 monthly for printing and circulating their revolutionary literature.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know who those men were I have referred to as doing that robbing there?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They were under the command of Gen. Salazar, whom you have referred to here.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. As I have said before, and will show you again, that I personally have nothing against anybody who has done anything in connection with Mexico personally. But this has represented a great sacrifice to me, and I feel very proud of the little that has been given me to accomplish, with my limited influence, and I don't count my life any too much to contribute to it, in order to save any woman's son or any man's brother.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of this committee has been under very great provocation on one or two occasions, due to your having injected personalities into this hearing. The chairman has before him from his files a copy of a letter dated July 17, 1917, addressed to the President of the United States and an acknowledgment of the receipt by the President of that letter and his thanks for it. Among other things in the letter the chairman states:

I am in thorough accord with the administration in the policy of nonrecognition of the Huerta government as a government, and my reasons for that are as follows:

And they follow at some length. The letter is quite full. There is a somewhat lengthy discussion of the reasons actuating the present chairman of this committee in agreeing with the policy of the administration in the nonrecognition of Huerta. The suggestions the chairman made were as follows:

In December, 1899 (?), the Secretary of State of the United States handed to the representatives of the Nicaraguan Government a note, in which it was declared that this country could no longer recognize the Zelayan (?) government. Zelaya (?) was at that time the duly elected and acting President of Nicaragua. Revolutionists were in the field in different parts of the Republic against him. We declared that we would hold each of the leaders in his district or that portion of the country over which he had declared control responsible for injury to the property of American citizens and also the lives and liberty and safety of such citizens. Of course, the United States could not adopt that course with Mexico, unless it had first been given power to use marines and soldiers, as this country had done with Nicaragua, to enforce that warning.

In August following that letter, 1 month and 10 days, the President of the United States came before the Congress of the United States and delivered a message in person. He followed that action on the same day by a cable communication to the consul general at the city of Mexico and all the consuls of the United States, telegraphed through the consul general directly from the State Department to the consuls in all the States of northern Mexico, which were then out of telegraphic communication with the city. In a message of the President of the United States to the Congress of the United States he stated that there was no government in Mexico, and this Government would notify every leader in Mexico, civil and military, in the district over which he assumed to have control that he would be held strictly accountable for the life, safety, and property of American citizens. Of course, I do not assume that the President of the United States was following literally the suggestions in this letter of the chairman of this committee to him on July 17. I have the phraseology of the originals from the State Department of each of the telegraphic instructions which were sent to the consuls of the United States and directed by the President to notify to every Mexican in all the different States of the Republic, in every district, to every authority, civil or military, that they would be held strictly accountable for the life, property, and safety of the American citizens. That was the suggestion made by the chairman to the President, in these exact words:

Now, those telegrams were sent out, of course, using those words, because they were expressive and he had the precedent for them. The speech which you have referred to was made at the request of certain officials of this Government in a joint debate with Henry Lane Wilson. He attacked the action of the administration in the nonrecognition of Huerta, and I, at the request of certain officials of the United States Government, answered that attack. And the resolution, while it indorses the action of Mr. Wilson, followed the lines of the speech which I had made.

I simply do that in justice to myself and to the committee. I care nothing about your attack upon me. I am now in the position of chairman of the committee.

Now, then, what else have you in reference to the chairman of this committee?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. On that same line?

The CHAIRMAN. Let us have something else which induces you to believe that the chairman of this committee had done a great injury to Mexico and is now doing it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I would much sooner not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. You made the accusation—a very serious accusation. Those charges have been made before, but no man has ever faced any citizen and produced any evidence of any kind or character on that subject. Now, you have made charges in reference to the chairman of the committee in the general, vague terms which are of a serious nature.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am giving to you just what I have known the chairman to do—what he has said.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I did not come prepared on that score, because much of this material I have whipped into shape after coming up here, and after the conference we had yesterday and the position that I understood the chairman to take. I did find some expressions that occurred some time ago, speeches by the chairman, which did not show that he had been in sympathy. I am heartily sorry that I have brought any of this into this hearing. I am very grateful to you, and I am sorry to have hurt your feelings.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not hurt my feelings a particle.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am rather sensitive, and I would like—

The CHAIRMAN. I am not at all so.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I would like to beg your indulgence a little further.

The CHAIRMAN. No. You started to refer to something else about the chairman. You spoke of expressions the chairman made. I would like to know what you refer to. The speech you are talking about as being made in New York was a speech made in Worcester and Boston, Mass. Now, go ahead.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Here is a statement in the New York Tribune, dated August 24, 1912, headed:

SENATOR FALL DENIES OWNING LAND IN MEXICO—ADMITS, HOWEVER, HE IS INTERESTED IN SOME MINES WHICH ARE "NOT ON A PAYING BASIS"—WAS GREENE'S ASSOCIATE—HAD SOME BUSINESS DEALINGS WITH CANANEA COPPER MAN, BUT DID NOT MARRY HIS NIECE.

WASHINGTON, August 23.—Charges that he was actuated by self-interest in an attempt to bring about intervention in Mexico, made in the Nueva Era, which is recognized as the Government organ in Mexico City, were characterized by Senator Fall, of New Mexico, to-day as being too ridiculous to merit comment.

The Senator denied that he had an interest in any land in Mexico and expressed doubt that, even if he had, the tortuous process of bringing about intervention to enhance its value would be successful. He said that he had an interest in some mines which were not on a paying basis, but which, eventually, he hoped to dispose of to advantage.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like you to come to something which you say indicates that I am against the struggling people of Mexico, or anything not to their advantage.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. In a newspaper article——

The CHAIRMAN. Have you concluded your reading from this other paper?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. From that one; yes, sir. Here is another one, which, if you insist, I will have to take your time on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Just select the portions of it that you want to read.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Quoting from a clipping under date of August 19, at Washington, which I expect would be about 1911:

Conditions in Mexico were discussed in the Senate to-day by Senator Fall, of New Mexico, who arose to a question of personal privilege to declare "absurd and ridiculous" a statement purporting to come from President Madero to the effect that Mr. Fall had caused the failure of peace negotiations between the Mexican Government and Gen. Oroasco. Senator Fall denied he had ever had any connection with Oroasco regarding the peace negotiations. Conditions in Mexico could not last much longer, he said.

Further down it says:

Senator Fall declared that as President Madero had recognized the belligerence of the insurgents by informing the world that peace negotiations had failed, he thought the United States should recognize the insurgents.

I will not comment on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Was not that what you were trying to do?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Not against Madero.

The CHAIRMAN. Not against your particular insurgent.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Not against my particular insurgent.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Teitlebaum, of course you do not know anything about the facts?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir. I don't want to read these things to any man's hurt. I only try to justify myself to myself, as long as you do not accept it with the spirit in which it is given, and with which I have come here to facilitate doing what I believe it is your honest desire of trying to do—some constructive work for the people of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us get back to the facts. At the time this interview or statement was made, which appears in the Congressional Record, and from which you should have obtained it, if you wanted to quote from an official record instead of a statement in some newspaper report, at that time the facts were that the State of Chihuahua had seceded from the Mexican Government, had its own State government, its own legislature, which had been elected at the same time Madero was elected.

For their own reasons they had elected Oroasco as military governor of the State. He was in charge of the railroads and all the industries of the State. He was being dealt with every day by the United States Government through the port of Columbus and Juarez and other points. The conditions were at that time that Mr. Oroasco had raised the flag of insurrection. He had been joined by Mr. Madero. Madero sent his representative Ganzalez into Chihuahua, where Oroasco was in arms against the State authorities. The State authorities had been powerful enough to secure federal troops from Gen.

Diaz. Those troops came in armed conflict with Oroasco's forces and were repulsed. Madero represented to Oroasco that he then became an outlaw against the federal government; that if he would declare for Madero that he, Madero, would furnish him with arms and ammunition. He did furnish Oroasco with arms and ammunition, and Oroasco captured Juarez and overthrew it and placed Madero in power in Mexico almost single handed.

Later, for reasons of their own, the State of Chihuahua seceded. Orozco, in the position of military commander, was being dealt with by this Government every day and was allowed all the arms and ammunition from this country that he wanted. You and others were holding meetings in San Antonio and all along the border, without interference from the Department of Justice or otherwise, in favor of Madero. When Orozco raised the banner of the revolution against Madero and fought the first battle, where he repulsed the Madero forces, he found himself getting short of arms and ammunition that were coming from the border. He then for the first time discovered his inability to get the things which, under Madero, they had gotten all they wanted. He took the position that it was best to go on fighting it out, unless the United States Government was prepared to assume the responsibility which necessarily would go along with the question of authority, and that if it declined to do so and stopped the murder and destruction going on in Mexico, then we should keep our hands off and let the Mexicans fight it out.

Now, with reference to intervention of any kind in Mexico, I call your attention to a matter already in the record, the only resolution upon that subject which has ever been offered in the Congress of the United States, and which is already printed in the hearings of this committee and therefore will not be included at this time. However, I will read it for your benefit.

(After reading the document referred to.)

That was immediately after the raid in my own State, when American women were shot down at night in the doors of their houses; when the jewels were torn from their bodies; when their husbands were murdered by their side; when the American soldiers were surprised in their sleep, and were attacked by the raiders and ruthlessly murdered. The Pershing expedition was sent into Mexico by the President of the United States. The papers were full of statements, of course, that it meant war with Mexico. Some of the people of the United States thought it was the duty of this country to take over Mexico. Some were in favor of the annexation of a part of Mexico. That revolution had been going on then for six years. The people of the United States were tired of it. The extremists wanted to force the United States a government of its own power in Mexico.

I introduced this resolution:

Whereas for three years a condition of anarchy has prevailed on and near our borders, and particularly within the Republic of Mexico; and

Whereas this Government has exercised the utmost patience and its best efforts through persuasion and representations to assist in restoring order in that unhappy country, and has seen its citizens travelling and doing business in Mexico murdered and outraged and their property destroyed, in violation of their legal rights under the comity of nations and customary and positive international law; and

Whereas this Government has had its flag dishonored and insulted in Mexico, and no reparation made or redress offered; and

Whereas the clear rights of American citizens have been abridged and denied in Mexico, and this Government can not consent to any further abridgment of the rights of American citizens in any respect; and

Whereas this Government is contending for nothing less high and sacred than the rights of humanity, which every Government honors itself in respecting, and which no Government is justified in resigning on behalf of those under its care and authority: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to use the land and naval forces of the United States, and call into service 500,000 volunteers:

First. For the purpose of protecting the lives and property of Americans in Mexico, and as a necessary preliminary to such purpose the opening and maintenance of all rail and other lines of communication between the City of Mexico and the seaports of Mexico, as well as with the American border.

Second. For assisting in the prompt establishment of a constitutional government in Mexico and lending same sufficient support to enable the Mexicans themselves to organize and maintain adequate military force with which to disarm all bandits and murderers and restore order and peace.

SEC. 2. That we declare our purpose to be as above set forth, and not to be the acquisition or annexation of territory, the overthrow of laws, customs, or constitution, the making of war upon the Mexican people, or interference with Mexicans in the government of their country; and we declare our further purpose to be the withdrawal of all our armed forces from Mexican territory immediately upon our accomplishment of the objects herein set forth, and to these ends we invite the cooperation of the Mexican people.

Did you ever read that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What impression did that make upon you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Very good; the first man that I have seen that had the proper notion of the probable number of people it would take.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not discussing that. What impression did it make upon your mind as to the intent and purpose of the chairman of this committee?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, I don't know that I can give you a good explanation of that, because I was not in sympathy with our going down there.

The CHAIRMAN. But we were there. That was an accomplished fact at the time that resolution was drawn. We were there with arms.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I noted that you said that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Pershing expedition was in Mexico, 14,000 strong.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Mexican and American papers were full of statements that it meant war with Mexico. Many people insisted that we should have war with Mexico and, as I have stated to you, many insisted that it should result in annexation of all or a part of Mexico.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. That was the proposition, to go down there with 500,000 men. Well, I don't believe that the Mexicans would permit——

The CHAIRMAN. I am not asking you what the Mexicans would permit or what would be the result. We saw the results, sir; that the Mexicans followed Pershing out of Mexico, begging him to stay there, several thousand of them.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Well, I think that the United States practically withdrew through the influence exerted by Latin America.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did they remain there?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think three or four weeks; I don't recall just how long it was. I know they were down there and they came away again.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Is there anything else you have there which has induced you to believe the chairman of the committee has been engaged in attempting to oppress the Mexican people?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Not here, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, all this statement that you have made, rather indignantly, is founded simply upon such material as you have referred to here?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. It is simply a straw showing which way the wind blows.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman made the statement with reference to propaganda which had been going on in Mexico. Do you know Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I know of him.

The CHAIRMAN. You know who he is, do you not? You know him as an insurgent against the Carranza government, do you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The names were of no importance to me and I went to the top. I don't know. I don't know Calles. It may be if I would see him I would know him, but I don't know him if my life depended on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, on the 4th day of February of this year he was a member of the cabinet of President Carranza.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew that, did you not?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know any of the Mexican consuls along the border? Did you know M. Garcia, consul at Laredo, Tex.?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think he was at El Paso, wasn't he?

The CHAIRMAN. You are confusing him, I presume, with Andreas Garcia, director of consuls along the border, and acting consul at El Paso. You do not know M. Garcia, consul at Laredo?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I may have. I know the other Garcia.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew Luis Cabrera?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know Guillermo Hall, of San Antonio? In common everyday English it is William Hall.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I don't recall, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you known of various excursions, commercial excursions and others, going into Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know anything about an excursion that went into Mexico from Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and other points, concentrating at San Antonio, and going into Mexico on or about the 4th of February of this year?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I know there have been several excursions down there.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not read anything from Guillermo Hall with reference to the Mexican question, along the line that we have been discussing, matters of friendship between the two countries, support of the Carranza government, the struggle for constitutional law and peace, etc.?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I do not recall that I have, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has in its possession some very enlightening telegrams showing how some of the propaganda was carried on in this country, which, in view of the fact that you have related some of your activities, and the chairman has referred to the activities of others, will be placed in the record. The committee has photostatic copies of various telegrams, in connection particularly with this recent excursion, telegrams passing between Guillermo Hall and Plutarco Elias Calles, member of the cabinet, and Luis Cabrera, member of the cabinet, and the consuls at Laredo and San Antonio. Of course the originals of these documents are in Spanish. The committee has translations of them.

I have here a telegram dated February 8, 1920:

NUEVO LAREDO, TAMPS., February 8, 1920.

Mr. General PLUTARCO ELIAS CALLES,

Secretary Industry and Commerce:

I have the pleasure to advise you of arrival here with excursion business men from San Antonio, Tex., there being 42 in party, coming under direction of Mr. E. A. Wiegand, who will also have arrangement of itinerary of train. As I advised you from San Antonio, I arranged to have trip to Tampico cut out of itinerary, account of work of propaganda of Fall's agents, which demoralized certain of the excursionists, causing them to cancel their trip; but believe, considering conditions in which lines from Tampico is now, well not to insist, in this way obviating expense and trouble for the Government. Hope that you will kindly issue orders necessary that everything be made smooth for us, in view of fact that some members of excursion come much prejudiced on account of propaganda of which I spoke. We leave to-day for Monterey; shall probably remain until to-morrow. With affectionate regards and salutations.

GUILLERMO HALL.

I have a second telegram, with the same heading, the same date, from Mr. Guillermo Hall to Mr. Luis Cabrera:

Advise have arrived here with excursion San Antonio business men, which is not turning out as fortunately as promised, owing to circumstances which I explained to you in my letter of 6th instant. Received in San Antonio the $5,000 which you placed my credit through Laredo consulate, which regret should have happened, as not desirable De la Mata be taken into confidence. Urge remedy matter if possible. Hope to see you soon there. Affectionate regards.

GUILLERMO HALL.

You may note that Dr. De la Mata, consul of the Mexican Government at San Antonio, is referred to in that telegram.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Rodriguez was the consul at that time, I thought.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a telegram under date of February 4, signed "Cabrera," dated at the National Palace, City of Mexico, and addressed to Garcia, Mexican consul at Laredo. I am reading into the record the English translation:

With the approval of the President of the Republic please deliver to Mr. Guillermo Hall, agent of the department of industry and commerce in San Antonio, Tex., the sum of $5,000 for the expenses on the trip of the excursionists of the American Chamber of Commerce, recommending that you give him on his way through that place all facilities, in order that the travelers may have a good impression of our Government. Affectionate greetings.

CABRERA.

A telegram of the same date, signed by Gen. P. Elias Calles, dated at the Commercial Palace, the 4th of February, 1920, addressed to "Consul of Mexico, Mr. Garcia," at Laredo, reading as follows:

Please inform Mr. Alatrisme that the commercial excursion must come directly through the towns which are on the National Line, since certain conditions on the Tampico road make it undesirable that those places be visited until necessary measures shall have been taken. Greetings.

GEN. P. ELIAS CALLES.

Just an interjection in the nature of a suggestion that there may be something significant in the last lines of that telegram than possibly could be understood by the witness now on the stand.

The next is a telegram from M. Garcia to Luis Cabrera, at the City of Mexico, reading as follows:

Your honorable telegram No. 2149. I acknowledge the order for the money for Mr. Hall. The consul in San Antonio informs me that the number of excursionists has much decreased, due to the unfavorable propaganda circulated by agents of Capt. Hanson. A special train ready to leave as soon as the excursionists reach here. Very affectionate greetings.

M. GARCIA.

Telegram to Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles, from M. Garcia, dated February 4, 1920:

Your honorable telegram No. 1379 Mr. Alatrisme has not yet arrived. I am communicating your instructions. Affectionate greetings.

M. GARCIA.

Now, the instructions were to undertake these excursions by way of Tampico, of course, for very good and sufficient reasons.

I have a telegram from Guillermo Hall, upon his return, addressed to Luis Cabrera, Treasury Department, City of Mexico:

I report to you that I have just arrived in this (city) with the excursion of merchants from San Antonio, Tex.—

That is another telegram from Nuevo Laredo to Mr. Cabrera, not from San Antonio.

I report to you that I have just arrived in this (city) with the excursion of merchants from San Antonio, Tex., which was not as large as had been expected due to the circumstances I explained to you in my letter of the 6th instant. I received in San Antonio the $5,000 you remitted to me through the Consulate at Laredo, which I regret since it is not well that de la Mata be advised of confidential matters. A remedy of the matter is urgent, if possible. I expect to see you in that (city) soon. Very affectionate greetings.

GUILLERMO HALL.

I simply call attention to these matters to show some of the efforts of the Mexican Government to create a favorable impression upon Americans.

Also, in connection with that and on the subject of propaganda, I have a photostatic copy of a letter from the foreign office at the City of Mexico to Gen. Barragan. Do you know Gen. Barragan?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. He was chief of staff for Mr. Carranza.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I know him very well; and I know Mr. Parma also.

The CHAIRMAN. This latest propaganda, of which we have this photostatic copy, although it is marked "Confidential," states:

[Confidential.]

Citizen Gen. JUAN BARRAGAN,
Chief of Staff to the President.

By direction of the citizen President of the Republic please have an order issued to deliver to Citizen Col. Francisco Montiel the sum of $10,000 for pro-Mexican propaganda expenses in the Argentine Republic, where he is going as attaché to our legation to develop the work of the Latin-American Association for the Defense of the Interests of Mexico. Col. Montiel will explain to you verbally the plans approved by the superior authorities to be developed in South America.

A. M. FERNANDEZ,

Chief Clerk in Charge of the Department.

I overlooked a letter from the Mexican consul to the undersecretary of foreign affairs, marked "Official No. 296, confidential," as follows:

I have the honor to advise you that on the 6th instant there was delivered to the Hon. Guillermo Hall, confidential agent of our Government in San Antonio, Tex., the sum of $5,000 for expenses of his journey on Mexican soil, in accordance with telegraphic order No. 2149, dated the 4th instant, from his excellency the secretary of the treasury, Hon. Luis Cabrera. Because of the confidential nature of Mr. Hall's employment this consulate was unable to secure corresponding receipt for above-mentioned amount, obtaining only the telegraphic orders, which I inclose.

Of course, we have Mr. Hall's telegram to Luis Cabrera not to send any more money through De la Mata. Mr. Hall has, in the opinion of the committee, a perfect right to pursue any course he chooses in reference to Mexican affairs, but Mr. Hall is posing in San Antonio as a mere friend, not a confidential representative, and certainly not a propagandist in the employ of Mexico.

Mr. TETTERBAUM. Well, that issue I do not fear, and I would not evade it. Nobody has anything on me in that connection. I have never taken a dollar, so far as I know, from any source. I have taken, I think, 65 pesos from Gen. Angeles and about $50 from Diegas while I was on that trip and could not get to my source of supply. When I got to Vera Cruz I got 240 pesos from Mr. Carranza or his nephew, and when I got to San Antonio, when I got home, I had given a $100 to Mrs. Carranza, with a list of different moneys that I had borrowed in the meanwhile, which is about three times as much as the exchange at that time was worth. Personally, my hands have been as clean as my heart in connection with all this and, unless there is a frame up, there is nothing that can be produced on me, in regard to having accepted any compensation in regard to anything I did in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of this committee has not insinuated that you have. The chairman of this committee has offered this evidence, however, of payments being made to men who claimed that their purposes were just as pure as you claim yours to be.

Mr. TETTERBAUM. Yes, sir. I don't know that there is really anything very bad about most of that, if the party does not sell himself. For somebody to accompany these people, who were bent on a very laudable mission, which I heartily believe in and approve of, it does not spell all that it might to others.

The CHAIRMAN. As the chairman does not happen to have that trait of mind which is looking for hidden motive and placing construction upon the acts and conduct of others, he had no comment whatever to make.

Mr. TETTERBAUM. I don't blame the chairman, because as long as we don't know ourselves, it is certainly mighty hard to know the other fellow.

The CHAIRMAN. As long as we have in our possession information showing a large number of paid propagandists, who are posing as being perfectly pure in all their motives and as not receiving any compensation at all, when we do find that some of them are hypocrites, we consider it our duty to show it. When these people are claiming before the American people to have information that this committee is engaged in nefarious schemes, when we have evidence of that kind, I think it is our duty to the public to give it out. For that reason I have put that evidence in.

Now, there is another matter to which you referred and to which I wish to call attention now. On August 10, El Universale, a paper published in the city of Mexico, telegraphed to different members of this committee, propounding to them certain questions to be answered, which was conceded to on the 11th. That has been heretofore placed in the record. Immediately thereafter, or, at least, within a few days after August 11, I think on August 17, there was published in El Universale, in the city of Mexico, over the signature of the author, an article signed by a prominent Mexican citizen, Alfredo Robles Domingue. I do not know whether you have had this called to your attention, or whether we have had this translation of the article, the original Spanish of which is in our possession, printed in the record to be used in connection with the El Universale telegram.

Referring to the article in which Mr. Dominguez quotes a portion of the answer of the chairman of this committee, sent by the chairman after consultation with the other members. Mr. Dominguez summarizes the meaning of that portion of the telegram. He quotes from the telegram:

Each one of the members of this committee had hoped that the people of Mexico would of themselves be able to create and sustain a government that can comply with its obligations (international and national) without the intervention of this Nation or any other, and the committee still hopes that the Mexican people are capable of working out their destiny and obtaining and preserving for Mexico the respect of all nations, respect which the Republic of Mexico has deserved and held for so many years.

Mr. Dominguez construes the meaning of that as follows:

Summarizing the foregoing statement, it must be understood—

We do not now take into consideration the present government of Mexico. The people of Mexico must create and sustain a serious and honorable government to prevent our acting, tired of waiting, and going with our Army and all our power to force order upon them and to pay ourselves for the damages that have been caused us.

Then follows his comment:

That is to say, the honor, nationality, and sovereignty of Mexico are in peril, and, in the face of such a situation no Mexican in whom there remains an atom of shame, should cross his arms or remain silent, a prey to fear, in the presence of the consequences he may bring upon himself by assuming a viril attitude.

No illusions must be entertained. The North American Senate is determined to proceed, and the government of Mr. Carranza and the Mexican people are obligated to conjure the peril and to minimize the evil that menaces the fatherland.

It is chimerical to pretend to resist with brute force a force infinitely superior. We lack money, ammunition, arms, and even, unfortunately, we lack in these moments the moral qualities that exalt virile and patriotic peoples. Even through the vexations and extortions of the present administration these have been lost. We conscious men, in the presence of the gravity of the peril, turn the head in search of a voice of authority to rise and propose the means of salvation. Not finding it, I, with the right that abides in me as a citizen and with the duty that patriotic feeling imposes on me, address the government of Mr. Carranza and the people of Mexico to propose to them the only practical and rapid means that may conjure the grave crisis that menaces our autonomous life.

These means are the following:

First. The immediate retirement of Mr. Carranza and his government, and the formation of a provisional government, composed of honorable and competent men, to enter at once into negotiations with our creditors.

The word "creditors" does not mean simply financial creditors in Mexico.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. What is the name of that gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. You will hear it in a few days.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I thought you asked if I knew him.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

Second. Union of all dissident groups to sustain that government, for the purpose of enabling it to solve present problems and to lead the country in a short time to constitutional order, within a responsible administration.

I must not be taken for a seditious person or a rebel. If I considered that that was the best road to free us from the evils that rend us and to reconstruct the nation, long ago I would have adjusted my conduct in that sense.

Neither the people of Mexico nor the government of Mr. Carranza should forget that the honor, the sovereignty, and the nationality of the Republic are in serious danger of being lost, perhaps forever; and it is necessary, therefore, that they adjust their conduct to a sincere and rational patriotism.

ALFREDO ROBLES DOMINGUEZ.

MEXICO, August 14, 1919.

That was written, not by a military leader, but a civilian, whose declaration of principles is practically similar to that of Gen. Felipe Angeles, who has recently suffered for his views.

I presumed that you knew, at least through your apparent usual source of information, the public press, that there is now in Mexico a very serious revolution against the Carranza government.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Following this telegram and the comment by Mr. Dominguez, a very serious criticism was published in the Mexican papers concerning the efforts of this committee. From one of my correspondents in Mexico City I immediately received a telegram, as follows:

MEXICO CITY, December 8, 1919.

Senator A. B. FALL,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Newspapers here calling you enemy of Mexico in bitter terms and publishing your picture this connection. Please permit me refute this publicly by quoting your words to me that although everybody thinks you interventionist you are positively opposed excepting as last resort, and that it is your desire only that some friendly solution be developed before some incident occurs to force military intervention with attendant expense and unpleasantness. I believe it vitally important to correct false impression Mexican public quick.

H. T. OLIVER.

To which I at once replied:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1919.

H. T. OLIVER,

Mexico City, Mexico (via Galveston):

Your telegram received. You are fully authorized to repeat and, if necessary, publish in Mexico my statement to you that although I have been called an interventionist I am positively opposed to armed intervention in Mexico except as an absolutely last resort, and that my desire is for some friendly solution of pending questions between the Mexican people and the Government and the people of the United States. If you publish this statement I insist that you publish also the following: Evidence truth of above statement should be found in the fact that the committee has to-day given publicity to Carranza's letters of instruction to Berlanga of June 14 and August 19, 1919, showing his active interference in affairs here. Also of distribution here by Bonillas, ambassador, and Mexican consul's revolutionary literature. Also of Carranza's letter directing Miss Galindo to abuse the United States and particularly President Wilson. Letters between the Mexican officials showing negotiations with Japan.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have some information on that also.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

Also Blue Book, letters and expressions abusing President Wilson. This action taken to impress upon the world that in event the Mexican people themselves do not bring pressure to bear upon their present Government to cease persecution of Americans and British and others, and unwarranted interference in affairs in other countries and enormous paid propaganda in this country abusing Americans in Mexico, interfering with their peace and safety and with our Government here, that some country will, in my judgment, be compelled to intervene, possibly by force of arms, and restore order out of the chaos in the Republic of Mexico. I am exerting every effort to bring about such a solution that neither armed intervention nor war may ever be necessary. Remember that in the President's letter to me he does not indicate that he will break off relations and withdraw recognition, but that he is gravely considering the committee memorandum.

I wired that, repeating it verbatim to El Excelsior in the City of Mexico, that if Mr. Oliver did not give publicity to it, it would gain publicity through the great Mexican daily.

Now, sir, that has been the committee's position up to date. The answer to the committee's position is the present movement in Mexico. If you have any solution of the difficulty in Mexico I would be glad to have it.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am very much pleased and very grateful for your having given me this line that you have, and I may not agree with you as to all of it, but I try to cull the good from the bad.

I would like to supplement that recommendation for another commission, an American commission, composed of loyal Americans of the Catholic faith, to go down to Mexico and study the situation down there. It is my honest conviction that a stream can not rise above its source, and that we expect too much of the common Mexican, and he is the one I am speaking about. The leaders can take care very nicely of themselves, but the common people of Mexico, on whom the peace of the United States as well as Mexico depends, must take the stand of civilization that I fear the church has not done by them toward that end all that reasonably could have been done, and I believe that these reforms could be so much easier accomplished through the church than outside of it. I would recommend that a commission of American Catholics be sent down to study the situation, to give reasonable time, say three years to five years more or less, to hold them responsible for the progress that Mexico makes within that time.

I say that in the best of faith in the world. I believe that I have no more feeling against the Catholic church than I have against the Jews, of which I am one; that there are Catholics who are loyal in our times and there are Jews who are disloyal; that is for us to face, for myself, being a Jew. I think they should be held responsible in a great measure, in this war, that they have not acted themselves the way they should have. I believe that the war has shown they were not all yet fit for self-government, and I am saying that to you, and I know I am not talking any propaganda or anything of that kind in making the statement. It is my deduction from what I have seen.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it your understanding that such a commission could go into Mexico now?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever read the Mexican constitution of 1917?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have only glanced at it.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought so. You are not familiar with the provisions of article 27 of the Mexican constitution?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I supposed that when you made such a recommendation you did not know anything about the constitution. You do not know anything about the order issued to all governors of the States to enforce the provisions of the constitution against the teaching of religion, either in the schools or any kind of religion, in Mexico? You are not familiar with that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; I did not know that was the case. Still, my recommendation is offered with a view of trying to correct that situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you spoke of a commission to study damages. What do you propose that commission shall do after it arrives at a solution and reaches a unanimous agreement, in the event it does?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think public sentiment in both countries is all that is necessary to have them thoroughly understood.

The CHAIRMAN. Public sentiment where?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The people on both sides.

The CHAIRMAN. Understand what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Understand the case—each individual case as it comes up—if the proper spirit is shown by both sides to get to the bottom of some of these difficulties.

The CHAIRMAN. We will agree that we have done that, that the commission has unanimously agreed and has gotten to the bottom of it to your satisfaction; then what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Then we should know that the other side is wrong, which was my reason for contending that those people had been more sinned against than sinning.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, suppose that is shown; then what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I have got such confiding faith in the manhood of the United States that when they understand that, they knowing the standard of civilization, that they would exercise their charity and patience, which I know would be a very wise thing to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Then send the men who are responsible for these troubles, we would invite them—

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we have done away with all these troubles. Suppose we have eliminated them, brought every American out of Mexico, turned over every dollar of American property in Mexico to the Mexicans, and have gotten out of Mexico, then what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I do not suggest getting out of Mexico. It is a world necessity that we should have the right to go into Mexico and to trade with them and traffic with them, just the same as other nations.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose the report of this commission is that that is the best way to avoid trouble, and we actually do it, then what?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am not in favor of getting out of Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we do that, what will happen in Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I think I know those people on the other hand are fair enough, when we know them, and meet with them, they will understand our intention and what we propose to do, when they see that we have some sympathy with them. I am sure they would. It is not my idea of getting out. My idea is to go in, and to have manufactories, branch manufactories, and to help to develop Mexico, and bring up the standard of wages and the standard of living.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know anything about the established standard of wages and standard of living in Mexico?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; but I know it has increased very materially.

The CHAIRMAN. Under whose efforts?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Time, if nothing else. The fact that Mexicans have come here, and we have gone down there, and the motion picture business. By the way, there is one of the greatest troubles that we have had with Mexico, is through this motion picture business, the line of conditions that we show, not only the Mexicans, but our Americans, through permitting these pictures to go down there.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us get back to something. You were talking about factories. Did you ever know a Mexican to establish a factory?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. No, sir; but I know there is a spirit essential to bring husbandry to the country. I am very hopeful that we will see the time that Americans will be welcome.

The CHAIRMAN. We all hope that, Mr. Teitlebaum.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. We have got to lend ourselves to help to bring this about.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you think we have been doing for 10 years?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. We have not improved our opportunities as we should have, from the knowledge that I have of it.

The CHAIRMAN. We have let the Mexicans alone, so far as intervention is concerned.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir; but we have held a club over them all the while.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean when you were talking about the Mexican people and those who governed them, the distinction you were attempting to make between them?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. The Mexican people and a lot of the men who govern them. I think some of them are honest, and a lot of them are very much the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. You tried to get them together, and you did not succeed, did you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. If one man could himself succeed as well as I have—

The CHAIRMAN. What has been your success? What have you done?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I had the people listen to me. They have been in sympathy with me. They knew I was doing it without any compensation. They knew that I have done everything to try to serve and lend service and confidence.

The CHAIRMAN. They gave you permission to serve the Mexican people against themselves?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I didn't need their permission. I am simply trying to make amends for the things that I say. I am not gifted with the speech or mind of being able to express myself fluently.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you tried to serve them yourself, and with what success did your efforts meet?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I am satisfied if it has been good. I am very, very proud of it. I think it is the greatest individual movement for peace on record, just what I have succeeded to do. I know that Gen. Angeles—

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; you saw his picture lying there with a bullet through his body?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. He has been sacrificing to the cause, and I told him when he was talking about taking his boy away from college down there that he had no business to do that, and he said he was willing to sacrifice anything for the good of his country.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did you tell him that?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I thought the boy, being 15 years old at the time, had no right of being at the front, and I did know that Gen. Angeles was at the front, and did go to the front, wherever there was a front.

The CHAIRMAN. You approved of his going, did you?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. In the revolution against the Carranza Government?

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Yes, sir. I don't know about the Carranza Government. I mean against Huerta.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, well, you know that was against the Carranza Government, and that he was executed by the Carranza Government.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. Very true.

The CHAIRMAN. Just wait a moment.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. He died for the cause.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much. We will close this hearing.

Mr. TEITLEBAUM. I thank you, sir.

(Whereupon, at 5.30 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, at 11 o'clock a. m. in room 128, Senate Office Building, Senator Albert B. Fall (chairman) presiding.

TESTIMONY OF MR. WILLIAM GATES—Resumed.

(See p. 305, printed record.)

(The witness was duly sworn by the chairman.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Gates, it was really unnecessary to administer the oath to you, as you have been before the committee here before. I desire to have you very briefly identify correspondence referred to in your former hearing, first.

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you left the stand in your former hearing you had referred to a further letter to Secretary of War Baker.

Mr. GATES. A letter from him to myself and one to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you those letters with you?

Mr. GATES. The original of that letter I gave to Judge Kearful, and I do not find he has returned it to me, but I have a copy of it here. I could not identify it at that time, because Judge Kearful was not here and it was among his papers. It was a letter from Baker to me of August 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Examine this paper.

Mr. GATES. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. The document which has just been handed to you you say is the letter to which you referred?

Mr. GATES. That is the letter to which I refer.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Let that be a part of the testimony at this point.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 10, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. GATES: I have your letter of August 6.

I have not seen David Lawrence and have not communicated with him. I have not talked with anybody else about you or any of the information you have given me about Mexico beyond transmitting to the State Department for its information the letters you sent me descriptive of Mexico, as you saw it, and of its people, as you moved among them.

There is no mystery in either our correspondence or our conversations. You have traveled in Mexico; you came to me to tell me what you saw and what you thought about what you saw; I listened to you with interest because I knew of your opportunities for observation, and you wrote me further information. All of this was perfectly proper for you to tell me and for me to hear. I suggested your seeing the State Department and the War Department's Bureau of Military Intelligence in order that they might match up the facts you brought to their attention with what they learned from other sources of information. This you did.

I have not the slightest objection to your producing your letters to me whenever you desire to produce them. I do not think they ought to be produced in the newspapers for the purpose of either getting you into a controversy with David Lawrence or appearing to raise a controversy between David Lawrence and me, since I have had no contact with him on the subject.

Cordially, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER.

MR. WILLIAM GATES,
2016 Mount Royal, Baltimore, Md.

MR. GATES. I think it would be well, by your permission, to complete that correspondence. On November 30, in the Jenkins matter, I wrote another letter to Mr. Baker, which I think ought to go in my testimony to complete the Baker series.

THE CHAIRMAN. Let me see that, please. [After reading letter.] Let us see if we can not get at this by question and answer, instead of putting this entire document in the record.

You wrote Secretary Baker on November 30 in reference to the Jenkins matter?

MR. GATES. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN. And the probability of an expedition into Mexico in connection with it?

MR. GATES. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN. You inclosed certain documents in that letter of November 30?

MR. GATES. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN. Those documents were what?

MR. GATES. These were the papers which I referred to in my correspondence with Secretary Baker as the basis for the rehabilitation of Mexico, which had been consented to by the various friends of the United States among the revolutionists in Mexico, and finally there was an appeal to the President and the people of the United States signed by the different revolutionists and filed on September 10 at the White House. Those three documents were inclosed in the letter to Mr. Baker, which documents I have copies of here.

THE CHAIRMAN. We will be glad to have you file them with your evidence, not to be incorporated with the evidence at this point, but to be printed with it, as an appendix to your testimony.

(The documents referred to were marked, respectively, "Exhibit 4," "Exhibit 5," and "Exhibit 6," and are printed in full at the close of the testimony of this witness.)

In this letter you state that there are in Mexico five main organized bodies in the field against the Carranza government: Those of Morelos, formerly under Zapata, now under Magana; those of the State government of Oaxaca, under Meixueiro; the forces under Diaz; Pelaez and Villa; and you state that you are in touch with all of them except Villa, directly?

MR. GATES. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. And the documents which you have just filed are referred to in that letter in that connection?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that will cover the letter proposition.

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, before proceeding with your testimony, unless you have something on that particular point you desire to say, I desire to ask you a few questions.

Mr. GATES. I think of nothing now, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Gates, when did you first become interested in Mexican matters and the study of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. That was over 20 years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. What direction did your interest take, or in what direction did it lead you, what particular study?

Mr. GATES. The study of the language, and the hieroglyphics, and archeology, and early history of the Indian races.

The CHAIRMAN. What particular Indian race?

Mr. GATES. Especially those of the south, in Yucatan, Guatemala, and East Chiapas, known as the Maya people.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with your efforts in Mexico, and your studies and research, have you ever received official recognition from any Mexican body or university or official institution engaged in such work?

Mr. GATES. While I was in Mexico City, in the course of a trip from June, 1917, to May, 1918, the National Museum of Mexico, which corresponds to our own Smithsonian, the leading head body, as a recognition of my position in these studies, conferred upon me the title of Honorary Professor of the Museum, a title which is held by no other American and only by three Europeans.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you documentary evidence of the statement you have just made?

Mr. GATES. It is this, that is just handed to me.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the document you refer to?

Mr. GATES. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in Spanish, of course?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir. It was accompanied by an officio to me direct, giving the reasons for appointing me.

The CHAIRMAN. The document will be translated by the official translator of the committee, and the English translation placed in the record.

Mr. GATES. Very well.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

UNITED STATES OF MEXICO.

Department of the University and Fine Arts.
United States of Mexico, office of the director general of fine arts, section 1,
No. 6345.

The department of the university and fine arts, by direction of the citizen constitutional President of the United States of Mexico, has been pleased to appoint you an honorary professor of the National Museum of Archaeology, History, and Ethnology, in consideration of the merits and other aptitudes that concur in you.

I communicate it to you for your information and consequent purposes.

CONSTITUTION AND REFORMS,
Mexico, January 24, 1918.

The director of the National University, Jose N. Macias, to Dr. William Gates, National Museum of Archaeology, History, and Ethnology, Mexico. No. 83.

In communication No. 24, of date the 7th instant, I stated to the director general of fine arts what follows:

"The regulations of this museum designate two classes of professors, honorary and regular, and it considers as honoraries the Mexicans or foreigners who most distinguish themselves in the matters which the establishment cultivates and which the superior authorities appoint on nomination by this office.

"Up to date only the distinguished Americanists the Duke of Loubat, Alfred P. Maudslay, and Edward Seler, French the first, English the second, and German the third, have been appointed honorary professors. For some time this institution has not granted this distinction to any other person, and, as there is now in Mexico the great man of science and eminent Americanist, Dr. William Gates, of North American nationality, who has not only made valuable studies in the archaeology, ethnology, and anthropology of Mexico, but is preparing to undertake a tour of study through some regions of our country, a tour from which this museum expects a great benefit, and is morally attached to Dr. Gates, whose labors on the ruins of Yucatan are the most complete and remarkable, I take the liberty to propose to that honorable office of the director general of fine arts to be pleased to direct, in consideration of all these reasons and if it sees fit, that said gentleman be appointed an honorary professor of the museum, by which Mexico will render homage to one of the most serious savants of America and at the same time this institute under my charge will be honored by counting Dr. Gates among its eminent professors.

"In the expectation that you will be pleased to act favorably on my petition, in which the regular professors of this museum are in accord, I reiterate to you my assurances of distinguished consideration."

Which I have the honor to transcribe to you for your information and satisfaction, presenting to you my warmest congratulations for that appointment which does so much honor to the institution under my charge and sending to you the original of said appointment issued in your favor.

I reiterate to you the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

Constitution and reforms, Mexico, January 23, 1918.

The director, Luis Castillo Ledo, to Dr. William Gates, present.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Gates, in pursuing your study of archaeology and ancient civilization, particularly in southern Mexico, have you investigated, translated, and arranged certain documents that came to your information from original sources, as near as possible?

Mr. GATES. I have. Do you mean in regard to language or politics? I will answer yes to both.

The CHAIRMAN. I am speaking now of the ancient civilization of the Indian tribes.

Mr. GATES. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. To what extent have you collected original documents and evidence concerning the Indian tribes of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. Starting with the Maya race, which extended slightly over the border of Guatemala into Honduras, covered all of the territory of Yucutan and part of Chiapas, and then going on through the Zapotecs and other races, practically constituting the territory of civilization in Mexico at the time of the conquest. I own myself about one-half of all the known existing manuscripts in the world, and I have photographed about 95 per cent of the manuscripts in other libraries of the world which I do not own.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Gates, more recently and at the present time are you engaged in any work of that kind?

Mr. GATES. For the past eight months I have devoted myself exclusively, and expect to continue to do so, in preparing dictionaries, grammars, hieroglyphic codes, and so on for publication.

The CHAIRMAN. With whom, if anyone, are you associated in such work?

Mr. GATES. Well, that practically would name the various people interested in archeology in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. With reference to the details of the work, are you associated with or connected with any institution in the United States?

Mr. GATES. Perhaps I should give you a list of the institutions. I recently joined in the formation of the Maya Society.

The CHAIRMAN. Who are the officers of that society?

Mr. GATES. The officers of that society are myself as president; Herbert J. Spendor, of the American Museum of Natural History, New York, as vice president; and S. K. Lathrop, secretary-treasurer. The executive council consists of those officers and Messrs. Marshall Seville, of New York, and E. P. Wilkins, of Philadelphia, as members. I can quote in two words the objects of the body. "To promote a knowledge and better understanding of all matters pertaining to the Indian races of Mexico and Central America, past and present, more particularly the Maya people." The members are members of the Smithsonian Institute, the Bureau of Ethnology, the University of Pennsylvania, American Institute of Archeology, Field Museum, and so on.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you familiar with and have you had anything to do with the preparing of tribal maps of Mexico, or any portion of the so-called Republic of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. In connection with a publication just issued, a very large work, I wrote a linguistic chapter on the subject and prepared a linguistic map of the Maya race in southern Mexico, using for that Bureau of Ethnology sources and Orozco y Berra and several others.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with your studies of the work of Orozco Berra, have you examined a map prepared from these sources supposed to contain, as accurately as it is possible to set it forth, the boundaries of the different Indian tribes of all Mexico, as well as those of southern Mexico?

Mr. GATES. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you refer to Lumholtz's Unknown Mexico and the map in connection with that book, and state from your knowledge and research whether that map prepared by Lumholtz upon the data of Orozco y Berra, and from the examination of ruins, is comparatively accurate, in your judgment?

Mr. GATES. Another man might make some minor differences, but I don't believe anybody could hit it much closer. I think that map is as closely correct, with some exceptions down in the south of Mexico, where I have myself confirmed some details, I think that map as a whole is as correct as you can probably get it.

The CHAIRMAN. This map will be placed in the evidence and reprinted at this point.

(The map referred to faces this page.)

The CHAIRMAN. You know something of the languages of the different tribes of Mexico, and, of course, you are familiar with the research of the Smithsonian Institution along that line, or at least with the publications containing the research of their own agents and other parties' agents?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how many distinct languages, as differentiated from dialects, are in the various States of Mexico; how many distinct tribes of Indians occupied that country?

Mr. GATES. It is my habit never to give a specific detail on those questions without referring at the moment to my source, which is a habit that has grown upon me, so that I am not at the moment able to do more than say I imagine about 25 or 30. I do not want to make that as a scientific statement without actually looking up the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you to refer to the original publication, which you will find in my office across the hall, and correct me if I am wrong in stating that Lumholtz and other authorities places the number at 50 distinct languages, and something like 500 dialects spoken in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. I think I can cover that at the moment. The Maya race has at least eight separate divisions, mutually unintelligible, by which I understand the language is as different as French is from Spanish, and about 25 or 30 dialects among the Maya races alone. Taking it that way, when I speak of 25 or 30, I am speaking of the Maya race alone. I am quite satisfied without further reference, to accept Lumholtz's statement of 50 and 250—50 tribes who can not understand each other's talk, and perhaps 250 dialects mutually unintelligible within their own race.

The CHAIRMAN. The purpose of this line of examination is to give the American people some idea of the population of Mexico as it exists now.

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Which I understand to be the grafting from the original Indian stock, with a dialect separate from the supposedly Spanish bred.

Mr. GATES. There are 10,000,000 Indians, of which 2,000,000 only speak their own language, and at least 8,000,000, I understand, are pure bred.

The CHAIRMAN. You have referred to a trip which you made some years since to Mexico, when you were honored by being made a member of this Mexican archeological society. When did you make that particular trip? When did you leave for Mexico?

Mr. GATES. From the middle of June, 1917, to May, 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you start for? What part of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. I started from New Orleans, went to Yucatan, down about 800 miles on horseback through Yucatan, went to Vera Cruz, to the City of Mexico, back into the State of Vera Cruz, and up into the mountains to see revolutionary territory then under the control of Felix Diaz and to meet him, back to Mexico City, down south, up into Morelos, where I spent several weeks with Zapata, then to Oaxaca, where I spent two weeks going to see the ruins of Mitla and Monte Alban. I did quite a little bit of visiting of ruins. It was really an archeological trip. From there I went up into the mountains of Oaxaca, where I spent several weeks with Meixuerio, rode overland down over the Oaxaca Mountains to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and out through Salina Cruz, going about 1,500 miles on horseback.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the sole object of that trip archeological research?

Mr. GATES. With a very definite idea in the back of my head that I would like to know what was going on in Mexico, and could not find out any other way.

The CHAIRMAN. Who financed that trip?

Mr. GATES. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any assistance from anyone else?

Mr. GATES. None.

The CHAIRMAN. Who accompanied you?

Mr. GATES. Nobody.

The CHAIRMAN. You made the trip on horseback or mule back?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You had your Mexican or Indian moso traveling with you, did you not?

Mr. GATES. At times entirely alone, at times with a moso.

The CHAIRMAN. You have referred to and placed in the record correspondence between yourself and Secretary of War Baker, and you have written for the public press, concerning Mexico, the political affairs of Mexico, the social and political conditions in the Republic of Mexico. Have you been employed by anyone to do that writing?

Mr. GATES. By nobody, nor was it suggested to me by anybody to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean to say that in all of your study, making this great collection which you have made, of ancient literature, documents, etc., and in your personal investigations, trips, tours in Mexico, coming in contact with the different factional leaders of Mexico, the Mexican and Indian people, that you have financed yourself entirely?

Mr. GATES. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Pardon a personal question. Are you a man of independent means?

Mr. GATES. I am. I retired from business about 15 years ago and put money making out of my life entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you are not a propagandist in the pay or employed in the interest of any faction in the United States or Mexico interested in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. Neither actual nor possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, if you have been classed and referred to by people in the United States and in Mexico as the agent of Mexican bandits, you at least have not been in the financial pay of such bandits?

Mr. GATES. Decidedly not, of those poor ragged peons down in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. On that trip did you meet Felix Diaz?

Mr. GATES. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Felix Diaz was a nephew of former President Porfirio Diaz, was he not?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was he doing when you met him in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. He attacked the town of Paso del Macho with his forces, trying to cut the railroad there, just as I was passing in to Paso del Macho.

The CHAIRMAN. In what State?

Mr. GATES. In the State of Vera Cruz, just east of the mountain range.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean he was a revolutionist against the Carranza Government?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you knowledge from information and sources which you consider reliable as to what has been the occupation of Felix Diaz from that time until this time?

Mr. GATES. I think he has continued in the same territory and in the same occupation.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke of Zapata. Did you meet Emiliano Zapata at that time?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir; I spent several days with him, and several weeks with his company.

The CHAIRMAN. In what State?

Mr. GATES. Morelos.

The CHAIRMAN. How far from the city of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. We were under the southern shadow of Popocatepetl, the mountain, but in the middle of Morelos, perhaps 50 miles.

The CHAIRMAN. From the city of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. On a direct line.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see the followers of Zapata?

Mr. GATES. I did; lived with them.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you speak the Spanish language?

Mr. GATES. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you find these people speaking the Spanish language? Were you able to converse with them?

Mr. GATES. Easily.

The CHAIRMAN. Most of the followers of Zapata speak other languages than Spanish, do they not?

Mr. GATES. I imagine most of them speak Aztec also, but heard no Aztec.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have conversations with Zapata and his leaders and his men as to their objects, what they were doing?

Mr. GATES. Quite a number of them.

The CHAIRMAN. What were they doing? Were they supporting the Carranza Government?

Mr. GATES. Opposing the Carranza Government.

The CHAIRMAN. What were they seeking to do?

Mr. GATES. Land for the people of Morelos, for the common people of Morelos, and nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what has become of Zapata?

Mr. GATES. He was betrayed under a flag of truce and assassinated by Col. Guajardo, who was commended by Gen. Pablo Gonzalez for the act.

The CHAIRMAN. Pablo Gonzalez admitted in the public press that he had sent Guajardo out for that purpose.

Mr. GATES. He did.

The CHAIRMAN. Under orders of the first chief, Carranza?

Mr. GATES. I have a detailed report which was made by one of Zapata's subordinate followers to Magana in regard to what happened. That report has not been printed, but it was sent to me privately.

The CHAIRMAN. Since Zapata's death, do you know whether his followers have attempted to maintain themselves in arms and opposed to the Carranza Government?

Mr. GATES. I do know actually that they have.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke of Meixuero in Oaxaca. Who is Meixuero?

Mr. GATES. Meixuero is a man of culture, whose father was a governor of the State before him. He was himself elected governor, but resigned in order to do better work, and has been the leader of the State forces of Oaxaca, from the time when in 1915 the Carranza general invaded Oaxaca. Meixuero is a cultured man, nearly a full Zapotec Indian.

The CHAIRMAN. The majority of the inhabitants of the State of Oaxaca are of what blood?

Mr. GATES. The Zapotec and Miztec races, which are as close as Spanish and Portuguese, two dialects and one language. They occupy practically the whole of the State of Oaxaca.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of what blood the Liberator Benita Juarez was?

Mr. GATES. Pure bred Zapotec.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know, from your investigation and research, of what Indian stock Porfirio Diaz was?

Mr. GATES. About one-eighth Miztec—another branch of the Zapotec.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of what blood Vittorio Morelos was—the man who gave the first constitutional government to Mexico?

Mr. GATES. No; I don't remember. I am not able to recall that at the present time.

If it interests you, Senator, in passing. I have the original proclamation issued by the Carranza representative in Oaxaca in 1914, that the State government, congress, and all, should cease its function—including the judiciary.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the State government of Oaxaca?

Mr. GATES. That was the State government of Oaxaca, and in the interest of the revolution, the Carrancistas had taken possession of the State. The result was the secession.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was that signed by?

Mr. GATES. Miguroa. That is his original proclamation on entering the State, and that resulted in Meixuero and Zapata declaring the State sovereignty reassumed which had prevailed in Mexico, and that is the original proclamation of the reassumption of that sovereignty. That is the original document of the reassumption of the State sovereignty of Oaxaca, which had prevailed in Mexico, and it is dated the 3d of June, 1915. It has been signed by Meixuero and his officers, and that has continued from that day to this, administering the interior of the State under the State officials.

The CHAIRMAN. The State government—the legal constitutional State government of Oaxaca—has never admitted or submitted to the Carranza Government?

Mr. GATES. No, sir. Temporarily, prior to that, they had given adherence to Carranza in the early days, in his entry in 1914, but following that invasion of the State's rights, they repudiated him.

The CHAIRMAN. That invasion took place in 1915, did it not?

Mr. GATES. In 1914; November, 1914—when Carranza was in Vera Cruz.

The CHAIRMAN. The declaration you speak of—signed by the State officials and Meixueiro—

Mr. GATES. Was in June, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ascertain from Meixueiro and his associates what their purposes were, why they opposed the Carranza régime or government?

Mr. GATES. Because of its illegitimacy, because of its anti-Americanism which they regarded as fatuous and not the proper policy for Mexico, and because of its aggression upon the homes and property of the people of Oaxaca.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you referred in one of these communications to Secretary Baker to one Pelaez. Who is Pelaez?

Mr. GATES. I do not know whether Pelaez is an Indian or not. I imagine he has Indian blood.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is he operating and what is he doing; what has he been doing?

Mr. GATES. Up in the oil region, behind the coast, where, since about 1916, he was moved to protect his neighbors from violation of their homes and their women by the Carranza soldiers, and that led to the development of a protective body which protected the oil wells from Carranza soldiers and German and radical bolshevists' efforts to impede the oil supply at the time when we needed oil.

The CHAIRMAN. These documents which you inclosed to Secretary Baker, containing a statement of objects by Felix Diaz, the Zapatas, the Oaxacans, Meixueiro, Pelaez, set forth their opposition to the Carranza government?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. About how many men did you understand were followers of Zapata? I mean men able to bear arms.

Mr. GATES. It is a difficult question to answer, because the whole organization was that of a yeomanry which tilled their fields without pay and took their guns when it was necessary. Practically, the various leaders lived with a small immediate body of 50, 25, or, possibly, 100 men. I do not think I ever saw 100 at once, either with Meixueiro, Zapata, or Felix Diaz. And from my travels through the country, my talks with the common people as I went, I am satisfied that either of them could have amassed, if necessary, several thousand men.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not meet Pancho Villa or Francisco Villa?

Mr. GATES. No, sir; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you learn anything of his objects, and as to the number of men he had, and as to whether he lived about as the other leaders whom you visited?

Mr. GATES. I understood him to be very much in sympathy and pursuing the same line. I would imagine that, with the differences between the north and the south, their cases were parallel, and that he was in agreement with the south. I knew that from the fact that

Zapata spoke of communications passing between him and Villa, and even wrote to Villa and told him that if I ever came Villa's way I was a friend of the common people of Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, after the revolution of Huerta, and during that revolution, when the conventional government of Mexico was formed, which resulted in the election or selection by that convention of Eulalio Gueterrez as the President of Mexico, Mexico City was occupied by the joint forces of Zapata and Pancho Villa, was it not?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That was prior to the recognition of Carranza by this Government, and they occupied the city until that time?

Mr. GATES. That was the middle of 1914, June, 1914, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. So that the forces of Pancho Villa and Zapata were cooperating at that time?

Mr. GATES. They were.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you in Mexico during an election of any kind?

Mr. GATES. I was in Yucatan on the day of election.

The CHAIRMAN. What was that election? Was it a general election?

Mr. GATES. That election was for the governor of the State and the legislature. In fact, I have a ballot here somewhere among these papers. It was a public election, around a table put up in different places publicly, in which the government had appointed the inspectors of the election for both parties.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there two parties?

Mr. GATES. Oh, yes; there were two candidates. There was Castro, who was the Alvarado bolshevist candidate, and a man opposing him. The board which the government appointed as inspectors represented both candidates. The Indians then came up, and the most of them not being able to read or write, stood in an open body in the middle of the street and would say, "I want to vote for so and so," and his name was written down, a ballot was cast, and so Castro was elected, with the provision that if you did not vote that year you could not vote the next year, and then the government keeps the records of the voting last year, so that it becomes quite complicated.

The CHAIRMAN. You say these were general elections. Did you ever have your attention called to a proclamation concerning the election and qualifications of voters, etc.?

Mr. GATES. I have, in the first place, in the official Government report of the election for the constitutional convention, which was to adopt this famous constitution of 1917, the original terms upon which people could vote. I can abbreviate them with a word. Nobody who has served under any former government, nobody who has carried arms under any former government, could vote. Nobody could vote who was not a Mexican citizen, or who had not been actively practically helping Carranza. That was the constitutional convention. In the town of Paso del Macho, where I was waiting to go out to see Felix Diaz, I think there were very few of the people in the town who voted. At this time the State of Vera Cruz had been supposed to be taken out of the preconstitutional dictatorship, and had become an ordinary constitutional unit in election.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say the preconstitutional dictatorship, do you mean the Carranza Government?

Mr. GATES. That period of the Carranza Government in which he declared a preconstitutional period, in which decrees and military government was the method.

The CHAIRMAN. That paper which you hold in your hand, printed in Spanish, is the original proclamation of that constitutional election, is it?

Mr. GATES. A constitutional election after the State had become a constitutional State.

The CHAIRMAN. The first constitutional election?

Mr. GATES. I do not know whether it was the first or not. It was for the governor of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is that signed by?

Mr. GATES. Candido Aguilar, the son-in-law of Carranza, at that time governor of Vera Cruz, and afterwards foreign minister.

The CHAIRMAN. How did he happen to be governor of Vera Cruz? Had he been elected governor of Vera Cruz?

Mr. GATES. He was first appointed and I imagine, I can not answer definitely, I think it most probable that he had had some sort of an election, probably the sort of an election that Castro had in Yucatan following his appointment. At all events, he was called the preconstitutional governor. I suppose afterwards there was an election; I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. That document is in Spanish. Can you read it in English?

Mr. GATES (reading):

Candido Aguilar, constitutional governor of the free and sovereign State of Veracruz-Llave, to the inhabitants thereof, know ye:

That the honorable legislature of the same has been pleased to address to me the following decree:

Number 20. The honorable legislature of the free and sovereign State of Veracruz-Llave, in the name of the people, decrees:

Only article. An addition is made to the electoral law on the free municipality of date of November 14, 1917, with the following transitory article:

ART. 6. The election of municipal functionaries, in one or more of the persons herein mentioned, shall be void:

I. Those who by any means undertook the overthrow of the lawful Government of the Republic, emanated from the elections of 1911.

II. Those who carried out the barrack uprising (cuartelazo) in 1913, or in any manner contributed to its realization.

III. The functionaries, authorities, and public employees emanated from the usurping Government; and those who, having emanated from the lawful Government sanctioned and collaborated, in an effective manner, in sustaining the usurper.

IV. Those who have figured actively in any of the factions opposing the constitutional Government, or who continue to be hostile to the present Government of the Republic; and

V. Those who economically, through the press or in any other manner duly verified aided or have stated their adhesion or sympathy with the usurping Government or factions hostile to the present government.

Given in the honorable city of Cordoba December 5, 1917.

CUSTAVO BELLO, Deputy President.
C. MURRIETA, Deputy Secretary.

Therefore I order it printed, etc.

Constitution and Reforms. December 6, 1917.

C. AGUILAR.

Licentiate JOSE M. MENA,
Secretary of State.

The effect of which is that anybody opposed to Carranza can not be elected as constable.

The CHAIRMAN. In this connection I have a translation of a proclamation issued by Castro, the governor of Yucatan, which I desire to have incorporated in the record following the proclamation of Aguilar just read by the witness.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

[Office of the secretary general of the preconstitutional government of the State of Oaxaca, Oaxaca de Juarez. Department of the treasury, fiscal section. Circular No. 14.]

With the approval of the citizen governor and military commander of the State, the public in general is informed that, beginning on this date, private individuals, and especially lawyers, are prohibited from coming to discuss with this government the administrative affairs of the common councils, with the warning that infraction of the present provision will be punished with a fine of from $5.00 five pesos to $500.00 five hundred pesos, in the discretion of this government. Municipal presidents are likewise warned to abstain from going to said persons to consult them on their affairs, which they must do directly with this government, likewise with the warning that in their case the infraction will be punished as it deserves.

CONSTITUTION AND REFORMS.

OAXACA DE JUAREZ, December 23, 1916.

The chief clerk in charge of the department, I. Olive.

Electoral law of August 1, 1916, Oaxaca.

Transitories:

ART. 1. For this occasion the following can not be elected:

- I. Those who have fought the present government with arms.
- II. Those who have held public offices in hostile factions, and
- III. Those hostile to constitutionalism.

Given in the palace, etc.

The governor and military commander of the State, general of division,

J. A. CASTRO.

The CHAIRMAN. That election referred to in the proclamation of Aguilar was for delegates to the constitutional convention which framed the constitution of 1917 and its famous article 27?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir. I would like to say that the reports of the Carranza officials to that convention noted the complete apathy of the people in that election. It says the election went on "as if we were still under the Porfirian terror, and although there were over 70,000 inhabitants in that State in some districts not 20 people voted." It then says that—

The result is, that notwithstanding the purely political antecedents of the people chosen for the constitutional convention which adopted the constitution of 1917, by the paucity of their understanding and their intellectual weakness they afforded no good in the august chamber of the Government.

That is the statement in the Carranza official report made to the convention and which Carranza presented to the people in 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. In your study of the conditions on the ground did you have your attention called to the purposes of the leaders of the Carranza government, as set forth in any public way, with reference to the so-called labor organizations in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. I not only saw that practiced in the place where it had its greatest "vogue" and its greatest expansion, in Yucatan, but I also traced it historically through the newspapers over the whole period of Zapata's and Villa's occupation in the early days, including the delegates to the constitutional convention.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever hear of an organization in Mexico corresponding in any degree to what is known as the I. W. W. organization in the United States?

Mr. GATES. The I. W. W. organization in the United States had its branches, or if not its branches, it was organized in Mexico as the "Casa del Obrero Mundial." That is a liberal translation of "Industrial Workers of the World."

The CHAIRMAN. Did you secure any information as to the cooperation of the Government, or Government officials, with reference to that organization known as the Casa del Obrero Mundial?

Mr. GATES. I have two documents which I shall link together very briefly. When Carranza entered Mexico City in 1914 he was offered by Villa and Obregon the provisional presidency, provided he would call an election at once for a congress and introduce the governmental reforms needed. Carranza refused. Villa and Zapata were too strong for him, and he left the city in the summer, and about November was in Vera Cruz. Salvador Alvarado had been commandant militar in Mexico City.

The CHAIRMAN. The American forces waited in Vera Cruz until Carranza arrived there?

Mr. GATES. The American forces waited at Vera Cruz until Carranza arrived there.

The CHAIRMAN. And turned it over to him?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir. I think it was November 23. Salvador Alvarado is the center of the entire Bolshevik question. He is the man who expected to make a Bolshevistic state of Mexico, after Yucatan.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole Republic?

Mr. GATES. The whole Republic. After Carranza reached Vera Cruz and issued that decree, dated December 12, making himself dictator, as you know, on the 6th of January, 1915, there was drawn up in Vera Cruz a document entitled: "Revolutionary confederation. Defense and realization of individual autonomy and of the rights of the collectivity. Within the constitution social reforms will be realized, which will emancipate the people." I will introduce the whole of it, which appeared in the official Alvarado publication, The Voice of the Revolution, and I will refer specifically to section 4.

To collaborate with citizens in the annihilation of the clerical, bourgeois, and military reaction, propagating and diffusing in the country and abroad the principles of the revolution.

In short, an anticapitalist organization. That was signed for the central organization committee by—

Gen. Alvaro Obregon, Engineer M. Rolland, Gen. Salvador Alvarado, Gustavo Espinosa Mireles, Gen. Maclovio Herrera, Rafael Nieto, Engineer Alberto Pani, Gen. Gabriel Gavira, Jesus Urueta, Dr. Atl, Luis Cabrera, Gen. Manuel M. Dieguez.

About the same time a plan was arranged by which Alvarado was to have the State of Yucatan to begin with the capitalists over there. He went on south, was appointed governor of the southeast, and proceeded to invade Yucatan, which had declared for Carranza, who had freed the slaves under a decree abolishing wage peonage. The governor of Yucatan was a native Yucatecan, who first had allied himself with Carranza, after Carranza had left Mexico City in the hands of Villa and Zapata, and the whole State was in accord with Carranza when Alvarado proceeded to invade it as a part of this Bolshevik plan then developing.

I have one document here which I should like to read one line from. On his entry in March 2, 1915, before he came into Tenabo, Alvarado issued a proclamation, of which this is the original, to the people, in which he said:

Blood will run in torrents, families will weep in helplessness over the loss of the father, the husband, or brother. Owners will see their plantations disappear in many cases, which, being the theater of battles, those engaged in the struggle will burn. Ruin and desolation will invade the country and cities and more will die of want than in the contest. And all these horrors, for ambitious wretches to flee with the booty, the proceeds of their robberies, and exemplary punishment to fall on the deluded for their crimes.

Do not doubt it. Yucatan can not resist the valor of numerous veteran troops.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be translated and incorporated in the record.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

PROTEST AND PROMPTING—GEN. ALVARADO ADDRESSES THE PEOPLE OF YUCATAN FROM TENABO IN MARCH, 1915, WHEN BEGINNING A VIGOROUS CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE REACTION OF ARGUMENTO.

With profound indignation I have just learned that the traitor Abel Ortiz Argumedo has committed the infamy of spreading, among the constitutionalist forces now in Yucatan, the atrocious calumny that I am a rebel against our First Chief Venustiano Carranza and that I have ordered Gen. Ramon Sosa and the officers of the staff of Gen. Garcilazo shot, keeping the latter in prison. I protest with all my energy against such criminal falsehoods.

That these forces may not be deceived, and to avoid the great disgrace of valiant soldiers consecrated to the same constitutionalist cause fighting against each other in the campaign I am conducting against the real rebels and traitors, Ortiz Argumedo and accomplices, I hasten to say to them, on my honor as a soldier, which I esteem more than my life, that it is all a criminal tissue of monstrous and brutal lies; that Gen. Garcilazo and his staff, treated with every consideration on my part and by Col. Joaquin Mucel, the worthy governor and military commander of Campeche, is in Vera Cruz with our first chief, together with his officers, and, finally, Gen. Ramon Sosa, at the head of his valiant soldiers, is operating under my immediate orders in this campaign, and very soon you may see him on the firing line.

Col. Jose Jimenez, Maj. Abraham Rodriguez, and other field and line officers, as well as all of yourselves who respectively belong to the constitutionalist forces under command of Gens. Garcilazo and Sosa, must know my antecedents and my doings as a patriot and as a soldier in defense of the people; you must know that recently, after I had taken part in the bloody capture of Puebla, rescuing that city from the hands of the Zapatistas and Villistas, the citizen first chief intrusted to me the command of the army corps of the southeast, to which you belong, and with these forces, which have given such proof of their valor and patriotism, I come to fight for our holy constitutionalist cause here in Yucatan, to annihilate, if it should be necessary, this small group of traitors who have rebelled against our cause and against our esteemed and upright first chief, Venustiano Carranza. And I say small group of ambitious traffickers of public palces because I am convinced that the real people of Yucatan, composed in an immense majority of laborious citizens, honest workers, and farm laborers, must be with us and identified with the revolution and our first chief, who, among other transcendental reforms, is restoring lands to the poor, establishing justice, and breaking the chains of slavery.

Let the laborious and worthy people of Yucatan think these wretches are driving the heedless to die needlessly. Let them think that, when the struggle begins, laborers will be without work, homes without bread, farms without laborers. Blood will run in torrents, families will weep in helplessness over the loss of the father, the husband, or brother. Owners will see their plantations disappear in many cases, which, being the theater of battles, those engaged in the struggle will burn. Ruin and desolation will invade the country and cities and more will die of want than in the contest. And all these horrors, for ambitious wretches to flee with the booty, the proceeds of their robberies, and exemplary punishment to fall on the deluded for their crimes.

Do not doubt it. Yucatan can not resist the valor of numerous veteran troops. Even though it might do so in the first encounters, the head of the revolution would send more and more, and Yucatan, without revenues, would exhaust her resources in sustaining forces and would succumb without remedy.

Don't wait for us to weep late and in vain over such calamities. Get away from the evil and perverse instigators who are pushing you into an abyss. Come to my side, I urge you in the name of constitutionalism. Let us avoid the catastrophe and together work for the fatherland and for the State.

And you, soldiers of the fatherland, don't allow yourselves to be dragged along by deception and intrigue.

Your place of honor and combat is here under my orders. Come, work in the presence of our glorious banners. I await you with open arms to make our blessed constitutionalist cause triumph once more by carrying this revolution to its termination, the savior of the Mexican people.

General headquarters at Tenabo, March 2, 1915.

SALVADOR ALVARADO.

Commander in Chief of the Army Corps of the Southeast, Governor and Military Commander of Yucatan.

Mr. GATES. As an immediate consequence of the revolutionary confederation agreement signed by the 12 whose names I have read, the Voice of the Revolution, on the 15th of July, 1915, printed the following:

The constitutionalist revolution and the House of the Workers of the World enter into a compact.

Faithful to its purpose, the revolution will improve the condition of the laborers.

Then follows the celebrated agreement between the constitutionalist revolution and the I. W. W. between Rafael Quintero, secretary of the interior for the first chief, and a representative committee of the workmen of the I. W. W. for the whole of Mexico. Among other things, it provides this:

The workers of the House of the Workers of the World shall make active propaganda to win the sympathy of all the workers in the Republic and of the Workers of the World for the constitutionalist revolution by demonstrating to all Mexican laborers the advantages of joining the revolution, since the latter will make effective for the laboring classes the improvements the latter seek through their groups.

It also provides in another paragraph:

The workers who take up arms in the constitutionalist army and the workwomen who give their services for attention to and treatment of the wounded or other similar services shall have but one denomination, whether they be organized in companies, battalions, regiments, brigades, or divisions. All shall be designated as "reds."

The CHAIRMAN. That article will be translated and the translation printed in the record.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

[From La Voz de la Revolucion, Merida de Yucatan, July 15, 1916.]

The constitutionalist revolution and the House of the Worker of the World enter into a compact.

Faithful to its purposes, the revolution will improve the condition of the laborers.

To our editorial table has come the compact entered into between the constitutionalist revolution and the House of the Worker of the World, composed of the numerous groups of labor syndicates in the Republic, and we publish it to show that the labor element is allied to the revolutionary cause which is headed by the First Chief Venustiano Carranza.

COMPACT ENTERED INTO BETWEEN THE CONSTITUTIONALIST REVOLUTION AND THE HOUSE OF THE WORKER OF THE WORLD.

In view of the fact that the workers of the House of the Worker of the World adhere to the constitutionalist government headed by Citizen Venustiano Carranza, it has been agreed to put on record the relations of said government with the workers, and those of the latter with the former, in order to determine the form in which they are to give their collaboration with the constitutional cause, the following sign the present document for the purpose: For the House of the Worker of the World: Citizen Rafael Quintero, Carlos M. Rincon, Rosendo Salazar, Juan Tado, and Celestino Gasca, appointed as a committee to the first chief of the constitutionalist army, in charge of the executive power, for the revolutionary committee of the City of Mexico, which, in its turn, represents the House of the Worker of the World, and by Licentiate Rafael Zubaran, secretary of the government of said first chief.

First. The constitutionalist government reiterates its resolution, stated in the decree of December 4 of the year last passed, to improve, by appropriate laws, the condition of laborers, issuing during the struggle all the laws that may be necessary to carry out that resolution.

Second. The workers of the House of the Workers of the World, for the purpose of hastening the triumph of the constitutionalist revolution and intensifying as far as possible the unnecessary shedding of blood, put on record the resolution they have taken to collaborate in an effective and practical manner for the triumph of the revolution and to take up arms either to garrison towns that are in the possession of the constitutionalist government or to fight the reaction.

Third. To carry out the provisions contained in the two preceding clauses, the constitutionalist government will, with the solicitude it has heretofore employed, attend to the just claims of the workers in the conflicts that may arise between them and their employers as a consequence of work.

Fourth. In towns occupied by the constitutionalist army, and that the latter may be unhampered in meeting the needs of the campaign, the workers shall be organized in accord with the military commander in each place for the protection of the same and the preservation of order.

In case of the evacuation of towns, the constitutionalist government, through the respective military commander, shall notify the workers of his decision and furnish them every kind of facilities to reconcentrate in places occupied by constitutionalist forces.

The constitutionalist government, in cases of reconcentration, shall give aid to the workers, either as remuneration for the work they do or as fraternal assistance, until work is furnished them to enable them to meet the main needs of subsistence.

Fifth. The workers of the House of the Workers of the World shall make lists in each one of the towns where they are organized, and at once in the City of Mexico, including the names of all their companions who solemnly offer to comply with the provisions of clause second. The lists shall be sent as soon as they are completed to the first chief of the constitutionalist army, that he may be informed of the number of workers who are disposed to take up arms.

Sixth. The workers of the House of the Workers of the World shall make active propaganda to win the sympathy of all the workers in the Republic and of the Workers of the World for the constitutionalist revolution by demonstrating to all Mexican laborers the advantages of joining the revolution, since the latter will make effective for the laboring classes the improvements the latter seek through their groups.

Seventh. The workers shall establish revolutionary centers or committees in all the places they judge convenient to do so. The committees, besides the propaganda work, shall supervise the organization of labor groups and their collaboration in favor of the constitutionalist cause.

Eighth. The constitutionalist government shall, in case it be necessary, establish colonies of workers in zones which it has dominated to serve as a refuge for the families of the workers who have declared their adhesion to the constitutionalist cause.

Ninth. The workers who take up arms in the constitutionalist army and the workwomen who give their services for attention to and treatment of the wounded, or other similar services, shall have but one denomination whether they be organized in companies, battallions, regiments, brigades, or divisions. All shall be designated as "reds."

Constitution and reforms.

Greeting and social revolution.

Honorable Veracruz, February 17, 1915.

Signed: Rafael Zubaran Capmany, Rafael Quintaro, Carlos M. Rincon, Rosendo Salazar, Juna Tudo, Salvador Gonzalo Garcia, Rodolfo Aguirre, Roberto Valdes, Celestino Gasca.

Mr. GATES. Alvarado was soon joined by a man named Habermann, a German who left this country about that time to escape the draft, and who became in a large way the brains behind an agitator named Felipe Carrillo, and proceeded to organize leagues of resistance all over the State of Yucatan, whose name explains their purpose. Some time later, when Alvarado and Pablo Gonzales began to jockey for the presidency, Pablo Gonzales sent a man over there that took 3,000 rifles from these leagues of resistance. Felipe Carrillo became a member of the legislature, and was appointed temporary governor of Yucatan, in the absence of the elected governor. I have here, simply for verification, a printed document issued by him as such governor. He was also president of the league of resistance, and I have a document signed by him in facsimile as president of the league of resistance.

At the election in Yucatan a liberal candidate appeared and Felipe Carrillo went to a store and bought a gross of knives, and attempted to invade the precinct against the law, and when the liberal candidate objected they carved him up, and then arrested him for being carved up.

That same Felipe Carrillo, while a member of the legislature, made a speech, of which I have a copy that I will hand to the stenographer, stating that "the haciendados have bought the courts. Let them remember the Indian uprising of 1847. If they attempt to stop us we will cut the throat of every white man who was left alive in 1847." That is the same Felipe Carrillo who was the right-hand man of Alvarado in this whole matter, the chief propagandist of the acting governor of Yucatan.

The CHAIRMAN. Has this same Felipe Carrillo visited the United States?

Mr. GATES. In the early part of this year he visited this country, traveling from California to New York, whence he sailed for Yucatan a few days before the May day troubles of last spring. On this entire trip he was in conference with one radical leader after another, making various speeches. While in Chicago he received from the secretary of the Socialist Party, located there, an autographed letter addressed to "Comrade" Gen. Alvaro Obregon, asking his views as to an appropriate time to start combined and joint action on the part of the Socialists of Mexico, Cuba, and the United States and Canada. This letter he took with him for delivery. He spent some time with Morris Hilquit, at Saranac Lake, arriving at New York, he made several addresses in Newark, Upper New York, etc., just before the above May-day events, and his own sailing.

•He visited the so-called party of soviet "ambassador" L. A. C. Martens, and delivered to him a letter officially addressed to Martens, by the socialists of Yucatan, stating among other things that "we have here a government greatly like yours of Russia" and looking toward cooperation. This letter Martens answered in the same spirit.

I have had all the above letters in my own hands, and have read them. They or their copies could be found in the proper hands in this country. They came to my eyes by a fortunate chance, quite casually, on April 30 last.

The CHAIRMAN. April 30, 1919?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir. Felipe Carrillo also made a large collection of the most radical printed matter. One thing I particularly remember was a brutal cartoon of Samuel Gompers driving a knife into the back of "Labor." When Carrillo was about to sail, he was officially vouched for by the Mexican consul general in New York, as being in this country by the authority and approval of the Carranza Government.

The CHAIRMAN. That was Denegri?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir. Mr. Lamb told me of those letters. The man who saw these letters was an employee of the customhouse, named Manley, who made the note which attracted my attention to it, and at my suggestion Mr. — sent over the Ward Line pier, where these letters were to be sent from, and the suit cases were brought back and I saw all of that original correspondence, including Marten's signature. I saw the signature of Obregon.

The CHAIRMAN. You saw the letter to Obregon?

Mr. GATES. Yes; I saw the letter to Obregon, and I should like to connect that in this way. Mexico had inaugurated a military régime, Carranza keeping the political balance. Something over a year ago Alvarado began to jockey against Pablo Gonzale for the presidency. Then began the fight in Yucatan. Throughout the whole Carranza administration Obregon had been rather outside the breastworks. I have the connection of Obregon with the bolshevist movement, and this convention in 1915, and the fact that Felipe Carrillo, Alvarado's agent, was taking back a letter addressed to Obregon.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know from the public press or otherwise whether Salvador Alvarado has been in the city of Washington recently?

Mr. GATES. I am told he has been.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what he claims to be his mission here?

Mr. GATES. I am told he claimed to represent Obregon. I am satisfied it is a straw horse of his own ambition along these socialistic lines. I think he is trying to make use of Obregon. I have heard his connections are not so directly with Obregon as they are with P. Elias Calles. I think that is it.

The CHAIRMAN. P. Elias Calles, who is now one of the supposed leaders of what is known as the Sonora movement?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir; which is also headed by Dela Bacca, who is an Alvarado commander.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you read the declaration of purposes or principles issued by Calles and others on April 5 of this year, in which they declare for the constitution of 1917?

Mr. GATES. I am not sure that I have, Senator. I have tried to forget Mexican matters the last few months, and get back to my book; but I am aware generally of that attitude.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you read Spanish?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever seen one of these little printed documents?

Mr. GATES. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you understand it to be?

Mr. GATES. An application of membership of the Metal Mining Workers to the I. W. W.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the local number?

Mr. GATES. Local number 800.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you heard of that local, No. 800, in different portions of the United States?

Mr. GATES. No; I have not. What is local No. 800?

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to be the name which the I. W. W. has used for the metal workers. This application is written in what language?

Mr. GATES. Spanish, with a seal in English, "Industrial Workers of the World," I. W. W. label. It is an application for membership, with the words "Membership card." That is all there is in English. The rest is in Spanish.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you noticed anything in reference to a meeting of the Pan-American Labor Conference in Laredo, Tex., in 1918, and in New York in 1919?

Mr. GATES. I have at different times heard a good deal about that, and I made some definite notes, but I have no notes upon it here. I have regarded it as a very serious element in all this matter, of which a good deal was cooked up, and I wished I could get at the inside of what was done there. Some radical Latin American members from the eastern meeting at least later appeared in Yucatan, and I found their trail.

The CHAIRMAN. Glance over this statement which I hand you.

Mr. GATES. Yes; you have got it. It means business, too; and that is Alvarado's ultimate plan by which he hoped to secure the presidency of Mexico and put us in our place.

The CHAIRMAN. This document will be placed in the record.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

[From La Nueva Solidaridad (The New Solidarity), Chicago, second fortnight of October, 1919.]

GOMPERS AND MEXICAN LABORERS—STATEMENT OF J. D. BORRAN, MEXICAN DELEGATE TO THE PAN AMERICAN CONFERENCE.

As I was not permitted to speak or read the propositions received from the Case del Obrero in Tampico with instructions to present them to the Pan American labor conference in New York, I am obliged to appeal to the free press of the United States to express the ideas and thoughts of a majority of the laborers of Mexico, so that the proletariat of North America may form a clear idea of our aspirations and not believe us united in a repugnant fellowship with the leaders of the American Federation of Labor.

I will begin by saying the laboring people of Mexico have no sympathy with the American Federation of Labor; that they do not accept its policy as a basis for our struggle; that they reject the intervention of the authorities in their affairs; that they consider Gompers a charlatan and that they do not believe in the grand words of liberty by which powerful America seeks to deceive the world.

Invited by the council of leaders of the Pan American Federation of Labor, we came animated with the best intentions and with the hope of being able to contribute to the advancement of the laboring class and to do all we can to overcome the difficulties that separate us from the American Federation of Labor, and to organize the much-to-be-desired union of all the laboring people on the continent.

Although we know from experience that the American Federation of Labor does not keep the agreements it contracts with other labor unions, although it is duly diligent to carry out such as it contracts with the bourgeoisie, we are disposed to discuss with the other delegates and to organize with them, if we can reach an understanding, the great federation of America, which will represent the sentiment of all of us and will work for the liberty of all the oppressed.

Pursuant to these desires and to our principles, the Case del Obrero of Tampico transmitted through me to the Pan American Congress the following resolutions and recommends them as by-laws of the Continental Federation:

1. The Pan American Federation shall endeavor to group together all the labor organizations on the continent, all the organizations that are eligible under its principles.

2. The organizations composing the federation shall be self-operating among themselves, and the executive committee may refuse them its support in case any one demands it, provided it does not depart from the principles of the federation.

3. The Pan American Federation shall have nothing in common with the bourgeoisie or with the government of the bourgeoisie; the international solidarity of the laboring class shall be established as the principle of its struggle, and it will fight against any government that is imposed by force.

4. The Pan American Federation shall agitate the idea of the creation of rationalistic schools and liberating publications, and shall educate the laborers so that they may be capable and able to take possession of the wealth of society at a given moment, and regulate production and consumption.

5. The Pan American Federation shall hold communism as the ultimate ideal of its struggle and the acquisition and socialization of property as its immediate purpose.

6. The Pan American Federation shall not aspire to any dictatorship nor shall it unite with any government, and it shall use force to combat force.

7. The Pan American Federation recognizes as sisters the Republics of Russia and Hungary and will boycott the industries of any Government that imperils their existence and will aid them morally and materially, provided they do not depart from the principles heretofore followed.

8. The Pan American Federation recognizes as good the government of the soviets and will endeavor to include the same in its program as soon as may be possible.

In these resolutions are condensed the aspirations of the laborers of Mexico, and, in offering them as principles for the functioning of the Pan American Federation, the Case del Trabajador of Tampico is animated by the desire that they may also be the aspirations of all the laborers on the continent and that they be made known to all the oppressed at a no distant future.

It is not my purpose to write in detail the happenings of the four days of the Pan American convention held in New York. It was not a congress of laborers, nor was it composed of laborers. Of the 25 delegates only 2 were laborers. All the others were lawyers, bourgeoisie, and leaders in labor questions, all of them, including Mr. Gompers. There they discussed the League of Nations, the invasion of Santo Domingo and Nicaragua, and the danger these things might bring to Mexico. Of the problems of laborers, of the misery and the injustices that are destroying the laboring class, they have said nothing and, when I asked them to allow me to read my resolutions, and to speak about them, they rejected my request by 23 votes to 2, presenting the anomalous situation of 23 men, 23 representatives who rejected those propositions when they did not know them.

They did not permit me to read nor did they permit me to speak, and from this the laborers of all the continent can judge what sort of a convention was that which met in New York.

I must say that in view of the good intentions that animated me in coming to the convention, nothing except that occurred to molest us. Nevertheless, I believe if we had reached an agreement, nothing practical would have resulted from it. The American Federation of Labor agreed with us in the conference held in Nuevo Laredo a year ago to use its influence to obtain justice for industrial prisoners (I. W. W.'s in prison), and at the last convention the general strike for the liberty of Mooney which they had accepted was boycotted. The federation agreed with us to establish an agency in New York to educate laborers reaching there in ignorance of the struggle of classes, and the federation carried out its agreement by recommending to the American Senate to pass a law restricting immigration. The American Federation of Labor agreed with us to struggle for the right of assembly, of speech, and the press, and approved a resolution in its convention to expel from its organizations all members of radical tendencies.

I believe these lessons of the past give a clear idea of what the officers of the American Federation of Labor are capable of and of how they fail to carry out their agreements with the laboring class, and of how in their last convention they agreed to do nothing against the interests of the bourgeoisie.

In conclusion, I have the pleasure of saying in my own name and in that of the majority of the laborers of Mexico, that we do not consider Gompers a genuine representative of the laboring class of America.

We know that here you fight, that here you know how to die for them as we know how to fight and die. This encourages us; this comforts us; this brings us the full conviction that sooner or later we shall embrace as brothers to march forward united to the conquest of our emancipation.

Mexico burns with the secret fever of rebellion which no human power can control. And it is a great satisfaction to us, the laborers of the three Americas, to say to you that in that rebellion are conceded the aspirations of the proletariat of the universe.

Free men of America, in the name of the laborers and in my own name, I give you a fraternal embrace. We are with you. Be sure that our acclaim will be the echo of your acclaim, that our protests will mingle with yours, and that you will have our aid and our support, unconditional and decided at any time and on any occasion you need it.

Laborers of America, long life to the liberty of the world. Long life to the universal union of the proletariat.

We have given a place to this article not because we approve it, but to show once more the unfitness of the American Federation of Labor and its offshoot, the Pan American Labor Federation, at the present time, and having given this space to Comrade Borran, we desire to speak and to ask a few questions. Why so many efforts to form another new organization when we already have the I. W. W., which does everything desired, given the support and attendance of those concerned? Have you studied, perchance, or taken into exact account the principles and program of the I. W. W.? Now that many thousands of laborers in all parts of the continent know and form a part of the I. W. W., or the Industrial Workers of the World, would it not be a labor of disorganization and a turning aside to form another international labor organization? Why not unite all of us who are conscious and consequential in one sole grand union, such as the I. W. W., with its ample and revolutionary bases and principles, so as not only to fight daily against the capitalists, but also to take possession of the earth and industries and organize production and distribution when we succeed in routing capitalism and as soon as this falls by its own weight and corruption and the moral and material bankruptcy of the present system?

Mr. GATES. I can not express myself too seriously as to the purpose and menace of that document.

The CHAIRMAN. That document, of course, refers to the fact that the writer, representing the Tampico branch or local of the Mexican I. W. W., was not permitted to express his sentiments at the Pan American Union in New York, and therefore he writes them to Solidarity.

Do you know anything of what took place, as printed and published in the public press of this country, in the meeting of the so-called Pan American Labor Union, or Pan American organization of the workingmen, held in Laredo, Tex., on November 13, 1918, attended by William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, of the President's Cabinet; Samuel Gompers, Duncan, and other prominent American labor leaders; and by Morones and other prominent Mexican labor leaders; by the then Governor George W. Hunt, of Arizona, later named as minister to Siam; attended by delegates from different Mexican organizations and by delegates from the different labor organizations of other Latin American countries? Were you familiar with anything that took place there?

Mr. GATES. I have known of that meeting. I am satisfied I have read something from it; and, if my memory serves me, I wrote in one of my articles that if we could get the unpublished actions of that meeting they would be illuminating.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has them. At least, one of the members of the committee has them.

Do you know Mr. Antonio Villareal, of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. I know him by name. I have his name in several documents, but I don't know much about him.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you heard his name mentioned recently, or seen it in the public press, in connection with Salvador Alvarado and P. Elias Calles?

Mr. GATES. I don't think I have. I am only reading the high lights of Mexican matters now. He was a member of that alliance. I think I have his name in a printed proclamation. I didn't pay much attention to it.

The CHAIRMAN. He was one of the organizers of the Mexican labor revolutionary junta organized in the United States in the year 1905, along with Ricardo Magon, Robela, Ceralio, and the other Magon, brother of Ricardo, and others, who were arrested in Los Angeles for violation of the neutrality laws.

Mr. GATES. Was it Ricardo or the other brother that was arrested?

The CHAIRMAN. Ricardo. The other Magon was a cousin of Ricardo. His first name I don't remember. I think it was Enrique. Villareal was a member of that first organization. They were arrested and tried for violation of the neutrality laws and convicted in 1908, at which time the American Federation of Labor, then in session at Denver, Colo., through its president, Mr. Gompers, wired sympathy and offers of assistance to the revolutionary junta, of which they were members. Later, after serving their time, they were arrested, tried, and convicted in Los Angeles for an invasion of Mexico, sending armed forces into Mexico, particularly into Lower California.

Mr. GATES. I think I remember that.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you heard of Mr. John Kenneth Turner?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And Lazaro Gutierrez de Lara?

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you read Barbarous Mexico?

Mr. GATES. No. It was too stiff for me. I have read extracts. I know the character of the book, but I never read it through.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know anything about that invasion of Lower California?

Mr. GATES. No, Senator; I do not. I don't think I can testify to anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not recall it?

Mr. GATES. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. It is on record of the archives of the Senate committee that Mr. John Kenneth Turner was one of the collecting agents of money furnished from various sources, including locals of the I. W. W., and Lazaro de Lara was one of the members.

Mr. GATES. I am quite ready to believe it.

The CHAIRMAN. And they engaged in the invasion of Mexico for the purpose of establishing a socialistic republic in Lower California at that time.

Mr. GATES. Oh, I did hear of that. I remember now. I heard of it with that object.

The CHAIRMAN. It is interesting, in view of the claims of these certain gentlemen at this time that certain Americans are trying to intervene by armed force for certain purposes in Mexico, that some of these same people were convicted of intervening with armed forces in Mexico, by the United States court; and certain gentlemen who are most loud now in criticizing the investigations of this committee were shown by the record in the court to have been the leaders in the intervention at that time.

Mr. GATES. I have a little personal experience in connection with that, that is so much in that line it is worth telling you. A labor paper in New York was making a great noise over the fact that in one of my letters I said I had telephoned a protest to Washington against giving Carranza permission to send troops across our soil to attack Villa, stating to the officer to whom I telephoned, Gen. Churchill, who at once saw Secretary Baker and Mr. Polk, that if we did that nothing could stop Villa from raiding our border, and we would be responsible for it. The labor paper in New York published a loud headline, "Gates and the allies of the oil people fomenting a Villa raid on our people and confesses it." That was the Call. Of course, if it had been worth while suing it, I would have done it, but who wants to sue the Call?

The CHAIRMAN. Have you read a report published by this committee, containing a translation of a photostatic copy of a letter signed by Venustiano Carranza, with reference to certain plans which would be put in operation in the United States?

Mr. GATES. I have heard of that, but I have not yet read it.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with that and other matters, the committee will file not to be incorporated in the testimony at this point but as an appendix to it, a report of one of its special investigators concerning the I. W. W. activities on this side and on the other side recently.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit 12," and the same appears in full at the close of the testimony of this witness.)

Mr. GATES. Just to get rid of it, too, I find on this question of interference in elections, I have a copy I made of an official document in the State of Oaxaca that I might submit.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that has been incorporated in the record in connection with the proclamation of Aguilar.

Mr. GATES. Oh, yes; I believe it was. I have an appeal made to the Governor of the State of Puebla, by various and numerous residents, of the way the Carrancistas were treating the common people, robbing them and carrying on all kinds of atrocities.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be filed also, but not printed in the testimony.

(The document referred to is herewith filed, but not printed as a part of the testimony.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in recess until 2.30 this afternoon.

AFTER RECESS.

At the expiration of the recess, the committee reconvened, Senator Fall presiding.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM GATES—Resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you if you have had your attention called to a history of the organization of labor in the early days in Mexico, from the year 1910 down to September, 1916, made by one of the original Mexican labor organizers in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. Have I heard of it?

The CHAIRMAN. Have you read that?

Mr. GATES. I have read it. It agrees throughout with the result of my own research into the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. This will be incorporated in the record at this time.

In the year 1910, the printer Amadeo Torres, Spanish socialist, endeavored to unite all the printing workmen of the city of Mexico. From this work resulted the Confederacion de Artes Graficas, Graphic Arts Confederation, having become members of this, printers, binders, linotypist engravers, etc. Among the members of the Confederacion de Artes Graficas, were well known through their facility of word Rafael Quintero, Anastasio Maria, Fernando Rodarte, N. Armenta, and Frediswindio Elvira Alonso, these two last ones spaniards of socialist ideas.

That was after the dismissal of the Barcelona journalists in Spain.

The two last-named parties, due to advice of some renowned Maderistas, began to give to the Confederacion de Artes Graficas certain political orientation, and to that the Mexican tipographer Jose Lopez Donez did not agree, as he claimed the society should be with mutual ends only. On this object the newspaper of that time had discussions.

In 1911, a few months after the Confederacion de Artes Graficas was established, some of the members separated themselves headed by Rafael Quintero and at once started the establishment of the Casa del Obrero Mundial, having opened their offices at a house known by Estan co de Hombres, where the rents were paid for by enemies of the Gen. Porfirio Diaz's Government.

Rafael Quintero's name appears prominently in the discussions of the Pan American Federation of Labor in Laredo, Tex., on November 13, 1918:

Quintero, Armenta, Marlu, Rodarte, and Elvira Alonzo, commenced to make revolutionary propaganda amongst the workmen, being so active that on several occasions the directors of the Casa Mundiay were called to the presence of the authorities and their attention called to the fact that they should not cover themselves under the name of the institution to do their political work.

Diaz Government fell and then the institution named "Casa del Obrero Mundial" declared itself openly revolutionary and claimed the premium of its work which had helped to overthrow the Diaz Government, from the party that had the triumph.

Elvira Alonzo was named general manager of the Vida Nueva printing office, this being a paper established by Mr. Madero to be his defender. Others received secret commission from Gustavo Madero and for their work received different amounts of money.

During the 18 months that Madero was at the head of the Government, Quintero and partners got about 4,000 members of both sexes for the Casa del Obrero Mundial due to the active propaganda and to the help received from the Government.

When the Maderista party fell, the directors of the Casa Mundial kept on playing politics and many of the members left the city of Mexico to go with the armies of Zapata at the south and Carranza to the north, having paid for all their expenses the treasury of the Casa del Obrero Mundial. Practically Rafael Quintero, Armenta, Rodarte y Elvira Alonzo were agents of the revolutionary party which was fighting against Gen. Huerta's government. The government knew this; but these parties were protected by the name of the corporation of which they were directors.

When Huerta fell, when the Carranza army took possession of the City of Mexico, they organized in a procession as members of the Casa del Obrero Mundial to congratulate Mr. Carranza for his revolutionary work and also to congratulate their friends who entered in a triumphal way to the city. Carranza at once told Quintero and Elvira Alonzo that they could choose the house that they liked the best to make them a present of it as a premium to the institution for the help rendered to his party to fight against the Huerta government. The directors of the Casa del Obrero Mundial wanted the building occupied by the Sanz Hotel, but I do not know for which reason Carranza did not want to give it, although he told them to look for another one in better conditions, having decided that it should be the building occupied by the church and convent of Santa Brigida, on San Juan de Letran Street, in front of the American Club. It was there that the Casa del Obrero Mundial was placed, having left a hall so that there the workmen could have their meetings, workmen of the different works who had come under the flag of this political-mutual-socialist institution.

Nevertheless, immediately after Carranza had entered the City of Mexico, the public began to hear about the disagreement between the first chief and Pablo Gonzales. Quintero and partners, wise enough, understood that until those differences were settled they should not declare themselves either in favor of Carranza or Villa. It was thus that they decided to observe a waiting policy, being this the first time that the Casa del Obrero Mundial was neutral in political questions.

Carranza was dashed from the capital of Mexico and Emiliano Zapata took possession of it. Again the members of the Casa del Obrero Mundial organized a parade with 5,000 persons of both sexes to congratulate Zapata and the "brother" Gomez, a workman who returned to Mexico City changed into a general. The directors of the Casa del Obrero Mundial arranged with Zapata through "brother" Gomez that they be allowed the use of the same building. This was the only grace which the Villismo and the Zapatismo united granted to the directors of the Casa del Obrero Mundial. They disliked this and patiently waited for Carranza to take again the City of Mexico, which happened a few weeks after. In this instance Quintero and partners entered decidedly into politics by side of Carranza and began to organize two divisions of infantry, which were named "red divisions," promising the workmen that would become soldiers that their military services were to be reduced only to keep such cities where they would be no danger of fight. The red divisions were entrained to Vera Cruz and from there were sent to fight at El Ebano, where they fought against the soldiers of Gen. Urbina (Thomas). After this Gen. Urbina was chased from the oil region; the red divisions returned to Mexico City, being very angry because they had been deceived. Then, in 1914, Rafael Quintero and Frediwindo Elvira Alonzo were recognized as coronels in the constitutional army and at the same time occupied important positions in the board of directors of the Casa del Obrero Mundial.

When Carranza settled in Mexico City he began to render help of all kinds to his allies of the Casa del Obrero Mundial: To Rafael Quintero, to whom he had already made coronel, granted him a commission of the de facto government in Barcelona, with the object that he would have meetings with the anarchists of that city. The work of Rafael Quintero in Barcelona Spain) was noted, because this man, in a workingmen meeting, gave out a speech with such demagogic ideas that the police had to interrupt him and send him to the headquarters accused of disturbing public order. Through the influence of the other Carrancistas, agents in Spain he was let free; but, nevertheless, he had to suffer several days' arrest and his name was recorded in the prison of the Catalan capital.

Fredilwido Elvira Alonso also was presented with the title of coronel, and, moreover, named particula secretary of Gen. Hirierto Jara, who has been governor of the federal district and at present is the governor of the State of Vera Cruz. A few weeks ago Elvira Alonso was fired of his employment, and is now in jail for his bad handling.

The rest of the members of the Casa del Obrero Mundial were presented with fine shops of different industries, as a prize for their work in favor of the Carrancistas. These shops were the ones intervened by Carranza. To whom it was not given the shop, he was named manager of those that Carranza left for himself or his nearest friends or generals.

Such is the history of the so-called "Casa del Obrero Mundial" of Mexico, who, as it is assured, is in intimate contact with the Casa del Obrero Mundial of the United States.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., September, 1916.

Also the statement of Eloy Armenta will be incorporated in the record at this point.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

The House of the Worker of the World in Mexico was inaugurated in reality the 16th of September, 1910, in Belen prison, because the undersigned organizer, Eloy Armenta, was imprisoned there, to which place he had been sent by the Madero Government. Later, after the House of the Worker was founded and constituted in federations of labor and schools on the rational scientific method, the revolutionary syndicalist method followed by the general federation in France was adopted by the labor groups. The declaration under affirmation was made, by which it was required that no member of the syndicates should take an active part in politics or militarism, the association being defined by the slogan of labor, education, science, and struggle for social transformation. Its first domicile was on Matamoros Street, No. 105, in the City of Mexico, where the association remained till the barrack uprising (cuartelazo), on which date it offered its services to the Neutral Red Cross, and because of a meeting, the organizer—Armenta—was again imprisoned and exiled, together with Miguel and Celestino Porrondégui, Jose Coldao, and Jose Santos Chocano. At the fall of Gen. Huerta, and on his return from exile, a meeting was held for Armenta in the Lyric Theater in Mexico.

The 17th of February, 1915, the House of the Worker of the World, represented by 67 leading members and Zubaran, in representation of Carranza, entered into a compact by virtue of which the convent of Santa Brigida was ceded to them and $500,000 with which Carranza honored the association, for which later, by acting contrary to its principles, it paid dearly at Celaya and Ebano with the blood of its battallions which in the end gave the victory to Carranza. Later the Houses of the Worker of the World have been persecuted from Yucatan to Tampico and in the City of Mexico itself the house was closed by order of Obregon, and, as a result of this, at the beginning of the current month, Dr. Atl or rather Gerardo Murillo, who officiated as president of the parent association, was imprisoned. There were in the Republic 36 Houses of the Worker of the World, the number of associates reaching 800,000, while 52,000 belonged to Santa Brigida alone.

The affinity that exists between the House of the Worker of the World of Mexico and the W. W. of the United States and the Confederation of Paris is absolute, both in the identity of their constitutions and in the identity of principles and tendencies.

The founder of the House of the Worker of the World, Eloy Armenta, did not sign the compact referred to with Carranza and this caused him to be held 183 days without communication in the dungeons at Vera Cruz until he was deported the second time.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know the position the officers of the American Federation of Labor took, if any, with reference to this agreement between the Carranza Government and the labor organizations of Mexico?

Mr. GATES. I know of one paper, of which I have a copy in my files, showing Samuel Gompers as congratulating the Casa del Obrero Mundial, as follows:

We learned with intense interest of the historic agreement between the Casa del Obrero Mundial and the constitutionalist government, and signed on behalf of that government by Rafael Zubaran, Capmany.

That is the agreement which was referred to in those newspaper articles I mentioned this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter from which the witness has just read will be printed in the record with his testimony.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

APPEAL TO MEXICAN LABOR.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., May 23, 1916.

SECRETARY,

Casa del Obrero Mundial, City of Mexico.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Permit me on behalf of the American Federation of Labor to send fraternal greetings to the Casa del Obrero Mundial, to the entire labor movement of Mexico.

The labor movement of North America has seen with what splendid courage organized labor in Mexico has, from the time of the late Francisco I. Madero, demanded and obtained recognition for the cause of labor and justice in our sister republic.

From time to time the American Federation of Labor has received confidential reports from delegates duly accredited by your organization and others who come to Washington in behalf of the Mexican cause. From these delegates the executive council of the American Federation of Labor has learned how deeply the spirit of international brotherhood has guided all your struggles in Mexico. We learned with intense interest of the historic agreement between the Casa del Obrero Mundial and the constitutionalist government, and signed on behalf of that government by Rafael Zubaran Capmany.

We have learned with what bravery and determination the Mexican miners in the State of Arizona organized and struck work with their brother Americans of the North, and won advancement for themselves and the cause of international solidarity.

All these facts point to the necessity of a still closer understanding between the workers of all the Americas, particularly in this crisis in the world's history. To this end, and to propose a practical method of mutual cooperation between organized labor in Mexico and the United States, I suggest that at a date to be agreed upon, representatives from the Casa del Obrero Mundial, and as many other of the labor organizations in Mexico as possible, meet for a conference in El Paso, Tex., with representatives of the American Federation of Labor. Matters for the mutual welfare of the sister republic could then be discussed and a future cooperative policy outlined.

With you I agree that the future peace of the world rests in the hands of the wage earners, and this is most cogently expressed by the organized labor movement of each and all countries.

I hope to hear from you as soon as possible as to the actual conditions of the Mexican labor movement at the present time, and to receive a reply to the suggestion I have made herein.

Fraternally, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Mr. GATES. I just wish to read this brief statement from a document I have:

Before me lies a recent Mexico City newspaper, with photographs of a poster advertising copies for sale of the Russian bolshevist constitution on the walls of the Government buildings in Mexico, and a clerk at the window of the Chamber of Deputies selling copies.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Gates, we have referred once or twice to a meeting of the Pan American labor conference at Laredo, Tex., on or about November 13, 1918. I have had handed to me and have before me a copy of a newspaper entitled "Pan American Labor Press, San Antonio, Tex., U. S. A.," with a subtitle in Spanish, "El Obrero Pan Americano," and under it in Spanish, "The Organ of the Pan American Labor Movement." That paper contains in parallel columns an account of the meeting, the speeches, discussions, etc., that took place at that meeting, both in English and in Spanish.

I notice among the proceedings of that convention that there were present Secretary of Labor W. B. Wilson, Mr. Samuel Gompers, Duncan, and various other members of the American Federation of Labor, and labor organizations, including Mr. Murray, the secretary of the Pan American Federation of Labor; that the committee on resolutions made a report, the third article of which provides:

That facilities be granted to Mexican workers which should place them in a position, were they willing, to join the labor organizations in the United States, and that without curtailment of the support and privileges which such organizations allow to their own members.

I notice that the sixth proposition, submitted by the Mexican Federation of Labor, was as follows:

Sixth. That an agreement be reached as to the best way for finding honorable means to exert influence so that justice and protection be imparted to those working men who, for various reasons, are deprived of their liberty in the jails of the United States.

I notice this proposition, offered by the Mexicans, and reported by the committee on resolutions, at once aroused a good deal of discussion. As you are interested in the social conditions of Mexico, and familiar to a great or less extent from your experience and observation of such conditions, and have been interested in the labor question and in the international labor question, with your permission, I am going to read a portion of this discussion pro and con, as it appears here, in connection with your testimony at this time, and see whether you understand that the ideas set forth by the Mexican delegates are those which you understand to be those held by the Mexican labor organizations generally in Mexico.

It appears from the minutes of this meeting that Delegate Green, referring to the sixth proposition submitted by the Mexican Federation of Labor, and who was chairman of the committee on resolutions, said:

Mr. Chairman, regarding the sixth paragraph we recommend that the executive council of the American Federation of Labor make an investigation of the question referred to herein and take such action in connection therewith as they deem necessary.

Now, that at once aroused the delegates, and particularly Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who was presiding over this Pan American Labor Conference, Mr. Gompers demanding to know what the Mexican delegates meant by proposing that resolution. Various Mexican delegates, and various other delegates, principally Americans, took part in the discussion. Quoting from Mr. Gompers:

For the information of all the delegates, let us know specifically what there is in mind. What is it; what offenses are charged against them; what they are in jail for?

Delegates MORONES. We are not able to give references or mention names, but in as much as the information has come to us, we desire to obtain information for ourselves through the proposed investigation, and thus have the opportunity to rectify the statements made in the propaganda that has been spread throughout Mexico. Also, we would have the pleasure of being the first to obtain the object of justice we seek.

It appears that some of the Mexican delegates supported the Green suggestion, with the amendment that Mexican delegates should be represented upon the investigating committee. The discussion grew warm, when Delegate Quintero, of the House of the World's Workers, Mexico City, said:

I am going to make a frank statement in reference to that proposition to which Comrade Morones has alluded, due to the fact that Mr. Gompers wants us to speak clearly about it. In the mind of the Mexican workmen, as well as those organizations affiliated with the Mexican Federation of Labor, the Federation of Syndicates, and the House of the World's Workers, it is not to prisoners in general that we refer, as suggested by Mr. Gompers, but to the workers who belong to the I. W. W. (the Industrial Workers of the World), who were jailed by the American Government on the charge of having made an active propaganda against the recruiting of soldiers.

It appears that the discussion was continued by Delegate Tobin, of the American Federation of Labor, Delegate Salcedo, of the Mexican Federation of Labor, or rather, of the Mexican Newspaper Workers' Union, and others, during which Delegate Ruiz, Grand Union of the Industrial Workers of the World, Torreon, Coahuila, said:

Mr. Chairman, it is not in my mind to make incriminations in a formal manner in any way whatever against the American Federation of Labor. But we have the information or knowledge in the union at Torreon called the Industrial Workers of the World that the American Federation of Labor in the United States has followed the policy that whatever is not worthy the American Federation of Labor is against it; and, according to our information, it is for that reason that the Industrial Workers of the World are looked upon with the degree of hatred, of dislike that I have spoken about. I say that if the American Federation of Labor is seeking to establish a principle of universal fraternity which would benefit all labor organizations, then the American Federation of Labor should act condescendingly in reference to the methods heretofore employed by the Industrial Workers of the World and not antagonize them in any sense, because if you are talking of democracy within the ranks of the American Federation of Labor they should be left alone to think freely and be permitted to develop their propaganda in the way that they understand it; for it is a contradiction to proclaim liberty and on the other hand gag the free right of speech in another way.

Delegate Alpine, and other Americans, undertook to reassure the Mexican delegates, and to convince them that the American Federation of Labor was really a democratic labor organization, etc. Mr. Gompers finally spoke at some length, calling attention of the Mexican delegates, among other things, to the course of the American Federation of Labor with reference to the Mexican political troubles. Among other things, he said:

At the outset let me say that there is a peculiar notion prevailing among some of the delegates, who seem to think that it is a gracious act on their part to accept the invitation and attend this conference.

The invitation to participate in this conference is the result of years of work of the American Federation of Labor to assist the Mexican people. It had its beginning when there was a revolutionary element among the working people of Mexico against President Diaz, and we supported every effort made by the Mexican workers and the Mexican people for the overthrow of Diaz.

When the Mexican revolutionists found their way into the United States, it was the organized American labor movement that protested against the Government giving up to Diaz the men, the Mexican revolutionists, who were in the United States, and it was the American labor movement which prevented our Government turning the men over to Diaz, who probably would have had them put in jail or killed.

We were with the movement of Madero so that the people, the working people, of Mexico might have the opportunity of free development. It was the American labor movement that helped to destroy and overthrow the assassin, Huerta. And it was the American Federation of Labor, when Mexico and the United States were at the point of war, that stepped in and did everything within its power to prevent a conflict between the two countries.

Whether in Russia or Ireland, whether in Mexico or in any other country on the face of the globe, wherever the people endeavor to secure freedom and justice, the American Federation of Labor puts forth its best efforts to assist them.

The work of the American Federation of Labor for the people and the working people of Porto Rico has put them in conditions economic, political, and sociological equal if not better than any other people in any Central or Latin-American countries.

Come back for a moment to Mexico. Two years ago when the proclamation was issued by Carranza making it a criminal offense punishable by death for any workman to engage in a strike, it was the American Federation of Labor which compelled the adoption in the Mexican constitution of the right of the workmen of Mexico to strike for their rights.

* * * * *

It is all very good for any one to say, "Why not give these people, the I. W. W., the opportunity to live and work out their own propaganda just as they want to?" But I want to say this to you, my friends, that we have one labor movement, cohesive, militant, and determined, in the United States of America, and because we have one labor movement in America we occupy a position of power and influence to bring a better time into the lives of the working people of our country.

The I. W. W.'s in the United States are exactly what the Bolsheviks are in Russia, and we have seen what the I. W. W. Bolsheviks in Russia have done for the working people in Russia, where the people have no peace, no security, no land, and no bread.

Among other speakers on the proposition, Delegate Green again addressed the conference, and among other things said:

When Bill Haywood, the leader of the I. W. W.'s in America, was on trial at Boise, Idaho, in days gone by, charged with murder, it was not the I. W. W. that furnished him the money that enabled him to prove his innocence, but it was the bona fide organized labor movement of America that gave him money which paid the bill in order to free Bill Haywood. That trial alone cost the organized-labor movement of America hundreds of thousands of dollars. And after Bill Haywood, the leader of the movement, was set free, because of the money supplied by the organized-labor movement in America, he was so ungrateful that he started out to organize a dual movement and destroy the very union which had saved his life.

Practically from the day he was given his liberty—after the organized-labor movement had out of their pockets poured in thousands of dollars in an effort to set him free—he began to develop his plan to sow the seeds of poison in the organized-labor movement and undermine it. Ever since that day he has not let an opportunity go by to attempt to destroy the American Federation of Labor, and the results of the poison he has sown are shown in the attitude that some of you have taken here.

Mr. Gates, it appears from the proceedings as published of this labor conference that Mr. Gompers very vigorously opposed any sympathy with the I. W. W. in the United States, and attacked the organization in this country, and that many of those Mexican delegates, and particularly Quintero, apparently entertained the belief that Mr. Gompers's opposition was to the I. W. W. as a rival organization of the American Federation of Labor. The resolution apparently was not voted upon, but was referred to the executive committee after a lengthy discussion.

From the statements made by Mr. Gompers as to the participation of his organization in Mexican political affairs, and from the trend of that controversy at Laredo, and the expressions of the different delegates, and from what you know yourself personally of labor conditions and of the peculiar characteristics of the inhabitants of Mexico—or at least of 80 per cent, constituting the working class of Mexico—in your opinion, does Mr. Gompers or does the American Federation of Labor really understand the Mexican labor condition, and, in your opinion, can the ordinary Mexican laborer, member of the Casa del Obrero Mundial and allied kindred organizations, appreciate and understand the principles of trade-unionism as practiced by the trade-unionists of the United States?

MR. GATES. No, to both questions.

THE CHAIRMAN. Then, when the Mexican workingman, or Indian, or half-breed citizen, ordinarily known as the Mexican, has preached to him doctrines of freedom and equality, and hears criticisms and abuse of the employers, is it your judgment that the impression made upon him is that he shall obtain relief through peaceful means—by the ballot, by organization, by the strike, or by other methods common to the intelligent workingmen in other portions of the world—or that he should adopt other means to attain his ends; and if so, what means?

MR. GATES. The only means they know of down there is a revolt, when conditions have become intolerable.

THE CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by "revolt"?

MR. GATES. By arms and by force, to take the gun. I recently attended a lecture at which the lecturer used a phrase that sunk in my mind, and which I think answers your question. He showed on the screen a picture of the places in Mexico City where the poor people, especially the Indians, herded and lived, and said, "If a man came to you, living there, and he said, 'Come, get liberty,' would you not go and fight, if only for a chance to hope?"

THE CHAIRMAN. Does liberty, as spoken of by these people, mean liberty as we understand it, or does it mean individual license to do what you please?

MR. GATES. As used by these propagandists, in every case, license to do as they please. As understood by the Indian, or the ordinary worker, it means the liberty to have his own little home and be let alone; but to those who prey upon him it means a chance to loot, and shoot and rape.

THE CHAIRMAN. Then, granting, as we all grant, the sincerity and purity of the motives of Mr. Gompers, in interfering, as he says that he has interfered, with the political affairs of Mexico, in your judgment, has that interference, with the results which he has mentioned in this speech to the labor conference, has such effort and such interference upon his behalf resulted beneficially or injuriously to the common people of Mexico?

MR. GATES. They have resulted injuriously to the common man in Mexico, and the health of Mexicans themselves, equally as has the interference which has been going on by President Wilson for the past eight years, against which Mexico has been fighting—ignorant interference in the affairs of other people and telling them how to behave.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement that Mr. Gompers made that the American Federation of Labor secured or forced the incorporation into the Mexican Constitution of the provision allowing strikes, have you had your attention called to the strike order of Carranza to which he referred?

Mr. GATES. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you a copy of that order before you?

Mr. GATES. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be placed in the record at this point, as a part of the testimony.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

CARRANZA'S DECREE OF DEATH TO BREAK UP STRIKE.

AUGUST 1, 1916.

Venustiano Carranza, first chief of the constitutionalist army, charged with the executive power of the nation, and in view of the extraordinary faculties in me vested, and considering that the conduct of the labor syndicates in the present case constitutes without doubt an attack on public peace, for, as it has been shown, it is inspired by the enemies of the Government with the intent and purpose of making it impossible to avail itself of its own resources so much needed for the pacification and reestablishment of order in the country, and discriminating against the constitutionalist paper, depriving it of the value fixed upon it by law, and as it could happen that the law of January 25, 1862, should not cover other cases and persons besides the principal promoters of the present strike, it is indispensable to widen the scope of the said law and make it applicable to cases which surely would have been covered by it had this means of disturbing the public peace and antagonizing the government been known at the time it was issued.

In view of the foregoing, I have decreed the following:

Article 1. Besides the disturbers of the public peace, punished by death, as prescribed by the law of January 25, 1862, the death penalty will also be imposed on the following:

1. Those who may incite the suspension of work in factories or enterprises destined to public service, or who may propagate the suspension of work; those who preside over meeting in which it is proposed, discussed or approved; those who may defend or sustain same; those who may approve or subscribe same; those who may assist to those meetings and not withdraw from same upon learning their object; and those who may endeavor to make it effective upon being declared:

2. Those who, availing themselves of the suspension of work in factories or enterprises mentioned, or in any others, or with the object of aggravating or imposing it, should destroy the property of the enterprises employing the workmen interested in the strike or in any manner cause its deterioration, or deteriorate or destroy the property of any enterprise whose workmen it is desired should join the strike; and those who with the same object in view provoke public disturbances, be it against public employees or civilians, or employ force against the person or property of citizens, or who may take possession of, deteriorate, or destroy public or private property; and

3. Those who by threats or force prevent others from lending their services to the companies or enterprises against which the strike is declared.

Article 2. The offense to which this law refers will be of the competence of the same military authority authorized to judge and punish offenses prescribed by the law of January 25, 1862, and will be prosecuted and punished in the same terms and proceedings as prescribed by decree No. 14 of the 12th of December, 1913.

I, therefore, order it printed, published, and circulated for its due observance.

Issued at the City of Mexico, on the 1st day of August, 1916.

V. CARRANZA.

Mr. GATES. In addition to that I will say I heard in Yucatan—I did not believe it until it was demonstrated to me beyond a doubt—that Alvarado had issued a similar decree in the preconstitutional period that anyone who talked against his agrarian legislation should be shot. And Yucatan is the most peaceful part of the world. The Yucatacans are noted for their smiling peacefulness. They are always smiling.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement contained in Mr. Gompers's speech and in various articles which he has published as to the success of his efforts with reference to the Madero revolution, and also his statement that the American Federation of Labor embraces all the great labor organizations of the United States, except the four railroad organizations, suggests to me another question which I desire to ask you.

Do you know what became of the American railroad men employed on all of the railroad lines in Mexico prior to the incoming of the Madero administration?

Mr. GATES. I have at various times heard, and I have seen some papers, and I have here some papers, reports of railroad men there, of which I had already heard, of a systematic discrimination against the American workers upon the railroads of Mexico, which, if my memory and information is correct, resulted in their having to leave practically en masse.

The CHAIRMAN. What paper do you refer to? Have you there a report of any of the officers of the railroad organizations operating in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. That is what these are. They are engineers and conductors and members of the railroad organizations. One was the Order of Railway Conductors.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice one signed by W. K. Suit, chief conductor.

Mr. GATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be placed in the record at this point. (The document referred to is as follows:)

[The Railway Conductor, Vol. XXX, pp. 444-445.]

GUADALAJARA, MEXICO, April 18, 1912.

To the officers and members, Division 564, O. R. C.

BROTHERS: It is with profound regret that it has become my duty to announce to you the necessity of surrendering the charter of our division. However painful it may be, it would be more so if I could look back over the events that have transpired in the last two years with an impartial eye and see where it was due to our failure in doing our duty either as conductors in railroad service or to a lack of loyalty to the Order of Railway Conductors. The discontinuation of the division is due to the never-ceasing agitation of the unreliable railroad element among the Mexicans that never has and never will do good service.

This same class of people has succeeded in ruining the only effective government that Mexico has ever had, and they are now engaged in destroying the business institutions that have been built up by foreign talent and money during the last 30 years of peace and prosperity.

They have also taken advantage of the weak and tottering government at a time when they have not the strength to resist and have captured the greatest business institution in Mexico and will proceed to wreck it as they have the Government.

We did not lose our positions because we are making demands that are unreasonable. We have lost them because the railroad management, working under the support of the Government, has annulled the agreement for the purpose of forcing us out of the service, as they see it, a few at a time, so that it will not cripple the service, and at the same time knowing that they have us at their mercy.

I am proud to know that each and every one of you are not only true Americans, but that you are loyal O. R. C. brothers, and that all of you have responded to the demand for justice.

Our experience in Mexico and the history of the Texas colony under Mexican rule has taught us that the moment he becomes your master he sets himself upon a royal throne and expects you to worship him, and if you dare to resent his rule you make of him a lifelong enemy, and from that time on you are never free from his treachery, and for that reason you have chosen to go down in defeat, fighting like the brave defenders of the Alamo, rather than to submit to a brutal ruler and be slaughtered like the Texans at Goliad.

We may be defeated in one sense of the word, but by the fight you have made you have saved your pride and dignity and have assisted in creating a sentiment in the civilized world that will some day bring results.

By the assistance of the O. R. C. the undesirable railroad man has been removed from Mexico and the company is now losing the best men that have ever worked in Mexico, and from the various tests of diplomacy, judgment, and nerve to which you have been subjected in the past 18 months, I feel free in saying that you stand head and shoulders above any public servants in the world to-day. Like the captain of a ship, a conductor's first duty is the care and protection of his passengers.

The Madero rebellion broke out in Mexico about the time the sentiment against the Americans was so strong, partly on account of the rapist, Rodriguez, who was lynched in Texas, and partly because the Americans had the best railroad jobs. In addition to this sentiment against us, we came in contact with both of the bitter factions and were often asked by both parties to express our opinions regarding the situation. We saw the rough element gradually get bolder; we saw thieves and pickpockets, who had been in prison, reappear and begin their bold work; we saw the army and the local authorities lose control of the people; we saw the small bands collect and move about, as we passed through the country. In fact, by virtue of our position, we held the pulse of the nation in our hands, and when we realized that the peon mobs could be called nothing but bloodthirsty savages, we all made up our minds, for the protection of the women and children, not to allow any soldiers to ride on passenger trains through the dangerous territory, where the rebels were likely to hold the trains up, knowing that if they saw soldiers they would not hesitate to shoot into the trains and kill everybody in sight in an effort to kill a few loyal soldiers.

By this method, you have made enemies of one faction, while your motives were not understood by others. Many trains were delayed, and in some cases you have refused to go into the danger zone and tie up trains, until you were sure that the line was safe for your passengers. Some of you were subjected to the vile abuse by army officers, and threatened to be placed in irons. Other people openly asked the question, "Are you in sympathy with Madero and the rebellion?" "Are you openly taking part in the fight to overthrow the government?" While others boldly asserted that you should be shot down on the spot. But with all the intimidations, not one of you retreated from the stand you had taken, which showed your rare judgment and nerve to back it up, and after mature reflection the traveling public, which represents most all of the nations of the earth, realized that you were right, and that you did not do this through sympathy with any faction, but to protect your passengers, and they indorsed your actions. Although some of you were ordered taken out of service by the government, not one of you lost your positions.

Neither the railroad company nor the public can afford to lose such servants as you are, but just and right can not prevail under existing circumstances. The American tourist, who formerly found a courteous guide on every passenger train, in the form of an American conductor, will now spend his vacation in some other part of the world, realizing that he would be among people who do not know how to appreciate him, and the hundreds of poor beggars who gathered up the pennies freely given by Americans in days gone by will go hungry to bed in the future.

The United States of America, by the Monroe doctrine, assisted by sending an American Army to the Rio Grande in 1865, handed Mexico her liberty on a silver platter and has protected her ever since. Our reward is now being received in the form of about nine-tenths of our citizens fleeing from the country under humiliating circumstances to save their lives, while others are being shot down like mad dogs by a lot of savages whose brains are pickled in alcohol and their nerves wrecked by immoral living, and who, convinced that they can not compete with honest business men in respectable pursuits of life, have turned loose to lay the country to waste in their own natural way. Every American who has been in touch with the situation, and every citizen of other civilized countries, sees the necessity of adding the "big stick" to the Monroe doctrine, and the only question is, "When will it be done?"

Every voter of the hundred thousand conductors and engineers in the United States of America should see that this question is put to the candidates for President of the United States in the campaign which has opened here, and not let them get away from it until they have fully expressed their opinions in public on the question.

I can not refrain from expressing my special appreciation of the untiring efforts of our secretary, Brother A. W. Earnest, for his work for the good of the order, and especially in behalf of Brother James A Cook while he was in prison at Guadalajara, partly due to the same influence of the same element that is destroying the country in an effort to humiliate the American railroad men and drive them from the Republic. Also Brother D. A. Kelly, our local chairman of the grievance committee, who has had to fight on every inch of ground he has covered for many months, and has proven a true and loyal brother and a first-class grievance man in every respect. Also our general chairman, Brother T. Eccles, of whom I can say that in all of my 23 years of railroading I have never known a brother to have to face so many complicated and humiliating questions. Nor have I ever seen a man handle them as successfully as Brother Eccles has done.

But there is a limit to all things, and we have arrived at the limit of our endurance and forbearance in Mexico, and may God be with you all, and deliver you to the other side of the Rio Grande in safety.

I thank you all for the support and respect you have shown me in my efforts to serve the order and the brothers.

Yours, in P. F.

W. K. SUIT, Chief Conductor.

Mr. GATES. And there is also a resolution at a special meeting, thanking Brother Suit for his "untiring efforts in our behalf, and in particular for his letter announcing the necessity of disbanding the division."

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Guadalupe local I presume?

Mr. GATES. That is the Guadalupe local.

And here is another letter from Laredo, Tex., signed by Corrigan and Curtis.

The CHAIRMAN. That appears to be an address to the American people.

Mr. GATES. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. Corrigan is an official of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and Curtis is vice president of the Order of Railway Conductors. Those documents, the resolution you referred to, and this address to the American people may go in the record at this point.

(The documents referred to are as follows:)

THE RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.

[P. 448, Vol. XXIX.]

GUADALAJARA, MEXICO.

The following is from the minutes of a special meeting held April 18, 1912:

"Moved and seconded that a vote of thanks be extended our chief conductor, Brother W. K. Suit, for his untiring efforts in our behalf, and in particular for his letter announcing the necessity of disbanding the division, giving an outline of the situation in this country, and that a copy of this letter be sent to each member of the division and to the Railway Conductor. Carried unanimously.

Yours, truly, in P. F.,

A. W. EARNEST,
Secretary Division 540.

ENGINEERS AND CONDUCTORS RETIRE FROM SERVICE OF THE MEXICAN NATIONAL RAILROAD.

[From Locomotive Engineers' Journal, Vol. XLVI, 1912, p. 599.]

LAREDO, TEX., April 17, 1912.

To the American public:

Believing that the American people are interested and that they have a right to know the facts in connection with the forced withdrawal from the service of the National Railways of Mexico of several hundred American citizens who have for many years been employed by these railways as engineers and conductors, we submit the following statement covering the situation: We are prompted to do so because we feel that the flagrant discrimination by the Mexican Government against American citizens is deserving of consideration at the hands of the American people.

It is well known that when American capital was invited to Mexico to develop that country through railroad building, it was necessary to secure from the United States, or some other foreign country, experienced men to operate the railways owing to the fact that the native citizens were totally incapable of doing so. The engineers and conductors were generally secured in the United States, and went to Mexico under assurances of fair treatment as to wages and conditions of employment, which were set forth in contract stipulations between the management of the railways and committees representing these employees. This arrangement operated to the mutual satisfaction of all concerned, and no serious controversy arose between the railways and the organizations of engineers and conductors until the Mexican Government secured control of the greater part of the railway mileage of Mexico; but since that time there has been carried on a deliberate and sustained system of discrimination against American engineers and conductors, the sole purpose of which was to force American employees out of the service without regard to the fact that many of them have worked faithfully for these railways for from 20 to 30 years, having left the United States in the prime of manhood when there were practically no Mexican citizens capable of performing the duties of engineers and conductors.

These men have given the best years of their lives to the service of the Mexican railways, as well as giving the benefit of their knowledge and experience to the Mexican people, and now, upon the demand of certain labor organizations of native sons, who have taken for their slogan "Mexico for Mexicans" and who covet the positions that have been filled so long and efficiently by the Americans, the Mexican Government basely ungrateful of the services rendered by the Americans, has issued instructions through its secretary of communications abrogating the agreements between the railways and the American employees, and imposing conditions upon said employees impossible of fulfillment.

A word here as to ownership of the railway properties involved may be of interest: Out of a capitalization of nearly $450,000,000 the Mexican Government has only put into the properties in actual cash approximately $4,500,000. It is true that in exchange for $49,400, more than one-half of the $230,000,000 authorized stock, the Government guarantees the principal and interest on certain outstanding bonds. While this deal gave the Mexican Government control of the railways involved, under certain unknown contract limitations, it did not make said railways exclusive Government institutions to the extent of justifying the clamor of Mexican citizens that none but Mexicans were entitled to employment thereon.

We quote below from the declaration of principles of one of the native Mexican organizations to show that the fact of being an American would prohibit one from continuing in the employment of the Mexican railways:

"Society of the Defenders of the Rights of Mexican Railroad Men. Slogan, Mexico for Mexicans. The Mexicanization of the national railways has become an imperious necessity and should be done, not only by placing Mexicans in positions as firemen, brakemen, engineers, conductors, and dispatchers, but by elevating them to the high positions of administration, making them general agents, general superintendents of divisions, motive power, etc. The society has been projected with the sole object of forcing off, and carrying into effect, the Mexicanization of the Mexican railways, etc."

In addition to the above there is abundant evidence to show that the purpose of the Mexican organizations, supported by the Mexican Government, is to eliminate American employees from the service of Mexican railways. It is estimated that there are something like 600 American engineers and conductors in the service of these railways, and these men were forced to retire upon dictation of the native labor organizations of Mexico, supported by the Government, in the face of the fact that, as shown by the preliminary report of the thirteenth census, there are in the State of Texas alone 123,817 native-born Mexicans enjoying freedom of employment in accordance with their capacity, and suffering from no discrimination on account of their nationality from either the Government of the United States, American employers, or organizations of employees.

In view of the determined attitude of the Mexican Government to displace Americans, and after having exhausted every possible means of securing such terms as would guarantee fair and just treatment, the American engineers and conductors decided to withdraw from the service of the National Railways in a body instead of suffering themselves to be displaced in small numbers at a time at the convenience of the authorities, and in the meantime not only place their lives in jeopardy, but be subject to humiliation and insult at the hands of Mexican employees and organizations coveting their positions and desiring their hasty departure.

We have every reason to believe that our Government has not only been fully advised as to the foregoing, but that it has, through diplomatic channels, made representations to the Mexican Government in our behalf, for which we are duly grateful; and in common with thousands of our countrymen, who have been forced out of Mexico, leaving millions in property behind them on account of dangers due to the strong anti-American feeling existing there, we submit our wrongs to such further consideration as may be proper for our Government to give them.

E. CORRIGAN, A. G. C. E. B. of L. E.
E. P. CURTIS, V. P., O. R. C.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever hear of the American Federation of Labor interesting themselves in behalf of these American railroad men who were run out under the Madero administration?

Mr. GATES. They may have done so, but I have not heard of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, I presume, that is one of your reasons for thinking that possibly the American Federation of Labor does not understand labor conditions in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. Part of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has had the testimony of Charles A. Gardner, taken at San Antonio, Tex., one of the railroad men driven out of that country, so we will not pursue that line further.

Now, Mr. Gates, from your knowledge of Mexico and Mexican conditions, I want to ask you, in your opinion, with reference to the great majority of the common people of Mexico, a large per cent of the total number of people inhabiting that country, Indians, or so-called Mexicans, constituting possibly 85 per cent, what is the feeling among those people generally, the Zapatistas, with whom you are familiar, the Zapotecs, in Tehuantepec, the Yucatecans, the followers of Meixueiro, of Pelaez, and even those who have acquiesced in the Carranza régime, with reference to America and to the United States?

Mr. GATES. I found nothing but friendship and a desire for American cooperation on all sides throughout my entire trip throughout the country, except with those small bodies of people constituting the present official Carranza military dictatorship and those who are profiting by it. That is, that Pan-Latin, one big union, bolshevist aggregation of which we have been talking, represented by Carranza's desire to put the Saxon in his place, hatred of the American, to drive us out, and Alvarado's desire to erect a syndicalistic State.

The rest are very friendly to the United States and welcome our cooperation, although patriotic in desiring to retain the sovereignty of their own country.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you or not in favor of armed intervention by the United States in Mexican affairs?

Mr. GATES. I have stated myself to be as pronounced an anti-interventionist in that sense as you will find in the United States. I wouldn't consider that, after having wrecked Mexico with eight years of political interference, with maintaining in power a dictator whose personal reaction was the same as that of our present incumbent, who has been maintained in power solely by his will, against the will of the Mexican people, who have been fighting for their own homes, during which time Mexico has been reduced to misery; if we take advantage of that situation, if the result is what it seems to me the necessary end to which it would tend, and enter upon an invasion, an armed intervention into Mexican affairs, it would be a stain upon our American honor that we would never have an opportunity to explain away, and would support those people in the belief which they hold of this Government that, especially in the later years, in the past eight years, its policy has been Machiavellian. I wish to put that as clearly and plainly as I can put it. It has been my policy and belief throughout the whole. I found it all through Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose there is no friendly interference, or interference of any other character by this government, in some way in Mexican affairs, what will be the immediate future of Mexico, in your judgment?

Mr. GATES. In my judgment, the present break up of Carranza is the breaking up of exploiting among themselves. I would anticipate—no man can prophesy—but from the events of the day, I would anticipate the early triumph of some of the leaders, apparently at present Obregon; within a year or so, dissension; then continuing quarrels; finally, if that continues from now until next year some time, assuming that President Wilson chooses to take no step at all, which it must be assumed he will not do after his message to you thanking you for the opportunity to tell you that foreign affairs are none of the Senate's business, that Mexico for the rest of this year will know a depth of degradation to which the past 10 years would look like heaven. That is what I look for.

The CHAIRMAN. I thank you very much for your interesting and intelligent testimony, and your enlightening statement and assistance which you have given to the committee.

Mr. GATES. May I say that what we need with Mexico is Mexican sympathy. They can receive us with open arms there. They need our help. If we tender it to them in the right way it can be given, and we can have a certain friendly interest in our neighbors at our side. But she does need our help, and all the more she needs it because officially she has been put where she is. I regard that as imposing upon us the responsibility. We should have a sympathetic understanding of her needs. She not only needs a great big loan to finance a receivership, but she needs reclamation, she needs restoration of industry, and above all, at the bottom and beginning the end of the whole, is the enabling of the common man in Mexico, which largely means the Indian, to have a little something to hope for and at home he is not afraid he is going to be robbed of. When there can come to us anybody out of the present chaos, if any opportunity should come out of that chaos, for the decent element with whom we might work, we might still save the situation and our honor; but we must do it with sympathy and with kindness.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that mere sympathy and understanding, without actual assistance, will avail anything in Mexico?

Mr. GATES. No. It means going down there and taking off our coats and helping them economically; and also backing up in some way—that is difficult to say, because it looks like interfering—but backing up in some way, such as is proper, international relationship, a stable currency, and decent government.

The CHAIRMAN. Will mere recognition of such a government by the United States avail anything?

Mr. GATES. If the recognition of the United States amounts to anything at present, flouted, as it has been, in all Latin-America; if we can get our recognition respected it would go a long ways, but it has not been respected since Bryan became our Secretary of State. We must back-track on that before our influence amounts to anything, and when we back-track then we can restore health.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you extend help to Mexico merely by recognition and leave her to secure financial aid from individuals in this country, or would you extend that financial aid directly by this Government to a government which would receive it in the proper spirit?

Mr. GATES. I would give it by this Government if it was received with the proper spirit. My views upon that are represented by the document that I attached to my letter to Secretary Baker. They involve a rehabilitation of Mexico, and how it could be done without putting her into a receivership or giving her a political dictatorship. I hoped that the opportunity might come, if President Wilson would come to the position of recognizing Carranza as impossible, that something be done, and consequently I made these suggestions in my correspondence with Secretary Baker. I had the cooperation of a good many people in that, and it is not political and not a financial receivership.

The CHAIRMAN. Those suggestions are in those documents?

Mr. GATES. Yes. I believe it could be done along those lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is very much obliged to you, Mr. Gates. The committee will adjourn, subject to the call of the chairman.

EXHIBIT 4.

To the President and the people of the United States of America, our neighboring Republic:

In this hour of crisis, when it is held in the balance of the fates whether our country shall live as an independent sovereign nation, we make you this appeal:

For over six years our country has been torn by civil strife; for five of those six years a large part of its territory has been the prey of the most cruel and brutal tyranny our country has had to endure in all the past century of its efforts toward freedom.

In 1914, after the overthrow of Huerta, Venustiano Carranza, as first chief of the army, named "Constitutionalist" because the object whereby it sought the cooperation of the whole country, was the restoration of the constitutional order broken by usurpation, with the return to a lawful régime under that constitution which cost so many lives and so many years of struggle before it came into being as the Palladium of our Liberties—Venustiano Carranza, we say, was then offered the support of the country, tendering him the provisional presidency, and calling upon him for the immediate convocation of national elections, and the submission to the coming Congress and the several States, in due and constitutional form, of whatever legislative reforms the condition of the country demanded.

Refusing everything but the provisional presidency, which he promptly expanded by his own sole autocratic decree into omnipotent powers, legislative and judicial as well as executive, Venustiano Carranza made himself the actual irresponsible dictator of Mexico, to a degree that is paralleled by no previous instance in our entire history.

Annuling by a stroke of his pen that constitution he had sworn to defend and restore, he proclaimed a "new thing" in the affairs of States—a "pre-constitutional period," wherein by the power of the sword and bullet alone, in a country of peaceful citizens deprived by his decree of even the smallest weapon of self-defense against the "banditry" he claimed to be resisting, he and his adherents set out to fasten laws and regulations violative of every sort of justice and right, for the sole profit and enrichment of his civil and military supporters. With the most unbelievable shamelessness, in a so-called democracy, a so-called government for the benefit and protection of the "oppressed," decrees were issued depriving all save his own supporters of even the semblance of the right of suffrage. Elections through his whole period, in those few cases where they have been ostentatiously held, have been the veriest farce.

At the end of 1914 and the beginning of 1915, while still holding only a part of the national territory, and himself remaining in Vera Cruz, he and his adherents consummated an offensive and defensive alliance, by formal signed treaties, with that organization of international opposition to democratic and free institutions by the support of the majority, known now in various countries as Bolsheviks, Syndicalists, Spartacides, I. W. W., and, among us, the Casa del Obrero Mundial.

At the same period, Carranza, guided by his personal feelings against the allied nations, entered into relations with Germany; and with the German minister came German emissaries preaching then, four years ago, all the radical antisocial doctrines of the extreme Left to-day, just as two years later similar German emissaries carried the same doctrines of antidemocracy and destruction to Russia.

Throughout the entire period of the Great War, Venustiano Carranza, with his circle of adherents, Salvador Alvarado, Pablo Gonzales, Alvaro Obregon, Luis Cabrera, Candido Aguilar, and many others, made a mockery of Mexico's pretended neutrality, gave all possible aid and comfort to the German side, and promised full future alliances, military and commercial, thus compromising the honor and safety of the country, and the peace of the Western World, in his insane and despotic plans.

The diplomatic record of the past years has been one to bring shame to the face of every Mexican who cares for his country's international repute; and these long-continued and scarcely veiled insults are continuing to this day. All this relying upon the unwillingness of the American Government to resent such provocations by an attack upon a weaker nation at her border, already exhausted by the struggles of these years.

During these six years our country has been reduced to the lowest abyss of misery; nowhere in territory which can be reached by the armed bands of Carrancistas, masquerading as "bandits" or as "Constitutionalists" in turn, is life or honor or property safe. Production and all the course of business is almost at a standstill; our railroads do not run, save on a few lines, where all the remaining equipment is concentrated. With a budget nearly twice that of the nation 10 years ago, two-thirds of the revenues go into the maintenance of this army of depredation, the great part of the whole passing by padded pay rolls into the pockets of the higher officers; while throughout the whole country, wherever the control of Carrancismo reaches, to live by license has become the normal mode. We are facing years or decades to remoralize and make sane the general order, and bring about again the habits of peace and order in life.

Our school-teachers are reduced to actual starvation, being kept for months without even the pittance assigned them for their part in the social work, the hope of the future State; while for everyone in the protected circle of military and civil authorities, there is the most complete immunity for any possible form of crime against person or property. The mere catalog of the unpunished crimes openly committed by these high and low officials and officers, from burglary, highway robbery, murder, and attacks upon women to "banditry" and the most shameless graft and looting of the public treasury, would fill a volume. The resources of the country are stripped bare.

At this time also, following a long period of illegal and despotic confiscations of foreign-owned properties, formerly in production to the enrichment of our country, the violation of treaty-guaranteed rights of those who had been invited by the credit and faith of the Nation to cast their lot among us for residence or business, and the murder of many hundreds of foreign citizens, we are oppressed by an accentuation of all these conditions that threatens the very life of the Nation, destroyed by its self-constituted masters.

The so-called Government of Carranza does not control more than a fraction of the territory of the country. With control of the main ports and the railway lines and equipment, and thus controlling the wires and the mails, it is able to make a show of administration through the Republic. Along these lines, and the towns and cities held in this way, the rule is that of armed soldiery in an unarmed and defenseless populace—the rule of terror.

Away from these railroad lines, and where the Carranza soldiers can not pass save in major force, Mexicans of every rank have united for their own protection and that of their homes and laws, under different leaders. Such organized protecting and defensive bodies of citizen soldiery have maintained themselves intact through these years of trial; and though with scanty resources, with no help or support from abroad, or any ability, owing to international neutrality laws, to bring in any form of supplies—for which, indeed, they have lacked and do still lack the resources for payment—these bodies do now control and protect the greater part of the national territory.

In the latter months of 1914, when Venustiano Carranza refused the proffered support of the entire nation for a restoration at once of the constitutional order, and finding himself outnumbered in the convention of his own calling, retired to Vera Cruz to proclaim himself sole dictator and legislator for the Mexican people, with his syndicalist and German allies, he was disavowed by Smiliano Zapata and Francisco Villa, with their supporters in the south and in the north. Although Carranza was enabled some months later to take the capital, and then supported by the main arteries of import and the resources of the country was able to extend his régime of destruction, military oppression and robbery through the Republic, these two forces have maintained themselves unconquered through the ensuing five years, to the present.

In July, 1915, aroused to her own self-defense against these attacks upon law and life, and by the usurpation effected in the proclamation of the "preconstitutional period," the free and sovereign State of Oaxaca reassumed her sovereignty under the constitution, until order and the constitutional régime could be again established in the nation. From that time until the present this State has continued in the lawful and constitutional administration of the greater part of her territory, under the lawful State authorities, duly and constitutionally elected in December, 1914; and by the aid and services, and the lives, of her sons, has defended herself and them.

In 1916, for the purpose of ending this era of usurpation, and of fulfilling the obligation resting on all Mexicans to sustain and restore the constitution, which by its specific terms proclaims that it shall not lose validity by reason of any rebellion or usurpation, there was organized the "National Reorganizing Army" under the leadership of Gen. Felix Díaz, as the effective outcome of protests voiced by him since 1914; and in the last three and a half years this force has extended its effective protection through different States of the Republic.

Some time before the rural population of the northeastern parts of the Republic, attacked by the Carrancista despoilers in their most essential rights, took arms to defend them and to restore law and order, placing Manuel Peláez as commander in chief of the National Guards; upon the attempt of the illegal Querétaro Assembly to impose a new constitution on the country, these guards were reorganized as the "revolutionary army," to support and reinstate the national constitution of 1857; at the same period, in the trying times of the Great War, when the fates there hung in the balance, and the weights in that balance were the supplies of oil without which the allied navies would have been powerless, and when for a time there was but a few weeks' supply of this fuel on hand, the Carranza soldiers, aided by German-paid agitators, were seeking to capture and destroy the wells on which that supply depended—these forces, under Manuel Peláez, firm in the defense of the rights made sacred by the constitution of 1857, and faithful to the cause of democracy and freedom in the world, protected, and still do protect, life and property in the Tampico and adjoining regions.

To-day the truth has come to light; and to-day Venustiano Carranza, your enemy, as he and his circle of officials are ours, is threatening to draw upon us the natural result of his and their crimes. We are about to be made to suffer for the crimes of those who have murdered our fellows. We—all Mexicans—are being cried against for the deeds of our oppressors. Mexico is about to be called and treated as the enemy of your great democracy on account of the deeds we have now for five years resisted with our blood, committed by those few evil men who by their intrenched position have been enabled to do all these things. Carranza and the entire circle of his supporters without one single exception, have betrayed you and your placed trust and hopes as he did us and the support we gave him at that time.

We are fighting for our liberties and our homes. The war in Mexico will never cease until that fight is gained. It can not cease. And confident thus in the truth which is now in its full time coming to the light, we appeal to you, the President of the United States, and to you, the people of those United States, to give us that measure of relief and recognition to which we are entitled.

You, Mr. President, we ask to grant us that recognition which is the bounden right of all who fight for their homes, their liberties, and their laws. We ask that we may be heard; that we may have a standing from which to speak and plead the cause of oppressed Mexico and her children.

In order to establish this right and in order that there shall not come that invasion of Mexico which we know is as far from your desires as it would be destructive of all our hopes and aspirations as free men, we will participate in a conference of all the leading organized elements now dividing the control of the territory of the Mexican Republic; that at this conference shall be considered the reconstruction and restoration to national health of the country that is ours and for which we and our fathers have fought. We ask that in this way the great principles for which the peoples of the Western Hemisphere have declared themselves—the principles of democracy, self-government, the right of every individual to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—shall be once more established and that your country and ours may go on as sister Republics, different in inheritance and blood, yet united by bonds of friendship and co-operation and with those common objects brought to birth for France in 1789, for you in 1776, and for us in 1810 and in 1857.

Toward this end we, the signers hereto, for ourselves and all those we represent, and those who have intrusted to us their defense, pledge to you hereby our united cooperation in the protection of life and property throughout the territory of the Mexican Federation. We pledge ourselves to unite in the formation of a provisional administration upon a coalition basis of the liberal elements—those elements that seek true democracy and the welfare of the Nation, to its lowest and humblest citizens, instead of personal power and authority or personal aggrandizement.

For this great work of reconstruction of our distracted and desolated country, now in a like condition with so many other countries in the world, help in resources and cooperation must be had. International problems must be met and solved; rights must be adjusted and protected; the work of rehabilitation itself must be protected, especially in its earlier stages. To this end we frankly ask your aid, without humility or the derogation of self-respect; for we have suffered at the hands of oppressors, and we are economically destitute; we have no resources left, save our love for our country and our self-respect as men and Mexicans. But our country is rich in herself, and by our work, once started on the road, can rebuild all. You, the American Nation, almost alone now among the peoples of the earth, are economically undestroyed after the efforts of the past years. We believe that a way can be found whereby you will gladly give, and we can honorably enter into cooperation to that end, to your great advantage as to that of our country, and yet neither violative of Mexico's independent political self-determination nor submitting her to a conscienceless or usurious financial control.

This we believe of you, Mr. President, and we also believe it of the heart of the American people.

To you, therefore, we address this appeal, in this critical hour of our country and in the affairs of the world.

For the "liberating" of the south and its general in command (first by appointment by Gen. Emiliano Zapata, and since the latter's death, by ratification of the officers and men):

[SEAL.]

GILDAO MAGAÑA,
By J. ANEZCUA.

For the free and sovereign State of Oaxaca, in resumption under the constitution of its independent sovereignty, until the rule of that constitution shall be again recognized throughout the Republic, and for the general in command of the defensive forces of the State.

[SEAL.]

GUILLERMO MEXUEIRO,
By WILLIAM GATES,
SAMUEL G. MEIXUEIRO.

"Constitution of 1857," the revolutionary army in control of the northeast of the Republic, general in command.

[SEAL.]

MANUEL PELÁEZ,
By Dr. MOISES LÓPEZ.

Commander in chief of the "national reorganizing army."

[SEAL.]

GEN. FÉLIX DÍAZ,
By PEDRO DEL VILLAR.

Memorandum (not a copy of the original document): The foregoing was prepared in triplicate, for convenience and saving of time in the attachment of the signatures. No primacy among the signers is, therefore, implied in the above order.

The originals were delivered at the White House on September 9, 1919.

A true copy.

[SEAL.]

W. G.

EXHIBIT 5.

To the Nation:

Revolutions are social necessities, crises which arise when Governments have closed the legal roads to the political progress of peoples; they strive for principles of social improvement, and ever inscribe on their banners the great desires of those peoples. Should this not be so, should a revolution not carry from its beginning a great promise of social redemption, it would be dead from the cradle; and if later actions did not lead to the discharge of this promise the revolution would equally be condemned to death. For the inexorable laws of nature, which impose themselves alike upon individuals and peoples, establish conservation as a universal principle, and neither peoples nor individuals change the normal course of their life, or break the regularity of their existence, or venture upon great risks, except in presence of some greater benefit, before the vision of a greater happiness, or facing a future that augurs elevation in the moral order, progress in the material. For this reason we repeat: revolutions which have not been the explosion of true ideals, or those which have later abandoned them, can not prosper; and armed movements that seek to impose them, never can succeed in so doing, for as said before, peoples as individuals react to the sentiment of conservation, and conservation necessitates betterment.

These clear and simple premises explain why Carrancismo and the so-called "Constitutionalist" forces sustaining it have not been able after more than two years, and never can be able, to reestablish and consolidate peace in the Republic.

The Carrancista movement arose on the 26th of March, 1913, in accord with the plan of Guadalupe, on the bases of disavowing Gen. Victoriano Huerta as President of the Republic, as a usurper, and disavowing as accomplices in his usurpation the legislative and judicial powers of the federation, who had recognized Gen. Huerta, as well as the State authorities who had accepted his Government. The entire plan therefore rested on the respect due to our constitutional laws, guaranteed in our Magna Carta, and in the duty resting on all Mexicans to sustain those laws, even by force, when reason can no longer make itself heard.

Carranza, then, on rising in arms, proclaimed the supremacy of the Constitution and offered the Republic the defense of its violated principles. It was in truth a great promise. The Code of 1857 cost our ancestors so many and so great sacrifices; so often has it been repeated that this code is the genesis of our political education and destined as the cement to our condition as free men; and so intimately have we been convinced of these truths that all Mexicans who have not lost faith in the reconstruction of our country feel ourselves profoundly moved and threatened when the precepts of that constitution are in danger—and at the same time feel ourselves strong to defend and maintain them unharmed. To this it is due that Don Venustiano Carranza, a man without any notable past, found political allies in the Republic, and that his call awoke echo in the breasts of many Mexicans.

After a year and a half of contest, Carranza arrived at Mexico and, with the name of first chief of the so-called constitutionalist army, assumed the provisional presidency of the Republic. Carranza then changed radically, breaking with the principles by which he had triumphed. His ambitions, of low order and founded on no democratic education, together with the evil counsels of his favorites (who were many and without morality), brought him to forget all—absolutely all—his promises; and by a sanguinary irony of fate, the author of the Plan of Guadalupe, he who had in the name of the constitution disavowed Gen. Huerta and the other Federal powers, upon assuming the Executive Office, himself declared abolished that very constitution and all the laws derived from it. He decreed that his Government would exercise its functions in a "preconstitutional" period—outside of the constitutional order; outside of all law. By this means Carrancismo cast the Republic into the most absolute anarchy and despotism; all rights and all guarantees disappeared; no one knows where his property begins nor ends, nor knows how long he can dispose of his liberty nor his life; from that time the constitution and all the rest of the laws became substituted by the arbitrary will of Carranza and his favorites, thus establishing a purely personal Government—an oligarchy, odious and impossible to bear. With the ideals dead, disorganization came of necessity. Villa, in spite of his crudeness (rudeza), saw that Carranza and his people were throwing the Republic into chaos, and demanded his withdrawal; Zapata, who until then had shown himself in general terms in sympathy with the revolution in the north, likewise demanded that Carranza surrender the power in order to do away with personalism and bring peace. The State of Oaxaca, that heroic and glorious State, which had maintained itself in peace in the midst of disorder, without losing its normal life; which by its antecedents and its importance also figured as one of the factors upon whom rested the solution of the national destinies; that State, loving peace and the law, divorced itself from Carrancismo, demanding of that faction the respect for its sovereignty and the consideration due to the Oaxacan people and their legal and established Government.

Carrancismo had gone too far upon the wrong path to consent to abandon it. Its leaders had tasted the gratifications of command and enjoyed the fruits of their robberies; they came to consider as their sworn enemies not only those who opposed them but those who, of morality or for shame, refused them their support in the enterprise of destruction and infamy they had embarked upon. It was the beginning of a new war more sanguinary and more cruel than what had preceded. Hostilities first broke out with Villa, then with Zapata, and later with many other leaders; and finally this State of Oaxaca was invaded, the last refuge of the liberties and the last bulwark of our institutions. It amounted to nothing that the constitutional authorities of the State showed that order reigned throughout its territory, that public services were carried on efficaciously, that the people were in full enjoyment of their rights, and that the Government had implanted the reforms demanded by the progress of enlightenment and the needs of the time. All this availed nothing, we repeat; Carrancismo needed the booty of war, and the State of Oaxaca was invaded.

Carrancismo had shown itself ready for everything, absolutely for everything in order to continue possessing itself of the last remnants of spoil that still remain on the blood-marked body of the country. This ill-omened faction has by its conduct brought upon us invasion from outside, while it continues its fratricidal war, instead of repenting and mending its errors to the preservation of national integrity and dignity. But there is yet more. That felony we know as Carrancismo has passed the limits of the imaginable, inviting good Mexicans, patriots in heart, who, unwilling to light more fires of destruction within the nation's homes had retired to private life—inviting these worthy sons, we say, for the repelling of intervention, and then when they had responded to that call, surprising their good faith, forced them into the civil struggle.

With our national integrity compromised, and the Republic plunged into anarchy and the most unbridled despotism known in all our history, it is matter of the most urgent and imperious necessity, to bring once more our good faith into play, to send out the call to all good Mexicans and to make a supreme effort to reorganize its energies for the work of reconstruction, for true national reconstruction. The present moments are definitive, and we should take advantage of them; the safety of our country demands it. The problem is arduous and difficult, especially because first of all there must be extirpated the condition of armed chieftainship (caudillaje), the indispensable prerequisite to the doing away with personalism in Government; preventing the resting of the national destinies at a given moment in the hands of but one or two individuals, instead of lying in the hands of the Nation itself or its representatives. To this end there lies but one road open; to work from the periphery to the center; that is, to stimulate and bring about the reorganization of the larger number of the States of the Republic, that these may in turn bring about that of the Republic itself. It is a proceeding analogous to that followed by the States of the American Union in 1778, and will give us protection against that central absorption of power which the Federal powers have through our whole political life, in every epoch, practiced against the State authorities, and place us in the only condition permitting the reconstruction of our nationality and the salvation of our territory.

To the State of Oaxaca there falls the honor and satisfaction of setting the example to the rest, its sisters. Its constitutional authorities, which to this day have not ceased to function, in spite of all the obstacles in their way, will soon reestablish themselves in the State Capital, and our efforts will soon give them the complete control of the entire territory of the State.

In the other States of the Republic where men of good faith still are fighting against Carrancismo, this example should be followed. Those military commanders which carry on operations along these lines in those States, can count for our aid to that end; and with the purpose that as soon as any State is freed of the menace of Carrancismo, those commanders shall at once designate a provisional governor who will immediately convoke the people to the election of legislatures.

The legislative branch duly organized, without loss of time elections for the executive and judicial State authorities shall follow.

When the majority of the States shall have been reorganized upon the lines thus indicated, in accordance with the constitution of the Republic and the other general laws, and its own State Constitution and the laws appertaining, the representatives of these States shall convene for the nomination of a provisional president, whose principal mission shall be the immediate calling of elections through the Republic for the National Congress. And with this body in session, he shall call elections in the Republic for the remaining Federal authorities.

Mexicanos, the country calls upon us for a new sacrifice; let us respond with resolution and love to the call, and bearing the sacred banner of our constitution, let us fight on until we win that its beneficent shadow covers and protects all.

PLANS.

First. There is reestablished in the Republic the dominion of the general constitution of the 5th of February, 1857, with its additions and reforms legally adopted by the means which itself provides, and with the laws of reform and the others derived therefrom.

Second. C. Venustiano Carranza, first chief of the so-called constitutionalist army, is disavowed, with all the authorities that he has imposed.

Both citizen Carranza and those others who under his so-called government have held the position of authorities, shall be judged in accordance with the laws, for usurpation and such other crimes as they may have committed.

Third. The States adhering to the present plan, and in which the constitutional authorities have disappeared, shall make all effort to free themselves from Carrancista control, and succeeding in this shall reorganize themselves under the Federal and State Constitution and the laws appertaining. For this purpose, the military leaders in each such State, opposing Carrancismo, shall in the shortest time possible meet to nominate a provisional governor, choosing for that post a native of the State itself, and a man whose character and firmness shall afford guarantees to the cause. With no loss of time the provisional governor shall call extraordinary elections for deputies to the State legislature. This body once reestablished, in order to proceed at once upon legitimate paths, shall as its first act appoint an acting governor, choosing for that post the person designated as provisional governor, if it sees fit. The acting gov-error shall then at once convoke elections for constitutional governor, and members of the judiciary.

Fourth. All the States adhering to this plan shall, without the need of further agreements, constitute an offensive and defensive league against Carranzismo, shall maintain constant intercommunication, and their governors and military leaders shall act in concert in the general operations.

Fifth. The forces organized in support of the present plan shall be known as the "Army of restoration of the Republic." (Ejército Restaurador de la República.)

Sixth. As soon as a majority of the States shall have been duly organized under the constitutional order, the government of each one of those States shall name a representative to attend an assembly at a date and place to be duly set. In such gathering the representatives then of a majority of the States shall agree upon, and shall nominate by not less than a majority of votes, a provisional president of the Republic, who shall not be a military leader in the command of a force. This provisional president shall be recognized and supported by all the reorganized States, shall at once take possession of his office and call immediately extraordinary elections for Deputies to the National Congress. This body in session, it shall as its first act nominate an acting president, who may be the same as already named provisional president. This done, the acting president shall at once call extraordinary elections for constitutional president, and members of the judiciary.

Seventh. The offices of President of the Republic, and governor of any of the States, shall not devolve upon military leaders in command of a force. Such leaders can be nominated and elected for said offices, after the lapse of a year of separation from their military service.

Eighth. The President of the Republic and the governors of the States, provisional, acting or permanent, shall maintain from the moment of their assuming office that all their acts, and the acts of all other officials within their jurisdiction, shall conform strictly to the principles of the constitution of 1857, which is declared in force; causing to be restored to their owners immediately all property confiscated from them by the Carranzista or any other faction, and procuring that thenceforward all nationals and foreigners shall enjoy in their persons and interests the guaranties which the said constitution assures. The same authorities shall at once bring about the repatriation of the Mexicans now driven from the country by political persecution and the lack of guaranties—those who may have been guilty of crimes remaining subject however to the law.

Ninth. The new emissions of paper money put out by the so-called constitutional government headed by C. Venustiano Carranza are declared null and of no value.

The invitation is extended to all the States, to all military commanders, and to all Mexicans of good will, with distinction of political party, that, forgetting hatreds and past divisions, they adhere to the present plan, second it with efficacy, and cooperate with all their ability toward the early reorganization of the Republic, which means the salvation of our country.

Ixtlan de Juarez, State of Oaxaca, October 11, 1916.

For the division "national integrity" and the other restoring elements of the north of the Republic.

J. ISABEL ROBLES,
General of Division.

For the division of the "Sierra Juárez" and the other restoring elements of the free and sovereign State of Oaxaca.

GUILLERMO MEIXUEIRO,
General of Division (Lic.).

(NOTE.—Not long after the issuance of the above document, J. Isabel Robles, one of the most respected by all the various elements in the country, opposing the Carranzistas, was killed in the north of Mexico. After that, for lack of resources, Gen. Meixueiro, in cooperation with the State authorities, elected in the close of 1914, was able only to maintain defensive operations in the State away from the State capital and the railroad lines.)

1. The immediate clean-up of the customhouse and port services, stopping absolutely every kind of robbery and extortion, such as is now a national scandal. Nothing could more immediately influence public opinion in this country and elsewhere than a change of that kind right where it is first felt by all persons doing business in or entering the Republic.

2. Immediate steps to relieve the demoralization and beggary of the lowest classes, not by charity but by work and care. If necessary, appeal for assistance in this matter to outside agencies—Red Cross or other—as is now being done for suffering, destitute peoples elsewhere. Do something at once in Mexico for those who need it most.

3. Immediately institute the rule in all public services, including the railroads, telegraphs, and all civil offices, of prompt, courteous, and willing service to the public. Give that which is coming to characterize our best conducted businesses—what we refer to as service. If a traveler enters the wrong railroad office for train information, let him not be dismissed with no effort to help him. And especially let this include the expediting of routine. If a matter can be disposed of when presented or a signature pro forma attached in 10 minutes, let not the public servant require the visitor to come back three or four times, at a waste of many hours, solely to impress the visitor with the clerk's authority and ability to make him wait. This fault is an economic waste and, besides, involves a totally wrong view of public service, that the egotism of a clerk should gratify itself at the cost of the service he is there to render, and the result of the opposite conduct is instant and far-reaching. Insist on good treatment, buen trato, in all public services, and you will remoralize everything; and it can be done easier in Mexico than here, provided the man at the top means business.

4. That there be immediately selected, with greatest care, a corps of men, similar to those organized under our agricultural department and similar bureaus, to visit the local pueblos and towns throughout the Republic, to consult with the local authorities as to the needs or openings in each place for works of improvement or local development; also to consider local questions of stimulation of agricultural activity; improved methods, introduction of fertilizing, rotation of crops, possible new products in the different localities, questions of transport, road improvement, etc. That in this work the interest of the local authorities, ayuntamientos, etc., be so enlisted as to make them coworkers in reconstruction; give them something to do that strikes right at the welfare of their community and every man in it, making them realize that for the first time in their experience the Government is coming to do something for them. This will not be easy at first; similar efforts in this country have had to meet all manner of suspicion and obstinacy from farmers and others, the very ones to be benefited; but time will make a change, provided the work is gone at sincerely, intelligently, and without either taking or permitting private graft or profit in the introduction of the new order. I am completely aware that this would be called by nineteen men in twenty a hopelessly Utopian impossibility, in Mexico; but I am only the more convinced that once affronted with real intention, more than half the struggle would be over, and that its very apparent impossibility would only make it more possible. For in Mexico, lo que quiere el Gobierno, va. In the early stages of the work, I would urge calling upon the officials in this country for assistance, in experienced men, already with training and tact in the solution of similar problems here. In this connection the Pan-American Union could be and would gladly be, of the greatest possible aid.

There is one element in this connection which I also regard as of the very greatest import. I am going to anticipate that a political recognition of the new Mexican administration might for various reasons, historical and other, be delayed; also that financial aid on a large scale might require long negotiations to bring about an accord with both Washington and New York. But the Government at Washington could not possibly refuse cooperation in a non-political reconstructive work of this kind; and it could be granted without implicating the State Department, and without even actual formal recognition of the new government in Mexico. Its actual, real, and practical verification would be of untold weight in bringing about confidence in this country.

But one condition would be absolute: No private or political profit must be even permitted, anywhere in the whole matter; at every point it must be carried on as free from taint as was the work of the Commission for Relief in Belgium. No commercial interests, no persons in Mexico City, nor any local pueblo agents, presidents, or other officials, must gain one centavo of individual profit, beyond legitimate pay for services rendered—open pay and open services. It is this one fact alone that would bring the change quickly; it is that which is of even more importance than the details of improvements. Permit private gain, and you kill the spirit of cooperation, which is the one great thing that would rebuild the whole; arouse interest not for personal ends, but (even if only in one or two in a town at first) in the work itself as the object—and you will soon have a force back of you that will make the Government impregnable. And if recognition and external loans have not come at first, they will have to come because of that one thing.

5. Immediate and stern repression of disorder everywhere. I have put this fifth instead of first, as would generally be done, because it needs no argument. But also more because with the four preceding policies started this will be a problem of one-fourth the difficulty. Remoralize conditions by substitution of worthy and interesting activities that involve prosperity, and the need of repression is minimized at once. There will be abandoned and demoralized elements after these years of disorder that will resist any decent order, but begin by remoralizing where it will be received, and then repress those who refuse to accept. Every peso spent in remoralizing will save five in punishing; though I do not mean in the least to be soft in the matter of discipline, when that is called for. But let the order be that of the hospital, where sanitation and discipline are both essential and coordinate. Let sanitation and discipline come first in the mind, for that is indeed the real object.

In doing this I would suggest that police functions be separated from the army as rapidly as possible, restoring the army to its old honorable position as a national entity of defense, not of an instrument for the control of Mexicans. This will accentuate the difference from the militarism of the day, and then the policia can be remoralized as the cooperative force of social order—its proper place.

Coincidentally with the above five activities, there shall be at once undertaken and prosecuted the definitive solution of the national agrarian problem, along the lines indicated in sections 8 and 9 of the plan of Tierra Colorada. The activities under clause 4 above will be a supporting program in this connection, but I name the agrarian problem here separately and after the above five points, because it is a broad and national problem, requiring detailed consideration, and various legal and property questions, and quite certainly new and carefully studied legislation. It should be attacked immediately beyond all question, and in fullest good faith. Where immediate local relief can be given, as indicated in section 8 (Tierra Colorada), that should be done; it should be worked out both piecemeal and as a whole. Where it is possible to come to terms locally with landholders, and satisfy local needs by separate arrangements, that should be done without holding up any local need or want which can be so met in waiting on the whole new matter of national legislation.

As a part of this work, the whole question of national and local irrigation problems should be included, as indeed already included in the plan de Tierra Colorada.

In this connection the essential desires of Zapata must be met, and at the very outset; Zapata must be made to understand that this is so; and I could not refuse my own assistance in arriving at such a result there. After my intercourse with him, the relations of confidence established with him, Soto y Gama and Magaña, and especially now that I have definitely carried out what I assured him and them, but doing them public justice in my April article. I am hopeful of a successful issue. But it is also to be understood that there are three elements to the question, and not only one as Palafox thought. There is first the actual care for the small independent farmer; then the interests of the State and nation as a whole, and increased productivity; then the actual rights of the large landholders. Whatever the point of abstract justice or ideas, it would not be wise to deny any rights at all on the part of the latter—but that can be a very simple question: Mere dollars; they are not interested in their local home independence as the small farmers, nor is the national problem of development of production their object. There should be an adjustment, after frank discussion, and if need be compromise between the national need and the difficulties of large-scale production for which small and uneducated proprietors lately redeemed from total economic subjection are as yet wholly incapable. From my acquaintance with Zapata and the others I have mentioned, I do not fear the result of such conference; but the welfare of the local people—their actual welfare and raising to happiness must come first.

7. A definite study of constructive road building all over the republic; preparation for, and introduction of auto-truck transportation into the remotest parts of the country. No one single thing, save only that of remoralization of the people after the debauch of looting and disorder of these past years, outweighs this in its future results.

I have placed the first five activities above at the head of all, because the one first thing most needed, and the base of all the rest, is remoralization of the people. There are other problems, the debt, railroad construction, and like national problems which are commonly put in front. These require great sums, and a foreign loan—before which must come confidence restored, and governmental recognition. These things have waited five years or more; let them wait another six months. State the point and the reason if need be; but if necessary, let them wait. They are all questions each of great complexity and compass; they involve time, long discussions, intricate study, and hundreds of millions. With the restoration of the constitution, the dangerous international questions will automatically disappear; trade and intercourse will come of its own motion; the owners of oil and mines will not need to be invited to resume, and their resumption will help in the restoration of new conditions, regardless of Wall Street or Washington. Then take a breathing spell on this for six months or more, frankly; but begin the other things above at once. And then:

8. The question of railroad reconstruction, financing, and extension.

9. Adjustment of the national finances, the debt, a new loan, and the circulating medium.

On these clauses 8 and 9 the matters agreed upon in the paper of February 5 last will be pertinent.

10. A sane, well-developed, and well-paid national secular educational system.

I have placed these three absolute essentials at the end, not because they can be in any sense ignored but because of their magnitude and of the issues and difficulties involved. None of them can be settled in a day or a month. Nos. 8 and 9 need foreign cooperation; No. 10 is something that must grow with the new order. All three can wait upon the urgent necessities of remoralization, bread, renewed interest in work, and production. They can not wait indefinitely, but they can wait six months. They have waited six years on disorder and demoralization; let them wait a little longer. And they will be indefinitely easier to handle, and on infinitely more favorable terms for Mexico from outside, after six months' actual progress in the first five clauses, the troublesome sixth in the way of disposal, and the seventh planned out as interrelated with clauses 4, 6, and 8 above. No. 7 will need financial assistance, which must be provided for in the settlement of No. 9 and in ways we have hitherto considered, but it ought to be put into the whole plan as a broad national program before we come to seek this assistance and foreign cooperation involved in Nos. 8 and 9.

In short, the idea in the foregoing items and their arrangement is that they can be done without outside assistance or recognition; that if they are so done, you need not worry in the least about loans or recognition; those must follow as day after night. But if you try to begin with 8 and 9, you have to worry about everything.

2016 Mount Royal Avenue, Baltimore.

The foregoing was incorporated in a letter, under date April 1, 1919, to the official Felicista representation in this country, as a formal proposal on behalf of the State of Oaxaca and Gen. Melxuelro, and on my own part as an ally and friend, as a definite plan of procedure to be at once followed upon the entry of "the 1857 forces, the forces of law and decency into the capital." After ample discussion, the plan above was formerly accepted in toto, on behalf of Gen. Felix Diaz and "the national reorganizing army," in writing.

EXHIBIT 6.

To the Governor of the State, Puebla, Pue.:

The undersigned residents of the town of Tejupa, San Miguel Ahuacomulcan, San Antonio Cuautla, Atzitzihuacan, Huilango, Tulcingo, San Pedro Ixhuatpec, San Francisco Nochitlopa, San Mateo Coatepec, San Juan Amecac, Santiago Tochimizol, Tepanapa, Yancuitlalpam, Zacatampa, San Miguel Tecuanipam, belonging to the districts of Matamoros and Atlixco, present ourselves before you to set forth: That, being grievously oppressed one and many times by the forces under the command of Gen. Jesus M. Guajardo and his subordinates, we are forced to raise our voice in demand of guarantees and justice.

Life in this region has become insupportable. Each time that the mentioned troops pass through it they leave the country veritibly desolated to such extent that they seem to mean to make it uninhabitable.

Far from showing by their conduct that they are soldiers of the law and the guardians of order, they enter only to sack the towns, carrying off with them everything they can take. Work animals, beasts of burden, hog, fowls, turkeys—they seize and sweep everything clean in their expeditions, which are more like ventures of destruction and rapine than military expeditions. It seems that especially they make an object of robbing grain and cattle, to sell them in the neighboring towns.

What they can not carry off they destroy. They respect neither the cereals indispensable to life, which they scatter along the streets and roads, to feed their mounts, or for the mere pleasure of causing harm to their rightful owners. They destroy the fields and standing crops, break the doors, the roofs, and the scanty furniture and utensils of the houses. Not even the grindstones nor the humble pots and jars escape their destructive fury.

In the churches they commit veritable atrocities; they are not content with robbing whatever they can find, especially vestments and sacred vessels, but they even convert the churches into stables and use them for most abominable purposes.

But where they give freest rein to their appetites is in violation of the women. No conditions are respected by them; girls, married women, and even children of tender age and aged women are the victims of their unchained lust.

Ten, 20—even more—satyrs satiate their bestial instincts, one after the other, on the body of their victim, some of whom die and the rest are left in deplorable condition.

There have been cases where innocent little girls of 9, 10, and 11 years have been attacked, their weakness unable to withstand such excesses, so that they perish as a consequence, without there being any authority, any hand of justice to inflict the deserved punishment on their barbarous executioners.

With our rights thus all violated, treated like beasts, outraged in our dignity as fathers and husbands, wounded in our dearest affections, and deprived of all we have, to-day we cry out against such abuse, if there be even little hope of being heard.

These deeds, these attacks have taken place at other times on the invasion of this region by the battalions of Yaquis. Then also the towns formulated our complaints; we protested to the higher authorities, and were not heard.

Nevertheless, and though fearing that our voice will be lost, we appeal through you to the higher authorities, those who stand above these evil servants of the Government, these disloyal servants or defenders of society.

It is grievous to say, but the truth. We enjoy more protection from the rebels than from the forces of the Government. The revolutionists give more respect than these others—our families and our possessions.

Here it may be seen to what a point a Government instituted to guarantee order and inspire respect for the laws, is found incapable of complying with its mission, through the fault of its agents and the immorality of its troops, or at least of a part of them.

Firmly we believe that the public peace can not become a fact while this disorder subsists, so prejudicial to the good name of the Government and to its prestige.

It is not strange that in every town there are those who, seeing that their place as peaceful laborers does not suffice to protect them, prefer to unite with the disturbers of order, rather than resign themselves to continuing the defenseless victims of the forces of the Government.

And as to ourselves, who remain obedient to our duties, working for the support of our families, wearing ourselves out in the cultivation of the fields, exhausting our strength in procuring the needs of our wives and children, at every step we see ourselves interrupted in our work and forced to flee, knowing that the soldiery respect neither life, property, nor the honor of families.

On mere suspicion the most honorable and peaceful citizens are shot. Others are beaten and threatened with death. Homes are sacked and despoiled as if one dealt with enemies. The cattle, crops, and work tools stand in constant danger, to such degree that there is no recourse left to us modest laborers than to run to hide ourselves in the deepest parts of the forests, on the mere notice of the approach of the Government forces.

If this can be called the reign of order and law, the dominion of a genuinely constitutional and honorable régime, those better instructed than we can say.

We can only point to these acts, and lay them before the knowledge of the authorities. They will judge whether or no it is necessary to punish the guilty, and to take the needed steps to put an end to this intolerable series of attacks.

In the name of the law, in the name of the principles proclaimed for the welfare of the country that is to-day so gravely threatened, we ask for justice, and beg to hope that you will interpose your influence and your good offices with the higher military authorities, that these may prevent the continuance of these acts.

Protesting to you our respects, as mark of faith we give our signatures this 4th day of August of 1919.

EXHIBIT 12.

Dated: El Paso, Tex., December 5, 1919.

From: ———, special investigator.

To: Senate subcommittee investigating Mexican affairs.

Title: Mexican I. W. W. activities in the United States.

In the first part of May 1918, the Mexican consul, ———, at Clifton, Ariz., called at the grocery store of a Mexican named ——— in Clifton Ariz., and left a large assortment of printed matter, telling ——— to look it over and let him know what he thought of it. ——— was busy at the time and did not look at the literature until after the consul had left. When he did examine it, he found that it was a quantity of I. W. W. and pro-German literature. When he discovered this he became so frightened he immediately threw it in the stove, not wanting it to be found in his house, owing to the great unrest that was at that time in the Clifton-Morenci mining district. When the consul returned he told him what he had done with the literature and asked him if he was not afraid to be circulating matters of that kind. To this the Mexican consul replied that there was no danger of it being found out, because this matter came to him officially and no one would break his mail because he was a consular officer of a foreign country.

——— immediately reported the matter to a Mexican named ———, and requested him to report the matter to Sheriff Slaughter, of Clifton, which ——— did. From that time on a close watch was kept of the Mexican consulate, however, the local officers at Clifton were never able to catch him with any of this literature. It is believed that he became aware of the fact that ——— had reported the matter and desisted.

These facts can be substantiated by Sheriff Slaughter, of Clifton, Ariz., as well as ———, whose under-cover operatives reported this same matter to him at the time of its occurrence.

In September, 1918, a Mexican named Ignacio Acero left Jerome, Ariz., and went to Morenci, Ariz., stating that he was sent to this district to organize the Mexicans in behalf of an anarchistic movement. Acero had formerly been at Metcalfe, Ariz., and was president of the Metcalfe local of the I. W. W. in December, 1917, but owing to the fact that the companies got on to him, he was discharged and was compelled to leave that district at that time. In September, 1918, while at Metcalfe in connection with the organizing of the Mexicans, Acero said he was expecting to organize all the Mexicans in the United States and expected within a short time to be able to raise the red flag of emancipation, and stated that they would have the cooperation of all Russians, Germans, and Austrians in the country. That he believed in the triumph of the Central Powers, and that would spell victory for the working class of the United States. During the time he was in the Metcalfe-Morenci district he had the cooperation of Julian Gutierrez, president of the Mexican club for Clifton, Ariz.; Anastacio M. Maldonado, secretary of the Mexican Club, at Clifton; Manuel T. Viveros, president, and Pedro M. Reyes, secretary, of the Mexican Centro Club; also A. C. Valdez and Jose L. Payan, president and secretary, respectively, of the Circulo Mexicano. While Acero was able to organize some of the Mexicans in some independent groups, he was not able to bring about a socialistic anarchistic league embracing a majority of the Mexicans in the mining district, so he left the district and returned to Jerome, Ariz., stating that he would try and make the headquarters of the new league at that point.

After returning to Jerome, he wrote ———, stating that he was having fair success and that the socialistic anarchistic organization that he intended to affiliate the Mexicans with was being well organized from California to Louisiana and that the immediate purpose of the organization was to start a revolution in the border States. That they would attempt to interest the colored people, with the understanding that if the revolution would be a success, they would be given the State of Louisiana. After some urging, ———, of Clifton, Ariz., agreed to represent Acero in spreading propaganda amongst the Mexicans relative to the new organization, and ——— agreed to act in this capacity in Metcalfe, Ariz. Acero also had a secret meeting in the Globe-Miami district during the month of September, at which meeting were five leaders of that district. This meeting was with the object of effecting an anarchistic organization. The man Acero and his coworkers had actually planned an uprising in the State of Arizona, to take place on September 24. On September 22, ——— sent his wife and family to El Paso, Tex., from Metcalfe, and advised his other Mexican workers to send their families out as the time had almost approached for their revolution to start.

In partial substantiation of this revolutionary movement, a reliable operative interviewed Col. ———, a Mexican revolutionist at that time in El Paso, Tex., wherein ——— stated:

"That on or about September 22, a note was left at his home, ———, which read as follows:

"———. I have just arrived from Metcalfe, Ariz., this date. You have been recommended to me by Vicente Rubio, as a man with whom I can discuss an important matter, and also that you might direct me to other people in whom confidence can be had. If you know Benjamin Rios I would like to talk to him. I shall return at 9 p. m.

" 'MANUEL G. GARZA.' "

"At the appointed hour the man called, introduced himself as Manuel Garza, and stated that he had been sent to ——— by one Vicente Rubio. He stated to ——— that there was a revolution being formed in the States of Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico, and that he wanted ——— and his friends to join the movement against the Government of the United States. ——— asked who was back of the movement. Garza replied that the movement was made up of Mexicans and Americans, and that the Carranza garrisons along the border would help out if called on. ——— did not give Garza any satisfaction, but stated he would see him later. ——— stated that during the conversation he was trying to remember where he had seen this man Garza before. After he left it dawned upon him that the man's real name was Toribio Gaytan, who had in the early days of the revolution been an officer in the Carranza army. ——— also remembered Vicente Rubio as being an officer in the Carranza army during 1914."

It is presumed the reason that this Mexican called on ——— was that it was a known fact among Mexicans that ——— was at that time organizing a party of Mexicans to go to Mexico to take up arms with Francisco Villa, and since this occurrence ——— has crossed into Mexico and is at the present time in arms with Villa. At the time of reporting this matter, Col. ——— agreed to try to see the Mexican Garza and signify his willingness to go into the proposition, agreeing to keep the officers of this government advised of the movement. However, he did not see Garza any more, and shortly afterwards crossed into Mexico himself.

In further substantiation of the fact that some sort of a revolution was intended, attention is invited to the fact that an uprising was attempted in the Jerome, Arizona, mining district at daylight on the morning of September 24. In the fighting an American mine guard was killed and Anacito Acero, the organizer above referred to, was killed together with three other Mexican agitators. The proposition was quelled, due to the fact that the local officers had advance information something was going to happen, and by killing these four Mexicans the uprising was put down without any further trouble.

The uprising planned for the Morenci-Metcalfe district did not materialize, and it is a significant fact that October 9, 1918, ———, one of the organizers referred to, left that district and is at the present time supposed to be in Cananea, Mexico.

The above data relative to the revolutionary movement can be substantiated by ———, who has original reports of his operatives who reported the occurrences mentioned.

Concerning other connections between Mexicans and the I. W. W. agitations in this country, I quote herewith from a copy of a report of a letter, viz: "From Comité Local Unión Minera Mexicana, Rosita, Coah., Mexico.

"To: Pedro N. Puente, Mexican consulate, El Paso, Tex.

"Dated: June 17, 1918.

"Writers using the I. W. W. greeting, 'Salud Companero' (Hail, comrade).

"And the watchword 'Trabajo, Fraternidad, y Justicia' (work, brotherhood, and justice).

"State they have received addressee's letter June 8. Have already asked the governor for a railroad pass and passport so that a committee may meet in Chihuahua to take Comrade Juan Hernandez Garcia safely to Rosita. They ask that addressee advise them by telegraph should anything occur."

The addressee of this letter is chief of the local secret service of the Mexican consulate in El Paso, Tex., and is so employed at the present time.

A significance which may connect with the letter just quoted, is the fact that in September, 1918, Juan I. Garcia was secretary of the Mexican Union at Morenci, Ariz., and was often in close consultation with ——— referred to in the statement of revolutionary activities mentioned in the first part of this report. It is not known whether this Garcia is the one mentioned in the letter.

Another significant occurrence is noted in the shape of a letter from Vincent St. John, secretary general defense committee, I. W. W., Chicago, Ill., addressed to "M. T. W., Branch 100, Apt. 551, Tampico, Mexico," requesting all secretaries of unions, branches, and defense committees in Mexico to change their present names and addresses in order to avoid the postal authorities.

At the time of writing this letter, St. John was under bond pending appeal on conviction in the United States district court at Chicago, Ill., under a charge of conspiracy to overthrow the Government. The documentary evidence referred to in this report can be obtained at such time as it is desired.

Additional reports will be submitted under this head.

Respectfully submitted.

Special Investigator.

(Whereupon, at 4.30 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

MONDAY, MAY 10, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to call, at 2.30 o'clock p. m., in room 128, Senate Office Building, Senator Albert B. Fall presiding.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN.

(The witness was duly sworn by the chairman.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may state your name to the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. George Agnew Chamberlain.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chamberlain, where do you reside?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My physical residence is at Capitan, N. Mex.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your occupation at the present time?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At the present time I am writing.

The CHAIRMAN. What has been your occupation prior to the present time?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was in the Consular Service of the United States for a period of 17 years, with an interim of two.

The CHAIRMAN. At what stations did you serve in the Consular Service?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Bahia, Rio de Janerio, Pernambuco, Lorenzo, Marcos, and Mexico City.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your official position at Mexico City?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Consul general.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you go there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In May, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. You are familiar with the Spanish language—speak, read, and write it, do you?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. You had had consular experience in South America and other Latin American countries prior to going to Mexico, had you not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I had.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did you remain in Mexico City or in Mexico as consul general?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Until August 1, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. Then your period of service would practically cover the period of the war, in so far as the actual participation of the United States in the last war was concerned?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Your service also occurred during the administration of Venustiano Carranza, after his recognition as President by the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, I was there at the time of his final recognition, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. He was first recognized as de facto president, or "first chief," and later, in 1917, he was recognized as president de jure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know the generals and governmental officials of Mexico who were participating in military and governmental affairs during your period of service there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Do you mean can I give you a list of them?

The CHAIRMAN. Were you personally acquainted with all or a majority of them, or the most prominent ones?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No. I had no personal acquaintance with any except Pablo Gonzales, and that was in a casual, social way.

The CHAIRMAN. He was a military leader, was he not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know the minister of hacienda?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I knew Luis Cabrera.

The CHAIRMAN. Corresponding to our Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir. I should say that during a good deal of that time Nieto was actually at the head of that department.

The CHAIRMAN. That was during the absence of Luis Cabrera?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was during the absence of Luis Cabrera, and also during the time that Luis Cabrera was really the minister of finance, but not so in fact, which was during the early part of 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know, or do you know, the minister of gubernacion, Aguirre Berlanga?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have met him.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know Candido Aguilar, who was for a time minister of foreign relations?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have met him also.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what relation he bears to the President?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. His relation is son-in-law to the President.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know Beltran? Did you know the chief of staff of Mexico military affairs, Barragan?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not know Barragan.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you, during the period of your service there, make any investigation of the general conditions, governmental and otherwise, in the Republic of Mexico, and particularly about the officials in the administration of justice, and the administration of governmental affairs, military affairs, and so forth?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like for you to state in your own language what you determined as to the conditions in Mexico, as to the Carranza Government, and as to the conditions as you understand them with your intimate knowledge to exist now in Mexico. Just tell the story of Mexico in your own language.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. You mean, Mr. Chairman, in relation to what?

The CHAIRMAN. The people in Mexico, who they are and what they are.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And also with relation to our troubles in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. In relation to our troubles in Mexico, and our duties, if we have any, and the conditions as you know them in Mexico, the general conditions, what they are doing and what the Mexican Government has done with relation to its people; the whole story of Mexico.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I should say that the first point I would like to take up along that line would be the commercial feature, which was my special province. During the war, as you know, the enemy trading act was enforced; and, as a result, the consul general of the twenty-odd consulates under his jurisdiction got an extraordinary amount of actual information as to trade conditions in Mexico, and in connection with that we we gained a good many facts that had nothing to do with trade at the time. But I should say that at the end of the war we had more complete and definite knowledge in regard to commerce with Mexico, what the requirements of Mexico were, and the means for supplying those requirements, than we ever had before in the history of any country. Owing to the burdens of the war regulations, the consular staff had gone up from four people to a staff composed of the consul general, five vice consuls, and six stenographers and clerks. Naturally, at the end of the war that establishment was very anxious to take advantage of all the information we had gathered. The obstacle to that was the fact that we had no policy whatever in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The United States had no policy. Efforts were made, not only by the embassy, but by the consul general, to get some policy established. Those efforts were unsuccessful, and as a result, I took the stand of informing American citizens who were anxious to invest in Mexico at that time that as long as Americans continued to be murdered in Mexico, and there was no protection for life or property, the consul general and American officials in Mexico could give no assistance to Americans wishing to invest in Mexico. That letter had the sanction of the Department of State in this way, that it was sent to the Department of State and remailed by the department. That meant that the entire activities of the consul general ceased. It meant that we could take advantage of none of the consuls which we had, and I began then to think of resigning.

One reason we should have established a policy at that time was the improper practices of the Mexican Government. It was a matter of comment and well known in Mexico City publicly that there was a direct alliance between Carranza and the cabinet and the bandits in Mexico. The scheme had been very frequently exposed, but it was a scheme of dickering for protection, by which any company that happened to be established in Mexico would dicker with the nearest bandit or with the nearest Carranza official, and the Carranza generals evaded wiping out banditry in Mexico, for the simple reason that if the bandits would disappear there would be no cause for military organizations in Mexico. It was a vicious circle.

Quite aside from that, certain cabinet officers, aside from the military were well known to have received graft, in sums varying from trifling sums, one I know of that only amounted to $350, and the same man was willing to take a bribe of $75,000. These cases were numerous, but naturally I can not expose the names of the people who paid the bribes, for the simple reason that this country is not in a position to protect them.

One of the most evil features of the whole situation was the fact that Gen. Carranza could change the tariff on any imports into Mexico from one day to another. That does not sound like much in this case until you begin to apply it. It meant if you had a shipment of so many tons of caustic soda coming on to the market, and your rival competitor heard of it, he could dicker with the authorities and have the duty placed on caustic soda in such a way as to bring his product in at a very much lower rate than your product could come in, and thereby he could undersell you. I mention that because those things actually happened. The juggling of the duties was without any specific authorization of the legislature. They gave a blanket authorization to Carranza to change the duties when he wanted to. That juggling alone was a sufficient feature to make every man in business in Mexico either go out of business or become a briber. There were no two ways about it.

These were the conditions, commercially speaking, which made trade with Mexico absolutely impossible, unless we could lay down a policy and demand certain guarantees by which we could reduce the graft throughout the whole country. I am not using that word quite in the sense we use it in the United States. We have graft here occasionally in city and State government, but that graft is almost always attached to some construction, construction of buildings, something of that kind, some constructive feature that goes with the graft; but the graft in Mexico was such as to let the whole resources of the nation pass into the pockets of a few men. That single condition of graft and maladministration of public funds I believe to be the basis of every misery not only of Mexico itself, but at the foot of every difference that we have had with that country. It has also been the cause of the downfall of every Mexican government, including the government of Porfirio Diaz.

I wish to qualify that by saying that Diaz was probably as honest a man as ever ruled the country. I wish to cite one example. His pet project, which was the Caga de Prestamoos, which was a bank to finance the small farmers of Mexico, proved to be the most colossal failure of his administration, and was used to fill the pockets of his political backers. So even that administration was undermined by that eternal question of maladministration of public funds.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you mean that Diaz himself was guilty, or these officials that surrounded him?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not believe that Diaz or Limantour, either one, profited in the slightest, but his official family, so to speak, did and used that to fill their own pockets. They were known as cientificos. The meaning of cientificos, as it was originally used, applied to 8 or 10 men, but by the Carrancistas it came to be applied to anyone that was in power at the time of Diaz.

Senator BRANDEGEE. The word was used before Carranza's time, was it not, and during the time of Diaz?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, yes; before Carranza's time the word was applied to a group of 8 or 10 men, but now it is applied much as the word bourgeois, or the well-to-do class. That is the sense it is used in now.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You have alluded to the completeness of the information which you acquired while you were there as consul general about these commercial matters. Is that in documentary form? I mean was the information or knowledge acquired by the office of the consul general reduced to writing anywhere?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Absolutely. It was reduced in this way—that no firm in Mexico could make a shipment of goods to the United States or receive a shipment of goods from the United States without filing with the nearest consul—

Senator BRANDEGEE. I do not mean that. What I mean is in reference to the knowledge you acquired as to this system of maladministration. Is that in documentary form anywhere? Did you keep a diary, or did you make that in the form of writing to any department in this country?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. All these things were reported to the Department of State at different times, either in the cablegrams or stated reports.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you conducted also a personal investigation of your own into the general conditions that existed prior to that time under the Diaz and other administrations; did you not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The knowledge I naturally acquired from being there and from studying conditions as I found them.

I can say that I think I have summed up more or less the commercial situation.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Just one matter before you pass to something else. I did not understand the words you used, but you stated that from Carranza down through his heads of departments there was a form of graft or commission. Did you include Carranza in that system?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not include Carranza personally, except for the fact that no one knows exactly what amount of money he received as an entertainment fund. I do not classify Carranza with his officials in the matter of graft.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You have alluded to the money paid by an importer who wanted to get a lower rate on his imports than his competitor; and you said he would pay it to the Carranza officials. Is it your idea that any of that got to Carranza himself?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I think that was part of the perquisites of certain members of the cabinet.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you not think Carranza knew what was going on in that line?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think he did.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you think he could have prevented it, or was he powerless?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I do not think he could have prevented it. I do not think that Carranza, when he accepted the plan of paying over 60 per cent of the entire revenues into the pockets of the military, when he accepted that he tied himself to the military, on the principle that they would remain faithful to him only so long as he could fill their pockets with loot. From that time on he must have known all that was happening, and at the same time he had put himself in a trap from which he had no hope of escape.

I think the statement I have made covers the commercial situation, which forced me to see there was no object in remaining longer as consul general of Mexico. My hands were tied; there was nothing to do; and I could not spend money there under the conditions.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Did you recommend to the department any particular course of action which in your opinion would improve these conditions and protect American interests?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the general nature of that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If you will allow me, I will lead up to that by stating the political conditions.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I will not ask you any questions at all. Perhaps it would be better to let you go on in your own way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am very glad to answer your questions, but I just wanted to outline the political situation in Mexico during the two years I was there.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Very well. I think I probably throw you off from the continuity of your subject by interrupting, and do not accomplish as much as I would by letting you go ahead.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not at all; not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. You were treating conditions from a commercial standpoint, and now you want to cover the political features.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to cover the political conditions for the same period of time.

The CHAIRMAN. And then industrial conditions, as distinguished from commercial conditions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are no industrial conditions in Mexico. They have been destroyed. There are no industries left in Mexico, with the exception of certain companies which have continued through the payment of tribute. I will say that in all my experience in Mexico I can not name five large factories left to-day that are not run by Americans, and those, of course, are run under peculiar circumstances.

To sum up the political developments for the same time, I was naturally in closer touch with the embassy than the consul general ordinarily has occasion to be, and I know that period of two years contains an unbroken record of insulting acts toward the United States, such as have never been administered by any country to this country, or to any country on this side of the Atlantic, in the history of our country.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Who was our ambassador there at that time?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Fletcher was American ambassador at that time.

I will only pick out a few of the high lights to show you the situation that existed.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You say you were in close touch with the embassy at that time about these matters?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Will you state whether the ideas of the ambassador with yours?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Absolutely.

Senator BRANDEGEE. And about the remedy or the course they ought to take?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can say that also. I am confident that Mr. Fletcher's views agreed with mine, from frequent conversations, almost daily, during the two years.

Senator BRANDEGEE. But you made reports to the department here, did you not, as well as to Mr. Fletcher?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My reports were made to the department and sent through the embassy.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Forwarded by the embassy?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They were addressed direct to the department.

Senator BRANDEGEE. But through the embassy?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Through the embassy.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Very well. Proceed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just to pick out a few high lights, to show what was the tendency in Mexico during those two years, the first effort that Mr. Fletcher made to establish actual and real friendly relations with Mexico was to obtain the release of over 2,000,000 rounds of ammunition which had been held on the border for a long time. He did that, I have every reason to believe, on the understanding that it would be taken in Mexico and used in Mexico as an evidence of the friendship of the United States, and would give the Mexican Government an excuse to show it was friendly toward us. Gen. Pablo Gonzales had something to do with that transaction, and what happened was this:

Carranza gave it out to the press that through the efforts of Mr. Bonillas, Mexican ambassador in Washington, 2,000,000 rounds of ammunition belonging to the Mexican Government, long held on the border, had been released. I would pick that out as a fair sample.

The CHAIRMAN. No credit was given to the American ambassador?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. None whatever, and no effort was made to show there had been any good feeling.

I am only going to pick out three characteristic actions. The second one, and a very vital one, was that Carranza, whenever things got a little strained, would send people up to you without any credentials. There was never any contention that any of these men should have power to negotiate; but he tried to make people up here think they were negotiating. On one occasion Mr. Nieto came up here for him, and his reception by the Department of State simply swept him off his feet by its sincerity. They said they wanted to deal with him in the best possible way. Ambassador Fletcher was cabled for to come up and form some agreement to wipe out the misunderstandings between the two governments. By the time they had finished the preliminary work toward such an agreement, Mr. Nieto, realizing that he had no power, said they would have to return to Mexico to continue their negotiations. So Ambassador Fletcher and Mr. Nieto returned to Mexico City, with a preamble which was called a preliminary aim toward an understanding, a phrase of that kind in Spanish, an understanding between the United States and Mexico. Mr. Carranza, upon receiving that document, had it printed in the public press without any reference to the American ambassador, and repudiated Nieto, who fell from power, and never has recovered, from that date to this.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What position did he occupy?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He was at that time in full charge of the ministry of finance. He was not minister of finance, but he was called subsecretary of finance.

Now, I will pick out as a third example the occasion when President Wilson made a speech before a delegation of twenty odd Mexican newspaper men here in Washington. I will not attempt to quote from that speech, but I will say it contained a reiteration of the assertion that no matter what occurred, this country would never exercise force against a weaker nation. The speech was cabled to Mexico and really produced a remarkable impression. People were really inclined to take it as evidence of a new friendly understanding between Mexico and the United States. Carranza immediately dug out our note of April 2, 1918, the only fighting note that the Wilson administration, for a very real reason, was forced into writing, and published it in the papers without any reference to the ambassador and without any comment whatever. That was the most complete answer he could possibly have given to the speech made by President Wilson, because anyone comparing the terms of the note with the speech made before the newspaper men by the President, had to take off his hat to Carranza. He won hands down.

Those are only three of his open unfriendly acts, each one growing in importance. That publishing of our note of April 2, before it had been answered and without asking the customary permission that is given by other countries or by their representatives, was a direct slap at the President of the United States, which was further than Carranza had gone at any time previous to that time.

Senator BRANDEGEE. It was probably a breach of diplomatic usage, was it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was also a breach of diplomatic usage.

While conditions were growing worse and worse and more and more outrageous, I have not touched on the oil confiscation, because that is well known throughout the country and has been testified to by a number of witnesses.

The political conditions just simply gave us one blow after another, each one harder than the one that went before it, which I think can be attributed to nothing but our declaration of hands off, no matter what Mexico did; watchful waiting without being watchful and without waiting, because if you don't get to some end you are not waiting; you are stagnant. I think those two policies simply carried the Mexican Government into doing things that they never would have dreamed of doing otherwise, and also gave a strength to Carranza that he never would have acquired if it had not been for his flouting of the United States with absolute impunity. That did more to make Carranza a figure, not only in Mexico but in all South America, than any other feature in his own country or any other country, and added tremendously to his own power. We made Carranza. If it had not been for us he never would have become the figure that he did.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Have you any evidence that there was any such policy as you have alluded to under the term of "hands off of Mexico, no matter what they do"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; in the speech made by the President to the newspaper men. I can not quote it word for word.

Senator BRANDEGEE. That is accessible. But in your relations to the State Department, are there any instructions, or was there anything that came to your knowledge in the way of our governmental policy, aside from this speech of the President, that led you to think that the administration would not do anything in Mexico, no matter what Mexico would do?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There would be no occasion for such an instruction coming to me, because the embassy was in full swing during all the time I was in Mexico, and no such instructions would be sent to the consuls or consul general under those conditions.

Senator BRANDEGEE. As to Carranza's apparent hostility, what is your explanation of why he should be hostile after the recognition given him by this country?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The explanation is the strength that he found our weakness gave to him. I mean by "our weakness" our pacifism, our absolute quiescence. He found that when he slapped us, these blows increasing in force and willfulness, that with each one of those actions he became more powerful in Mexico. I will cite an instance:

Pablo Gonzales was concerned with the transaction to release the ammunition I spoke of awhile ago. Pablo Gonzales absolutely fell from power and never regained his power from that day on, while Carranza was more powerful than ever from that day. The same thing applied to Nieto. From the day Nieto tried to make that agreement between Fletcher and Nieto, while it seems incredible that anybody would oppose such a thing, yet that very fact caused the downfall of Nieto.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You do not think Carranza's hostility to this country was because he personally felt hostile to this country, but because he found by pretending to be hostile to this country it strengthened him in Mexico?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe that was the major cause. I will say there are very few Carranza officials who have not a perfectly genuine touch of race hatred, in this way, that it comes from another period. I do not mean they hate the American because he is an American. The personal relations between Americans and Mexicans were excellent, but the mere fact that the Mexicans have no industry in their whole country to-day that is not capitalized and run by foreigners, and no two Mexicans will ever go into partnership in any constructive enterprise without an American who holds the money; that it is well known in their heart of hearts that they have no dynamic energy, is at the foot of all this great hatred.

Senator BRANDEGEE. It is also apparent, I would judge from that statement, that they distrust each other?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They do.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What is the date of the speech the President made to the 20 newspaper men from Mexico?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not remember the exact date, but our note of April 2d had been in the hands of Mexico's foreign affairs office for possibly two months. Consequently, it must have been more or less about June 1, 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. I have that note of the Government of April 2, 1918, followed by a very strong protest of August 12, 1918, in which it is set forth that they never had an answer from the Mexican Government to the note of April 2, which brought from Carranza the statement "If that means war, I am prepared for it."

Senator BRANDEGEE. Is that embraced in the record?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not as yet.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I should think that ought to be in the record.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think those two branches of development, the commercial and the political development, bring us up to the period of August, 1919, when I finally decided that I would prefer to resign from the service, although it was the only profession I have ever undertaken, and being in a position to write and say what I thought about conditions in Mexico.

You asked me some time ago, Senator Brandegee, whether this condition was ever pointed out to the Government or State Department, and I said I would lead up to it. I will say that I very emphatically pointed out to the department in at least one dispatch that if they publicly announced they would never resort to force, no matter what Mexico did, that immediately swept the foundations from the personal standing of every representative in Mexico, and that he became thoroughly ridiculous, and consequently I saw no chance for any representative to continue there. That point I know was very frequently borne in upon the department. You tell a man you will never hit him, no matter what he does, you put yourself in a position of weakness, because he is not bound not to hit you because you have tied your hands. That is what happened to us there time and again and made it impossible and ridiculous that a respectable man could continue to draw money for holding down a job in that country.

Senator BRANDEGEE. They found somebody to do it, though, did they not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not believe that any man in Mexico City to-day has crossed what you might call the new territory that lies between the man in official life and personal life. That is, an official representing the Government is under orders to do what his Government instructs him to do, but when his Government instructs him to do certain things that he can not stand for personally, when it gets to that point where he says, "That is all right; I have been in office and I have been carrying out the instructions of the Government, but now it has come to a point where I will not do this, because I will be too dirty in my own eyes"—when it gets to that, where he has to become an individual and not an official, the only way to do that is to give up his official position.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Who succeeded you?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know that anyone has gone to Mexico City. But when I make that assertion, I say there is a perfectly legitimate new territory that an official has a right to consider himself as the representative of his Government, carrying out his Government's instructions, and it is incredible that the man who succeeded me can know of the conditions that I knew about. Consequently, I do not mean any aspersions on any official who happens to be in Mexico at this time.

I think that concludes more or less the conditions as they were up to August, 1919. But while events have moved rather rapidly in the last few weeks I would like to point out that the condition of things, the danger and continued unrest in Mexico, is practically the same to-day as when Carranza was in power, for the simple reason that we have no assurance whatever that the maladministration of public funds is going to disappear.

That, Mr. Chairman, brings me up to the point where I have covered more or less the situation up to date. Are you interested in any comment on what I think is the way out?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. But first I might ask you a few questions as to what you know specifically of conditions affecting Americans attempting to operate in Mexico in any line, to which I had reference when I asked you if you proposed to comment upon the industries of Mexico. For instance, take the oil development of Mexico. Of course, it is in testimony here that in the Tampico and Tuxpam districts, the Americans and foreigners and others engaged in the development of the oil industry have been paying, at least Palaez, if not directly to the Mexican Government, large sums of money for protection. There are other Americans interested in mining and various enterprises in Mexico. Do you know whether or not any of them are compelled to purchase protection?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir. That carries us back, Mr. Chairman, if I may, to what happened to American industry as a whole in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I have reference to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What are the classes of Americans who occupied Mexico, and what is the class, generally speaking, that occupies it to-day?

If we go back far enough, you can remember the tremendous impression that was made in that country by one of the President's speeches, in which he labeled all Americans interested in Mexico under a general blanket term of being connected with big interests. I think that one assertion did more harm, caused more damage to us in Mexico, than all other assertions, for the simple reason that, coming from the President, it reached such a tremendous number of people, and immediately killed any interest that they had in the protection of Americans or American interests in Mexico.

As a matter of fact, the people who were driven out of Mexico, the Americans who left Mexico, were the small industries, small farmers, employees; and the big interests which were established there are there to-day, just as strong as they ever were.

The CHAIRMAN. How have they been able to maintain themselves?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They have not only been able to maintain themselves but some of them have been able to say they do not wish the conditions changed, because they suit them very well. I was talking to one of the officers of a large concern down there, and he told me that, and I asked him very frankly: "How can you say that you want no intervention in Mexico of any kind—economic or military?" And he said: "Well, between ourselves, it is a very simple matter. Where our interests touch the bandits, we pay the bandits; where they touch the Carranzistas, we pay the Carranzistas. As a result, we are sitting at a freeze-out table, and nobody can come into that table but us. We are here. We pay the price and we get everything cheap and have no competition."

That can be applied to several different branches of business in which the lack of competition makes up for or more than compensates for the amount of money they spend for protection. The whole question there is a difficult situation. It is not like you were paying an exorbitant amount to Palaez every month for protection and at the same time paying taxes to the Carranza Government.

Senator BRANDEGEE. While you were there in Mexico, did you travel around the country outside of Mexico City?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No, sir. I made three trips to the United States, two of them by way of Laredo and one by way of Vera Cruz. I was there during the period of the war, when we were very busy indeed, and I had no opportunity to take the time to travel around Mexico, even if it had been feasible to do so. I will say that outside of the railways I traveled on, the others were subject to occasional attack.

Senator BRANDEGEE. From your position there as consul general, were you familiar at all with agricultural conditions in the country?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Only in this way, that during the war, I should say probably toward the end of 1917, possibly later than that, there was a famine reported all over Mexico, and a very strong appeal was made to the consul general to facilitate the importation of corn for the relief of the starving Mexicans. The Department of State instructed me to make an investigation as to the truth of the assertion of the famine, and that investigation was very thorough and very extensive, and was backed up by personal visits to a good many of the haciendados—the large planters.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What was the condition?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The condition was one of famine, one of imminent famine. There was a real threat of famine. There was a tremendous scarcity of corn. The price went up to three or four times what was normal, and there is no doubt in the world that there was a famine threatened, and as a consequence the United States released a million bushels of corn to Mexico.

Senator BRANDEGEE. To what was it due?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Crop failure, lack of rain, drouth. It was also due to the unsettled condition of the country. That had a great deal to do with it.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you know what are the agricultural conditions there to-day?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can not speak for that, because I have not kept up with the record since I left there last August.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You spoke about having an opinion about what you called the way out. What do you think is the policy that should be followed by the Government?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Senator, I think that we are in real danger to-day, a danger that the general public is not in a position to appreciate, and that danger is that we will enter into friendly negotiations and relations with some new head of Mexico, without taking advantage of the peculiar conditions that exist and make a complete change in our entire policy toward that country.

The result of the last seven years has been to wipe out every precedent in regard to the machinery of dealing with a foreign country—that is, we have not protected our interests, we have not protected our Nation—we have declared that we will not resort to force, no matter what happens, and as a result there can be no negotiation unless we have a complete working machine. It is not only wrecked but wiped out, and consequently we have a chance to start in on an entirely new basis.

I think it is of the greatest importance that we should hold off until we can absolutely foresee a permanent settlement of the Mexican question, and that is nothing short of economic control.

Those words, "economic control," would naturally be a red rag to Mexico, but they have flouted so many red rags in our face that it can not do any harm to flout one in theirs. If it is considered carefully it will be seen it is not only an advantage to our relations with Mexico but to the advantage of every man, woman, and child in Mexico. What lies at the very root of the disturbances in Mexico is maladministration of public funds.

Now, whoever comes out on top in the present struggle in Mexico will require what has been rather carefully estimated as $350,000,000 in addition to the resources of the country to put that country on a perfectly good financial standing with the entire world. It may be surprising to know, much less realize why, that Mexico to-day is one of the strongest financial countries in the world, for the simple reason that she has never been able to borrow a cent. Since the loan that was made to Madero and first collected under Huerta she has never been able to borrow abroad. As a result she is more or less in a sound condition. She could recuperate very rapidly if she were given the chance of having a government which spends its funds not for paying an army that does not wipe out banditry, but spends those funds in meeting its foreign obligations, meeting claims, indebtedness, wiping out banditry, and reconstruction, and, most important of all, a proper system of education. She needs that money, and I do not see any reason why we should not swerve from the policy we have followed for the past seven years and say that she will either take that money and accept some sort of control to see that that money is properly spent, or else we will take certain graduated steps of pressure until she does.

Those steps of pressure, it seems to me, should have the effect of settling the question. I have written these seven steps out in the course of a series of articles I am writing for Colliers. The first step is refusal to send an ambassador; the second is to withdraw our recognition; the third is an embargo on loans, private or governmental; the fourth is an embargo on exports and imports; the fifth is the closing of every channel of commerce by which they get business; sixth, naval demonstrations; seventh, military occupation.

That is what I have termed a system of graduated pressure. It allows them to get off whenever they want to get off. We start it mildly and end very strongly.

Of course, that system of pressure is open to the charge that it ends up with military occupation. While I personally believe we could find some leader in Mexico who could accept those terms, and whom we could back up with funds, arms, and ammunition; if we could not find any such leader, ultimately it will come to military occupation.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Suppose out of this revolution that is now in progress there should come some one person into power, who exercises sufficient control over the people of his country to warrant us in recognizing him, to a certain extent, at any rate, and making such an agreement with him as you have indicated, or a treaty by which, in consideration of the fact that we advance $350,000,000, they will agree to see that it is expended in certain ways, suppose they should agree to that treaty, what, in your opinion, would be the effect on the Mexican people? Would they back up their executive who would make that kind of a treaty with the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. When you speak of the Mexican people, Senator, I presume you mean the 10 per cent of the population of Mexico that can read and write, and which is now at the top. Is that what you mean?

Senator BRANDEGEE. No. What I mean is this: Suppose that out of this present revolution some one leader finally gets on top, who is stable enough to make an agreement with us, will not the mere fact that he has made such an agreement as you have indicated, cause some of the others to say that he is unpatriotic and has not at heart the best interests of Mexico, because he has made that treaty with the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That would not be true if, after seven years of telling them we will do nothing, there is a possibility of making them believe that we absolutely mean business. I think if we would make them believe that, from one end of the country to the other, they would accept that sort of a proposition. There would be a lot of talk against it, of course, a good deal of talk about invasion of sovereignty and divided nationality, and things of that kind, but if we could make them believe it was inevitable, and they had to swallow the pill, I think they would do it. I would say that 80 per cent of Mexico is naturally pacific. If you leave those Indian tribes alone you will have no trouble with them. There are something between 30 and 50 different tribes, many of them having different dialects. There is a large mixture of Spanish blood that largely dominated the affairs of Mexico for many years, and there is no reason why it should be considered the Mexican nation. It is merely a fraction of the Mexican nation, the people that can read and write. As I say, there will be a very great uproar, not only against the United States, but against any President of Mexico that tried to put that over, but you must remember that we are going to give this man funds, arms, and ammunition, so it will not make a great deal of difference whether there is an uproar or not.

Senator BRANDEGEE. How long would it be under your plan, as you have indicated it, if we furnished them that money, accompanied by what you call economic control by us, before we could safely relinquish that control? Have you any idea as to how long it would take them to establish themselves, so they could conduct their government in an ordinary way?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think we have an excellent parallel to that in the administration of the Philippines. While we have not handed that government back to the Filipinos, they are rapidly advancing to a point where we will be justified in handing it back.

That carries us right down to the deep roots of education. Every revolutionist in Mexico has always made education of the common people and division of land his prominent issues. Those are the two things they have always harped on. But, as a matter of fact the last thing that this supposedly altruistic Government of Carranza's has done is to pay its school-teachers who have been engaged in educating the people.

There are certain features of this program of economic control, the objects aimed at, that would naturally lift the country to an entirely new basis. One is the wiping out of banditry. That sounds, after all these years, as though it would be difficult. As a matter of fact, there never has been any intention to wipe it out. I do not know of any people in the world that can get up a more perfect corps of men to keep the public order than the rurales of Mexico, such as the Texas rangers were in our country, such as the mounted police of the Canadian Northwest. You could get large bodies of first-class men just as rapidly as you could in this country, by simply paying them and telling them if banditry was not wiped out they would lose their jobs.

If the bandits were cleaned out, the peons could go back to their homes, people could resume their business of various kinds, and an immense amount of money could be directed to reconstruction. We have to-day under the Carranza government 60 per cent of the entire revenues paid to the military, and not 6 per cent to reconstruction. Just reverse that, and you will immediately find employment for a tremendous number of men, and increase the wealth of the country. Of course, in conjunction with that must be some system of education, whereby the teachers may be paid for the work of teaching.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Banditry was wiped out under Porfirio Diaz, was it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Absolutely, for 25 years.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you think that if banditry was wiped out there, and peace and order were established, the Mexican people have themselves the capacity and character to develop the national resources of the country, so as to make them available to other countries?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not without getting capital and energy from abroad.

Senator BRANDEGEE. How would you know anything about the views of any other country as to our assuming economic control in Mexico in the manner you have suggested?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, I think that we have given a good deal too much weight to the feelings of other countries as to what we should do in Mexico. The effect of our keeping our hands off of Mexico and being benevolent to Mexico has been to make us despised in Mexico, and I believe despised in every other country in Latin America. Latin Americans have a tradition of calling us a threatening power.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I do not blame them, if they think we are threatening to absorb their territory, from protesting against that, but do they consider it a threat if we want our business interests protected there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; but they have a strong tradition, that goes far back, that the United States has had the intention to absorb all of the Western Hemisphere, and that tradition does not die out very easily. You will find it in Colombia and Brazil and Argentina to be a very strong tradition.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you think they really believe that, or is it that they simply have a vague fear of it; do not know whether it is coming or not, but are afraid that it might come?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that they do not believe that we are about to absorb them in the sense of annexing them, or anything of that kind, but I think that they do think that sooner or later inevitably our influence will be felt to a certain extent through Mexico and Central America.

Senator BRANDEGEE. That is a popular card for the demagogues to play in those countries, is it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. For many years it was called "en fantasma." Everybody knew it was a spectre.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I remember in the early days of the disturbances in Mexico, after the present administration came into power in this country, that it was frequently stated by the press that if we did not take steps to protect and restore order in Mexico some European nation was likely to do it themselves. What is your opinion as to whether European nations would be satisfied if we took steps to establish order and protection to life and property in Mexico? Do you think they would protest against it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Would they protest against our taking steps to do that?

Senator BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, I believe it is a matter of almost public knowledge that we have held a mandatory for Mexico for seven years, at least, and with the knowledge and consent of Great Britain and France, I think, in black and white. The whole tendency of both Great Britain and France has been to give us just as absolute a mandatory over Mexico as has been proposed to us for the control of Armenia.

Further, in regard to a mandatory of Mexico, we have tried the policy of no force, and things of that kind, and it has been an accumulating shame for seven years. Consequently, your question, Senator, as to what would be the stand of European nations, I think that they would be delighted, and the only expression they would make would be one of surprise that any sensible government could have delayed taking that step so long.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You think that they would like to have us restore security to life and property there, do you, then?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Absolutely. There is no doubt on that point. There can be no doubt on that point. I would go further than that, and say that not only would Great Britain and France, but Spain and probably Italy also have reason to hope that we would straighten things out down there.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you regard Mexico as a very rich country in national resources?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I regard it as intrinsically the most wealthy country I have ever visited; and that makes the tragedy of 100 years of torment and misery all the more glaring. The mere fact that that country could support all of its populace in affluence and has been the scene of misery which exceeds anything in Armenia, added to the fact that we have been responsible for an increase in that misery during the last seven years by standing back of an oligarchy engaged in banditry, is something that we ought to take into account when we try to justify ourselves in taking such an extreme measure as economic control.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What have you to say, if anything, about the policy which we featured when we declined to recognize Huerta, to wit, that an administration must be put in power which, among other things, would divide up the lands among the people? What are the facts in relation to the possibility of dividing up the lands and the public desire to have them divided up?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The facts as to the division of lands under the Carranza Government are these: That in one case, of a man whom I have every reason to believe, the division of the land was merely a matter of paying a man given supervision of that division a bribe to see that they were not divided. That leads us right back to what I said was the source of all the misery in Mexico. That is the condition of apathy that exists in the administration of public affairs and particularly public funds. There are instances which later on can be brought to light of many people not having their farms divided up, simply by payment of graft. Consequently that altruistic view of the Carranza régime, under the constitution of 1917, to divide those lands, simply became one more club to extort blackmail from people who owned property.

Senator BRANDEGEE. That may be true, but what I mean is, what have you to say as to the wisdom of a bona fide, well administered policy of dividing up the lands? Do the people want them divided up? Is the same opinion prevalent all over Mexico, or is it just certain people would like to have them divided up by the Government and other parts do not care anything about it? What is the fact about that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, Senator, that is a tradition that has gone back through many revolutions. The fact that almost every revolutionary leader in the last 100 years in Mexico has made that one of his promises, that he would divide the land, goes to prove there must be a desire for division of the land among the peons. I think it would be a good thing, with proper provisions for expropriation, and would be a great advantage to see that every man was allotted a homestead under fair and equitable conditions.

Now, that matter of expropriation you would have to provide for in the constitution. There is one case of an enormous American concern which was having some trouble when I left Mexico. The Mexican Government said: "Yes; your titles are perfectly good, but we are going to take those lands and divide them and give you bonds." I would say if it had been a cash indemnity it might be very well, but a Mexican bond is so much waste paper.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You say you do not know anything about present conditions in Mexico, except what you read?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, no, Senator. I left Mexico nine months ago. I left there the 1st of August. Consequently, while there have not been very great changes, still I am not informed regarding what there have been.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Nine months ago, when you left, what was the condition of the people in the City of Mexico, as to their health, and whether they had enough to eat or not, and their condition of life?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At the time I left there was really no misery whatever. Their crop had been very good, and the Mexican people are very quick to recuperate. A few months previous to my leaving it was a common sight to see three or four hundred men, women, and children lying in the streets in Mexico waiting for certain soup kitchens to open in the morning, and those people were on the verge of actual starvation.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Was there much disease among the people?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would say that the average of disease in Mexico is considerably higher than it is in this country, and especially the more vicious diseases that are in the blood.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Are you speaking of the City of Mexico or of all of Mexico?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am speaking more especially of the City of Mexico. For the rest of the country, I can only speak from hearsay.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you know anything about the effect that seven years of banditry and revolution, or so-called revolution, has had upon the physical condition of the railroads of the country?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can not speak offhand as to the enormous amount of rolling stock which has been destroyed during that period, but I would say that during one of the years I was in Mexico I was told that there had been 45 trains dynamited on the road between Vera Cruz and Mexico City within a period of three months, with a large destruction of rolling stock. That is the line that has perhaps suffered more than any other, but it is a matter of fact that during all the time that I was there there were only two lines that were considered to be safe—the line to Vera Cruz and the line from Mexico City to Laredo, and yet the line to Vera Cruz had 45 trains dynamited in three months. There may have been more, but there was one train that I remember dynamited between Laredo and Mexico City during the two years that I was there. That line was kept pretty well guarded. I should say that the condition of the railways, as compared to what they were before the revolution took place, would be heartbreaking to the people who were over them at the time of Diaz's downfall.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you know anything about whether the farmers through the country generally, where these conditions of banditry exist, have planted and harvested their crops in safety and are continuing to do so?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They certainly have not. Mexico City, during all the time I was there, was more crowded than it had ever been before in its history, and that was accounted for to me in this way, that the planters in the various States had had to abandon their plantations and crowd into Mexico City to live. I will say that the entire State of Morelos was wiped out as an agricultural State, and that practically the same could be said of Oaxaca, and the same is true of various other outlying districts. They say their cattle and horses and mules are killed, either by Carranza soldiers or by some one or another of the bandit troops.

The CHAIRMAN. I just call the attention of my colleague to the fact that there has not yet been printed in the record a piece of evidence before this committee of a large number of Mexicans who have come to the United States very recently. There is a list of 812 individuals who have been examined by the committee recently on the border, under oath, some of this evidence having been adduced as late as March last, with reference to these people coming over in hundreds. As near as can be estimated by the immigration authorities, the Texas Rangers, and others, it is said that between El Paso, Tex., and Brownsville, Tex., in a period of approximately three weeks in February and March, and particularly on March 1, the time this testimony was taken, on the 19th, approximately 50,000 Mexicans had crossed the border this year.

That is shown by their own testimony and by the statements of witnesses given in this list; and coming from the States of Michoacan, Guerrero, Colima, Mexico, and Jalisco, in the central and southern portion of Mexico; and that their statements were all practically and substantially the same with reference to that condition. They say they can not do anything over there; if one side does not take it away from them the others will, and they do not know one from the other; sometimes they do not know the Carranza people from the Villa people. They can have nothing. It is taken away from them. If they get a few dollars in clothing, or anything, a party of those bandits will come along and take it away from them. They said that the Carranza people were worse than the Villa people. Several of them said the Villa people would leave them something to eat, but the Carranza people would take it all. They said the Villa people would divide with them but the Carranza people would not, they would take it all.

This is from the testimony of S. E. Rix taken at San Antonio, Tex., on March 19, 1920. The witness was asked:

From the statement you have just made I infer that the property owners themselves have given up any attempt to farm their properties or to raise crops, for the reason that when they get these crops to the point of harvesting they are taken away from them by some one or other of the armed factions in Mexico?

The witness replied:

Yes, sir; that is just exactly what these poor working people who come here say, several of them I have talked with, some of them I have not talked to, but they say they can not raise anything; that when the corn got up to roasting ears or anything like that they would come along and cut it down and take it away, take it off.

And then the question was asked:

"And for that reason the big land owners themselves have abandoned any attempt to raise crops." To which the witness replied, "Yes."

The general trend of all that testimony shows to the same effect; that the political conditions down there for the last 10 years have been so disturbed that people of Mexico, the working people, are getting tired. At least 2,000 of them have come out, leaving their families behind them, because they could not bring them with them; they had to leave their families to perhaps starve, and they came out to try to get something to do, with the hope that they might be able to eventually bring their families out into the United States. Practically every one of them stated they would not return to Mexico again.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I understand that testimony has been taken on the border. I am glad to have it put in the record at this point also. I wanted to get Mr. Chamberlain's notion about it also.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that the condition has gone further than the mere matter of farms in Mexico; that it has wiped out 90 per cent of the industries of that country, except those small industries which can be carried on by one man or one man and his family.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Not big enough to blackmail.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the idea.

The CHAIRMAN. You stated generally that the United States practically had a mandatory for Mexico for several years past. I suppose you have a basis for that statement. I want to call your attention to the statement of the President of the United States to the Congress of the United States, on August 27, 1913, in which he said:

We are expected by the powers of the world to act as Mexico's nearest friend.

I am happy to say that several of the great Governments of the world have given this Government generous moral support in urging upon the provisional authorities at the City of Mexico the acceptance of our proffered good offices in the spirit in which they were made.

All the world expect us in such circumstances to act as Mexico's nearest friend and intimate adviser.

This consent of mankind to what we are attempting, this attitude of the great nations of the world toward what we may attempt in dealing with this distressed people at our doors, should make us feel the more solemnly bound to go to the utmost length of patience and forbearance in this painful and anxious business.

Also a statement by Secretary Bryan, on October 28 the same year, published in the New York Times, dated Washington, October 28:

A new and probably more definite Mexican policy is to be initiated by the United States, and pending the disclosure of this program, Great Britain, Germany, and France have given assurances that they will take no action.

That a request had been made to the powers to await a proposal regarding Mexico from this Government and that already these three European nations had acceded to the request was announced late to-day by Secretary Bryan. It is understood that practically every civilized nation has been notified of the purpose of the United States.

Senator Bacon, the then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, on October 25, made a statement from which I quote:

The approval of foreign governments of its policy in Mexico was desired by the United States which would always be glad to listen to suggestions. But it should be understood that the United States would adhere to the views it held with regard to Mexico on the ground that its interest in that Republic was much broader and comprehensive. Its interest, he said, was not merely material, but involved moral considerations that gave it a superior position.

Now, I want to ask you, Mr. Chamberlain, as you are familiar more or less with Mexican history, whose name is always referred to as the "Liberator"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Juarez, I should say.

The CHAIRMAN. Benita Juarez?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask that because I was interested in the question asked by my colleague in regard to the impression which would be created upon the masses of the Mexican people, were any Mexican leader approached by the United States to agree that he would accept friendly assistance from the United States and enter into an agreement by which the two countries could work in harmony, with this country securing certain rights and privileges in Mexico in return for its assistance. The fact is that such an agreement has been entered into in the past. There is to-day in existence a treaty between the United States and Mexico, from which I want to read one section into the record, because it seems to have been lost sight of by the American people, and I want to call attention to it in a preliminary way before calling specific attention to the acts of Benita Juarez upon practically that same subject. I will read article 8 into the record:

The Mexican Government having on the fifth day of February, 1853, authorized the early construction of a plank and rail road across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and, to secure the stable benefits of said transit way to the persons and merchandise of the citizens of Mexico, and the United States, it is stipulated that neither Government will interpose any obstacle to the transit of persons and merchandise of both Nations; and at no time shall higher charges be made for the transit of persons and property of citizens of the United States, than may be made for the persons and property of other foreign Nations, nor shall any interest in said transit way, nor any of the proceeds thereof, be transferred to any foreign Government.

The United States, by its agents, shall have the right to transport across the isthmus, in closed bags, the mails of the United States, not intended for distribution along the line of communication; also the effects of the United States Government or its citizens, which may be intended for transit, and not for distribution on the isthmus, free of customs house or other charges by the Mexican Government. Neither passports nor letters of security will be required of persons crossing the isthmus and not remaining in the country.

When the construction of the railroad shall have been completed, the Mexican Government agrees to open a port of entry, in addition to the port of Vera Cruz, at or near the terminus of said road on the Gulf of Mexico.

The two Governments will enter into arrangements for the prompt transit of troops and munitions of the United States, which that Government may have occasion to send from one part of its territory to another lying on opposite sides of the continent.

The Mexican Government having agreed to protect with its whole power the prosecution, preservation, and security of the work, the United States may extend its protection as it shall judge wise to it, when it may feel sanctioned or warranted by the public or international law.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in full force and effect. Now, in January, 1860, there was presented in the Senate of the United States a public treaty, well known in Mexico and acted upon in this country. That treaty was ordered printed for the use of the Senate, was never acted upon by the Mexican Government and the United States, but it was negotiated by the great liberator, Juarez. Among other things, it provides:

Whereas the ratifications of a treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation were exchanged between the United States of America and the United Mexican States on the 5th of April, 1831; and whereas the ratifications of a treaty for the alteration of boundary and regulations of a transit or right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec were exchanged between the same two Republics on the 30th of June, 1854; and whereas it is deemed expedient to amplify and extend some of the stipulations of the aforesaid treaties, and thus render more firm and inviolable the true and sincere friendship now existing between the United States and Mexico:

Wherefore the following stipulations have been agreed upon by means of a treaty of transits and commerce:

For which important object the President of the United States of America has appointed Robert M. McLane, a citizen of the United States, and envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America near the Mexican Government, with full powers; and the President of the Mexican Republic, in the exercise of the executive power, having conferred like full powers on the citizen Melchor Ocampo, secretary of state and foreign affairs; and the aforesaid plenipotentiaries, after having compared and exchanged in due form their respective powers as aforesaid, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I. As an amplification of the eighth article of the treaty of the 30th of December, 1853, the Mexican Republic cedes to the United States and its citizens and property, in perpetuity, the right of way, by the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, from one ocean to the other, by any kind of road now existing or that may hereafter exist, both Republics and their citizens enjoying it.

ART. II. Both Republics agree to protect all routes now existing, or that shall hereafter exist, over the said isthmus, and to guarantee the neutrality of the same.

ART. III. Simultaneous with the first bona fide use of any route across the said isthmus for purposes of actual transit, the Republic of Mexico shall establish two ports of deposit—the one on the east, the other on the west of the isthmus. No duty shall be levied by the Government of Mexico upon foreign effects and merchandise which may pass bona fide by the said isthmus, and which may not be intended for the consumption of the Mexican Republic. No incumbrance of tolls shall be imposed upon foreign persons and property which may pass by this road beyond those that may be imposed upon the persons and property of Mexicans. The Republic of Mexico will continue to allow the free and untrammelled transit of the mails of the United States, provided they pass in closed mail bags, and they be not for distribution on the road. Upon such mails none of the charges imposed, nor of those which may hereafter be imposed, shall be applied in any case.

ART. IV. The Mexican Republic agrees that it will establish for each of the two ports of deposit—the one on the east, the other on the west of the isthmus—regulations that will permit the effects and merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of the United States or of any foreign country to be entered and stored in warehouses, which shall be erected for that purpose, free of all tonnage or other duties whatever, except the necessary charges for cartage and storage, which said effects and merchandise may be subsequently withdrawn for transit across the said isthmus, and for shipment from either of the said ports of deposit to any foreign port, free of all tonnage or other duties whatever; and they may likewise be withdrawn from the said warehouses for sale and consumption, within the territory of the Mexican Republic, on the payment of such duties or imposts as the said Mexican Government may be pleased to enact.

ART. V. The Republic of Mexico agrees that should it become necessary at any time to employ military forces for the security and protection of persons and property passing over any of the routes aforesaid, it will employ the requisite force for that purpose; but upon failure to do this, from any cause whatever, the Government of the United States may, with the consent or at the request of the Government of Mexico, or of the minister thereof at Washington, or of the competent legally appointed local authorities, civil or military, employ such force for this and for no other purpose; and when, in the opinion of the Government of Mexico, the necessity ceases, such force shall be immediately withdrawn.

In the exceptional case, however, of unforeseen or imminent danger to the lives or property of citizens of the United States, the forces of said Republics are authorized to act for their protection without such consent having been previously obtained; and such forces shall be withdrawn when the necessity for this employment ceases.

ART. VI. The Mexican Republic grants to the United States the simple transit of its troops, military stores, and munitions of war by the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and by the transit or route of communication referred to in this convention from the city of Guaymas, on the Gulf of California, to the Rancho de Nogales or some suitable point on the boundary line between the Republic of Mexico and the United States near the one hundred and eleventh degree, west longitude from Greenwich, immediate notice thereof being given to the local authorities of the Republic of Mexico. And the two Republics agree, likewise, that it shall be an express stipulation with the companies or enterprises to whom hereafter the carriage or transportation is granted, by any railroads or other means of communication on the aforesaid transits, that the price for conveying the troops, military stores, and munitions of war of the two Republics shall be, at most, one-half the ordinary fare paid by the passengers or merchandise which may pass over the said transits; it being understood that if the grantees of privileges already granted, or which hereafter may be granted, upon railroads or other means of conveyance over said transits, refuse to receive for one-half the price of conveyance the troops, arms, military stores, and munitions of the United States, the latter Government will not impart to them the protection spoken of in Articles II and V, nor any other protection.

ART. VII. The Mexican Republic hereby cedes to the United States in perpetuity, and to their citizens and property, the right of way or transit across the territory of the Republic of Mexico, from the cities of Camargo and Matamoros, or any suitable point on the Rio Grande, in the State of Tamaulipas, via Monterey, to the port of Mazatlan, at the entrance of the Gulf of California, in the State of Sinaloa, and from the Rancho de Nogales, or any suitable point on the boundary line between the Republic of Mexico and the United States near the one hundred and eleventh degree, west longitude from Greenwich, via Magdalena and Hermosillo to the city of Guaymas, on the Gulf of California, in the State of Sonora, over any railroad or route, of communication, natural or artificial, which may now or hereafter exist or be constructed, to be used and enjoyed in the same manner and upon equal terms by both Republics and their respective citizens, the Mexican Republic reserving always for itself the right of sovereignty which it now has upon all the transits spoken of in the present treaty. All stipulations and regulations of every kind applicable to the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec that are or have been agreed upon between the two Republics are hereby extended and applied to the foregoing transits or rights of way, excepting the right of passing troops, military stores, and munitions of war from the Rio Grande to the Gulf of California.

ART. VIII. The two Republics likewise agree that from the list of merchandise here annexed the Congress of the United States shall select those which, being the natural, industrial, or manufactured product of either of the two Republics, may be admitted for sale and consumption in either of the two countries under conditions of a perfect reciprocity, whether they be considered free of duty or at a rate of duty to be fixed by the Congress of the United States; it being the intention of the Mexican Republic to admit the articles in question at the lowest rate of duty, and even free if the Congress of the United States consents thereto. Their introduction from one to the other Republic shall be made at the points which the Governments of both Republics may fix upon at the limits or boundaries thereof ceded and granted for the transits, and in perpetuity, by this convention, either across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec or from the Gulf of California to the interior frontier between Mexico and the United States. If any similar privileges should be granted by Mexico to other Nations at the termini of the aforesaid transits upon the Gulfs of Mexico and California and upon the Pacific Ocean, it shall be in consideration of the same conditions and stipulations of reciprocity which are imposed upon the United States by the terms of this convention.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What is the date of that?

The CHAIRMAN. 1860, entered into in 1859.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What is the date of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo?

The CHAIRMAN. 1848; and the treaty of Gadsden was in 1854, containing this agreement.

Benita Juarez has never lost his prestige in Mexico by virtue of the fact that he entered into that treaty, has he.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. His birthday is celebrated every year in every little village and hamlet in Mexico, is it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He is called the "Liberator of Mexico," or the "Lawgiver of Mexico"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, if the Mexican citizens approved the acts of Benita Juarez, or have at least tacitly given their approval, if a real patriotic Mexican citizen of the present day should enter into a similar agreement with the United States, or an agreement of the character you have suggested, with reference to financing Mexico, except through the mouth of demagogues, would there likely be any objection on the part of the Mexican people?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that while they do not dare say so aloud, that within their hearts they would look upon it as the greatest benefit they could possibly secure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The reason I wanted to know about that was because you stated that the more hostile Carranza appeared to be to the United States the more popular he was in Mexico. I wondered whether, if a man tried to be friendly with the United States, it would make him unpopular?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It did not make him popular, it increased his power. In a way it did make him popular, as one who is a champion of the common people, and a champion of the whole Latin America, who dared to take a stand against the colossus of the North. It may have had that effect. But as far as we were concerned it made him more powerful in that it impressed his people with the belief that he could flout us with impunity.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, a great part of the people, 10,000,000 out of the 16,000,000, did not know whether he was a friend or an enemy to the United States, and did not care?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, you can say that a large proportion of the Mexican people were rather indifferent.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Eighty per cent or about that are Indians, are they not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would say that 80 per cent of the Indians is an inarticulate class, a very low development of peons, but they have some excellent qualities. They had a tremendous reputation at one time for honesty, but that has been undermined to a certain extent by this long continuing condition of banditry.

Senator BRANDEGEE. But the peon is Indian, is he not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are over 50 various tribes, and they are generally named as belonging to the peon class.

Senator BRANDEGEE. They are not Spanish?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; they are not Spanish.

This point as to whether the taking of any such step as I have indicated would cause a great outcry takes us right back to a statement which has been made to me frequently by Mexicans, that while they would not say so publicly they are in favor of intervention, that they pray for it every night of their lives; that such a sentiment is tremendous now in Mexico, especially with the merchant class. I don't want to be taken as saying that those people would back intervention. They would not. They would fight against it, but they want it.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You spoke of some of these large American industrial concerns there being perfectly satisfied with conditions as they are, because they get what they want by paying a tribute and keep out competition. What is the general opinion among Americans in Mexico as to the wisdom of letting things go as they are?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are a great many Americans in all kinds of activities down there who would say that same thing: "I am getting along all right. I am making a revenue out of chaos." But if you take them to one side and say to them, "Is it not the ideal solution to have economic control of the country? Would not that end all the trouble both for Mexico and for us?" I have yet to come across a man who would not immediately reply, "You are quite right on that point."

Senator BRANDEGEE. Then they do not want conditions to remain as they are?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They do not. They are making possibly a very good income out of existing conditions, but at the same time they will admit that the nearest to the ideal that we could accomplish is the shaping up of a firm girder on which the Mexicans can build, and that girder would be economic control, enforced by the power of the United States.

Senator BRANDEGEE. However contented any of them may be temporarily with that condition, they all know that in the nature of things it can not be permanent?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They do.

The CHAIRMAN. They are taking a gambler's chance.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true of a great many of our chambers of commerce. One of the greatest difficulties I had in Mexico was to hold down individual investors and chambers of commerce who wished to rush into Mexico and take advantage of high prices, irrespective of the claims of their own blood countrymen whose property had been destroyed and who had been robbed of all that they had. They said, "That is all right. They don't rob me." That opposition is natural. I think the same opposition is threatening us now. I believe some of the biggest interests are dickering at this moment, directly or indirectly, with Obregon or somebody else who thinks he is going to be the top man, and I think if this country does not take measures to stop that tendency it will lose the greatest opportunity we have ever had for putting that country on a firm and settled basis.

The CHAIRMAN. On that line the committee has in its possession a telegram sent from New York City, on the 24th day of October, 1917, from the American Smelting & Refining Co. to its agent in El Paso, Tex., reading as follows:

Garcia now here with Obregon. Is in our employ reporting to ———. States to-day Gen. Murgla has offered to supply all troops necessary for our protection where we resume operations. Please see ——— and arrange through Garcia or otherwise to secure this assistance from Gen. Murgla for Santa Barbara.

The Garcia mentioned is known to the committee as Andreas Garcia, then inspector general of Mexican consulates on the border of this country and Mexico, and being more recently, until the fall of Juarez, the postmaster general of Mexico. This telegram indicates that he was in the employ of an American company, and attempting to secure the services of the Mexican army under Gen. Murgla for the protection of certain of their interests.

Speaking for myself, I have no criticism whatever of the action of the company in sending that telegram. They were attending strictly to their business and the business of their stockholders. They were not being protected by this Government in the operation of their legitimate business, and where they were able to take advantage of the conditions and secure protection by paying for it to Mexican agents, I think it was their business to do it, and I have no possible criticism to offer.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no criticism, Mr. Chairman, except this general criticism, and I refer back to the statement I made that under a grafting administration in Mexico, I don't care who heads the oligarchy, our people were forced into the position of being bribers if they wanted to do business. What we ought to do is to look forward to such a condition where an honest man as well as a briber can do business in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee knows of other companies and corporations doing business along similar lines, and there was no intention to make any invidious distinction. I simply pointed out the conditions under which our interests are able to continue business, as additional and corroborative evidence of the fact that you have stated the little man and small American, who has not enough money or influence to employ an army for protection, is the man who suffers.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I made no distinction, because I included everybody doing a successful business in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. You have referred to the note sent by this Government to the Mexican Government on April 2, 1917, which was published by Carranza in Mexico, apparently with the intention of answering a speech made by the President of the United States to newspaper men.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has a copy of that note of April 2, 1918, which was given publicity by Mr. Carranza, and of course, even under ordinary circumstances, would be justified in calling attention to it. Following that note another was written, under date of August 12, 1912, forwarded to the Mexican Government and delivery, presumably by our ambassador to the Mexican President, sent by Mr. Lansing, in which note, among other thing, the Secretary of State says:

As I have not received an answer to my note of April 2, I am instructed to draw your excellency's attention to that note and to point out again the concern with which my Government entertains as to the possible effect of these various decrees upon the vested rights in Mexico of American citizens in oil properties. And to further direct your excellency's attention to the necessity which may arise, in order to protect the property of its citizens in Mexico, divested or injuriously affected by the said decrees, to impel the United States to protect the property of its citizens.

Now, what impression was made upon the minds of the Mexican people generally by the sending of notes of that kind, in the face of the President's statement that under no circumstances did we propose to use force in compelling Mexico to do anything?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It made notes of that kind utterly of no effect, while making the ambassador who was put in the position of delivering the note ridiculous.

The CHAIRMAN. And it was that condition brought about by these assertions in these notes, and the impression made upon the Mexican people, that caused you to resign from your office?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was the culmination of those conditions, and the desire to be able to speak freely on the entire subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what answer Mr. Carranza finally made to the note of August 12, as communicated to this Government?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I have never been informed as to the answer.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Did he make any answer?

The CHAIRMAN. We were so informed by Mr. Fletcher under date of August 14.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I remember talking to Mr. Fletcher about that, but I don't remember what happened well enough to quote him.

The CHAIRMAN. A portion of the answer, as forwarded to this Government, was as follows:

I presented in writing the request contained in your telegram 1357, August 12, to the President at an interview this afternoon. In reply he stated that it was impossible to postpone operation of the petroleum decree further. In the fundamental questions involved, i. e., the conflicting rights of the Government and private individuals to the subsoil products, he explained that the decrees were fiscal legislation merely, to pass laws that would give effect to article 27 of the Constitution and to legislate as to the above question was the province of Congress. He stated that if the difficulty could not be settled except by war or intervention he was sorry, but was prepared to confront this alternative.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Which was simply to be expected, in view of President Wilson's assertion that no matter what he did there would be no war.

Senator BRANDEGEE. We have not replied to Mr. Carranza's ultimatum, as far as I am aware of.

The CHAIRMAN. No. But again, on October 1, 1919, we said, referring to this same subject:

In this view of the matter the Government of the United States, owing as it does to its citizens, the duty of protecting them in foreign lands, both in their persons and their property rights, must strongly protest against the action of the Mexican Government as outlined above, and characterize it as threatening confiscation and a denial of justice.

In communicating the foregoing the Government of the United States takes occasion to express the confident hope that pending the general settlement of the petroleum question by specific legislation of the Mexican Congress, the administrative authorities of Mexico will respect the vested rights of American citizens and evince that respect by withdrawing its insistence that interested American citizens comply with the provisions of the decrees mentioned.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do we not say we will hold them to strict accountability?

The CHAIRMAN. No; not these notes. We only used that in reference to Germany and Huerta.

You spoke about a series of articles you are publishing in Collier's. Have they begun to be published yet?

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Yes; three have appeared, and three or four more will probably appear.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all I care to ask you. You will be excused.

(Thereupon, at 4.30 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS

HEARING

BEFORE A

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS UNITED STATES SENATE

SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS

SECOND SESSION

PURSUANT TO

S. Res. 106

DIRECTING THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS TO INVESTIGATE THE MATTER OF OUTRAGES ON CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES IN MEXICO

PART 20

Printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1920

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, Massachusetts, Chairman.

PORTER J. McCUMBER , North Dakota.	GILBERT H. HITCHCOCK , Nebraska.
WILLIAM E. BORAH , Idaho.	JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS , Mississippi.
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE , Connecticut.	CLAUDE A. SWANSON , Virginia.
ALBERT B. FALL , New Mexico.	ATLEE POMERENE , Ohio.
PHILANDER C. KNOX , Pennsylvania.	MARCUS A. SMITH , Arizona.
WARREN G. HARDING , Ohio.	KEY PITTMAN , Nevada.
HIRAM W. JOHNSON , California.	JOHN K. SHIELDS , Tennessee.
HARRY S. NEW , Indiana.
GEORGE H. MOSES , New Hampshire.

C. F. REDMOND, Clerk.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

ALBERT B. FALL, Chairman.

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE .	MARCUS A. SMITH .
	DAN M. JACKSON , Clerk .

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

MONDAY, MAY 17, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

The committee met at 11 a. m., pursuant to the call of the chairman, in room 128, Senate Office Building, Senator Albert B. Fall presiding.

Present, Senators Fall (chairman) and Brandegee.

TESTIMONY OF MR. CHARLES E. JONES.

(The witness was duly sworn by the Chairman.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may state your name to the committee.

Mr. JONES. Charles E. Jones.

The CHAIRMAN. Your residence.

Mr. JONES. New York.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your business, Mr. Jones?

Mr. JONES. Newspaper man.

The CHAIRMAN. What have you been engaged in for the last several years past, in addition to your writing?

Mr. JONES. In addition to my newspaper work, for the last five years I have been cooperating with the United States Department of Justice Bureau of Investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. Where has your work or your cooperation with the Department of Justice carried you, and with whom generally have you been doing such work?

Mr. JONES. Throughout nearly all parts of the United States, particularly along the border, and in Central America and in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. In Mexico, have you had confidential relations, or have you been, in your cooperation with the department, in contact with prominent Mexicans?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. Shall I explain how that came about?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I think you had best make an explanation of it.

Mr. JONES. During the latter part of 1917 I received a proposition from the Mexican foreign office, through the secretary of foreign relations at that time, Candido Aguilar. That proposition came to me through Mr. Adam Leckie, who was a member of the Mexican law firm of Gonzalez Roa Carbajal and Leckie. The proposition was something like this: They were very anxious to have a publicity director through the United States, and also to at all times be thoroughly kept advised as to exactly what was occurring here in Washington, or where anything might arise of interest throughout the United States, and they particularly referred at that time to the activities of the revolutionary interests throughout the United States.

For probably two years prior to that time I had been sending almost daily reports to the Department of Justice, and as soon as that proposition reached me it was immediately reported at that time to A. Bruce Bielaski, who was Chief of the Bureau of Investigation at that time. The negotiations continued for probably two months, insomuch as I had in my possession an unusually large quantity of papers, documents, etc., pertaining to the activities of the Mexican revolutionists of which the Mexican Government was very anxious to secure control. When I first started in with the Department of Justice it was thoroughly understood between Mr. Bielaski and myself that under no circumstances would I accept any remuneration, nor was I ever sworn in to the Department of Justice service, although they were anxious to have same done.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You mean you were not employed at all by the Department of Justice?

Mr. JONES. The proposition came up in this way, Senator: Things were developing pretty rapidly down in Central America, and Forrest C. Pendleton, at that time division superintendent for the Gulf States, knowing I was quite familiar with conditions in Central America, asked me if I would consent to go into the employment or service of the Department of Justice. I told him that due to their remuneration and my own business affairs that it would be impossible to consider a proposition of that kind, but that I would agree to help them out, providing it would be absolutely at all times kept thoroughly confidential. So, with that understanding I became connected with them, always in an inside capacity.

About two weeks after that Mr. Bielaski came to New Orleans, where I was at that time, to see me, and asked me if I would continue to cooperate with them. So, I agreed with him to do so, provided, as I have stated, it would be kept entirely confidential, and that my hands would not be tied, as far as information or anything of that kind that I might secure was concerned, if at any time I wanted to use it. So in that way we started.

For a period of a year and a half or probably two years I even paid all of my own expenses, although they repeatedly insisted upon me rendering accounts, which I refused to do. At the time Mr. Bielaski entered into this agreement with me I told him that eventually I expected to utilize in a newspaper way at any time any stuff I might get. So it was thoroughly understood and agreed between he and myself that if at any time I wanted to use the stuff I had a perfect right to do so.

So, with that understanding, I cut in with them, and up to the time Mr. Bielaski quit, and for probably three and a half or four months after that, I did the best I could for them. When Bielaski got out I dropped out myself as soon as I could. So from the time I started I handled for his department, down in Central America and elsewhere, considerable of their Mexican investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you documentary evidence?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; and I might as well submit that right now.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Documentary evidence of what?

The CHAIRMAN. Of his association with the Department of Justice.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Before you put that in the record, let me ask you another question in line with what I started to ask.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You say you cooperated with them, and you did not, as I understand you, receive any compensation?

Mr. JONES. None, whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. Except later on, after a couple of years, they paid your expenses?

Mr. JONES. When the Felicista movement first became active the private secretary of Mrs. Diaz, Guillermo Rosas, was coming to New York, and he and two other parties came up, we were endeavoring at that time to secure the Felicista codes, and so I brought Rosas and these two other Mexicans up and paid all their expenses. We did succeed in lifting the entire codes on the trip, which was turned over to the Department of Justice, photostatic copies made and turned over to them. On the way back, after having spent about five or six weeks on the trip up here and in New York, Mr. Pendleton said, "You are absolutely foolish to continue to pay your own expenses, and you render an account for this trip"; so I did, and from that time on, such expenses as I incurred I was reimbursed for by the bureau.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What I wanted to do was to make perfectly plain whatever the fact was in relation to your cooperation with the Department of Justice. As I understand you, you were in no sense at any time an official of the department?

Senator BRANDEGEE. Or in its employ?

Mr. JONES. Never.

Senator BRANDEGEE. But when they asked you to do certain things that involved expense, later on you thought it was proper and did accept compensation for those expenditures?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What was your motive in cooperating with the department in that way if you were not an employee of it?

Mr. JONES. As I explained to you a few moments ago, due to personal friendship of Mr. Pendleton and myself, and as the revolutionary movement on foot in Honduras at that particular time was most active, and due to certain connections I had in Honduras, I was in a position to get the inside facts. The Bureau of Investigation at that time probably only had 250 or 300 men and a very limited appropriation for the financial support of the bureau. Pendleton's hands were absolutely tied as far as being able to get the information he wanted was concerned; therefore, knowing that probably I might be able to get it, he came to me to get me to do it. That was Forrest C. Pendleton.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I am interested in knowing whether it was simply your friendship for Pendleton or whether it was a patriotic idea to help your country?

Mr. JONES. Both. At that particular time and in that particular instance I did it just offhand to cooperate with Pendleton, without ever thinking I would be called upon to cut in again. I produced what Pendleton thought were excellent results. He then asked me, "Would you be willing to consider entering the Government service?" I told him I could not do so, but I would be willing to cooperate with him provided it would always be thoroughly confidential. He evidently wrote to Mr. Bielaski about it, for within two weeks or so Mr. Bielaski came down, and I then entered into an agreement with him that whenever or wherever I could be of any service I would be very glad to cooperate with them.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I understand that now. Why was it that this member of this Mexican law firm hit upon you as a desirable man to employ in their interests?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Leckie and myself have been very strong personal friends for a good many years. He was a member of the law firm of Leckie, Cox & Shierer, in the Southern Building in Washington, D. C., and after Carranza began to get on his feet down there. Leckie, who had had in his possession a great many of the claims placed in his hands by foreigners having investments in Mexico, decided undoubtedly that probably the best way to successfully handle the claims would be to connect himself with a Mexican law firm, which he did. And when Leckie was approached by Gonzalez Roa, who was probably as close to Carranza as any Mexican, Leckie immediately thought of me and put the proposition up to me.

Senator BRANDEGEE. That explains it. What is Leckie's full name?

Mr. JONES. Adam Leckie.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Now you may proceed with your documentary evidence.

Mr. JONES. So, at the time Mr. Pendleton carried through that proposition with me, from that time on almost daily I handled some Central American or Mexican work for the Bureau of Investigation in connection with my newspaper work.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do I understand that all the time, over the period about which you are testifying, your newspaper work was your dominating idea?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Senator BRANDEGEE. And your regular occupation?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. And all this other information you came into possession of was acquired primarily in the newspaper work?

Mr. JONES. It was acquired primarily for that, but at the request of Chief Bielaski, Mr. Pendleton, or others, I had to choke 95 per cent of it to death, because if I had published the information I secured it would have, 9 times out of 10, interfered with the plans and future efforts of the Bureau of Investigation. So in the end my connection and association with the bureau was decidedly a very undesirable connection for me.

Senator BRANDEGEE. It was a losing financial operation?

Mr. JONES. At all stages of the game. If I could have published what I had there is no telling what I could have had. I could have scooped the country from a newspaper standpoint almost every day.

Senator BRANDEGEE. And yet, while you had to choke this to death, as you express it, at the request of Mr. Pendleton or Mr. Bielaski, nevertheless, you had with him an understanding when you went in that you could at any time make public anything you wanted to?

Mr. JONES. An absolutely positive understanding.

Senator BRANDEGEE. But when you saw how important it was, at their request, you suppressed it?

Mr. JONES. With the idea, you understand, Senator, that it would take days and days to explain, but if I could have published the stuff that I had I would have had a newspaper beat almost every day.

Senator BRANDEGEE. That is all I care to ask on that point.

Mr. JONES. Under date of June 28, 1916, from Washington, Mr. Bielaskie wrote me at New Orleans as follows:

MY DEAR MR. JONES: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 21, 1916, with respect to the awkward position in which certain remarks made by one Dr. J. H. Wiley have put you and Mr. Pendleton.

I think that the actions which you and Mr. Pendleton have taken have cleared up this matter as satisfactorily as is possible without so revealing your relations with this department as to seriously interfere with the best interests of the Government.

If Dr. Wiley should continue to make statements of a character likely to seriously injure either yourself or Special Agent Pendleton, we can probably find some way of inducing him to pursue a more proper course; but at the present time it seems to me that you and Mr. Pendleton must, for the good of the public service, make whatever sacrifices are essential to keep your relations with the Government confidential.

With respect to the Dusart case, the Diaz case, the Honduras revolutionary matter, and numerous other similar matters of grave concern to the United States, I am only too glad to testify to the discreet, patriotic, and invaluable service which you have rendered.

I appreciate very much your assurance that you will continue to aid us as heretofore and assure you that I will be glad to testify to the value of your service at any time such action may seem desirable.

Very truly, yours,

A. BRUCE BIELASKI, Chief.

I am introducing this due to the fact that several times in carrying out the suggestions of Chief Bielaski and Mr. Pendleton and others connected with the Department of Justice and the State Department I have put myself in a false position. This man Wiley made some rather dirty remarks, and so I wrote to Bielaski that I could not afford under any circumstances to carry through such plans as that in the future. This letter was the result of that.

Under date of June 16, 1919, Mr. Bielaski, from New York City, wrote Mr. L. L. Winslow, State Department, Washington, D. C., as follows:

DEAR WINSLOW: This note will introduce to you Mr. Charles E. Jones, of New Orleans, La. During the time that I was with the Department of Justice Mr. Jones was a very valuable source of information and assistance, especially with respect to matters pertaining to Mexico and Central America. I think some one in your office once told me that he turned in a greater amount of correct information regarding these countries than any other individual. You will find that the reports which have come to you from him through the Department of Justice were in the name of Cresce.

Yours, very truly,

A. BRUCE BIELASKI.

Senator BRANDEGEE. These you are reading from are photostatic copies, are they not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you have the original, from which the photostatic copy was made?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I was going to ask you if you had not originally had some communication with this committee under the same name which you have given there—Cresce?

Mr. JONES. How is that?

The CHAIRMAN. In your original communications heretofore had with this committee during this investigation have you communicated with them under the name of Cresse?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; due to the fact that Capt. Hanson was familiar with the department name that was given me by the department, carrying me under the name of "Cresse." That was Mr. Bielaski's own suggestion, due to the fact that there were in the State Department innumerable leaks which went directly back to various Mexican factions.

Under date of May 28, 1919, on a Department of Justice letter-head, I wish to read the following letter, dated at New Orleans, from Forrest C. Pendleton:

MAY 28, 1919.

To whom it may concern:

I have known the bearer, Mr. Charles E. Jones, for over three years and I am glad, indeed, to testify to the very valuable assistance he has rendered to the Department of Justice, particularly to the New Orleans office.

In my opinion, he more than anyone else is entitled to the credit for breaking up the activities throughout the United States of the Nicaraguan, Guatemalan, Salvador, and Honduran revolutionary movements. He has also furnished the Department of Justice as much, or more inside information pertaining to revolutionary movements in Mexico as any man in this country. Results secured by him regarding activities of German spies and propagandists in Mexico and along the Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, and California border was of great value to the United States Government.

I know of no man in the United States so thoroughly posted on Mexican and Central American political affairs, and he is, without question, the most astute, accurate, and resourceful investigator I have ever met.

Mr. Jones is thoroughly trustworthy, and you can absolutely rely on anything he tells you.

Yours, very truly,

FORREST C. PENDLETON,
Division Superintendent.

Senator BRANDEGEE. If these are all in writing, could they not be handed to the stenographer and put in the record, and you proceed with your testimony?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. I will introduce a letter from Charles E. Breniman, division superintendent of the San Antonio division, dated January 13, 1919.

I will also introduce a letter from Adam Leckie, dated May 20, 1918, addressed to Hon. Ignacio Bonillas, Mexican ambassador, at Washington, D. C.

I also introduce a letter from R. E. Muzguiz, consul general of Mexico, at New Orleans, addressed to Bonillas, dated June 17, 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. These letters may be printed as an appendix to the testimony of this witness.

(The three letters referred to last above are printed in full as an appendix to the testimony of this witness, together with other letters to be furnished.)

Senator BRANDEGEE. Is this Adam Leckie, who was a member of this firm of Gonzalez Roa, Carbajal & Leckie, the one that you spoke of being in the Southern Building at Washington?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. Unfortunately, Mr. Leckie died last December. He probably might have been bumped off. I don't know whether he was or not. But in connection with Mr. Leckie I think it in common justice to him that I should say that at the time Mr. Leckie was in Mexico connected with that Mexican law firm, it is a matter of knowledge to Ambassador Fletcher at that time, and to myself and Chief Bielaski, that Mr. Leckie was probably the very best inside source of information that I personally had in Mexico City. He personally was able to get stuff directly from Gonzalez Roa, who in turn got it from Carranza or Carranza's higher officials. I personally know of no man in Mexico, or America, who was more patriotic and more loyal and more honest to our Government than Mr. Leckie. It is true that he had probably closer relations with prominent Mexican officials at that time than almost any American, with the possible exception of Mr. Douglass. Leckie, until the day of his death, never had the slightest idea that I ever had any connection with the Bureau of Investigation, and in that way I was able to get stuff which Leckie told me he in turn had offered to our military attaché in Mexico, and also Ambassador Fletcher. He tendered his services without any qualifications to the embassy down there. What they did with it I don't know, but I do know that Mr. Leckie was a 100 per cent square American, and if it had not been for the stupidity of the State Department Leckie could have been of great service in many Mexican matters as they came through, but for some reason, largely because he was a Republican, I imagine—that was his opinion—they did not care to have anything to do with him.

Senator BRANDEGEE. When you say he offered information repeatedly to our ambassador, Mr. Fletcher, in Mexico, and to other people, do you mean to intimate that although he offered it, it was not availed of?

Mr. JONES. I could not correctly say that, Senator, but I believe this. The correct interpretation of that would be, for instance, Mr. Leckie, at the time Mr. Rhoades and Mr. Garfield were sent down there by some oil company to negotiate some transaction I happened to meet both Rhoades and Garfield and Leckie at San Antonio, Leckie was coming out and they were going in. They had been down there prior to that time, and Leckie's statement regarding that was that he had secured certain information from Gonzalez Roa as to what Luis Cabrera and Carranza had already said and that he had told that to the oil attorneys and in turn had made certain suggestions to the Embassy and the Embassy simply thanked him for it and let it go. He had made the offer, as I understood it, to the ambassador, in confidence, to make certain recommendations to Luis Cabrera. The ambassador said he would examine into it and let him know later, but he never did. Leckie said that repeatedly, time after time, he had offered certain things that he thought he could secure inside information on, and had suggested to the military attaché and the ambassador that he would be very glad to do it, and they thanked him profusely for it and never went ahead with it. They were either scared of him or didn't want to use him.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Why did Leckie maintain an office up here?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Leckie practiced law, as I understand it, for 20 or 30 years, up here. One of his partners was assistant attorney general under Mr. Gregory. When these claims held by foreigners began to accumulate Leckie saw the opportunity, as I understand it, to clean up a good deal of money by centralizing a majority of these claims into the hands of one lawyer or one firm of lawyers, so he immediately began to corral all of the claims, and had I imagine probably half or two-thirds, and spent a good deal of money on it, so he told me. Then he decided the quickest and surest way to procure results would be to go to Mexico himself and open a law office there. So after arriving in Mexico City he had the opportunity to become a partner in this Mexican law firm. That law firm, in connection with Leckie, was handling all the claims against the Mexican Government, and of course, knowing how things were done down there, that law firm of Gonzalez Roa, Carbajal, and Leckie, if they had ever been able to put the claims through, would have split them all the way around, and there is no telling how much graft would have been paid out to have these claims settled.

Senator BRANDEGEE. When did Leckie become a member of that Mexican law firm?

Mr. JONES. That I don't know correctly, but in the early part of 1917.

Senator BRANDEGEE. If Leckie never suspected that you had any relation whatever with the Department of Justice or with our Government, what did he suppose you were?

Mr. JONES. Strictly a newspaper man, which I had been for 20 years.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Very well. That is all I wish to ask about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you through introducing the letters?

Mr. JONES. No, sir. I have here three letters from Andreas Garcia, dated July 22, August 5, and August 6, 1918, which I wish to introduce.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be filed and printed as an appendix to the testimony.

(The letters to which reference was made are printed in full as a part of the appendix to the testimony of this witness.)

The CHAIRMAN. Referring to these letters from Andreas Garcia, which you have introduced, he was at that time inspector of consulates of Mexico and Mexican consul along the border, and particularly in Texas, from El Paso to Brownsville, was he not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And reported to them and did his business with them and with their consulates, and was familiar with their revolutionary activities?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; the revolutionary activities and the entire plan.

The CHAIRMAN. And anything that you thought was of real importance to this Government that you discovered in that way, or through any other investigation, you communicated to Mr. Bielaski?

Mr. JONES. My reports on file with the Department of Justice would probably total 3,000 in number, showing that repeatedly I would be asked to come to Washington, or was passing through Washington, and during our European war period the State Department repeatedly would have liked to have told Bonillas things they would like to say, which they could not say, and so I was told either by Mr. Bielaski or Mr. Pike to find out this, that, or the other thing from the ambassador, whatever they might want to get from him, which I did.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice in this letter of Mr. Garcia's of July 22, 1918, he states among other things:

As to the remittance, you had better see your consul in your city and have him ask for authority to pay you. According to the papers I have received from the subsecretary of foreign affairs, you should report to your consul at New Orleans, or through any other of our consuls in your operations, and comply with instructions.

Again, on August 6, acknowledging one of yours of July 22, he states that he is "inclosing the same to the foreign office at Mexico, and suggest that you use your own judgment and make yourself known wherever it is entirely necessary, and that it will not interfere with your work."

Under date of August 5, in Spanish with the English translation, there is a note of introduction from Andreas Garcia to the chief of arms at Matamoras, Tamaulipas, Mexico, stating that "You have been commissioned by the secretary of foreign relations of 'our Government' (meaning Mexico) to watch and counteract the work of the enemies of this Government who are employed in that country." That is, the United States?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. Now, to get this entire record straight, when the Mexican Government made me that proposition, originally through Leckie, it was immediately reported to the Department of Justice in my reports, which are a matter of record over at the bureau. The negotiations ran along for probably two and a half to three months, somewhere along in that time, and due to other matters that I had on hand I could not give the time to the Bureau of Investigations to go into that other matter and handle that in connection with my own work.

During February of 1918 the proposition was again put up to me, and I at that time reported the matter again to the Department of Justice, and likewise wrote a personal letter to Chief Bielaski regarding the matter, stating to him that the Mexican Government was very anxious to employ me as their publicity director, and also being connected with the Secret Service of the United States; they offered me a salary of $2,000 per month, and were also very anxious to purchase every paper or document I might have in my possession pertaining to the revolutionary enemies of their Government throughout the United States and Central America.

Several weeks later I discussed that matter with Mr. Bielaski, and he said there was absolutely no objection on the part of the Bureau of Investigation to my accepting the proposition offered me by the Mexican Government, and that I likewise was perfectly within my rights in letting the Mexican government have all those papers and documents, for which they at that time offered $40,000.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Through whom was that offer made?

Mr. JONES. The offer was made through Andreas Garcia. I will be very glad to introduce the original reports, which can go in the record, a carbon copy of my reports, covering the whole thing, to the Department of Justice as soon as my trunk gets here.

The CHAIRMAN. The reports may be incorporated in the appendix to your testimony.

Mr. JONES. That resulted in me then going, at Leckie's telegraphic request, to El Paso, Tex., to meet Garcia, and at El Paso Garcia entered into an agreement with me on instructions from the Mexican foreign office, to handle the work mentioned at $2,000 per month, and again made me an offer of $40,000 for the papers and documents.

All of these papers and documents I did not have with me, and I told him I would take the matter up later with him. When I returned to New Orleans, I made a complete report, carbon copies of which I will submit later, to Chief Bielaski. Several weeks after that I was in Washington and at that time Chief Bielaski told me, "Jones, under no circumstances allow the Mexican government to get hold of the papers and documents pertaining to the activities of their revolutionary enemies in the United States or elsewhere."

I mentioned at that time to Bielaski the fact that I had written to him, also covered the matter thoroughly in my reports, and it was particularly fortunate that I did not happen to have all the papers and documents with me at El Paso, because if I had, probably they would have at that time been turned over to the Mexican government. The Mexican government never secured those papers.

From that time on for a period of six months I retained my connection with the Mexican government, and in that way was able, from Ambassador Bonillas and practically every Mexican consul that they had along the border, in New York, New Orleans, or any other place, and from their offices in Mexico, to secure complete inside information as to the plans and activities, etc., they had in the United States, throughout Central America and Mexico, and as these plans were secured by me, they were immediately reported to the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, as per reports on file there, and duplicate copies likewise sent to the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, in connection with these activities, what did you learn and report of important to the United States with reference to the activities of Mexico in connection with the Central American matters, and the Republic of Honduras, Guatemala, Salvador, etc.?

Mr. JONES. During the latter part of 1916, nearly all of 1917, and up until the early part of 1918, I secured through Honduran, Guatemalan, and Nicaraguan revolutionists, at that time conducting their propaganda and plans in the United States, information to the effect that they had a proposition on with Carranza, Gen. Obregon, at that time Mexican Minister of War and Marine, and practically all other Mexican officials of any prominence at that time close to Carranza.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the nature of that proposition that they had on with Obregon and Carranza and the Mexican officials?

Mr. JONES. The scheme in its entirety, Senator, was a plan whereby, with arms, ammunition, and money, likewise several boats, to be furnished by the Mexican Government, armed expeditions out of Cera Cruz, one or two ports in Quintana Roo, and another port near Belize, British Honduras, and other armed expeditions out of New Orleans, were simultaneously to attack Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Honduras, all those countries in Central America, and by the revolutionary route, overthrow the existing legal governments in each of those Central American countries, and establish a revolutionary leader as president in each of those countries.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time, and particularly after the United States entered the European War, which among these countries you have named, Salvador, Mexico, or Guatemala, particularly, were friendly to the United States?

Mr. JONES. Estrada Cabrera, who was for many years President of Guatemala, was notoriously friendly to the United States, and I think the day the United States declared war, the following day Guatemala did.

The CHAIRMAN. Mexico never did declare war, did she?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; Mexico never did declare war. Salvador was particularly pro-Mexican, as as much anti-American as Mexico, and was known to be the tool of Carranza in Central America.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the object of the attack upon Nicaragua, if you know? What were the conditions in Nicaragua?

Mr. JONES. At that time Dr. Julius Irias, was one of the leaders of the Nicaraguan Liberal party, which is represented by about 65 per cent of the voters of Nicaragua. Irias claimed, not only to myself in quite a number of conversations, but likewise to others who repeated the remarks to me, that Mr. Chamorra, who is now President of Nicaragua, and at this time in 1916, and the early part of 1917, was Nicaraguan Minister to Washington, had been promised by Secretary of State at that time, William Jennings Bryan, that if Chamorra would consent to the treaty affecting certain canal rights across Nicaragua—

The CHAIRMAN. The San Juan River route?

Mr. JONES. Yes. That he, Bryan, would see that Chamorra was elected President of Nicaragua. Irias and his friends and supporters claimed, that, due to the influence of Bryan and of the State Department, irrespective of the majority of the voters in Nicaragua, the election really was a cooked proposition for Chamorra.

The CHAIRMAN. Why was Mexico interested in behalf of Irias? Just because of his antagonism to this Government?

Mr. JONES. They were employed at that time, in looking around, in connection with Von Eckhardt, German Ambassador to Mexico, trying to establish in Central America a stronghold, which, if they had succeeded, would have resulted in the United States facing in Central America a strong pro-German situation, such as we had in Mexico. In other words, it was the idea and plan of Carranza, with Von Eckhardt and Carranza's officials, to gain control of all of Central America.

The CHAIRMAN. Then this movement, so far as Mexico was concerned, against Nicaragua, and Guatemala, and Honduras, in conjunction with Salvador, and the revolutionists in these different countries, was in aid of the German propaganda and German proposition as advanced by Von Eckhardt?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. I will introduce later a signed statement proving that absolutely, from parties who were approached in regard to the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you cover that at this time, unless you have some memoranda which you desire to follow?

Mr. JONES. I thought I would just read in a brief memorandum of it here, then refer to cases where the original letters and photostatic copies are set out, from Mexican officials and others.

The CHAIRMAN. And file those documents with the committee?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Pursue your own course. Of course, make it as short as you reasonably can.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. The financial support which Mexican Government officials, as shown in files A, D, H, and I, are alleged to have extended to the Nicaraguan, Guatemalan, and Honduran revolutionary movement, was supplied by the German Embassy at Mexico City to Carranza.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you evidence of that other than what you gained through your connection with the Mexican foreign department?

Mr. JONES. I have a statement to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say Files A, etc., are those the exhibits and documents you are reading from?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. This is from a subexplanatory index in File I, and I will furnish for the use of the committee a written statement covering this matter. The principal agent of Carranza in the original negotiations and starting of this movement, was F. R. Villavicencio, at that time Mexican consul general at New Orleans. A letter of March 3, 1916, to General Rosales, on pages 15 to 17, File I, show the personal negotiations between Villavicencio and Pedro Grave de Peralta, the agent of the Central American revolutionary junta in New Orleans.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement to which you refer may be incorporated in the record as a part of the appendix to your testimony.

Mr. JONES. Pages 20 and 21, File I, contain letters from Peralta to Gen. Maximo B. Rosales, Honduran revolutionary leader, inclosing copy of letter from Carlos Felix Diaz, Mexican consul general at that time at Belize, British Honduras. These letters give a good deal of information regarding the plans of the Mexican consul at Belize, in connection with the Central American revolutionists.

Under date of March 11, 1916, Gen. Maximo B. Rosales, in San Francisco, wrote Peralta at New Orleans, as shown on pages 22 and 23 of File I. The Mexican consul general at San Francisco at that time, Ramon P. De Negri, had written and said that he—De Negri and Rosales—were working in close accord. De Negri during 1919 was transferred as consul general from San Francisco to New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this De Negri the man who has recently, from newspapers reports, announced himself as with the present revolutionary movement in Mexico against Carranza?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Until recently he has been the Mexican consul general in New York?

Mr. JONES. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he the same man who has circulated the Arthur Thompson Bolshevik literature in the United States?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And denied that?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. I have a copy of that yellow book that I got from the consulate in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, you may proceed.

Mr. JONES. In this file there are a good many letters which I am not mentioning, but which the file itself stands for, and which give in detail from day to day, and month to month, the complete inside plans as they were developed.

Gen. Rosales, on May 24, 1916, wrote to Peralta that President Carranza of Mexico intended to start a war immediately on Estrada Cabrera, in Central America. Rosales' letter also contains the statement that the Governor of Yucatan, at that time Salvador Alvarado, and who is at the present time one of the most active participants in the revolutionary movement now going on in Mexico, that "the Governor of Yucatan is very much interested in assisting a general movement against the allied governments of Central America, especially those protected by the Guatemalan Government." This letter is found on pages 29 and 30 of file I.

A letter of the Mexican consul, Carlos Felix Diaz, March 27, 1916, pages 31 and 32, file I, to Peralta, informs Peralta that he, the consul of Mexico, at Belize, British Honduras, is working in connection with the revolutionary movement which is springing up in Guatemala, and likewise he has established relations with some of the rebels of Honduras.

Peralta's letter of April 2, 1916, page 35, file I, to Manuel A. Perdomo, of Belize, British Honduras, confidential agent there for the Carranza government, tells Perdomo that the plans of the Mexican Government are progressing satisfactorily.

Peralta, in a letter of April 2, 1916, to Carlos Felix Diaz, Mexican consul at Belize, British Honduras, pages 36 to 38, file I, gives additional plans regarding the Central American revolutionary movement.

Peralta's letter of April 19, 1916, to Rosales, pages 40 and 41, file I, states that he is inclosing letter from F. R. Villaviciencio, Mexican consul general at New Orleans, also from Carlos Felix Diaz, Mexican consul at Belize, British Honduras, and refers the letters from Peralta to Carranza, and Candido Aguilar, Mexican secretary of foreign affairs, and other prominent Government officials in Mexico City. These letters are on pages 61 and 62, file I.

Carlos Felix Diaz, Mexican consul general at Belize, British Honduras, on April 20, 1916, wrote Peralta, as shown on pages 44 and 45, file I, that he, the consul, had arranged with Gen. Carlos Vidal, military commander for Carranza in the Territory of Quintana Roo, with respect to different parts of that territory where their arms and ammunition were to be unloaded, and the various expeditions organized and equipped out in that territory against the various Central American countries. Gen. Vidal, I understand, at the present time is one of the most active supporters of Gen. Obregon.

The CHAIRMAN. In the revolutionary movement against Carranza?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; the revolutionary movement against Carranza. Vidal had been very active with Gen. Green in Tabasco.

The CHAIRMAN. Gen. Green claimed to be the legal governor of Tabasco.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And also is one of the prominent figures in the present movement.

Mr. JONES. And a very strong personal friend and supporter of Gen. Salvador Alvarado.

Peralta's letter of April 24, 1916, to Carlos Felix Diaz, Mexican consul general at Belize, British Honduras, pages 50 to 52, file I, is in answer to Diaz's letter of April 20, 1916, to Peralta, on pages 44 and 45, of file I. In that letter Peralta congratulates Carlos Felix Diaz for assurances from him and the Mexican Government of their complete support of the Central American movement. He then outlines plans to operate a revolutionary movement against Guatemala, through the Mexican State of Chiapas, and then states that as soon as Gen. Rosales is in power in Honduras, they would throw 20,000 to 30,000 troops against Guatemala, which, with the attack from the Chiapas border, would result in the complete overthrow of Estrada Cabrera, President of Guatemala.

Peralta's letter of May 17, 1916, to Rosales, pages 63 and 64 of file I, informs Rosales that Peralta is leaving New Orleans May 19 for Yucatan and Mexico, and has letters of introduction from F. R. Villavicencio, Mexican consul general at New Orleans, La., to President Carranza, Gen. Salvador Alvarado, governor of Yucatan, as shown in the photostatic copy of the letter on page 51 of this file. Also to Gen. C. Aguilar, son-in-law of President Carranza, and Mexican minister of foreign relations. Likewise to Gen. Alvaro Obregon, Mexican secretary of war and marine. Other letters of introduction carried by Peralta were to prominent Mexicans, as shown on page 62 of file I.

A subsequent letter, dated May 12, 1916, page 62 of file I, introduces Peralta to Gov. Alvarado of Yucatan, and requests him to assist Peralta in every possible way.

After Peralta's arrival in Mexico City, as shown on page 66, he addressed a letter to each of the various parties to whom he had letters of introduction there, as shown in the index and subexplanatory index of file I. Photographic copies of these letters stand for themselves.

President Carranza, having received the confidential advice from his consul general at New Orleans, and from other officials of his throughout the United States, was fully aware of the plans prior to the arrival of Peralta in Mexico City. There, President Carranza, on June 8, 1916, wrote Peralta as per his letter shown on page 70 of file I, stating that he would receive Peralta at the palace at 4.30 p. m., June 9, 1916.

Peralta's letter of June 10, 1916, to Obregon, Minister of War and Marine, pages 72 and 73 of file I, expresses Peralta's thanks to Obregon for the assistance so far given to the Rosales-Peralta plans to secure financial and political support for Mexico to overthrow the governments of Honduras and Guatemala, and then secure for Mexico political control of Central America.

Peralta's letter to Gen. Obregon, as shown on pages 72 and 73 of file I, refers to information brought by Peralta to Mexico. At that moment relations between the United States and Mexico were rather strained, and while Peralta was in Mexico he had completed arrangements whereby he was to secretly furnish the Government of Mexico information which would keep them thoroughly posted regarding Army and Navy movements of the United States Government, likewise any other information which would be of value to Mexico. Peralta's letters to various Mexican Government officials shown in this file bear out this statement. For instance, his letter of July 3, 1916, to President Carranza, pages 94 and 95 of this file, and his letter of July 11, 1916, page 101 to Dr. George A. Guzman, in which Peralta states that President Carranza had designated him as Mexican confidential agent at Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was this man Peralta?

Mr. JONES. Peralta is half Cuban and half Nicaraguan, and, I believe, a naturalized Honduran. Probably in 1913 or 1914 he came to the United States. He has always been mixed up in Central American politics for a good many years, and that seems to be his principal business. Gen. Maximo B. Rosales, ex-vice president of Honduras, and ex-minister of war, was approached by Peralta in connection with Dr. Irias, and in connection with Gen. Jose Castillo, Guatemalan revolutionary leaders. Peralta, I believe, was, in connection with Villavicencio, with whom he was on very familiar terms, the originator of this plan, in connection at that time with De Negri, consul general at San Francisco, and others of the Mexican consul generals in the United States. There was supposed to be a good deal of German money floating around, and the Department of Justice, as far as I was ever able to learn, was not able to trail it. I even went to the complete limit, but never could trail the real party in this country. We were thoroughly satisfied of the fact that a large volume of the money was German money, and at the time these papers and documents were secured by me we got hold of some which bore that prior thought out. Later we secured statements, signed and otherwise, and from parties participating in it, which positively proved the earlier surmise correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You may proceed.

Mr. JONES. Peralta's letter to President Carranza, dated June 16, 1916, pages 75-76, file I, assures Carranza of his interest in the proposition, and states that Gen. C. Aguilar, Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, and Mr. Ugarto, private secretary of President Carranza, had assured him, Peralta, that President Carranza had already given instructions to them to communicate his wishes and desires as to the success of the Central American revolutionary plans, and that within a few days the necessary instructions for arms, ammunition, and finances, would be given.

The Government of Mexico at that moment was very anxious to endeavor to offset column after column of newspaper and editorial matter, which was being run in the United States, severely criticizing Carranza and his Government for their pro-German and anti-American attitude. Peralta was filling Carranza and others full of hot air as to his power to control publicity throughout the United States. He has been assured by me that I could fully cooperate with him and get anything he wanted in the newspapers. Therefore, on June 19, 1916, Peralta wrote Gen. C. Aguilar, Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, as shown on page 78, file I, requesting that he, Peralta, be given a frank over the Mexican telegraph wires to send certain information to newspaper friends of his in the United States, which was myself, and which would create a friendly sentiment in the United States for the Mexican Government. As a matter of fact, Peralta never had an opportunity to secure, through me or anybody else, any newspaper publicity throughout the United States.

Peralta, on June 19, 1916, wrote President Carranza, as shown on page 51 of file I, that the entire Liberal Party of Central America, including Gen. Maximo B. Rosales of Honduras, Dr. Julius Irias, of Nicaragua, and Gen. Jose Castillo, of Guatemala, without conditions placed the entire liberal party of Central America at the exclusive orders of Gen. Carranza to fight the United States, or any other enemy of the Mexican Government. At the time this letter was written by Peralta conditions between Mexico and the United States were almost at the breaking point, and it will be seen from Peralta's letter that he absolutely pledged the armed support of Gen. Rosales's followers and other revolutionary parties affiliated with the Rosales movement, to consolidate their forces with those of Mexico to fight the United States.

On June 23, 1916, as shown on page 55 of file I, the subsecretary of foreign relations of Mexico wrote Peralta that Luis Cabrera, Mexican secretary of finance, had received instructions in regard to Peralta's affairs, and requests Peralta to come to the office of Cabrera on June 24, 1916, at noon.

From President Carranza's private secretary, on June 23, 1916, page 86, file I, Peralta received a letter informing him that President Carranza had already given orders to supply Peralta with the necessary war equipment and money for the Central American revolutionary movement, and requested him to call at the office at noon on June 24 so that all these matters could be definitely settled. That letter again referred to President Carranza's instructions to Luis Cabrera, Mexican secretary of finance.

Peralta's letter of June 25, 1916, pages 87 and 88 of file I, to Carranza, again informs Carranza that a triumph throughout Central America is an established fact.

Peralta's letter of June 27, 1916, page 89 of file I, to Gen. A. Obregon, Mexican secretary of war and marine, requests letter from Gen. Obregon to Gen. Carlos Vidal, Mexican military chief in Payo Obispo, Quintana Roo, who is to help from there in operating various Rosales revolutionary movements in Honduras and Guatemala.

Peralta's letter of June 27, 1916, pages 90 and 91 of file I, to Carranza's private secretary, thanks him for his assistance in securing the results and getting the necessary instructions to the various Government officials for Peralta to secure the necessary war equipment and money.

On page 92 of file I is shown a letter, dated at Mexico City, June 27, 1916, from Gen. Carlos Green, addressed to Antonio Hernandez Ferrar, and introduces Peralta to that party. Gen. Green, in this letter, states that Peralta has arranged with Mexico regarding some very important matters and is now returning to the United States to carry out his plans, which have been assisted and fully concurred in by Mexico.

Peralta's letter of June 27, 1916, page 93 of file I, to C. Aguilar, Mexican minister of foreign relations, expresses his thanks to Aguilar for the highly satisfactory manner in which President Carranza has cooperated with the Central American revolutionary movement, and then refers to the war equipment and money which Mexico was to furnish for that movement.

Peralta's letter of July 3, 1916, to President Carranza from Vera Cruz, pages 94 and 95 of file I, refers to Peralta's proposed plan to spread propaganda throughout the United States, endeavoring in this way to avoid intervention on the part of the United States. Peralta also in this letter states that he feels sure he will be useful to Mexico in Washington and New York, and will also confidentially be able to keep Mexico fully advised regarding the plans and activities of the United States.

Peralta's letter of July 5, 1916, page 96 of file I, to Dr. Roberto de la Rosa, dated at Vera Cruz, as shown on page 96 of file I, instructs Dr. de la Rosa to immediately see that all of the parties in Vera Cruz who are to leave there with the armed expedition against Honduras are ready when wanted. He also tells this party to inspect at Vera Cruz the rifles and ammunition which have been furnished for this movement by the Mexican Government.

Peralta's letter to Vidal, Mexican military commander at Payo Obisco, Quintana Roo, dated Vera Cruz, July 5, 1916, page 97, file I, informs Vidal that Peralta's mission to the national palace at Mexico had been fully successful, and that he, Peralta, at an early date would sail from Vera Cruz to Payo Obisco with a group of revolutionists and a supply of arms and ammunition, and would also bring Gen. Vidal a letter from the Mexican secretary of war and marine, Gen. A. Obregon. This is the letter which Peralta requested Gen. Obregon to give him as per Peralta's letter shown on page 89. Peralta also in this letter requests Gen. Vidal to telegraph in code Carlos Felix Diaz, Mexican consul general at Belize, informing him that Gen. Rosales and Peralta had succeeded in securing all they wanted from Mexico, and then refers to their political triumph in Mexico.

Peralta's letter dated at Vera Cruz July 6, 1916, page 99 of file I, to Manuel de la Rosa, requests him to immediately make arrangements for the establishment of a Red Cross service in which Mexican doctors only are to be employed. This refers to the hospital corps which was to be organized in Vera Cruz, and participate in the revolutionary movements against Honduras and Guatemala.

Peralta's letter dated at Vera Cruz July 6, 1919, to Gen. Obregon, Mexican secretary of war and marine, page 100 of file I, thanks Gen. Obregon for his assistance, and refers to the fact that Gen. Obregon has done as much or more than any other Mexican to help establish the liberal rule in Central America. Peralta in this letter also tells Gen. Obregon that he is now quietly arranging the various armed expeditions in Mexico which will work in connection with those to be run out of the United States and from Belize, British Honduras, against Guatemala and Honduras. He also in that letter refers to a previous conversation with Gen. Obregon regarding the necessity of organizing a hospital or Red Cross corps which will be supplied exclusively by Mexican doctors. He then requests Gen. Obregon to release Dr. Manuel de la Rosa, director of the Mexican hospital at Vera Cruz, so that Dr. de la Rosa can organize and command the revolutionary hospital staff which was to accompany the various armed expeditions against Honduras and Guatemala. Peralta in this letter refers to a letter which Dr. de la Rosa will personally hand to Gen. Obregon. This is the letter which Peralta wrote Dr. de la Rosa regarding this matter on July 6, 1916, as shown on page 99.

Peralta's letter dated at Vera Cruz July 11, 1916, on page 101 of file I, to Dr. Jorge A. Guzman, informs Guzman of the fact that he has been appointed private secretary to Peralta. Peralta also in this letter refers to having been designated by President Carranza as their legal and confidential agent in Washington. On page 104 of file I is a photostatic copy of an agreement between Peralta and W. P. Gavin, at that time in Vera Cruz.

On page 106 is shown memorandum prepared by Gen. Manuel E. Lardizabal, at New York City, regarding the plans and activities of Peralta in Mexico. Lardizabal is alleged to have secured information regarding these matters from or through his ex-wife, Mrs. Concha Prado, who was in Vera Cruz, Mexico, or Mexico City, at the time Peralta was there. This signed memorandum from Lardizabal, which is later confirmed, as far as the information is concerned, from Peralta himself, in my presence, in which Peralta admitted that he had secured from Luis Cabrera, Mexican minister of finance, $50,000 for the Honduran revolutionary party.

On page 108 of file I is shown a contract entered into between Peralta and Roberto de la Rosa, whereby in this contract Roberto de la Rosa is to raise in Vera Cruz an expedition of 100 men and not less than 4 officers, arming and equipping them with rifles and cartridges for the proposed expedition out of Vera Cruz against Honduras, likewise for shipping arms and ammunition out of Mexico to various Central American points.

On page 109 are details regarding the organization of the Mexican hospital staff which was to accompany the Rosales revolutionary expedition out of Mexico against Honduras.

On page 121 is a memorandum showing itemized expenses for the armed expeditions out of Vera Cruz and Campeche, Mexico.

On page 124 is a report made by one of Gen. Rosales's confidential messengers, named Santos. This report states that all of Gen. Rosales's plan, as far as the Mexican end is concerned, could not be in better shape. Furthermore, that Gen. J. Castro, Mexican sub-secretary of war and marine, is helping the Guatemala revolutionary party to the best of his ability. This report also states that Gen. Obregon, Mexican secretary of war and marine, and President Carranza had agreed to supply an additional quantity of arms and ammunition.

That is the end of that.

The CHAIRMAN. We will now suspend until half past 2 o'clock.

AFTER RECESS.

At the expiration of the recess the committee reconvened.

TESTIMONY OF MR. CHARLES E. JONES—Resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Jones, you may proceed.

Mr. JONES. File D, pertaining to Nicaraguan matters, contains, on page 1, an autographed photograph of Gen. A. Obregon, at that time Mexican minister of war and marine, to Dr. Julian Irias, the Nicaraguan revolutionary leader. This photograph was presented to Dr. Irias by Obregon while Irias was in Mexico securing financial assistance and arranging for arms and ammunition to be used by Irias in his Nicaraguan movement, in combination with the various other Central American movements testified to heretofore.

The various letters, documents, etc., in file D show Irias's connection with the Mexican Central American plot and plans.

During the time this Central American plan of Mexico was on foot various agents of Carranza and von Eckhardt were sent to the United States and to the Central American countries to carry through the plans regarding the matter.

The following is a statement made by Antonio Mendez Monteroso, former military governor and commander at La Ceiba, Honduras, and other parts of that country:

During the year 1916 President V. Carranza of Mexico through a confidential representative made me the proposition mentioned hereinafter. At that time I was military governor and commandante for the Government of Honduras at La Ceiba. The confidential agent of President V. Carranza of Mexico was Senor Gustave Solano, who at the time this proposition was made to me was at New Orleans, La. Knowing that I was acquainted with Alfredo Quinonez, a native of Salvador, Gustave Solano, who is now Private Secretary of Espinosa Mirrelles, the governor of the Mexican State of Coahuila, therefore authorized Alfredo Quinonez to propose to me in writing, which he did, that I would receive a special commission from President Carranza as the official directing head of a revolutionary movement which President Carranza wanted me to start in Honduras and operate out of that country against the Government of Guatemala. Gustave Solano by his credentials and otherwise fully proved to Alfredo Quinonez his complete authority to act for President Carranza in this matter, and Alfredo Quinonez in turn proved to me entire satisfaction regarding the complete authority of Gustave Solano and himself to act in this matter.

I was assured by these representatives of President Carranza that the Government of Mexico would finance this revolutionary movement to any extent, no matter how high the expenses might run, and that the entire revolutionary movement would be completely outfitted with all necessary arms, ammunition, artillery, machine guns, machetas, and all other war supplies, equipment, and financial payment for my services I might designate. Furthermore that President Carranza would supply me with two or more steamships which would be used in the revolutionary movement, so I was informed by Gustave Solano through Alfredo Quinonez would include a large number of Mexican Army officers and soldiers. I was also informed at that time by these representatives of President Carranza that this revolutionary movement was part of the complete plans of President V. Carranza of Mexico to by a revolutionary movement on the part of Mexico overthrow Estrada Cabrera, President of Guatemala, and was to be the opening movement on the part of Mexico to become the domineering power in all of the Central American countries. I also at that time understood from these parties that the financial backing, a total expense of this proposed revolutionary movement against Guatemala as offered to me through these parties who were the confidential agents of President Carranza, was to be paid with money furnished for this purpose to President V. Carranza of Mexico by H. Von Eckhardt, the German Ambassador to Mexico City.

So that I would be able to secure the full plans of Mexico regarding this proposition, therefore for a considerable time conducted negotiations regarding these matters with Gustave Solano through Alfredo Quinonez, and after I had secured complete information regarding same I then emphatically told these parties to inform President Carranza and everybody else implicated in this proposition that under no circumstances would I be a party to any such proposition, first, on account of the fact that I was a native of Guatemala, and always had been and would be the loyal supporter of my native country, and never under any circumstances would I cooperate with Mexican forces against Guatemala, and in the second place, in so much as I was a strong admirer and personal friend of President Cabrera, of Guatemala, that for no amount of money or promise of future political reward or power, such as was promised me to handle this revolutionary matter, would I ever be connected with any revolutionary plans against him. Furthermore, even if I were against Mr. Cabrera, I would never have anything to do with a proposition that was or would be financed or supported by Germany or any German interest. On account of the rumors which seem to be well established regarding the fact that the Government of Mexico is now said to be financing and cooperating with a revolutionary movement against the Government of Guatemala, which is to be started in the near future out of the Mexican States of Chiapas and Tabasco, believe now is the time to fully inform President Estrada Cabrera regarding these matters; therefore have made this written statement as to the facts mentioned herein and same has been signed by me at New Orleans, La., on this the 8th day of September, 1919.

A. M. MONTERROSO.

The statement was signed by Gen. Monterroso and witnessed by Rafael Heliodoro Valle, who is now at the Honduran legation at Washington, D. C. A photostatic copy of Gen. Monterroso's statement is filed with the committee. Likewise a photostatic copy of his passport issued by the Government of Honduras and signed by Monterroso, which verifies his signature to the original signed statement. Also a photostatic copy of a statement made by Monterroso at the American Consulate at La Ceiba, Honduras, August 7, 1917, signed by Monterroso, in the presence of the American consul, which verifies the signature to the original statement signed by him.

The reason that Carranza approached Monterroso through the representative mentioned hereinbefore was due to the fact that some 15 or 16 years ago Monterroso was known to be one of the most bitter and active enemies of Cabrera, and on or about that time participated in a revolutionary movement against Cabrera. The Mexicans and Guatemalans interested in the proposition, therefore, thought Monterroso would be very much interested in participating in the Central American plan.

At New York, about two weeks ago, I met a Mexican by the name of Ernest Racca, whose card reads, "M. D.", claiming to be a doctor, and who is running a chemical laboratory on the third floor of a building at 192 Bowery, corner of Spring Street. Racca had seen one or two newspaper articles of mine, and called on me, and in the presence of my brother, N. T. Jones, and Gene Fowler, of the New York American, offered to sell me quite a number of letters passing between he, Racca, Pedro Peralta and Dr. Manuel de la Rosa, Gen. A. Obregon, Carranza, and others, which completely proves the fact that, with the full knowledge, consent, and approval of Gen. A. Obregon, and Carranza and his other officials, the Red Cross or hospital corps was organized in Vera Cruz at that time, which consisted entirely of Mexican doctors in the employment of the Mexican Army, to be a part of the various revolutionary movements started by Mexico against Central American countries. Dr. Racca was employed in the Mexican military hospital at Vera Cruz, and was to become a part of that expedition. His card is filed on page 1 of File I.

These various Central American revolutionary movements were actively continuing, and the several armed expeditions were ready to operate, and were getting ready to leave the United States during the latter part of 1917. For probably a year and a half I had, for the Bureau of Investigation, secured the inside plans from Dr. Julian Orias, and when the bureau thought they had sufficient evidence they closed in on him, resulting in his arrest in New Orleans by the Department of Justice, and I understand that the United States District of Attorney allowed him to elect to either leave the United States or face prosecution in the Federal courts, and he at once left the United States, and is now said to be in Costa Rica.

Several months after that Peralta, Gen. Maximo B. Rosales, and several of the other operators were arrested in New Orleans by the United States Department of Justice, and upon recommendation of the United States District Attorney at New Orleans, they were allowed to leave the United States or face prosecution in the Federal courts. Naturally, they immediately left the United States.

That was a most serious mistake on the part of the Attorney General's office at Washington, and I understand they received the suggestion from the State Department that it would be advisable to deport these Central American revolutionists in preference to prosecuting them in the Federal courts; that being due, as I was told, to the fact that if any of these prominent Central Americans were prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary it might lead to an unfriendly sentiment throughout Central America against the United States. From the date that these Central American revolutionists, who had received many thousands of dollars from Carranza and Von Eckhardt, left the United States, they have and are continuing to be actively engaged in planning and plotting their revolutionary movements throughout Central America.

I believe that is the end of that.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, you have certain other documents that you will refer to later.

Mr. JONES. Due to certain other documents and files which have been delayed in reaching Washington, particularly those applying to what is known to the Department of Justice and State Department as the "Plot of Morazan," which was to be a consolidation of the Central American Governments of Honduras and Salvador. These documents and further information regarding same will be testified to before the committee at a later date.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand these documents are to follow those you have already introduced?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. Carranza, in other words, had three well-known Central American propositions: First, his Mexican and Central American and Pan-American League for Neutrality. That was broken up, and then he started to gain control of Central America by the revolutionary route, as shown before the committee. That was busted up, and then he started on the third plan, which was the plot of Morazan.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You may proceed.

Mr. JONES. This Central America revolutionary plot of Carranza, in connection with von Eckhart, as I understand it, has repeatedly been hinted at and mentioned, but has never as yet in documentary shape been proven; and files I and D and the other files, I am inclined to believe, for the first time, by the photostatic copies of letters of various Mexican officials, from Carranza and Gen. A. Obregon, and many others, positively prove the plot and plan as it existed. As fast as these various documents and information were secured, same were promptly reported to the United States Department of Justice, and carbon copies of all reports and documents were likewise forwarded to the State Department. Therefore, the State Department at all times has been fully aware of every plot, plan, or scheme on the part of Carranza and his officials to gain control of Central America.

The CHAIRMAN. And as to their purposes in attempting to gain control.

Mr. JONES. Yes; and as to the absolute purpose on the part of Carranza and his officials to extend their power throughout Central America, until Central America, and from there on down throughout the balance of Pan-America, in connection with Mexico, were to be one, as they expressed it, one united Latin race, which would be at all times a domineering factor against the United States, commercial and otherwise, throughout Pan-America.

It is a very noticeable fact that Gen. A. Obregon, whose letters have heretofore been introduced before the committee in File I, Gen. Carlos Green, Gen. Salvador Alvarado, Ramon P. De Negri, now confidential agent for the revolutionary group in New York City, and many of the other outstanding leaders and representatives of the present revolutionary group in control in Mexico, were as active in these Central American intrigues of Carranza as was Carranza himself.

The CHAIRMAN. So there is no reason to think that, if the policy of the Carranza Government with reference to Central and Pan-American affairs was with any ulterior motive against the United States, that those plans are likely to be changed by Carranza going out and any of the present prominently-mentioned members of the revolutionary group coming in?

Mr. JONES. That is true, Senator. The enthusiasm displayed by Gen. A. Obregon, Gen. Salvador Alvarado, and others, in stating that there should be a warm spirit of friendship and cooperation between themselves, their Government, and the United States, is not borne out by their past anti-American policies and efforts against the interests of the United States throughout Pan America. It has been impossible for those who really knew the inside facts regarding the many plans and plots of Carranza throughout Pan America, and which have been proven in innumerable ways to the complete satisfaction of the State Department by original documents and otherwise, to ever understand how or in what way the United States allowed Carranza and his officials to continue his anti-American policies through Latin-America.

Senator BRANDEGEE. If all these other Mexicans had the same hostile feeling toward America, what could have been done? Who could have been put in down there who would have been better than Carranza was?

Mr. JONES. I do not believe that any of the present crowd, irrespective of whether he has been pointed out at the present time as one of the leaders of the immediate moment, would have been one single bit better than Carranza, because the files which I have introduced before the committee, including all of the letters from Gen. A. Obregon, Alvarado, De Negri, and innumerable of the others who are now in power in Mexico, show that they were active participants in every one of these Central American plots and plans. The leopard can not change his spots. If Gen. A. Obregon to-day is to rule in Mexico, as he apparently is, or Gen. Alvarado, or Gen. de la Huerta, Gen. Calles, or somebody else, if those men a year ago or five years ago were unfriendly to the United States and actively against all interests of the United States, certainly, if they now change around and preach friendship and cooperation with the United States it is simply the old original Carranza gag, such as was preached at the beginning of the régime of Carranza, promising everything a mortal man could. These people to-day in power in Mexico are all of that same old crowd, and I do not see how anybody can expect anything out of them in the present Mexican situation.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You mean their professions of friendship are simply to enable them to get recognition by this country, do you?

Mr. JONES. There is no doubt about it, Senator, judging from the records of every one of them. Carranza's record, from the day he was recognized, or the first time he started as first chief, demonstrates that. Alvarado's record is a straight line of blood. Obregon's record is the same. There is no man to-day in Mexico who is professing friendship and love and sympathy for the United States that has not by his past record proven to be just as bad as Carranza ever could be. People to-day are judged, whether they are Mexicans or Americans, or any other nation, by what has been in the past, and if Obregon and these other people have been 100 per cent bad, not only from the standpoint of being fully anti-American, and actively against the United States at all stages of the game, and participating in every outrage, directly or indirectly, against foreigners, and their properties, and their lives, and everything else, I do not see how we can expect anything better from them. How in the name of the world can those people come, with hat in hand, and stand in front of the White House and say, "Here we are. We have had a change of heart. We have been washed away," and all that sort of thing. It is just plain bunk.

It is a known fact to the Department of Justice, and the State Department also has a record of it, that during probably June and July of 1918, at the time Germany apparently was winning on its drive to Paris, that Gen. A. Obregon wrote a book which was known to be 99½ per cent pro-German and anti-American. As soon as the Allies began to pick up, along in August Obregon's advisers told him, "For God's sake to cut that book out, and if you go ahead with it, change it." And Obregon, who has always flopped on the advice of his advisers, had the whole proposition changed. The original, however, I understand, is in existence in the files of the State Department. I told Senator Fall that a day or two ago. And Gen. Obregon, after he came to the United States and visited around and saw things, then began to lay plans actively for the President of Mexico; he, of course, changed his tune, and sang a swan song which was pro-American.

The CHAIRMAN. This book of Gen. Obregon's, to which you have referred, was the manuscript of a proposed book sent into the United States to be published, and supposed to have been seized by American officials at Nogales, Ariz., and filed with the proper department here of the United States Government?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have referred several times to the activities of Gen. Salvador Alvarado. Did you know Gen. Alvarado personally?

Mr. JONES. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you met him at any time recently?

Mr. JONES. I met Gen. Alvarado probably 10 or 12 times in New York during February and March.

The CHAIRMAN. Of this year?

Mr. JONES. Of 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. Just previous to the declaration of independence and nonrecognition of Carranza by the authorities of the State of Sonora?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That movement, revolutionary in character, against the Carranza government occurred about the latter part of March or 1st of April, did it not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And culminated in what is known as the plan of Agua Prieta of April 5?

Mr. JONES. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Signed by de la Huerta and Calles?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Gen. Alvarado was here about that time, was he not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what he was doing here?

Mr. JONES. We had some information last September or October which showed some peculiar actions on the part of various Mexican Government officials. I will testify to-morrow as to how and in what way I had already ceased to cooperate with the Department of Justice for a good many months at that time, but, in October, 1919, I made it a matter of record with several parties in Washington, and also in New York, that I expected to cut in with these Mexicans and work some inside information out of them, if possible, at a later date, as part of this plan. I placed before the managing editor of the New York American, Mr. Rancke, the plan or idea through Alvarado to secure the real inside information as to what was brewing in Mexico.

Gen. Salvador Alvarado arrived in New York about the middle of February, 1920, and several days after his arrival I called at his hotel, accompanied by my brother and by Gene Fowler, of the New York American. I had known Alvarado prior to that time, he knowing me as a newspaper man. I told him I understood he was very actively engaged in starting an opposition movement against Carranza, either in favor of himself as presidential possibility or of Gen. Obregon, and suggested to him the advisability of employing me as a publicity agent. After some time Alvarado warmed up, and finally I was able to secure practically all the plans of himself and associates. He suggested that I prepare a written proposition in regard to the publicity work I desired, and I told him I would do so and present it to him at a later date. He is still waiting for it.

On March 17, at 6.30 p. m., I saw Alvarado at his apartment in the Hotel Alexandria, One hundred and third Street, near Broadway. At that time I was accompanied by my brother, N. T. Jones, and Gene Fowler of the New York American. Alvarado, thinking that all the information he had given me and would give me would be strictly confidential, urged me to immediately begin an active propaganda against Carranza, and in that showed up the entire past, as he expressed it, of the dirty work of Carranza and his clique. He again cautioned me that under no circumstances was his name ever to be used. At that time he introduced me to a party named Manuel de la Pena, who now is said to be commercial agent for the present revolutionary group, with headquarters in New York City.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Was Alvarado, in addition to being hostile to Carranza, a partisan of or agent for Obregon?

Mr. JONES. At that time, Senator, as I will show in detail hereafter, I asked him during these interviews would he be an active supporter of Obregon, and he said that it was not yet a settled matter as to whether Obregon would be a candidate for the presidency. Alvarado was accused then, as he is now and has been for the last two years, of trying to manipulate things so far as possible to be a presidential candidate himself. He always had that presidential bee in his bonnet.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Who did he represent when he came to Washington?

Mr. JONES. He at that time claimed to represent the de la Huerta crowd in Sonora.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Did you see him when he was here in Washington?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. I had located him. He told me he was leaving New York, and I got in touch with de la Pena and asked him where I could reach him by wire. I was trying to keep tab on him. I learned from de la Pena I could get him by wire at the Continental Hotel in Monterrey. The next day I learned Alvarado had left there, due to his threatened arrest by Carranza, and was on his way to Washington. I got here the same day Alvarado did.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you speak Spanish?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. And read it, of course?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Very well. That is all I care to ask this morning. You may proceed.

Mr. JONES. I asked Gen. Alvarado why it was that Carranza had caused his arrest shortly before he left Mexico, and his answer was that it had been caused by Carranza's determination to in this way attempt to keep Alvarado's mouth shut regarding his opinions of Carranza and of the forthcoming presidential elections.

Continuing, Alvarado said that he had been under arrest for some five or six days, but was finally released due to the influence of several strong friends of his who impressed upon Carranza the importance of not keeping Alvarado in prison or of having him executed.

Alvarado then said that his daily newspaper in Mexico City might as well have been closed up due to the fact that Carranza, through Andres Garcia, his Postmaster General, was suppressing the paper by killing off its circulation, which was handled in a very shrewd manner so that its subscribers either did not receive the paper at all or its various issues reached them from three to ten days after publication.

Alvarado again, due to my leading questions, branched off into the threatened revolution in Mexico as an outcome of the presidential elections. Alvarado said:

My explanation of why this revolution is sure to occur is that President Carranza proposes to maintain his power and control Mexico, irrespective of consequences to himself, to Mexico, or to any one else. Carranza has manipulated the State elections in each of the Mexican States. This has resulted in Congressmen and members of the Senate being elected at Carranza's direction, all of whom are positively pledged to do his bidding. These members of the Senate and of Congress are not only the most unrepresentative Mexicans, but, on the contrary, are the very riff-raff of my country.

It might be interesting to state that that is the Congress and the Senate that they are asking the provisional president, De la Huerta, to call into session, and that is the same Congress and Senate that was in session under Carranza, and of that Congress and Senate are favorable or were favorable to Carranza, it will be interesting to note just exactly how and what their actions will be regarding the present situation.

Senator BRANDEGEE. How long after you talked with Alvarado did you make these notes from which you are refreshing your recollection as you testify?

Mr. JONES. It has been my custom for five years, Senator, for instance, if I talk to you and you tell me something right now, when I get outside where you can't see me, I jot it down in a memorandum book.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you generally make them the same day?

Mr. JONES. Absolutely, every day, as soon as I get away from the discussion, wherever it might be.

Alvarado, in addition to saying that all State elections had been farcical, added that invariably Carranza had placed in power governors of his own selection. In the State of Tamaulipas, Gen. Luis Caballero was formally elected over Gen. Lopez de Lara, the choice of Carranza. Carranza then declared the election illegal, and Caballero rebelled and was driven out of the city and is now affiliated with the revolutionary element in that State. Carranza then appointed a governor of his own selection.

In Tabasco the elections were held some six or seven months ago, according to Alvarado, the opposing candidates being Gen. Green and Luis F. Dominguez. Green had the support of the former governor, Gen. Carlos A. Vidal. Assassinations, riots, and personal and political persecutions resulted, and in the end Carranza appointed his own governor.

In San Luis Potosi elections for governor was held on July 6, 1919. The opposing parties were Rafael Nieto, former sub-secretary of the treasury under Carranza, and Ingeniero Severino Martinez. By force of arms, Carranza forced a Nieto legislature in power who declared Nieto governor of that State.

Alvarado then said that similar tactics had been pursued in every Mexican State, and the outrages perpetrated by Carranza, so Alvarado continued, and by other prominent Mexicans who were connected with the Carranza government, were particularly notorious in the States of Nuevo Leon, Nayarit, Sonora, Michoacan, Coahuila, Yucatan, and in practically all other States. All these manipulations were ordered and carried out by Carranza in open violation of Carranza's constitution of 1917, and in complete disregard of the promises made and guaranteed, as Alvarado particularly pointed out, in Carranza's speech of April 15, 1917, to the Mexican Congress in which speech Carranza said, "The only thing I can assure you of is of my sincerity and rigidness of purpose and the disinterestedness that always has guided me. You must not forget for a single instant that you represent a nation hungering for its freedom and one that has endured untold sacrifices in order to realize this perfect ideal. To this end you must bear in mind always that democracy, which resolves all affairs by majority votes, democracy alone can bring union of the members of all political parties, and the equality of all men. For these reasons a democracy sincerely understood and honestly exercised must not seek a majority in question of partisanship, no matter what its purpose might be.

Alvarado, continuing, said, "those who know Carranza and his rotten policies, after reading that part of the speech referred to, should be convinced that he always was and always will be not only a liar, but absolutely dishonest." Alvarado then pointed out the fact and proved it by showing us the assurance made by Carranza, which were positive to the United States, on October 8, 1915, through E. Arredondo, his representative at that time in Washington, who in a letter on the date mentioned to Secretary of State Lansing, said:

I have the honor to say that insomuch as the reestablishment of peace within order and law is the purpose of the government of Mr. Carranza, to the end that all the inhabitants of Mexico, without exception, whether nationals or foreigners, may equally enjoy the benefits of true justice, and hence take interest in cooperating to the support of the Government, the laws of reform which guarantee individual freedom shall be strictly observed.

Therefore, the Constitutionallists' government will respect everybody's life, property, political and religious belief.

Alvarado said that Arredondo was always as much a liar as Carranza had proven himself to be, and that for many months prior to the date of Arredondo's letters to the Secretary of State, Carranza, through Arredondo, and also through Americans, had received fees running into hundreds of thousands of dollars paid to these Americans for repeatedly assuring the United States Government that Carranza was the only possible solution to the Mexican question.

Alvarado, continuing, said that Arredondo had promised to Secretary of State Lansing anything and everything imaginable and made all embracing guaranties that Carranza or he could dream of. Alvarado then said that this resulted in Carranza's receiving de facto recognition from the United States, as shown by the following letter from Secretary of State Lansing, dated October 19, 1915, and addressed to Arredondo:

It is my pleasure to inform you that the President of the United States takes this opportunity of extending recognition to the de facto Government of Mexico of which Gen. Venustiano Carranza is the chief executive.

The Government of the United States will be pleased to receive formally in Washington a diplomatic representative of the de facto government as soon as it shall please Gen. Carranza to designate and appoint such representative, and reciprocally the Government of the United States will accredit to the de facto government a diplomatic representative as soon as the President has the opportunity to designate such representative.

I should appreciate it if you could find it possible to communicate this information to Gen. Carranza at your earliest convenience.

Alvarado, continuing, said:

Every Mexican as well as the people of the United States, knows that all assurances made by Carranza at the time he made his solemn guaranties to the United States, were even at that time known to Carranza's principal supporters and intimates in Mexico to be flimsy and absolutely false.

Alvarado, continuing, said:

When Carranza received de facto recognition from the United States everyone in Mexico was tired of war and strife and wanted to cooperate with Carranza to rebuild the country. This included even a majority of the bandits, men of every political faith and even Carranza's former enemies. All of these men thought the Carranza Government would be a legal government, by and for the people.

Carranza had solemnly and faithfully, with tears in his eyes, guaranteed in a most emphatic manner protection of life and freedom of speech, action, and every other kind of guarantee. Lack of this freedom was one of the principal reasons outlined by him for the start of his revolutionary movement.

Alvarado then said:

If Carranza had carried out his promises and guaranties and had been honest, he would have become the idol of Mexico, believed and respected by Mexicans of all classes. He had a greater opportunity to do good than almost any other Mexican. If Carranza had even been reasonably honest he could have made Mexico into a new country and would have gone down in history as the equal of Hidalgo and Benito Juarez.

After Carranza had fooled the United States into recognizing his government, and then realizing that his power, as he thought, was supreme, he determined, irrespective of cost or consequence, to retain that power. After two years of his dishonest and cruel misrule, and after having been given more than a fair opportunity to carry out his guaranties, then even his own political party realized that he was utterly impossible and in every way was drunk with the power he had absorbed, and that his government, policies, and plans were a pathetic joke. After two years of his misrule his party colleagues endeavored to bring pressure to bear on Carranza to have him change his idiotic policies.

In answer to protests of his party Carranza said that he intended to rule Mexico according to his own ideas and that he had the United States "eating out of his hand" and had arranged matters in the army whereby no one would ever be able to throw him out of power like Huerta and Diaz had been forced out, and that he proposed to permit his army officers to "do just as they please."

Alvarado, then, illustrating the graft in the Mexican army, which is permitted by Carranza as a means to remain in power, said:

A commanding general in the army would deport on his pay rolls 10,000 men and draw pay and also the purchase price for food and supplies for that number of his troops when in reality would have but 5,000 or 6,000 men. This resulted in that particular commanding general stealing the pay roll and cost of maintenance for fully 50 per cent of the troops he was supposed to have on his pay roll. What the commanding general would do, lesser lights in the army would copy after to replenish their own pockets.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he mention any generals who did any grafting?

Mr. JONES. At a later date Gen. Alvarado wrote out himself, which I have, a statement regarding the practices of the clique in and around Carranza, which I will file with the committee at a later date.

The CHAIRMAN. I am interested in knowing if he in a statement mentioned any of them?

Mr. JONES. He mentioned Candido Aguilar, he mentioned Carranza's chief of staff, Barragan, and he mentioned quite a number of others. Some of them showed up a good deal in it.

The CHAIRMAN. How did he speak of Gen. Obregon and Gen. Pablo Gonzales?

Mr. JONES. At the hotel the consensus of opinion between my brother and Gene Fowler and myself—I brought him along that day (so I told Alvarado) in order to write the very best report from a newspaper standpoint—but we were always in the habit of discussing such matters and forming from an opinion of each of us as to what was meant by certain expressions of Alvarado's. The consensus of opinion between all of us was that as far as any particular love or friendship or cooperation between Alvarado and Obregon, that it was absolutely nothing, and if there was any possible chance to ditch him he would gladly do it, because he made the positive statement, as is shown in detail hereinafter, as to the statement which Obregon had recently issued about that time that he did not propose to start a revolutionary movement. I asked Alvarado what that meant. He said, "It will make absolutely no difference at all whether Obregon starts one or not. If he don't, Calles will, de la Huerta will, or I will." Our opinion was that at any stage of the game if Alvarado saw a chance to dump him (Obregon) and get out in the lead he would immediately do it.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean openly expressing himself in his conversations with you. Did he openly express himself concerning Obregon in those conversations?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he express himself favorably or unfavorably toward Obregon?

Mr. JONES. He, of course, said Obregon was the leader of the party, but the method in which he said it and his facial expression at that time would indicate that he didn't have such an extremely high regard for Obregon.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not surprised at that, but I am asking you what expressions he made with reference to Obregon at that time. As I understand it, he represented the revolutionary movement at that time?

Mr. JONES. That is right, which was supposed to be inaugurated for the final purpose of possibly putting Obregon in the presidency, but certainly upon Obregon's behalf. He really was the active head of the Sonora revolt, financial and otherwise. I do not believe there is any doubt about it. We later ran into a lawyer connected with Alvarado down at the Battery, who was a notorious dealer with Mexico in all kinds of revolutionary stuff. I said then and I still think that Alvarado really was the head of the whole Sonora movement in that country.

Alvarado lost sight of the fact that his entire castigation of Carranza and Obregon and everybody else automatically, as I thought, included himself, because at that time to which Alvarado referred, when all these outrages were perpetrated on Americans and other foreigners, Alvarado was a commanding general in the Mexican Army, and therefore possibly was as much responsible for these outrages as any other Mexican officer.

Senator BRANDEGEE. When you say he was undoubtedly the head of the Sonora movement in that country, do you mean he was deputed by those generals in Sonora to come up here and issue propaganda or do you mean he really directed those generals down there?

Mr. JONES. I think that Alvarado's first work in New York City was an effort to form connections to finance this movement, and there would then probably be an open effort for general revolutionary movement throughout Mexico. What success he may have had along those lines I do not know. I do know that he was mixed up with quite a large number of prominent Americans in New York City, prominent in business and having some interests in Mexico. In addition to that, he was most actively engaged in endeavoring to spread, particularly so with myself, certain anti-Carranza propaganda which would hold Carranza up to ridicule and create an unfriendly sentiment against him, hanging everything on him, which, as he figured out, would be used as an excuse for these Mexicans to kick Carranza out.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Who do you think was directing Alvarado? Who commissioned him? Who was he acting for?

Mr. JONES. I imagine he was acting with the Sonora crowd. He repeatedly referred to the organization in Sonora.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I want to know whether Alvarado said to you who he represented or who he claimed to represent? When he referred to that Sonora group, did he claim to be representing them or did he claim to be representing Obregon?

Mr. JONES. When I asked Gen. Alvarado the point-blank question in regard to the written proposition I was to submit to him to act as publicity agent when I asked him to whom I should address it, he said to himself. I then said, "Is it possible to give me a yes or no answer now, as soon as this written proposition is received by you?" He said, "No; it will have to be sent to my people in Mexico." I then asked him, "Will you have to communicate with Mexico City?" He said, "No; it will not go to Mexico City." He then said Gen. Calles was one of the parties that would have to decide yes or no on the proposition of the propaganda expenditures and campaign. I imagine from this that it was the Sonora crowd that he really and actually was representing.

Senator BRANDEGEE. The reason I asked that question is, I can understand that you did not try to cross-examine him too closely.

Mr. JONES. Not too closely, because I did not want to spoil him.

Senator BRANDEGEE. But when he was here in Washington a few weeks ago it was stated in the newspapers here that he was one of the representatives of Obregon in that country.

Mr. JONES. That statement was correct, because on the morning Alvarado arrived here I came over from New York, accompanied by my brother and Gene Fowler of the New York American. We were holding a story up to get the tail of the story regarding Alvarado. I had another party telephone to Hopkins's office, and listened in on an extension, and Hopkins said, "Yes; Alvarado is in town but he will not give out any interview." This other party on the phone told him he was representing a newspaper bureau. This party then said that the party he represented wanted Alvarado's address, and Mr. Hopkins refused to give it, and said Alvarado could only be seen at his office in his presence.

I then saw Mr. Kearful, attorney for the committee, and told him where Alvarado could be located. Kearful thought it advisable to have a subpoena served on Alvarado, but did not have any one who knew Alvarado by sight or where he could be located. I told him he could be located in Hopkins's office. Judge Kearful asked me if I would go with the sergeant at arms and point Alvarado out to him, which I agreed to do, without thinking about it. If I had thought about it I would not have done it, because I would have known it would kill me forever of being able to talk to him again.

Nevertheless, I went down with him and went in to see Hopkins, and Hopkins said, "Yes. Gen. Alvarado was here, but he would give out an interview at 6 o'clock." I told him I was going back to New York at 5, and I would like to see him before that. He said, "That can't be done." I said it was unfortunate, due to the fact that I had had some 10 or 11 interviews with Alvarado in New York, and wanted to confirm the information he had previously given me. Mr. Hopkins seemed to be worried about the interviews, and said to come at 4.30 and I could see him.

The sergeant at arms had been waiting, and we waited around on the street, and then came up and he served Alvarado and Mr. Hopkins, and neither one of them liked it. At that time Alvarado gave out a statement, through Mr. Hopkins, a copy of which I have, about six pages, practically an outline of the reasons for the Sonora revolt. So I take it that Alvarado was the actual representative in Washington of the revolting crowd in Sonora.

Senator BRANDEGEE. When you talked with Alvarado did you talk in Spanish?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; he talked very good English.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You both spoke in English?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; on account of Mr. Fowler.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Where is Alvarado now?

Mr. JONES. I understand he is somewhere down in Sonora. I don't know for certain.

The CHAIRMAN. He was in Hermosillo, the capital of Sonora, a few days ago.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Did you ever meet Carranza?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Talked to him?

Mr. JONES. Mexico City, and I also met him in Piedras Negras.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Did you talk with him?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. I remember the first time I ever saw him. He had a dinner for a big bunch of newspaper men, and he took a mouthful of water to rinse his teeth with it, and when he spat I know he could have killed a fly 20 feet away with it.

In various conversations with me Alvarado slapped himself on the breast and said, "Of course, no man living can say that Alvarado is not an honest man. At one time he imagined that he would be a millionaire, but his greatest enemies can say that Alvarado is known to be perfectly honest, and now he is living in perfect misery."

His misery at that time consisted in living in one of the most extreme apartments in the Hotel Alexandria, conservatively costing him $100 to $150 a week, he and his wife both being here at that time, and were going the limit as far as apparent extravagance of every kind was concerned. So his misery was of a very peculiar character. Alvarado is conservatively said to be worth from three to five millions of dollars, and is one of the parties who is supposed to have put up the bulk of the money to start the Sonora revolt. He is supposed to have kicked in a couple of hundred thousand dollars for it.

Going back to my conversation with him in the Hotel Alexandria in New York Gen. Alvarado showed us a copy of the issue of June 5, 1918, of the El Excelsior, a prominent daily paper of Mexico City, which published editorially a statement that paymasters of the Mexican Army had and were stealing unusually large sums. The paper gave the names of 37 defaulting paymasters, with the amount each was charged with having stolen. The amounts ran from 500 pesos to 400,000 pesos each.

Alvarado, continuing, said that as an illustration of the money that Carranza had wasted on his army, the majority of which is stolen, the Mexican appropriation for 1918 for its war and marine departments was 120,755,631.65 pesos, and that this was nearly two-thirds of Carranza's entire annual budget for that year; that all of this was spent on Carranza's military, and of which, those who know to be a fact, including himself (Alvarado) realize that 60 per cent was grafted by Carranza's army officers.

Alvarado then said: "This is the real reason for Carranza's power, for the army has permission to loot the appropriation. When the officers are accused of graft, they answer: 'Who are we that we should bite the hands that feeds us?'"

Alvarado then said: "As an illustration of the conduct of Carranza's army, I, while commanding general of the Mexican southern military zone, arrested 182 Mexican Army officers. They ranked from sublieutenant to colonel. I had caught them and absolutely had proof of crimes committed by them, including murder, rape, robbery of foreigners, and destruction of their property, etc.

After I was relieved from my command, Carranza pardoned or released these officers, restored them to duty, and promoted many of them. These men are now commanding troops, and Carranza, with his far-seeing guile, has placed these officers under obligations to him. He is using officers of this class, particularly in command of special troops which he has sent, and is sending to various parts of Mexico to bully and intimidate the voters who oppose his wishes.

This plan, according to Alvarado, has resulted in creating the same conditions in the entire Mexican Army, and that as long as any Mexican officer is willing to do Carranza's "dirty work," that officer can steal with immunity, rob, or murder Mexicans or foreigners, and destroy their property. He continued:

Carranza could have eliminated Villa or any other bandit at any time that he so desired. He could have brought peace and prosperity to Mexico years ago if he had wanted to. When Villa or others became active Carranza invariably withdrew Mexican troops from the territory the revolutionists or bandits were operating in, leaving only a small number of troops, wholly insufficient, for a garrison. In this way the bandits or revolutionists were able to remain active, which was just what Carranza wanted, for it enabled him then to maintain a large army, who in turn looted the treasury, and as repayment for the loot kept Carranza in power; allowing the country to be overrun with revolutionists and bandits also enabled Carranza to appear in the eyes of the Mexicans, who did not know the real facts, and the various foreign governments, as having a great deal to contend with in Mexico, which was his excuse for showing no productive results as far as bringing peace and prosperity to Mexico was concerned.

As an illustration of the fact that Carranza under no circumstances desired that these revolutionists or bandits be wiped out, during the latter part of 1919 Carranza ordered Gen. Dieguez, the commander in the State Chihuahua, to take 1,200 soldiers out of that State, which is Villa's stamping ground, and move these Mexican troops to the State of Sonora, where he was to use the troops to intimidate friends and supporters of Gen. Obregon, whose native State is Sonora. This left the State of Chihuahua with so few troops that renewed activities were immediately launched by the Villistas, which was what Carranza desired.

Alvarado, in explaining Carranza's further plans to remain in power through the influence of his army, said, "Carranza plans, as he has already done, to weed out of his army the few officers and troops remaining that he can not depend on at the next election." Alvarado then said that Carranza's election plans has resulted in the needless deaths of thousands of his troops. He illustrated this statement by stating that Gen. Arnulfo Gomez, who about a year ago was commander of a large part of the Mexican Army in the State of Sonora, was a strong partisan of Gen. Obregon, and that many of his command were likewise supporters of Obregon. Carranza, as commander in chief of the Mexican Army, ordered these troops from their native State of Sonora to the tropical State of Tabasco, in the south of Mexico, and although these men fully realized the fate that awaited them, they dared not rebel and face the charges of mutiny.

Alvarado, continuing, said: "They went, and to-day they are but a sad memory, for tropical diseases, fever, and bandits destroyed them almost to a man. Carranza had given personal orders that all of these troops were to be divided into small squads on their arrival in Tabasco of from 10 to 50 men in each squad, and he sunk deep in the interior and among the tropical swamps. On account of the small number in each squad, those who escaped disease were powerless to resist attacks of bandits and revolutionists."

Alvarado, continuing, said: "Their wives, children, and relatives of these 2,000 Mexican soldiers, the majority of whom had fought through the revolution to place Carranza in power, were left in Sonora. Carranza personally saw to it that they had no military protection. Hundreds of these women and children were outraged and murdered by Yaqui Indians, or persecuted in many other ways." "This," Alvarado continued, "was one of the many examples given by Carranza to show other soldiers inclined to be rebellious, or loyal to Obregon, that it would not be good for them to support others than himself if they did not want to be ordered south or disposed of or framed in some other way."

Alvarado said: "This is one of the many ways used by Carranza to expel from the army or to kill off in the last year and a half fully 50 per cent of the officers and men who helped to place him in power and who were bitterly opposed to his dishonest policies and who Carranza knew could not be depended upon to help him steal the oncoming elections."

Alvarado then said: Fifty per cent of his original army is left, fully content with Carranza so long as he permits them to steal millions of pesos, and rob, murder, and rape Mexicans and foreigners, and destroy their property. Carranza has replaced that part of the army that he has forced out, by recruiting from bandits, revolutionists, robbers, murderers, thieves, and all other of the very lowest and vilest element of Mexico. Therefore, fully half of the Mexican Army now represents the very lowest and worst types of Mexicans."

Alvarado then said that this had resulted in the army being divided against itself, and that Carranza, in attempting to manipulate the affairs of Mexico through his army, will destroy himself by the very power which he set up, through the desires of the two factions in his army, each of these factions already having sworn that their leaders are to be in control of the army.

Alvarado continued: "No matter whether or not Carranza remains in office after the election, this will result during the next four to six months in civil war in Mexico, due to the two army factions breaking apart and fighting each other for full and complete control of the army. Then, in addition to the internal conflict in the Carranza army, there will be the revolution started by the independent political party of which Gen. Obregon is the leader, making a triangular fight of the whole affair, with a large number of independent bandits and other revolutionary parties dipping into the general fray or conducting outrages against anybody or everybody. Thus Mexico will be in a turmoil unprecedented in her hundreds of years of strife and revolution, and blood will flow from every village, town, and city, and it will be a most complete confession to the whole world that Mexico is uncivilized and can not control her own affairs."

I asked him:

Will this not result in the almost total destruction of foreign property in Mexico or the ruin of much of it and will it not bring on the death of many foreigners then in Mexico. And if so, what will the United States and other foreign governments do?

He answered:

The thoughtful Mexicans know and feel certain that when this condition comes to pass, as we know it will soon come, it will result in intervention by the United States. This intervention will in every way have the full sympathy and support of all other civilized governments.

I asked him when this condition came to pass in Mexico, what would Carranza say or do, and Alvarado replied, "When Carranza saw the result of his work and the condition he had yoked his country to through his dictatorship, Carranza and his henchmen would attempt to flee the country." He continued, "but they will be killed before they leave Mexico. The great pity of it is that in addition to Carranza and his clique being blamed for these conditions, all good and loyal Mexicans will be blamed likewise, just as this madman Carranza who is the most damnable traitor of all Mexicans that ever lived."

Alvarado, continuing, said in answer to leading questions of mine that if Carranza had ruled Mexico with an honest end and had put down, as you (Alvarado) say he could have done, the bandits and revolutionists, then there would have been but very little loss to foreigners of their property in Mexico, nor would there have been but very few Americans and other foreigners in Mexico killed.

Alvarado's answer was, "There is no doubt but that Carranza has been and is absolutely responsible for 90 per cent of the outrages perpetrated in Mexico on foreigners and their property. This is an honest and positive fact, and the murder of the majority of the foreigners and the destruction of their property has been caused by the class of bandits and robbers that Carranza has put in his army who he has allowed to conduct themselves as they desire."

Alvarado, continuing said, "Nearly all of the murders and outrages perpetrated on foreigners and their property were done by the Mexican soldiers."

Alvarado then, as one of the many illustrations of Carranza's methods used to intimidate soldiers in Mexico and of forcing them to bend to his dictates in the next election, said, "Gen. Obregon, during the latter part of February of this year, had gone to the State of Michocan. In that State he is very popular and has a strong following. During his visit he made many political speeches supporting his candidacy for the presidency:

Carranza, bitterly displeased as to the popular demonstration in favor of Obregon in Michocan, immediately ordered all the freight trains, which as you know are under Government control and operation, out of that city. The people of that State have not been able since then to ship their products or to secure in return the necessities of life from outside the State. Carranza also ordered more than 75 per cent of the Mexican army troops out of Michocan, thereby leaving the State to the complete mercy of the bandits in their expeditions of robbery and murder in that formerly prosperous territory.

Carranza thus gives a lesson to other States as to what may happen to them if they do not agree with him and court his good will by supporting him by their solid vote behind his presidential plans.

Gen. Alvarado stated that Carranza's plans to steal or control the next presidential elections in Mexico would be manipulated along the following lines, "for," as Alvarado said, "Carranza, through his army has intimidated voters who, if they cast a vote, as far as the majority of them are concerned, will vote as Carranza instructs through his local army officers, or others who would have voted, not caring to have the wrath of Carranza and his officials to fall on them, will stay away from the polls. However, if by chance Obregon or any other presidential candidate that Carranza was against, happened to secure a majority of the votes in each voting district, when the act is drawn up with a list of votes obtained by each candidate, this act will fraudulently be changed to show that Carranza's candidate received the majority of the votes."

Alvarado then said that even if the act was an honest one, which in no event would it be, it would be sent to the Mexican Congress where Carranza's elected deputies or members of Congress assembled and who would pass on the legality of the election and likewise on the number of votes cast for each candidate. With so much fraud possible in the preliminary stages of the election the congressmen themselves, all of whom Alvarado again emphatically stated were Carranza's puppets, would then cinch matters by doing whatever he (Carranza) desired in the way of electing the proper man.

Alvarado, continuing, said: "There is no limit to their trickery, including the corruption of all of the minor election officials, and that as to their plans of stealing the votes or substituting others for the original ballots, Carranza has already thoroughly arranged for this to happen."

Alvarado then brought out very strongly the fact that Carranza's overlooking no chances to remain as dictator in person or be in control of Mexico through a puppet executive, will guide the actions of his Congress in this fashion:

Within a few weeks after the election, Congress will convene for the official count of votes. Carranza's henchmen will then declare whether the election was legal or otherwise. The prearranged plan is for the Congress, as Carranza's vote manipulators, to declare the election void, due to the country not being in a condition of peace, or, declare in some other manner the election has not been "honest."

Carranza, meanwhile, will have retired to the country. Congress, holding that Mexico is confronted with many internal difficulties and with international problems, will declare with much gusto that Mexico must have a strong man in power as its executive. Then Congress, by unanimous request, will recall Carranza and inaugurate him as Acting President until the country is deemed in sufficient peace to warrant a fair and legal election.

Gen. Alvarado then declared that he, as well as other former strong supporters of Carranza, absolutely had in their possession positive proof of the fact that Carranza, having carefully arranged the above plan, proposes to put this steal of the election over, even though it does cause certain civil war. Alvarado, however, qualified this statement by saying that certain of Carranza's strong supporters and advisers, fearing the outcome of civil war, which they know is almost sure to force intervention, may at the last moment persuade Carranza that it would be best for him to remain the dictator of Mexico in fact, though not in person, by having elected illegally a dummy President, who will simply be the mouthpiece for Carranza.

In the opinion of Alvarado, as he expressed in his several interviews, if the latter course is adopted, Ambassador Ygnacio Bonillas will be chosen as a dummy for Carranza. For a while it was thought, so Alvarado said, that Gen. Pablo Gonzales might be run as Carranza's proposed presidential puppet, but according to later developments Alvarado is now convinced, according to his statements, that there is a secret understanding between Pablo Gonzales, Bonillas, and Carranza which will result, if a puppet president is put in, in this party being Bonillas.

Alvarado, referring at this moment to Gonzales, said that he (Gonzales) had been one of Carranza's chief spineless political and military lieutenants.

Alvarado, in explaining Carranza's manipulation for the last year and a half in anticipation of domineering according to his own ideas and wishes the oncoming presidential elections, said that Carranza began eliminating more than a year ago from the Government and army, all friends and supporters of every aspirant for the presidency. In the large number so "quieted," some being exiled, others being sent on long "missions" and still others called in from outlying districts and given posts where they would be directly under the official eye of Carranza; among the large number mentioned by Alvarado was Cosme Hinojosa, former Postmaster General of Mexico. Alvarado said that this party was now in New York City and I then asked him to give me a letter of introduction to Hinojosa, which Alvarado did. The letter is as follows:

SEÑOR COSME HINOJOSA,
Hotel McAlpin.

HINOJOSA: El portador desea hablarte; es un peridolista que desea alguna informacion y me dice que no usara tu nombre.
tu amigo,

[Translation.]

S. ALVARADO.

MR. COSME HINOJOSA,
Hotel McAlpin.

HINOJOSA: The bearer of the present wishes to interview you; he is a newspaper man who desired certain information, and he tells me he will not use your name.

Your friend,

S. ALVARADO.

Alvarado's statement regarding Hinojosa was that Hinojosa had always been a very strong personal friend and partisan of Gen. Obregon, and that as he had a large personal following, Carranza, therefore, desired, until after he had manipulated the presidential elections, to take away from Obregon Hinojosa's support. Carranza, being afraid to deliberately break with Hinojosa, or attempt to discredit him, decided that it would be best to send him on a long mission, and therefore ordered him as a representative of the Mexican postal system to attend a postal conference in South America. Alvarado, continuing, said that Hinojosa told him that he did not propose to go to South America but would be in the United States for some time, and then go to Spain and France. He said that Hinojosa would fully corroborate conditions in Mexico and Carranza's election plans and dictatorship, as Alvarado had explained same.

Alvarado then said that Hinojosa had spent two weeks of March, 1920, in Washington, endeavoring to urge and persuade Ambassador Bonillas to refrain from being a party to Carranza's election plots. Hinojosa later, so Alvarado said, told him (Alvarado) that he could secure no satisfactory answer from Bonillas as to whether he would or would not continue his activities for Carranza, but that he felt sure of the fact that Bonillas is right to the end with Carranza. Alvarado said that when he received this information from Hinojosa, he (Alvarado), during the week of March 7 to 13, made a trip to Washington where both he and Hinojosa had several interviews with Bonillas, urging him for the sake of Mexico to cut away from Carranza. Alvarado then said, "We literally begged him to refuse to be a party to Carranza's political intrigues," but that Bonillas positively refused to make any promises, nor would he agree not to be a party to the continuation of Carranza's plots. Alvarado, continuing, said the reason Bonillas would not make any promises nor agree not to participate in Carranza's intrigues, was because Bonillas at that time already positively was aware of the fact that he was to be Carranza's presidential candidate and Carranza's instrument to do with as he willed in the Mexican presidential elections. He (Alvarado) furthermore stated that up to that time he had a great deal of respect and confidence in the honor and integrity of Bonillas, but that now, inasmuch as Bonillas had announced himself as a candidate, everyone knew he was simply Carranza's puppet; therefore no one could have the respect and confidence for Bonillas that they formerly had.

Accompanied by Mr. Gene Fowler, a reporter for the New York American, I presented Alvarado's letter to Hinojosa at room No. 463, Hotel McAlpin, on the morning of March 20. After getting him "warmed up" and showing him I was thoroughly familiar with his status and his "mission" and that I knew from Alvarado and others the true state of affairs in Mexico—for I repeated to him many of Alvarado's statements—Hinojosa then consented to talk. He said:

It is true that Carranza, knowing that I am and always will be a strong supporter of Obregon, has therefore, as he has done with others, in order to get me out of Mexico and thus weaken Obregon's candidacy, sent me on a mission to Buenos Aires. However, instead of going there, I am leaving for France and Spain in April, and I may possibly go to Buenos Aires later, returning to Mexico during August of this year.

Hinojosa admitted the conference between Bonillas, Alvarado, and himself in Washington. He also said that as he was on a diplomatic mission for Mexico and officially connected with the Government, he could not talk so freely as Alvarado. Hinojosa, however, confessed that Carranza did propose to manipulate the elections and illegally succeed himself or remain in control of Mexico through a puppet President. He furthermore said that Carranza had run out of the army or had retired to civilian life, or had sent from the country all the strong friends and supporters of Gen. Obregon.

Hinojosa admitted that Andres Garcia, former Mexican consul general at El Paso, Tex., and inspector general of Mexican consulates, had succeeded him as Postmaster General of Mexico.

Alvarado, in one of our interviews, while talking with him in regard to Andres Garcia, said that Garcia was known to be a strong friend and supporter of Obregon, and that Carranza was afraid to leave him at El Paso. Therefore, knowing the large following that Garcia had, rather than break with him, had brought him to Mexico City, where he would be under the direct eye of Carranza and his other henchmen, and in this way the friends and supporters of Garcia through his influence would not be able to be of much value to Obregon's campaign.

Alvarado, in one of my interviews with him, said that during September and October, 1919, Carranza had organized a special corps of army officers ranking from lieutenant to colonel. This was for the avowed purpose, as far as the public knew, to make a survey of conditions in Mexico to improve them. Alvarado, continuing, said:

As a matter of fact, this corps is a secret police system for Carranza. It was formed to spread propaganda favoring Carranza's dictatorship and also to intimidate civilians and any of the army who may be opposed to Carranza's plans. This force consists of between 800 and 1,000 Mexican Army officers; and in small squads and in larger groups these special army officers have been moved from one end of Mexico to the other and under personal orders from Carranza have been used to browbeat and intimidate all of the Mexican citizens who were known to be favorable to other presidential candidates or opposed to Carranza's plans or policies.

Alvarado stated very frankly that the Independent Political Party in Mexico, of which Gen. A. Obregon, former Mexican minister of war and marine, is the presidential candidate, knows positively that Carranza proposes to succeed himself as President or dictator, and that they had documentary evidence to this effect; and that if on the advice of his advisers Carranza weakened at the last moment, that he would then manipulate the elections to put in his presidential puppet Bonillas. Alvarado added:

If Carranza does this, and it is absolutely certain that he will, then it is equally certain that within two or three weeks after the July elections the Independent Political Party will launch their revolutionary movement. It may even happen at an earlier date, due to the fact that Carranza has already endeavored to crush Obregon's strength in Sonora.

On Friday, March 19, at 6 p. m., Jene Fowler and myself again called at Alvarado's apartments in the Alexandria Hotel. At this time Gen. Alvarado gave me written information regarding Mexican matters and likewise at this time continued his previous conversation, and said:

This revolution will extend instantly from the Atlantic to the Pacific and will flash along the entire border, resulting in a multitude of armed uprisings occurring at every border State and in hundreds of Mexican towns and villages.

Before three months from the start of the revolution, Carranza or his "dummy" president and all those allied with him in the illegal elections and participating with him, will be thrown out of power, executed, or exiled.

I asked Gen. Alvarado what strength could be placed on Obregon's recent statement that if he were defeated at the next election he would not head the new revolution. Gen. Alvarado smiled knowingly, and said:

This statement of Obregon means nothing. It is camouflaged. It was given out only by Gen. Obregon to demonstrate that he is a law-abiding citizen, and also to make additional friends in the United States.

The Independent Party is greater than any man. After all it is not a question of who will head the revolution or whether Obregon is the leader or someone else. The fact is that the revolution will come as a result of Carranza's manipulation of the election. There are several leaders who may head it, if Obregon for any unforeseen reason does not assume the leadership.

I asked him:

Who, for instance?

Gen. Alvarado replied:

Gen. P. Elias Calles, one of our best men, may head the revolution.

I pulled out of Alvarado the following facts regarding the reason why Obregon may not be at the start the official directing head of the new revolutionary movement. Obregon's political party believes that the United States may refuse to recognize him if he became President through a revolution; therefore, Gen. Calles has been designated as acting head of the revolutionary movement. Then, when the revolution is successful, or while it is approaching a climax, Gen. Obregon will be called into the situation openly as the strong man who will "bring peace and prosperity to Mexico."

I asked Gen. Alvarado if it was true that he was entertaining presidential aspirations. He said:

Every man aims high, but I am not popular enough in Mexico ever to become president of that country. This is due to the fact that I do not possess the flexibility that is necessary for a presidential candidate to have.

However, Gen. Alvarado declared that as a loyal Mexican, when the revolution started, he proposed to do his duty in supporting any movement that would eliminate, as he put it, "Carranza, the dictator, and his henchmen." He added:

Thousands of Mexicans from the interior and from all border States, during the last 60 days, have crossed into the United States to escape what will be the worst revolution Mexico ever had, and likewise to keep from being forced at the point of guns into Carranza's armies or into the revolutionary forces.

Continuing, Alvarado said.

This, better than anything else that I know of, shows that Mexico is not even safe for the Mexicans.

In checking up Alvarado's statement, it is evident that the flow of Mexican immigration into the United States is increasing rapidly. El Excelsior, a Mexican daily, stated in a recent issue, in reference to the large number of Mexicans leaving their country for America, that "whole towns are departing from Mexico into the United States."

Alvarado's description of Luis Cabrera was as follows:

Among Carranza's principal lieutenants in manipulating the oncoming elections is Luis Cabrera, noted for his extreme hatred of America and its citizens in Mexico. Cabrera is a native of La Sierra de Puebla, and is about 43 years of age.

He is one of the shrewdest and most destructive men holding office under Carranza, and is secretary of the treasury.

Cabrera is hated, feared, and despised by Mexicans in general, even more so than is Carranza. Gen. Alvarado then said:

Cabrera should have been born in the fourth century, for he is a skeptic and does not believe in morality, and has no honor or integrity. He also feels an invincible attraction toward doing evil. He has been able to maintain himself as Carranza's lieutenant through his absolute submission and the fact that he satisfies the evil instincts of Carranza. No substitute can be found anywhere for Cabrera. Furthermore, Cabrera has been responsible for creating in Mexico more anti-American sentiment than any other Mexican in Mexico. Of this he has likewise had full knowledge, and it has met with his complete approval as far as Mexican anti-American policies are concerned.

Alvarado then, in his remarks regarding Manuel Aguirre Berlanga, Carranza's secretary of the interior, said, regarding this party, that he is the most servile agent that Carranza has for his proposed election frauds and other villanies. He is stupid, has no administrative qualifications, is not honest, and his only power consists in saying to Carranza:

My chief, I admire your talents and energy, and you are my perfect ideal of what a real ruler of Mexico should be.

Alvarado then described Ygnacio Bonillas, the Mexican Ambassador to the United States, which was written by Alvarado himself and handed to me in the presence of Gene Fowler, as his confidential views about Bonillas, as follows:

Ygnacio Bonillas was born in San Ygnacio, Sonora. He secured his early education in Tucson, Ariz., and his professional education in the Boston Institute of Technology. He is a mining engineer and is a specialist in his line.

He has no social conscience. He is little known in Mexico. His candidacy for the Presidency of Mexico is a scheme concocted by Carranza in order to keep himself (Carranza) in power. Even if Bonillas becomes President everybody knows that his candidacy is a farce. Bonillas is neither honest or conscientious, and has sold himself body and soul to the wishes of Carranza.

On March 17, 1920, Bonillas accepted at Nuevo Laredo, which is the Mexican township opposite Laredo, Tex., the nomination for the presidency of Mexico by the Civilista Party, which was tendered him by Gens. Federico Montez and Manuel Amaya.

Alvarado, continuing, said:

I knew when I talked to Bonillas in Washington, as I told you about before, that he was not telling the truth, and that he already a long time ago had made arrangements with Carranza to do Carranza's bidding in the next elections. I formerly had a great deal of confidence and respect for Bonillas; now I know him to be morally, politically, and in every other way—nothing. He is forever socially and politically dead in Mexico.

In my testimony regarding Bonillas and his attempts to interfere with legislation pending before the Foreign Relations Committee affecting Mexico, I should have mentioned at that time that in one of my several conferences with Bonillas and while "stringing" him

I told him that he was one of the greatest ambassadors Mexico ever had to the United States. He smiled and replied:

The best we ever had here, and whose example I have tried to follow, is Manuel Calero.

This was the ambassador of Madero. On February 3, 1913, Calero, who had just returned to Mexico from the United States, made what is said to have been the "most amazing speech by a man of his prominence before the Mexican Senate." He said:

I lied to the American Government for 10 months.

Among other Mexican Government officials that Alvarado described was Gen. Manuel M. Dieguez. Alvarado's description of him was as follows: He said that this was Carranza's present chief of operations in the north; that he never had amounted to anything before the revolution and was always known as an active agitator. President Diaz sent him to San Juan de Ulloa in 1906 for the strike at Cananea. He has stolen many thousands of dollars and is extremely rich, due to the revolution. He is decidedly overbearing to the poor, and is a brutal soldier, utterly without social conscience of any kind, without education or morality. He is a perfect type of a genuine "bad article."

Alvarado's statement regarding Pastor Rouaix, Carranza's secretary of public instruction, is as follows: That he is without energy and has no administrative ability. He is continually drunk and is notorious as a "money grabber." Carranza is fond of him because he has no opinion, nor does he talk, think, or feel. Whatever Carranza's ideas are, so are those of Pastor Rouaix.

His remarks regarding Candido Aguilar, Carranza's son-in-law and Mexican minister of foreign affairs, included the statement that Aguilar was an absolute nonentity, notoriously anti-American, and has never had any time to attend to any matters except with both hands to grab all property or money, dishonestly or otherwise, that he could lay his hands on. Furthermore, that it was generally understood among those who know Aguilar, that he is "off in the head"—crazy—and that during 1918 for a time everyone knew that he was insane. Aguilar's ability is nothing. He is a perfect tool and henchman for Carranza.

Alvarado then said, regarding Manuel Rodriguez Gutierrez, secretary of communications, that he was a man utterly stupid and without education or any ability; that he is an extremist and immoral, and his past great quality is that he has no opinion, feeling, or ability to think, except to say to Carranza, "Here I am; I do your bidding."

Alvarado's description, as written by him in his own language, of Pablo Gonzales is as follows:

That Gonzales was born in the State of Nuevo Leon and was a small business man before the revolution. During the revolution he has lost almost all of his battles through absolute military inability. A great many of his soldiers have been killed due to lack of military management. Due to his continual military defeats, he is popularly known in Mexico by the name of "Pablo Carreras" or the "hero of defeats."

Gonzales has no talent or administrative ability. Uprightness and morality are missing qualities in him. His greatest achievement was the murder of Zapata (the celebrated Mexican bandit).

This never would have been successful except by the deliberate assassination of his own men. Through one of Gonzales's officers, Col. Guajardo, Gonzales arranged that this colonel apparently would desert from the ranks of the Carrancistas, with some of his own men, to the forces of Zapata. This was done.

Zapata, in order to prove the fidelity of Col. Guajardo, the next day ordered the latter to attack a Carrancista garrison, which Guajardo did. In the meanwhile Guajardo had sent word to the garrison that he was to "pull off" a sham attack on them and that they were not to fire into his troops.

Guajardo then attacked the garrison, which, obeying Guajardo's orders, did not fire into the latter's force. Much to their surprise, Guajardo's soldiers fired directly into the garrison, killing and wounding a large number of them, and then took 74 prisoners and surrendered them to Zapata, who in turn ordered them to be shot immediately.

Guajardo lined up his force and deliberately, to carry through his plan, ordered his troops to immediately execute sentence on the 74 prisoners who were the comrades of the troops who fired the death-dealing volley. This gained the confidence of Zapata, who later came to pay Guajardo a visit at his headquarters. The visit resulted in Zapata being shot down from behind.

As soon as Zapata was dead, Gen. Pablo Gonzales claimed for himself the glory of this deed. Carranza immediately presented Gonzales with a present of 50,000 pesos and advanced Guajardo to the rank of brigadier general. All of Guajardo's subcommanders were promoted.

Gonzales, in the State of Morales, manipulated affairs whereby many thousands of acres of the finest ranch and farming lands in that State are now controlled by him. Gonzales is an extremely wealthy man, although before the revolution he had nothing, and the question is asked: "How did he secure same?" Everyone knows how, for it is through his manipulations in the army that he has stolen his wealth.

Through shrewd publicity and propaganda efforts of Pablo Gonzales's American agents in the United States many prominent officials at Washington and elsewhere have been led to believe that Gonzales, as a Mexican presidential possibility, is the best of the "crop" of aspirants as far as the interests of the United States are concerned.

During the World War Carranza, with his well-known ability to play both ends against the middle, instructed Gonzales to "come out strong" as a proally. This was done by Gonzales. Those who know Mexico fully understand that Gonzales could not have expressed his proally sentiments except by a prearranged plan with Carranza and with the latter's full knowledge, consent, and thorough approval.

Gonzales who headed Carranza's southward movement during Carranza's revolution, stopped for a time at Pachuca. While there he issued manifestos breathing love and patriotism for his people and pledged their protection. Meanwhile his soldiers looted the native shops and his officers outraged the girls and women there. A similar condition existed wherever Gonzales's troops were billeted.

Gonzales's military record, according to Alvarado, in Mexico has been a bloody one from the standpoint of the hundreds and hundreds of outrages perpetrated on the people of Mexico, and his officers and soldiers have raped, outraged, and committed similar crimes on thousands of Mexican girls and women.

As far as Gonzales's "love" and "belief" in the United States is concerned, same is entirely disproven by the speech of Gen. Gonzales in 1916, in which he said:

I do not approve Wilson's policy for a reason which is fundamental with me, as I believe it is with every honest man. Wilson's policy (the Mexican policy) is not frank. It is not clean. I do not reconcile the Pershing expedition with the bombastic and oft-repeated statements of President Wilson of his respect and sympathy for Mexico.

I wish that President Wilson would give proof of his friendship with deeds, or that he would be our open enemy and declare war on us, which is preferable to his policy of double-dealing, overwhelming us on the one hand with honeyed words and protestations of sympathy, and on the other hand protecting our enemies and obstructing the consolidation of our Government.

In Mexico City, Pablo Gonzales has made a speciality of cultivating the friendship of Americans. During the early part of 1919, Gonzales, through various Americans at Mexico City, began to arrange his publicity plans as far as the United States was concerned. At that time I was approached by a prominent American lawyer having offices in Mexico City, who on July 23, 1919, in part wrote me as follows:

I suggest that you write a letter to Mr. Claude Dunning, American Club, Mexico City, specifying in a detailed way just what services you would be able to render in the way of popularizing Gen. Pablo Gonzales in America. You should state the papers that you can use, and also emphasize the fact that you could probably be able to do something big for him with the strong Republicans. You should also, in my judgment, put your offer on a strictly business basis. I do not know whether it would be wise for you to suggest what compensation you would desire, in the first letter. Mr. Dunning is a warm and intimate friend of mine. He will place your letter with Gen. Gonzales's manager, whom he knows very intimately.

On the date of June 25, 1919, I also received another letter from this party in Mexico City, which, in part, is as follows:

Gen. Pablo Gonzales is a man of good financial standing and is able to pay any reasonable price for the right kind of work. My suggestion is that you should put up to him just what he can expect for so many thousands of dollars per month, and how much he can expect for twice that amount. I have no ideas as to the prices charged for this kind of work, but he is willing to pay if he can get the right kind of publicity.

Alvarado's written description of Obregon stated as follows: That he was born in Siquisiva, Sonora. Before the Madero revolution he was a small farmer in that State. He began his political career as municipal president of Huatabampo, Sonora, where he organized a battalion of fellow citizens in order to fight Orozco in 1912. He carried out this campaign successfully and that of 1913 against Huerta. He was the active head of Carranza's campaign of 1915 against Villa. This resulted in complete victory for the Carrancistas. Obregon's enemies admit that he is a military leader of merit, but it is said that he has won his victories by utter disregard of death in battle of many thousands of his command.

After Obregon's campaign against Villa, Carranza appointed him minister of war and marine. Obregon is a man of limited education and even his friends state that he has but very little administrative ability.

There has been so much testimony given before the Fall committee that any remarks of mine regarding Obregon are hardly necessary. However, it is well to remember that Obregon was an active participant in all of Carranza's plots against the United States, and that he cooperated in same with great enthusiasm.

In my testimony regarding Carranza's Central American plots there has been shown quite a large number of original letters passing from various parties to and from Obregon. This Central American plot of Carranza's, in connection with Von Eckhardt, the German ambassador to Mexico, was to secure control of all Central America and to work in those countries at all times against the interests of the United States.

Wherever Obregon's troops campaigned under his personal command people of Mexico were robbed by them, churches were ransacked, thousands of women and girls were outraged by the officers and men of his command, and when Obregon led into Mexico City his Yaqui soldiers the metropolis was given over to complete looting by the Indians, and thousands of women and girls were outraged there.

Obregon, as commander of all Mexican forces, and later in his cabinet capacity, participated actively in all of Carranza's anti-American intrigues. Obregon ranked as one of the most extreme pro-German sympathizers in Mexico during this period. Likewise, he was one of the most celebrated "haters" of the United States. He was the close friend and associate of Von Eckhardt and was beloved by the German colony in Mexico City.

When Obregon entered Mexico City, flying the black flag of piracy, he made a contract with the I. W. W. During the World War, at a time when it seemed that Germany was succeeding, he wrote a book favoring the Prussian cause. In that work he approved the attitude and policies of Carranza to form a union among the Latin American nations to oppose the United States economically and otherwise.

About a year and a half ago Obregon began his publicity and propaganda campaign in the United States, engineered by American publicity men. He realized he would have to "flop" and become pro-American. He did this with much gusto and extensive advertising. His new protestations of love for the United States can be classed as "bunco talk."

Gen. Obregon's campaign manager in Mexico is Gen. Benjamin Hill, who during the early part of 1919 began seeking a publicity director in the United States. Dr. M. L. Espinosa, Avenue Morales 91, Mexico City, is assistant campaign manager for Gen. Obregon. At that time Obregon's presidential campaign plans, as far as propaganda was concerned, consisted of appointing a publicity representative in Cuba, Porto Rico, British Honduras, each of the five Central American countries, Panama, each of the South American countries, and in England, France, Germany, Spain, and the United States.

During the early part of 1919 I received several letters from a friend of mine in Mexico City who stated that he had talked to Dr. Espinosa and Gen. Benjamin Hill, and that they were very anxious to secure a publicity director in the United States who could produce results. In another part of my testimony I will in detail outline the activities of several parties in New York City, who, I understand, from reliable witnesses, had conducted active negotiations with representatives of Obregon to handle a publicity and propaganda fund to popularize him throughout the United States.

One reason for Alvarado talking so frankly to me was due to the fact that he thought that from a newspaper standpoint I could be of a great deal of benefit to him and to Obregon and for their political party, from a publicity standpoint, throughout the United States; and I was to prepare a written proposition in regard to handling publicity work for them which I was to present to Alvarado, which, however, I never did.

Alvarado, continuing his conversation with me, said that Obregon's right-hand bower and the man who will really start the revolutionary movement for him is Gen. P. Elias Calles, who was born in Guymas, Sonora. Before the Carranza revolution, Calles was a school-teacher, and later was a small business man, and, like Obregon, had little worldly goods. His political career began in 1911, when he became part of the Carranza movement against Huerta.

It will be remembered that Carranza appointed Calles as military governor and commander of Sonora, and later, for a short while, had him as a member of his cabinet. Calles claims to have resigned due to not being able to stomach Carranza's plans and policies.

When Calles was governor of Sonora, he is said to have established a record in that State which still stands regarding his total indifference as to the lives and property of the unfortunate foreigners having investments in Sonora.

Carranza's biography, according to Gen Alvarado, corresponds to that of Satan. Alvarado said:

Carranza, years ago, was a school teacher in his native State, Coahuila, at 40 pesos ($20) a month. He had no property. In those days Carranza decked himself out as a grandee and strutted about his little village for the benefit of the señoritas, who, it is said, didn't admire his whiskers, and Carranza, even in those days, as far as the señoritas were concerned, amounted to nothing.

Alvarado, continuing, said:

His whiskers (Carranza's) were then like Carranza's heart is now—coal black.

Even in those days, Alvarado declared, Carranza was known as an extremist, and his own relatives are said to have regarded him as "missing in the head."

Alvarado, continuing, said that Carranza manipulated his election to the State legislature of Coahuila. Three months later his neighbors and friends were astonished to learn that Carranza had accumulated sufficient funds to purchase a large ranch.

Carranza's rise in politics was gradual, said Alvarado, who added: "And his rise in morality remained stationary."

Carranza finally worked his way into the governorship of Coahuila. When Madero was president, Carranza, as well as other governors, received from the Federal treasury large monthly allowances for the payment of the State troops. He is charged with having only a limited number of troops in his State, and the balance of the pay roll for a much larger number went into his pockets and those of his officials.

This resulted in a disagreement between Carranza and the group surrounding President Madero. Carranza's monthly troop allowance was cut off, and friction between Carranza and Madero led to the formulation of plans by Carranza to revolt against Madero. Before these plans could be put through, Madero was assassinated and Carranza's advisers told him of the bad impression Madero's murder had produced in the United States.

Alvarado, continuing, said that Carranza realized his opportunity was at hand. He proclaimed loudly, especially where American ears were open, that his purpose of revolting against Huerta was to revenge the "shameful murder" of his "beloved chief," Madero.

Alvarado, continuing, said that all of Carranza's promises as first chief and as President have never been carried out. His favorite and only weapons are corruption and intrigues. He has absolutely no conception of morality, and his only faith lies in the strength of money and the strength of his arms. He—Alvarado—continued:

Carranza is a dangerous lunatic, caused by his lust for power, irrespective of consequences to the land which gave him birth. The irresponsible class of Mexicans Carranza needs and has for his infamous work. He and they care nothing for reforms or organization of the government. Their only desire is crime, wine, women, money, and immunity from Carranza for their vices, which he invariably extends to them.

In order to serve Carranza as he wants to be served, a man must have lost all of his morality and dignity, and must have acquired a character of a blind instrument.

The administration of Carranza never has been and never will be a progressive one. His government has been nothing but a conspiracy to keep Carranza with his circle of scoundrels in power. Carranza was placed in power by those who believed there was a great opportunity in Mexico for reforms by the people, and which would be a benefit to all. He has betrayed in every way the people who brought him to power. This line of conduct on his part is ita-son of the blackest kind to his country, party, and friends.

The circumstances of Carranza's betrayal to his country and friends are blacker and more treacherous than that of Benedict Arnold. In Carranza's criminal efforts against all of his pledges, guaranties, promises, and even the laws which he himself made to remain in power, he has employed all of the resources of the country—money as well as railroads, post offices, cable offices, the army, police, and navy, and in every other Federal, State, or municipal department of Mexico.

It was not worth while, as all Mexicans now know, to have made a revolution in order that traitors like Carranza and his henchmen should now be the dictators of Mexico.

In another interview with Alvarado after he had made his various statements regarding Carranza, I persuaded him to write a description of Carranza and his activities and of conditions in Mexico, and the following was written by Alvarado, and the translation of same is from the copy made by Alvarado:

Carranza has never been a revolutionary or reformer. Neither in his conversation nor in his public documents or private documents has he ever spoken about reform, nor in anything that was not the reestablishment of constitutional order.

When he abandoned Mexico in 1914, he considered himself lost and, as the final recourse, he began to attack the Americans who were in Vera Cruz, and for that purpose he placed an ultimatum before them to leave that port, ordering Gen. Candido Aguillar that if on such and such a date they had not embarked, he would attack them. Fortunately, the Americans retired and so there was avoided the occurrence that this man should bring upon his country a foreign war with the hope of consolidating a power that he hoped to lose. If his patriotic sentiments had been true, what was the use of his hoping to assume that energetic attitude until the rupture with Villa was complete? Why did he not demand the evacuation of domestic territory on the day he occupied the city of Mexico, or even before? He assumed a power of bitter patriotism as long as he saw himself lost, because he believed that Villa would follow him as far as Vera Cruz, and thought that by attacking the invaders he would become the palatine of national defense, and thus avoided that Villa should attack him.

This proves nothing more than this man is an unscrupulous man and is capable of doing anything in order to retain his power.

In Vera Cruz there were instances of fear and he was really constrained by the revolutionary elements there to issue two or three decrees of a reformist character, but he never thought of reforming them because he has been the insurmountable obstacle to the carrying out of these decrees.

We have the proof in the fact that the people have not received the least advantage, either in lands or in arrangements regarding their work, neither in education or hygiene or in any other sense.

The only thing that Carranza has in mind is not to leave the power he has in hand, and for that purpose he has continued to intrigue without let-up. His favorite and only weapons are corruption and intrigue; he has absolutely no conception of moral force nor does he believe that there are any honorable men, and his only faith lies in the strength of money and in the strength of his arms.

Carranza is a dangerous lunatic whose insanity consists in not wishing to give up any power at all that should be consequential to the country.

Let us see how he has proceeded latterly. In the first place he has practiced without let-up the maxim, "divide y reinaras". (divide, and you will rule.) In every State he has tried to maintain the discord between local parties or between the governor and the chief of the military. What he is most angered at is that there is a place in the country where everything is quiet and there are no difficulties. If, under any circumstances, in any State there is peace and progress, he does not rest until he creates difficulties that make his intervention necessary. There are Sonora, Tamaulipas, Nayarit, Michoacan, Coahuila, Yucatan, Tabasco, Mexico, San Luis Potosi, and there are all the rest of the States. He has tried with the force that his legality gives him, and using the army and the money of the nation to render null and void every element of real value and substitute elements of the most servile and unconditional character, types of men whose only aim is to have money with full hands and to have impunity for their misdeeds.

Classes of elements that Carranza needs for his infamous work, nor does he care about reforms or organizations or morality or anything else except crime and intemperance, his business, and his abuses.

Really the mercenaries are capable of doing anything and having wine, women, money, and impunity, and they do not care about anything else, and all they look for is the satisfaction of their vices.

Thus, slowly but continuously, Carranza has eliminated everything that is about to feel, think, have an opinion, or any act that might reveal his personality so that to-day he is unconditionally the only one left in military and civil life.

In order to serve Carranza at these latter times, a man must have lost the last vestige of morality and dignity and he must have acquired a character of a blind instrument without any other qualification than that of passive obedience or the servility that goes as far as ignominy.

This is his work of corruption and this is what he required most. He has put his fingers into all the elections, imposing upon the people by force and each time more imprudently against the governors and against the manifest wish of the people until he now counts with a great majority of unconditional bands of villains in the States and when in spite of his intrigues such as Zacatecas, Michoacan, Tabasco, Sonora, and Yucatan, he has not succeeded in imposing on the governor whatever he desired to have him do, but does not tire out in creating continuous difficulties.

In Tabasco he did everything he could in order to oppress the governor, and when he did not succeed because of the energetic opposition of the people, he put down the people with the army and delivered the governor to the friends of his protection and if he had to unmake this infamy, it was because of the great noise made by the independent press. There was no other remedy than to undo the affair, but the federal chief was not punished or was there even any intention of judicial investigation.

Having been defeated in these territories, he left not a single moment free from intrigue against that governor.

The case of Yucatan is also typical of his manner of working. In the rich and prosperous State and with a government that did not depend upon him, but could not make him agree with them, and there was absolutely no spring in the government, in economic life, and in military force that he did not destroy the force of that State, but succeeded only in humiliating it and bringing it to misery and disorder. Latterly, in order to bring his work to a crowning, he imposed a legislature by force of arms and with the greatest haughtiness and with the greatest disregard of the laws of the State, but sent military chiefs with orders to terrorize the people. Faith wishes that the consequences of conduct, criminal and treasonable, should not come to a head.

The administration of Carranza has never been a progressive one because the country has found in it an obstacle on the most insurmountable kind for progress and development, because such a government is not a careful administration of the needs of the country, but a conspiracy in order to perpetuate Carranza with his circle of scoundrels.

Now for the bloody farce that is being prepared and that its authors consider make appear an election, but begun by eliminating all the individuals that had sympathies for any candidate under the pretext that he desired the administration to be impartial and he did the same in the army; that is the greatest hypocrisy, because the entire world knows that it is enough for any functionary or military officer to show his absolute unconditionality to the desires of Carranza in order to enter into the circle of those favored ones who are protected. He has begun an intense action in order to attract the elements that have risen in arms against the Government offering to acknowledge to them the ranks they have in his power and admitting them to the army; if he succeeded in having all rebels accept this proposition, we would see the phenomenon of the elements proceeding from the enemy forces of the present Government become a majority in the composition of the hybrid army union of two very definite groups; the old elements of the revolutionary army and the new elements coming from the rebel camps; that is, a dog and a cat mixed together in a single sack. There already existed a situation similar to this at the time of the triumph of the Mr. Madero, and there remain on foot elements of the old army and also those of the revolutionary forces, and as the entire world knows, there was absolutely no end to shocks and frictions, only they culminated in the destruction of Mr. Madero, and the conflagration of a tremendous war until one of the two elements destroyed the other.

Carranza, not being a revolutionary or a reformist, has betrayed the party that brought him to power because this has been the most serious obstacle to the aspirations of the country and the progressive elements coming into power, but ultimately he has shaken them off entirely, having made himself the palatin of the conservative and non-progressive elements by saying to them: I am your man, and you need look for no other. Here I am.

This line of conduct, which is nothing else than treason of the blackest kind to his party and to his friends, has satisfied his reactionary aspirations, and after supported himself on the elements hostile to his party—that is, the armed and simple social forces.

These circumstances of betrayal have never brought results and history is full of troubles of those who attempted to carry them out. A politician is stronger in proportion as he represents the aspirations of the chief group and when he passes to the other side or simply gives up to represent the interests and ideas of his party, he loses all force. The list of the Dumouriez and of Comonforts is endless, in order not to mention the Opas, the Condes, Julianes, and the Arnolds resulting in there never having been any lack of a Don Pelayo, a Hoche, a Washington, or a Jaurez who should take into his hand the standard that these disgraced people have let fall from their hands.

In this criminal farce are employed all the resources of the country, money as well as railways, post offices, cable offices, the army, the police, the public service, and the decision of all the matters in the Federal Government, and in those of the States.

The work of corruption is so considerable that one can scarcely imagine this. Nothing escapes this infamy, this criminal and traitorous conduct, the money of the nation, the employees, salaries, concessions, privileges, and favors of every kind for the accomplices, persecution and misery for those that refuse to give their aid to the intrigue of so great a criminal.

He has now come as far as the creation of numerous secret police forces and of an extensive system of espionage between the army and among the civil employees and railways, in theaters, street cars, restaurants, barber shops in general, and in every place of assembly.

This espionage distributes corruption and terrorizes everybody, intensifying the intrigues, traps, aspirations, and accusations in an insurmountable degree, because it is known that the spy does not limit himself to saying the truth and to serve the interests of anyone who pays him, but on the other hand, he is constantly inventing conspiracies, plots, and plans, and, as is natural, uses the said power of making the evil in his own benefit and in order to satisfy his passions and those of his friends. It was not worth while to have made a revolution in order that the traitors should arise with discoveries so moldy as the official candidates of a little Napoleon and the secret police and the espionage of the third section of the minister of the interior of Russia that as we, too, know was a blind force that went as far as the marrow of the Russians because there was no one free from it and was the agent of terror, persecutions, deportations to Siberia, of dungeons, of fortresses, and of death.

I again mentioned the fact to Alvarado that many parties said he himself had Mexican presidential aspirations. His answer was that he had many enemies in Mexico, and for a time hoped to be able to become an actual presidential candidate, but that now he had given up such intentions.

My report under the name of Cresse, dated New Orleans, La., June 20, 1919, at that time advised the Department of Justice and the State Department that Alvarado was actively planning to become Mexican presidential candidate. Through a confidential friend of mine in Mexico City, I at that time learned from this American that Alvarado was most anxious to form a connection in the United States which would be able to extend publicity and propaganda among prominent officials at Washington to create sentiment regarding Alvarado as a future Mexican president. The report above mentioned sent forward to the Department of Justice, is as follows:

Confidential report re Gen. Salvador Alvarado, Mexican presidential candidate, and his efforts in Mexico and throughout the United States to secure publicity for his campaign:

Gen. Alvarado several months ago organized a company who are the publishers of El Herald De Mexico. This daily paper is in reality owned by Gen. Alvarado, and has an abundance of financial backing, and its announced purpose is to become the principal paper in the Mexican Republic. In each of its daily issues one page is published in English. The paper is under the direction and management of Modesto G. Rolland, who is also said to be Alvarado's campaign manager. It is published in Mexico City at Apartado 5272.

The real purpose of Alvarado having started the El Herald De Mexico is through its columns to spread propaganda regarding Alvarado as a Mexican presidential candidate. This paper I understand is now making, or will at an early date, proposition to practically every daily paper and prominent weekly and monthly magazine throughout the United States, to be put on their exchange list. Alvarado hoping in this way to secure hundreds of columns of news items and editorials each month regarding himself. If he can succeed in carrying out his idea along these lines his supporters believe that the news items and editorials published in various papers and magazines throughout the United States will tend to popularize him with the people of the United States. Alvarado also proposes to appoint a publicity director in the United States, and have been asked to take this matter up with Modesto G. Rolland.

Gen. Alvarado is best known throughout Mexico as the ex-governor of Yucatan. Realizing that the next president of Mexico would have to be a military man, therefore with that idea in view, he resigned the governorship of Yucatan during the early part of 1918, and went to Mexico City, where, it is said, he took an oath before President Carranza that he would go into the field as general commanding a large number of Mexican troops and would capture or kill Gen. Felix Diaz and likewise completely break up the Felicista and Gen. Manuel Pelaez revolutionary movements in the southern part of Mexico or die in the attempt to do so.

During the latter part of March, 1918, Alvarado at the head of a large body of Mexican troops had a fight extending over a period of several days with the Felicista or Pelaez forces at or near Minatitlan, which is near the Tabasco border. This fight resulted in Gen. Alvarado's forces being badly defeated and cut up by the revolutionary forces, and at that time the revolutionary forces likewise captured from Gen. Alvarado's troops a large quantity of arms and ammunition, commissary supplies, and cash. Many of Alvarado's men deserted, and joined the revolutionary forces. Gen. Alvarado then returned to Mexico City and outfitted another expedition and again took the field, but to date has never had another decisive fight with the Felicistas or Pelaez forces.

Copy of this report furnished to Washington, New Orleans, San Antonio—State Department.

Alvarado then prepared me a typewritten statement regarding himself, which is as follows:

Gen. Salvador Alvarado, was born in Sinaloa. He was reared in Sonora. He has had a fair amount of instruction, has some administrative capacity and organizing ability.

He is strong in his intentions, energetic, tenacious, and tireless in his work. He has dedicated all his time to studying the problems of his country and is a Mexican in belief, who knows the United States most.

Considering the large sums of money that he managed in Yucatan, there was a time when Gen. Alvarado thought he could make himself rich, but those who know him more closely know that he lives in misery. His worst enemies accuse him of everything, but no one has ever dared say he is not honest.

Before the revolution he was a business man and a contractor of railway construction. He made the campaign against Diaz, Orozco, Huerta, Villa, and has never been defeated.

Alvarado likewise told me that he had served in the Carranzista army against Felix Diaz, Orozco, Huerta, Villa, and in other minor engagements. He proudly claimed never to have been defeated, although the Felicista revolutionists make the counterclaim that in a battle between them and Alvarado's forces the latter was defeated and barely escaped with his wearing apparel.

It is very noticeable that Alvarado in the biography written by himself, but intended to be circulated as an anonymous and impersonal laudatory work, said that he had handled large sums of money in Yucatan, and there was a time when he thought he could make himself rich, but those who know him closely know that he lives in misery. His worst enemies accuse him of everything, but no one ever has dared to say that he is not honest.

Alvarado's "misery" consists in maintaining a luxuriant suite of rooms in a fashionable hotel (The Hotel Alexandria at One hundred and third Street), dining often and well, and enjoying himself generally at a variety of entertainments, sporting stylish clothes, silk shirts, and visiting the barber shop for the maximum amount of tonsorial attention.

Those interested in Alvarado and many of his enemies say that prior to the revolution he had but very little visible wealth, and they now ask where did the money come from to support Alvarado's misery, also for the ownership of his daily newspaper, *El Herald*o, with its modern equipment, and for other properties he is alleged to own.

When Madero started his revolution against Porfirio Diaz in 1910, which was successful, Yucatan, who had not participated in this revolution, recognized the Madero administration. After Madero's fall they then accepted Huerta's government. In 1914 Carranza sent as his first governor to Yucatan, Gen. Eleuterio Avila. The people of Yucatan peacefully accepted Avila as their governor, but shortly after his arrival he imposed forced loans on the planters and business men of Yucatan for several millions of pesos, which was promptly paid and part of which went into the Carranzista treasury. As the prospects for loot of all kinds in Yucatan were good, and others close to Carranza forced the recall of Avila to Mexico City, Gen. Toribio de los Santos, in Avila's place, was appointed acting governor by Carranza. His despotic rule aroused the hostility of the people of Yucatan, and he then made wholesale arrests of its leading citizens and forced further large loans from the people. Within six weeks after having been inaugurated his iron rule resulted in an uprising of the people in the interior. Santos sent Col. Abel Ortiz Argumendo to suppress this movement. Argumendo, when he arrived at the point of the uprising, immediately deserted with his force and joined the rebels. With an ever-increasing force of revolutionists he marched on Merida and took possession of same. De los Santos, to save his life, fled to the State of Campeche.

The people of Yucatan assured Carranza at this time that the uprising was not against Carranza and that they were loyal to his Government and were perfectly willing to pay their taxes and duties as heretofore. They merely asked to have the privilege of naming their own governor. Carranza's answer was to send Gen. Salvador Alvarado with about 8,000 troops to Yucatan to force possession of the government from Argumendo.

Alvarado and his army landed in the State of Campeche, and from there marched into Yucatan. Alvarado sent announcements ahead saying that through blood and fire he would arrive in Merida. This resulted in a state of terror in Merida and other parts of Yucatan. Many hundreds of the Yucatecos fled that State. Alvarado immediately seized all of the railroads and operated them from that time on as Government property. He likewise took possession of the Comision Regladora del Mercado de Henequen (Ruling Commission of the Henequen Market).

This organization in the old days of peace in Yucatan was owned and controlled by the growers of henequen, and its functions were to regulate the operation of supply and demand of henequen; and when the supply exceeded the demand the Regladora would purchase same and hold it until the demand caught up with the supply. Up to 1910 or 1911 the price of the henequen fiber averaged 2½ cents to about 6 cents per pound, f. o. b. New York.

Alvarado immediately issued a decree that the planters could only sell their henequen to the Regladora. He likewise ordered his railroad director to refuse transportation of any henequen consigned to anybody except the Regladora. This immediately paralyzed that industry and resulted in a tremendous quantity of henequen being accumulated. He fixed an arbitrary price, which was around 4 cents per pound.

Alvarado then sent Dr. Victor A. Rendon and Julio Rendon to the United States, where they succeeded in perfecting financial arrangements with a group of bankers, who agreed to advance for a consideration in addition to interest, satisfactory loans on all henequen stored in warehouses in the United States. Alvarado then shipped to the United States tremendous quantities of henequen, which was warehoused and upon which he secured loans.

When Dr. Victor A. Rendon came to the United States I got in with him and my reports at that time to the Department of Justice gave them in advance full information as to the plans and activities of Rendon and his associates. My testimony before the committee, if desired, will in detail bring out many of Rendon's activities at that time.

At the start of this proposition henequen was quoted at from 7 to 8 cents per pound. In 1919, due to Alvarado's methods, so it is said, the price of henequen in the United States had advanced to 19½ cents per pound. This resulted in the American farmers paying for their binder twine, which is used in wheat fields, the following amounts which were in excess of amounts paid by them for the same quality of twine in previous years:

Excess in 1916.....	$7, 125, 000
Excess in 1917.....	33, 375, 000
Excess in 1918.....	42, 000, 000
Excess in 1919.....	30, 000, 000

Making a total of $112,500,000 that American farmers were forced to pay for their binder twine in excess of the amounts they would naturally have been called upon to pay had it not been for the existence of Alvarado's management and monopoly of the Regladora.

The henequen planters of Yucatan derived but very little benefit from the large excess profits mentioned. Alvarado and his associates organized many subsidiary companies, likewise are charged with having spent enormous sums of money for advertising and propaganda work in the United States, much of which was of a personal character. Alvarado also organized a company called The Compania de Fomento del Sureste, of which Alvarado was president, and which he absolutely controlled. The announced object of this company was to import everything required by the natives of Yucatan, and which was to exclude from all participation and commerce of private firms and individuals. The Regladora, acting under Alvarado's orders, spent $7,000,000 in the purchase of several small steamers. In many other ways the funds of the Regladora drained from the pockets of the farmers and the users of bread in the United States, and were according to the planters of Yucatan, dissipated in various visionary schemes.

The henequen planters meanwhile were getting poorer, although they realized that henequen was being sold in the United States at fabulous prices. They became restless and threatened trouble for the Alvarado government. Alvarado's iron rule resulted in the organization in Yucatan of the Ligas de Resistencia (League of Resistance), which conducted a reign of terror throughout Yucatan. Those who opposed the plans of the Government were persecuted in many ways. On one occasion two men, who had met the displeasure of the Government, were hanged to an oak tree on the principal boulevard of Merida, and their bodies were allowed to swing from the tree from sunrise to sunset. Thereafter, those who showed resentment or threatened trouble were told to remember the oak tree.

When Carranza wrecked all of the banking institutions in Mexico those in Yucatan went with the others. The Regladora then issued its own currency, all of which in the end resulted to its holders in large losses.

About the middle of 1919 the Regladora, having ruined nearly all of the planters in Yucatan, and when it had reached the point where it was practically bankrupt, was turned back to the planters.

The production of henequen in 1900 was 500,000 bales; in 1914 the production, prior to Alvarado's régime, was 1,026,000 bales. In 1918 the production had declined to 805,000 bales, and in 1919 to less than 700,000 bales. In other words, during Alvarado's régime the production of henequen declined over 30 per cent. If production had been handled right by the Regladora under Alvarado it is said that it annually would have been in excess of 1,500,000 bales. Fully 70 per cent of the binder twine which the farmers of the United States use is made from Yucatan sisal or henequen.

Alvarado's bloody rule in Yucatan is too well known, and I presume more than sufficient testimony has been introduced before the committee regarding conditions in Yucatan under his administration than to make necessary any additional remarks by me about Yucatan under Alvarado's government. It is, however, a known fact and many of my reports bear this out, that Alvarado's pro-German activities in Yucatan were during the European war in many ways detrimental to the interests of the United States.

Dictatorship was no child's play with Alvarado. He was a real one for giving orders and combining himself with the three governmental functions, the legislature, the judiciary, and the executive. In Merida the foreigners and Yucatecos used Alvarado's name with bated breath for his capital was filled with spies and soldiers.

Accompanied by Gene Fowler on Saturday, March 20, again called at the Alexandria Hotel to see Alvarado, who was not in. Therefore on Sunday, March 21, Fowler and myself again went to Alvarado's hotel and met Alvarado as he was coming out of the dining room at 2.30, accompanied by his wife and another party, to whom we were not introduced. With Alvarado and his party we went to his rooms where he handed me a written memorandum containing information regarding many of the facts mentioned hereinbefore.

(Whereupon at 4.45 p. m. the committee adjourned to meet again on Tuesday, May 18, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.)

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

The committee met at 11 a. m. pursuant to adjournment, in room 128, Senate Office Building, Senator Frank B. Brandegee presiding temporarily, in the absence of the chairman.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Senator Fall is engaged in other matters for a few minutes, but has asked me to go ahead with the hearing for the purpose of saving time. So you may proceed, Mr. Jones.

TESTIMONY OF MR. CHARLES E. JONES—Resumed.

Mr. JONES. About the 1st of October, 1919, in Washington, at the Washington Hotel, I discussed with several parties my purpose of endeavoring to dig out from Mexican Ambassador Bonillas and other Mexican Government officials the exact plans that they had at that time in regard to carrying through their propaganda and other activities throughout the United States. The parties to whom I talked, I will give their names in private to Senator Brandegee and Senator Fall.

Due to my former connection with the Mexican Government as confidential agent to the Mexican foreign office I, therefore, was on friendly terms with the majority of the Mexican officials throughout the United States. Ramon P. de Negri, at that time Mexican consul general in New York City, I had met once before, while he was serving as consul at San Francisco several years ago. The consul general at New Orleans, Pescuria, however, was particularly friendly with me. Therefore, on October 1, 1919, I telegraphed Pescuria to send De Negri a strong telegram regarding myself, likewise another telegram to be presented by me to De Negri. I file with the committee a carbon copy of the telegram of October, 1919, stamped by the Western Union to Pescuria at New Orleans; and a telegram was sent to De Negri in New York by Pescuria, and also one to myself.

On October 22, at 4 p. m., I presented the telegram sent me by Pescuria to De Negri in his office on the nineteenth floor of the Tribune Building.

I likewise showed him all of my various letters, etc., which proved my previous connection with the Mexican Government. De Negri said that he remembered me and knew of me and that I was just the man the Mexican Government needed and was looking for, due to the fact that the enemies of Mexico had been and were now more active than ever before; and that with their assistance and following out their suggestions I could be of the greatest value to them. He at this time in a most insulting manner, referred to the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, Senator Fall and his committee, Capt. Hanson, Secretary of State Lansing, Mr. Buckley, and many of the Mexican revolutionists. He said that through detective agencies and their own secret service men they had secured a great deal of information regarding what he termed was the dirty work of the parties mentioned. He then asked me if I knew all of the parties that he had referred to, and I, of course, told him that I did, and that I likewise thought his opinions regarding these parties were absolutely correct.

My brother, N. T. Jones, and myself fully sympathized with his ideas and handed him a lot of hot air as to what we could do for the Mexican Government, etc. He, De Negri, became very enthusiastic regarding the results that could be produced, and said that he would immediately telephone Ambassador Bonillas. He then asked us to return to his office at the Mexican Consulate in New York at 4 p. m., on October 23.

On that date we again saw De Negri at his office, and he was far more frank in his conversation than he had been on the previous day. He said that if he and ourselves could manipulate matters so that all those whom he termed were the enemies of his government among the parties mentioned in our first conversation with him and likewise the revolutionary enemies, could be discredited, disgraced, put in jail or deported from the United States, that it would immediately settle the question of the ever-increasing agitation against Mexico. He said that his government was willing to spend a great deal of money to have this done. He then requested me to leave with him several of the letters which I had shown him from other Mexican Government officials, likewise from other parties, regarding myself. He then asked me to show him some of the various papers and documents that I had regarding the activities of their Mexican revolutionary enemies, which I also showed to him. He asked me to again call at his office on Friday, October 24, at 4 p. m.

My brother and myself arrived there at that time, and he said that he had talked to Bonillas by telephone and that Bonillas had instructed him to come over to Washington on the following day to go over the entire matter with him. He then said that he would leave New York on Saturday afternoon, October 25, for Washington, and that he would go over the entire matter with Bonillas at the Mexican Embassy in Washington on October 26, and that we were to be sure and see him at his office in New York on Monday, October 27, at 4 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. What year was that?

Mr. JONES. 1919. We arrived there on the date and hour he requested, and De Negri introduced us to Seguin, his vice consul and who formerly had been connected with De Negri while he was Consul General for Mexico at San Francisco. Seguin is a son of the former Mexican consul at New Orleans and San Antonio, and now consul general for Mexico at Eagle Pass, Tex., and who prior to the Carranza revolt is said to have had no wealth of any kind but who now, so it is said, is alleged to be worth from $150,000 to $200,000, and owns several very valuable pieces of property at Eagle Pass, Tex. Seguin, while at San Antonio and at Eagle Pass, Tex., was known to be very active in smuggling arms and ammunition out of the United States, as will be shown hereinafter. He is likewise known to be extremely anti-American. That refers both to the father and son.

My report of May 13, 1918, forwarded to the State Department and the Department of Justice, under my department code name of Creese, the title of which is "Regarding M. G. Seguin, Mexican consul at San Antonio, Tex.," reads as follows:

While at Eagle Pass learned that Seguin is alleged to have been purchasing in small quantities 30-30 cartridges at San Antonio, Tex., or in other places, and has had these cartridges shipped or carried to Eagle Pass, Tex., where they are alleged to have been smuggled over the border into Mexico, by or through the assistance of R. F. Vaughn, of the Eagle Pass Lumber Co. Vaughn is also connected with the Eagle Pass Grocery Co. The cartridges if in reality any have been smuggled, or are yet to be smuggled over the border by Vaughn, are supposed to be packed in other goods shipped to Piedras Negras and other parts of Mexico by the various concerns Vaughn is connected with.

While at the military headquarters or barracks of Gen. Poraldi, in Piedras Negras, Mexico, on the afternoon of May 3 saw six new Winchester 30-30 carbines which apparently have never been used, and were just unpacked for they still had the original factory grease and shipping tags on them.

Discussed this matter with Mr. Beverley, special agent in charge your Eagle Pass office, and he has this matter well in hand and is thoroughly competent and capable of handling this situation, provided Vaughn, Seguin, or anybody else attempts to run stuff of that kind over the border.

Seguin, while former Mexican consul at Eagle Pass, made a great deal of money in buying arms and ammunition for the Carranza Government, and is said to have been responsible for a good deal of it having been run over the border into Mexico after the United States embargo was put on regarding arms and ammunition going into Mexico.

In connection with this, I might state that on September 25, 1918, and on November 13, 1918, I made reports to the Department of Justice on the smuggling of ammunition from San Antonio and other places into Mexico, in which Seguin is mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The reports may be printed in the appendix to your testimony.

Mr. JONES. In our conversation with de Negri at his office on the afternoon of October 27, he said that Bonillas had told him that using me to make public the information which they had regarding the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, the Fall committee, Capt. Hanson, Buckley, and others, and which they later could secure and which I also was to secure, it would result in disgracing all of the principal parties implicated, as mentioned, and would likewise create sympathy for the Mexican Government and eliminate a great deal of the intervention propaganda; that it was vitally necessary for the Mexican Government to immediately employ me and pay me very liberally for the work they wanted done. De Negri said, "It will be necessary for you to go to Mexico City to talk to President Carranza and Luis Cabrera personally regarding this matter, and Mr. Seguin will accompany you. It will likewise be necessary for you to take all of the papers and documents you have regarding the activities of the Mexican revolutionists with you so that President Carranza can personally see and examine these." He then said, "You should leave at once on this trip."

Thinking that there is always a chance, that these Mexicans might have been wise to my plans to secure all of the information possible from them and then use it against them, or might likewise have known of my former work for the Department of Justice, or wanted to have me take all of the papers and documents owned by me regarding the activities of their Mexican revolutionary enemies into Mexico where they would then be confiscated by the Mexican Government or taken away from me; I, at this suggestion of De Negri's in regard to taking the papers to Mexico, told him that I could not spare the time to make the trip to Mexico City. He said at this time, "Then, if you are unable to give the time necessary to go to Mexico City, I can arrange it in another manner whereby Seguin, your brother, and yourself will go to Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, and there meet an assistant secretary of the Mexican foreign office, who, on behalf of President Carranza, will make the necessary financial arrangements with you." De Negri then said that it would be necessary to enter into this agreement on Mexican soil, due to the fact that his work, Seguin's, Bonillas's, and our in combination would cause trouble for a great many prominent people, and that it would get them, the Mexican officials, in bad if this arrangement was entered into in the United States. I then agreed to make the trip to Nuevo Laredo, and asked him what he and the ambassador had agreed to pay for these papers and documents regarding the Mexican revolutionists, also for the work when wanted done to ruin, disgrace, and discredit the various Americans that he positively said, irrespective of cost, they proposed to put out of business.

De Negri said that he and the ambassador had agreed to recommend as a most vital expenditure $40,000, payable when we surrendered to them the Mexican revolutionary papers and documents; and that all of the necessary expenses of conducting the work would be paid, and that my brother and myself would each receive a salary of $2,000. He became very enthusiastic at this moment and said, "If you will put the National Association in an embarrassing position, and this can be done by using the information we have already secured—and the same applies to the Fall committee, Capt. Hanson, Mr. Doheny, and other members of the oil group—then, in that event, we would be willing to pay up to $100,000 after these results have been secured, and that you will also have many big commercial opportunities open up to you in Mexico if you succeed in doing what we want done."

My brother and myself, continuing our play of course, fully sympathized with De Negri's remarks and opinions, which resulted in both Seguin and De Negri repeatedly making the strongest and most insulting remarks about the honor and integrity, etc., of Senator Fall, Capt. Hanson, and other members of the Fall committee, the oil group, the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, etc. The remarks of these Mexicans showed the most extreme hatred and contempt for these parties and for the United States. De Negri, likewise, when I brought around the question of intervention, said, "All right; just wait; some day we will show the United States what we can do, and we will likewise teach these Americans who are plotting against us a lesson they will never forget."

In that connection it might be well to insert in the record that Ramon P. de Negri is now said to be acting as commercial agent, which is practically the same as consul general, in New York City for the present Mexican revolutionists.

At De Negri's request we called at his office again on October 28, 29, 30, and 31, and November 1, 3, and 4. At each of these times De Negri again repeatedly expressed his determination, likewise that of Bonillas, and the Government of Mexico, to ruin everybody who was opposed to their plans.

On the morning of October 4 we received from Seguin, the vice consul, approximately $350 as payment for the expenses of the trip to Laredo. We gave him a receipt for same, and he said that the balance, which would make a total of $602.40, the estimated expenses of the trip to Laredo and return to New York, would be handed by him to me at Laredo, Tex. On Saturday, November 1, Seguin, according to his plans at that time, was to accompany us on the trip. However, on Monday, November 3, he said that he would have to leave the following day, November 4. My brother and myself left New York for Washington on November 3 and arrived in Laredo, Tex., on November 7 at 3 p. m. We registered at the Hotel Bender. Seguin was to arrive in Laredo on Saturday, November 8. He, however, did not arrive there, so he said, until Sunday morning, November 9. He called at our room at the Hotel Bender on that morning at 10 a. m. and handed me $250 to $300, which was the balance to make up the total of $602.40.

We discussed at that time with Seguin the details of the interview that we were to have with the representative of the Mexican foreign office who, so Seguin said, was on his way to Nuevo Laredo. Seguin was very enthusiastic as to the meeting with this party and said, "It will be a big thing for De Negri and myself to be known in Mexican Government circles as the two parties who are going to ruin all of the big and well-known enemies of Mexico in the United States." He said, "Don't hesitate to promise this Mexican foreign office representative to fully comply with his desires in regard to disgracing and ruining Senator Fall and other members of the Fall committee, Capt. Hanson, and various members of the oil group, the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, and others." He then said that one of the biggest and strongest men in Washington, who was very close to the Democratic administration—Mr. Charles Douglas, their confidential legal adviser—had told Bonillas that the State Department was most anxious to discredit the activities of the Fall committee, the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, and others, likewise, that something would drop pretty soon which would cause a sensation and which would involve certain Senators and Congressmen, likewise various parties connected with the Department of Justice, etc., who had been cooperating with the enemies of Mexico.

On my way through Washington on November 4 I called at the Department of Justice, and at that time told Capt. Burke, Chief of the Bureau of Investigation, regarding my negotiations with the Mexican Government, and that I was on my way to Laredo, Tex., to meet some of their officials.

Seguin, after spending probably 30 to 40 minutes with us, said as he left that he would call at the hotel for me at 10 a. m. Monday, which he did; and at this time I was introduced to a Mexican by the name of Pena who Seguin said was vice consul at Laredo, Tex. Pena and Seguin then left the Hotel Bender, and at 12.30 returned to the hotel, where we all had lunch together at which time both Pena and Seguin consistently knocked and knived the United States and many Americans.

While at lunch Seguin said that he had just had a telegraphic conference with the Mexican foreign office at Mexico City, and that they had told him that the representative, who was to meet us at Nuevo Laredo, was unable to leave Mexico City; therefore that it would be necessary for Seguin, my brother, and myself to at once come to Mexico City to settle the entire matter. I asked him how we could get my Mexican revolutionary papers and documents over the river, due to the fact that they were packed in a trunk without the customs and immigration authorities seeing them. His answer was, "Leave that to Pena and myself; we can smuggle them over without any trouble as we have done whisky, cigars, and large quantities of other papers and documents."

As I did not care at this time to go to Mexico City, nor under any circumstances would I have taken the Mexican revolutionary papers and documents into Mexico, I therefore told these Mexicans that I did not see how I could go to Mexico City due to the fact that I did not have any passport. Seguin then said, "Passport hell; get a temporary permit card for one day across the river, and come that way." I told him that there was nothing doing, for when I wanted to come back into the United States I might have trouble. He then said that the immigration inspector at Laredo had the authority to issue an emergency passport, and that he and Pena would go with me to the immigration inspector and guarantee that emergency passports were necessary for my brother and myself.

Blocking this new plan of Seguin's, my brother therefore telephoned to Mr. Lawrence of the Department of Justice, who I formerly had know, explaining the circumstances of the emergency passport to him, and requesting him to tell Mr. J. E. Trout, the immigration inspector, that when Pena and Seguin, my brother and myself called at his office to assure the emergency passports, that Trout was to refuse to issue same claiming that he had no authority to issue an emergency passport to any newspaper man.

Having this fixed, we finished lunch, and Pena, Seguin, my brother, and myself arrived at the Federal building at about 2 p. m. In the corridor of the Federal building we ran into Rob Rumsey, and I introduced Pena and Seguin to him. I then took them into the office of Mr. Miller and Mr. Lawrence, of the Department of Justice, and introduced them to these parties; and at 2.20 p. m. in front of the elevator on the third floor, I introduced them to J. E. Trout, the United States immigration inspector in charge of the Laredo district. I requested of Trout emergency passports for my brother and myself to go to Mexico City. Trout, having been previously advised, as mentioned hereinbefore, said he could not issue emergency passports to us as we were newspaper men. This was a surprise to Pena and Seguin, both of whom urged Trout to issue passports and that if he couldn't, to then wire Washington for authority to do so. Trout said, "No need to wire Washington as to what can be done or what can not be done." Seguin said that it was too bad, for he wanted to go to Mexico with my brother and myself.

This ended the temporary passport proposition, and after Seguin, Pena, my brother, and myself left the Federal building, Seguin said that Trout was a no-good son of a ———. Pena said, "Never mind; Trout will get his some dark night, as will also that dirty bastard of a Rumsey, and you just wait and see the same happen to Fall and Hanson." Both Seguin and Pena then launched into a most complete castigation of Miller, Lawrence, Rumsey, and Trout, and said that they were a bunch of gunmen who had killed more innocent Mexicans than almost anybody else on the border, and that they had been marked to get bumped off and would in the end get theirs as well as Fall, Hanson, and others. The statement of Seguin and Pena regarding Miller, Lawrence, Rumsey, and Trout being gunmen is a lie. All of these men are of the best in the United States service and have rendered service of untold value to the United States. Seguin and Pena showed by their conversation and expressions that they were thoroughly disgusted with the failure of their efforts to get us over the river on our way to Mexico City with the papers and documents.

Due to the anxiety of De Negri and Seguin in New York, and to the actions and conversation of Pena and Seguin at Laredo, as well as by chance remarks dropped by Seguin from time to time, I had about become convinced of the fact that there had been a leak somewhere, and that these Mexicans were wise to us; and that their plans not only included getting the various Mexican papers and documents in my possession away from me if I could come into Mexico, but that likewise their plans probably included their either throwing my brother and myself into jail after we got into Mexico, or of bumping us off.

At about 3 p. m. of the same date, I left Seguin and Pena and was to see them again the next morning at 9.30 a. m., when Seguin, Pena, my brother, and myself were to proceed to Nuevo Laredo and there hold a telegraphic conference with the Mexican foreign office.

Seguin, knowing that I was always armed, at this time warned me to be sure and not carry my gun into Mexico because it might cause trouble with the officials there. This rather looked funny to me at that moment.

After leaving Seguin, I told Lawrence and Miller, of the Department of Justice, also Trout, of the Immigration Service, that I had about made up my mind that these Mexicans were getting ready to frame me, and that it might result in trouble when I went over the river. Before leaving Seguin, he had agreed to call for me at the Hotel Bender the next morning in Pena's Ford automobile; and my brother and myself were to then drive to Nuevo Laredo. Seguin at this time said, "Now, pack in a large grip the most important of the original Mexican revolutionary papers and documents, and when I call for you I will take the grip; when we reach the bridge I will tell the United States bridge guard and immigration authorities that the grip is my personal property, and as vice consul of Mexico I can cross it without having it examined." I agreed to this, knowing, however, that under no circumstances would I have a paper, letter, or document on me when I crossed the river.

At 9.05 a. m. on the morning of November 11, Seguin telephoned me that Pena was delayed, and for me to get an automobile and meet him at the end of the bridge on the American side of the river. It had been previously agreed between my brother and myself that it would be best for only one of us to cross the river, for in case of a frame-up, one would be left with the papers and documents; and if there was any plan to bump us off or throw us into jail, that it would be more desirable for them to only get hold of one. Over my brother's protests, due to the fact that he wanted to go, I left the Hotel Bender at 9.10 a. m. in a Dodge automobile owned by Meyers, and driven by driver No. 1 of the Meyers Transfer Co. I met Seguin at the American end of the bridge, and he was very much surprised to see only myself in the car, and asked where my brother was. I told him that he was over at the hotel waiting for a long-distance telephone message. He then asked for the grip full of papers, and I told him I had decided not to bring it with me.

We crossed to Nuevo Laredo, and at 9.45 a. m. Seguin and a Mexican telegraph operator opened a telegraphic conference, so he said, with the Mexican foreign office at Mexico City. This conference lasted until 11.45 a. m., during which time the driver of my automobile and his car were parked a short distance from the entrance to the telegraph office. Shortly after the telegraphic conference started Pena arrived and remained for about an hour. Seguin claimed that his conference was with the secretary of the Mexican foreign office. After the telegraphic conference was finished Seguin said that the Mexican foreign office was very enthusiastic about the entire matter, and had told him to assure us that we were just the men they were looking for, and that a most satisfactory arrangement would be made which would fully come up to or go well beyond the offer that de Negri had mentioned in New York City, as far as money was concerned. He then said that the Mexican foreign office had instructed him to make a full report of the entire matter, secure from us several letters of recommendation, etc., regarding ourselves, also copies of some of the most important papers and documents regarding the Mexican revolutionists, and to hand all of this to one of the Mexican foreign office's official messengers, who was due to arrive in Laredo, Tex., on that date, and who would leave the following day for Mexico City with the letters and Seguin's report; and that if this messenger did not arrive according to his schedule Seguin then was to immediately leave the following day, which would be November 12, for Mexico City. Seguin then said that the Mexican foreign office had instructed him to ask my brother and myself to immediately return to New York City and wait there at their expense for further instructions, which would arrive in New York at about the time we did. Seguin also said that the Mexican foreign office's instructions would consist of giving de Negri complete authority to make the necessary payments, etc.

Seguin, while in Laredo, had been stopping at some private house, and at 2.45 p. m., November 11, he telephoned me at the Bender

Hotel to come to his house. At 3 p. m. I left the Hotel Bender in an automobile driven by Meyers, and on the way to the house where Seguin was stopping I met him on his way to the Hotel Bender in an automobile. Seguin got out of his car and entered ours, and we returned to the Hotel Bender.

Seguin impressed upon us at this time the absolute fact that the fate of Mexico in regard to preventing intervention and eliminating her enemies in the United States rested to a very great extent on the future activities of De Negri, himself, and myself. He then told me that he had just received confidential information from the embassy at Washington that they had secured certain information and proofs which would utterly ruin Senator Fall, Capt. Hanson, and others. I understood from Seguin that this information would be used by prominent American friends and supporters of Bonillas and of the Mexican Government. He, however, said that all of this information had been secured by their secret service agents, and likewise furnished to them by Americans who were their friends; and that all of same was to be presented to the State Department and to the Attorney General of the United States by prominent and powerful Americans with tremendous political influence back of them; and that it would result in the utter disgrace of Senator Fall, Capt. Hanson, and others.

My brother and myself left Laredo, Tex., Wednesday morning, November 12, and arrived at San Antonio, Tex., that night. While at San Antonio, Tex., I saw Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Breniman, of the United States Department of Justice, whom I had known for a long while, and told them as frankly as I could, without divulging the source of my information, that I had learned that there was a thorough well-organized plan on foot to utterly ruin Senator Fall, Capt. Hanson, and others, and that Capt. Hanson should be tipped off to this matter. This resulted in Capt. Hanson coming to see me at the St. Anthony Hotel in San Antonio, on November 12 at 9 o'clock, p. m., at which time Sullivan, my brother, and myself were present. I, at this time, told Capt. Hanson that I had learned of plans which were to be sprung in Washington, which would result in efforts to disgrace and ruin him, also Senator Fall, and the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico. I could not at that time, on account of the danger of leaks thereby spoiling my newspaper exposé, and of having the entire matter exploded, fully and frankly let Capt. Hanson know of all of the information I had secured, due to the fact that if same had been made public or leaks had occurred, it would have utterly broken up my plans to carry through to the end my play with the Mexican Government officials to secure the complete information which I knew they had and which sooner or later I felt positive I could secure.

In this conversation with Capt. Hanson, he on two occasions expressed the wish that I would with him take charge of the investigation for the Fall committee along the border and at other places of various Mexican affairs, and that the salary and expense arrangement would be perfectly satisfactory to me. I told Capt. Hanson that I would be very glad to do so if it were not for the fact that such a connection at that time would completely interfere with my present plans.

My brother and myself left San Antonio on the night of November 13, via the M., K. & T., and arrived in Washington via Pennsylvania, Sunday, November 16 at 2 p. m. On November 17 I left Washington at 4 p. m., arriving at the Knickerbocker Hotel, New York City, 9.30 p. m. the same night. On Tuesday, at 11 a. m., November 18, I saw De Negri at the Mexican consulate. He was just getting ready to go out, and he asked us to return at 4 p. m. of the same day, which we did. We remained in conference with him until 5.20 p. m. He had received several telegrams from the Mexican foreign office that they were very enthusiastic and anxious to get their proposed agreement with us started, and that Seguin, who had left Laredo for Eagle Pass to see his father on that date, November 18, or the following day, November 19, would have another telegraphic conference with the Mexican foreign office and receive their final instructions regarding the details of the contract with us. He said that the foreign office had advised him in code telegram to this effect; also that it was not safe to send their telegrams regarding this matter even in code, due to the fact that they were afraid the United States Government had possession of their codes or could decode their telegrams.

De Negri then said that he had talked to the ambassador after we had left for Laredo, and that he and Bonillas, irrespective of cost or consequences, proposed as a patriotic duty to Mexico to ruin and disgrace the Americans—and again he named them—who were endeavoring to force intervention. De Negri at this time said that that God damn Fall was more responsible than anybody else, and that some way or the other Fall was to be ruined and disgraced, and that he and Capt. Hanson would pretty damn soon be fixed where even publicity as to their dirty activities against Mexico would not even affect them.

I, of course, fully agreed with De Negri as to his sentiments against Hanson and Fall; and he then literally in his remarks about both Hanson and Fall, castigated them. Continuing, De Negri said, "Fall and Hanson ought to be shot, and by God, they will be. Just wait and see; it will happen very soon."

I endeavored to play him along to learn the complete plans to assassinate Fall or Hanson, but he changed the conversation. He again assured us that if we played straight with his Government and carried out their instructions and made public the information he claimed to have in his possession regarding the National Association the Fall committee, Capt. Hanson, Mr. Buckley, the various members of the Oil Producers' Association, and others, that we would be millionaires.

He said, "All of this information made public by you two gentlemen, as Americans, will have a tremendous effect and will produce results far more quickly than if it was made public through the Mexican embassy or other Mexican Government officials." De Negri then again flared up and said, "I suppose you have seen what those damn dirty newspapers all over the United States have been handing me over what they claim is my connection with the I. W. W. and the reds."

De Negri at that was referring to the statement which had been given out by Senator Fall, stating that he, Fall, had possession of proof, documentary and otherwise, regarding the connection of De Negri and Bonillas with the reds. He then said, "To hell with every newspaper in the United States and their ideas and opinions of my Government or me," and that the same also applied to the opinions or activities of the State Department or the United States Government about him or who he was connected with, etc., and that what he said or did was his own personal right which he did not propose to have interfered with. Continuing, De Negri said:

My complete sympathy is far more with the reds and others of their class, who have been and were being oppressed by the United States Government than he ever could feel toward the people of the United States.

At this moment he showed us copy of a letter he had sent to the New York Herald, which was similar to that sent, so he said, to many other newspapers in New York, asking them to publish this letter in which he stated that he had never had any connection with the I. W. W. and that his entire actions in the United States had only been to create a spirit of friendship and cooperation between Mexico and the United States. Smiling, he said:

Of course, you understand this is bunk, for my heart lies with all of the oppressed, and the reds in the United States have never done anything to justify the treatment they have received from the United States Government.

As far as De Negri's remarks about his heart lying with the oppressed, De Negri was with the original Obregonista troops, and in their campaign, in the original Carranza revolution, they probably did more damage to property and committed more crime against women and children than any other bandits ever in Mexico.

De Negri, continuing, said:

Wait and see what happens. I intend to make a fool out of every newspaper in the United States who published the articles about me having been connected with the reds, and of having participated in their propaganda. The newspapers that have printed that article can never prove that such is the case. My attorneys and myself have thoroughly discussed these matters and are now arranging to sue all of the newspapers in the United States who published these articles.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Who was his attorney in New York?

Mr. JONES. I think I can get you the same, Senator. I can if I have in my files.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Put the name in later, if you find it.

Mr. JONES. All right. I asked him how he expected to be able to learn which newspapers published the articles, and he said:

My office here are subscribers to free press clipping bureaus who each day send here every clipping regarding any news item published in every daily paper and in many other publications throughout the United States; the name of the paper and the date of same is attached to each clipping, and in this way I will very quickly know what papers published that story about me.

For the information of the committee, I might say that one day while in De Negri's office there was a large bunch of newspaper clippings received from the press clipping bureau, which I discovered, which I put in my pocket so I could have documentary evidence of the fact that these clippings had been received. It contained at the top the name and address of the clipping bureau which maintained the service. In this way I learned for the first time that the Mexican Government is receiving clippings through press clipping bureaus amounting to hundreds of clippings each day, regarding what De Negri termed "outrageous murders and other crimes on all to ruin all of their enemies in the United States. On November 24 and up to December 4, I saw Seguin personally each day or I was in touch with him and de Negri by telephone, they stating that the messenger was expected momentarily, and that it was absolutely of vital importance for us to remain in New York and not even to leave to go to Atlantic City, due to the fact that the messenger when he arrived would have the instructions, and that they wanted us to immediately start on their plans. On November 22, at Seguin's office, he was extremely bitter in his remarks about the National Association and the Fall Committee and said, "Fall and Hanson are going to get theirs very soon." I fully agreed with him that they ought to "get theirs," and that such men as Fall and Hanson, working as they were against Mexico, were the worst enemies Mexico ever had. Seguin said, "That's all right; you will not hear much more of Fall and Hanson pretty soon for we have a man who has plenty of guts and who at the proper time will put Hanson and Fall out of the way."

After this positive threat on the part of Seguin, which had been stated on a previous day by de Negri as mentioned hereinbefore to cause the assassination of Senator Fall and Capt. Hanson, I waited for several days thereafter endeavoring to secure additional information regarding this plot, but was unable to do so. I therefore, on November 28, 1919, telegraphed Mr. A. C. Sullivan, of the Department of Justice in San Antonio, and who I knew to be on very friendly terms with Capt. Hanson, that plans were on foot to bump Fall and Hanson off and to at once warn them of this matter.

In turn, my friend Sullivan immediately notified Capt. Hanson, and he, on December 1, 1919, in turn notified Senator Fall by telegraph, and that resulted in a copy of the telegram to Senator Fall being received by Maj. Pullman, superintendent of police in Washington, who, without letting Senator Fall know anything about it, put one of his city detectives following the Senator around. I also understand that the superintendent of the Capitol police was notified regarding this proposed plan to assassinate Senator Fall. I have also understood that at the Senator's hotel two young Mexicans were seen shortly after that time endeavoring to enter Senator Fall's room, and at a later date several other Mexicans were seen around his apartment.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Where did you get that information?

Mr. JONES. I got it from Capt. Hanson.

I likewise wrote Sullivan on November 29 or 30, 1919, explaining to him the fact that from Mexican Government officials I was securing information that they had marked Senator Fall and Capt. Hanson for assassination and to pass this on to Capt. Hanson. During the early part of December I also wrote Sullivan regarding the fact that I was securing full information as to the various plans of Mexican Government officials and to so advise Hanson. On December 1, 1919, I telegraphed in part to Capt. Hanson via Western Union night lettergram, filed at the Western Union telegraph office at 1450 Broadway, as follows:

Gradually securing additional information regarding plans of parties to discredit, as per my San Antonio conversation. Other information furnished through Sullivan last week now practically complete. Important entire matters kept confidential from every one except the Senator, yourself, Sullivan, and Branlman until authorized to make same public.

CRESSE.

I signed that telegram "Cresse," which was my old Department of Justice name, due to the fact that I did not want to take any chance about leaks, and Sullivan was thoroughly familiar with that name.

Capt. Hanson, answering the telegram mentioned, wired me on November 30, 1919, as follows:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

C. E. JONES,

Room 137, Hotel Knickerbocker, New York, N. Y.

Message received Sullivan. Please favor me information fully. Address me letter Hamilton Hotel, Laredo, Tex. I will be there all week. See Senator in Washington if convenient. I certainly appreciate your assistance.

W. M. HANSON.

On December 4, left my hotel in New York early in the morning and did not return until around 5 p. m. I, however, telephoned to the hotel to learn if there were any telegrams or telephone messages in my box; and the operator told me that three telephone calls were there waiting for me from Beekman 5565.

I knew that this was the Mexican consulate's number, so I went by there about 4 p. m. accompanied by my brother; and Seguin said that he had been trying to get us nearly all day by telephone. He then said: "I am certainly glad you came as promptly as you did, for I have to-day received two important telephone calls from Mr. Bonillas at the embassy in Washington to immediately have you come over there, for he (Bonillas) has received instructions through the messenger, who, as I told you, was on his way from Mexico City, to immediately have you go to work for us (the Mexican Government)." Seguin, continuing, said, "You must leave at once, for the ambassador wants to see you without delay."

I told him that this was impossible, but would probably be able to leave New York for Washington the following day. Seguin said, "That won't do, for the ambassador wants to have a very important conference with you to-morrow morning not later than 10 o'clock."

Thinking that we would be able to secure a great deal of information from Bonillas, therefore, told Seguin that we would go over to Washington that night, December 4. He said, "What will your expenses be," and I told him I did not know. He then said, "$75 or $100 should cover it," and handed me $75 in cash, for which I gave him a receipt in triplicate. Seguin then said, "I will immediately telephone the ambassador that you will be at the embassy to-morrow morning (December 5) at 10 o'clock." I told him all right, and that I would be there at that time.

Seguin was very happy at this moment and said, "The ambassador has a great plan which he has figured out with De Negri and which will mean a big victory for Mexico, provided you gentlemen will be on the level with us and carry out the ambassador's instructions."

My brother and myself left New York on December 4 at midnight, and arrived in Washington on the morning of December 5. I had been requested by Seguin to take up with me to the embassy the more important papers regarding the activities of their Mexican revolutionary enemies. My brother and myself, with a small hand-trunk, in which the Mexican revolutionary papers were packed, left the Hotel Washington in taxicab No. 225, driven by Chauffeur Ramond F. Milkeman, who said he resided at 1909 New Hampshire Avenue NW., and that his chauffeur's license number was No. 1415.

We arrived at the Mexican Embassy, No. 1413 I Street NW., at 10.05 a. m., December 5. Was admitted to the embassy by a negro butler to whom I gave my name, and he was evidently expecting me for he said, "Yes, Mr. Jones, you are expected, and the ambassador will be with you in a few moments."

At about 10.10 a. m., the ambassador entered the red parlor on the right-hand side of the entrance door, and seemed to be very glad to see me. I had known Bonillas for the last two years and formerly, while connected with the Mexican Government as confidential agent of the Mexican foreign office, had had quite a number of interviews with him. He immediately got down to business and said that relations between the United States and Mexico were most grave, and added that he was afraid that the United States would sever relations with President Carranza's government, which would result in him being handed his passports very shortly by the United States Government; that the present situation had been caused by the agitation of the Fall committee, the propaganda spread by the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, and that all this had been brought to a head by the Jenkins case and other complicated matters.

He then said that De Negri and he (Bonillas) after many conferences had decided that the time had come to put up an active fight against the Fall committee, the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, the State Department, and all other enemies of Mexico, or against everyone who favored intervention or withdrawal of recognition to Carranza, Bonillas qualifying this statement by remarking, "if recognition is withdrawn from Carranza it will mean intervention, for it would be impossible for President Carranza to retain his power if recognition by the United States is taken away from him."

As stated, I have known Bonillas for several years, and in all of my confidential conversations with him prior to this one he has been always a typical, cool, calm, shrewd, calculating diplomat, never permitting his features to betray his anxiety regarding international or any other matters.

However, at this time he was completely changed. He trembled as though he had palsy. His customary poker face was lined deeply, and his mouth twitched.

Continuing, he said, "the situation is horrible and is the most serious and dangerous that Carranza has faced since he was recognized; and we all have to get together and do something to counteract the damnable attempts that are now being made to force intervention." Bonillas then said that he had had quite a number of conversations with De Negri regarding the contract which he, De Negri, and the Mexican foreign office wanted us to accept, and that he felt absolutely sure of the fact that we could in every way secure the results they desired, adding that the financial remuneration at all times and in every way would be fully up to our expectations and thoroughly satisfactory to us.

By brother and myself, of course, fully agreed with every suggestion or theory made by Bonillas, and likewise told him that it was a damnable shame and outrage that such dirty work was being perpetrated on his Government by the people whom he said were the instigators of such activities.

Bonillas said that the subcommittee of the United States Senate, the Fall committee, through Senator Fall, had introduced a resolution in Congress demanding the withdrawal of recognition by the United States from Carranza, and that this resolution had been referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who at that time had the Fall resolution before them for consideration; and that he and their friends of Mexico in Washington and throughout the United States were very much afraid that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, due to the influence of Senator Fall and others, would be able to have this resolution adopted, which would recommend to President Wilson that recognition be withdrawn from Carranza.

Bonillas then said that it was most important that something be done to discredit the members of the Fall committee and others who were in sympathy with the favorable adoption of the Fall resolution and that this likewise applied to all others who apparently were against President Carranza and his policy and who were instrumental in spreading propaganda throughout the United States against them.

Bonillas continued with the statement that friends of his in Washington had seen and talked to various members of the Foreign Relations Committee for the purpose of trying to block the proposed resolution; the ambassador, pale, and almost in a whisper, went on—"if additional influence can only be brought to bear on those close to the President of the United States and on other high Government officials, including Senators who are members of the Foreign Relations Committee, it may be possible to have the Fall resolution defeated or reported unfavorably by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and we are counting on you two gentlemen to handle a great part of this work." He then declared, "It is most fortunate for Mexico that a new clique is very close to President Wilson." I asked him who this clique was, and he replied Bernard B. Baruch and Attorney General Mitchell Palmer; and that these two gentlemen were very close to Joseph Tumulty, the President's secretary. Continuing, the ambassador said that Col. House and Secretary of State Lansing had lost their influence with President Wilson, which was a most fortunate thing as far as Mexican affairs were concerned.

The ambassador then wanted to know if it would be possible of me, through prominent politicians and others whom I had given him to understand I had some influence with, and which as a matter of fact I did not have, to bring influence to bear on Government officials, Congressmen, and Senators, and also state to them that it was an outrage on the part of members of the Fall committee and other Americans opposed to Carranza and his policies, to withdraw recognition from Carranza or urge intervention. Likewise, he said for us to utilize the information which the Mexican Government had in their possession and which was secured by them through their secret service agents and from their American friends and which he said, "You gentlemen can also secure; and to take all of this information and utilize it against our enemies."

I readily agreed with all of his suggestions in order to glean all information possible. At 10.30 a. m. Mr. Charles Douglas arrived and was brought into the parlor where we were talking to the ambassador. I had known Mr. Douglas about two and a half years, having met him through an intimate friend of many years' standing, Adam Leckie. When on my way to Laredo, Tex., as mentioned hereinbefore, stopped off in Washington, and at that time called at Judge Douglas's office and told him that I would probably go to Mexico City.

Judge Douglas told me he would be glad to give me a letter to Pablo Gonzales, and then gave me a strong letter of introduction to Pablo Gonzales, which I will file with the committee at a later date. After Judge Douglas entered the parlor at the embassy he shook hands with everybody present and told me that he had recently talked with De Negri and Bonillas as to the advisability of using us in connection with the work of the Mexican Government, and then said that he wanted to prove it possible, through us, the activities of the Fall Committee, the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, and others who were endeavoring to discredit Carranza or to force intervention, were simply for their own benefit or the benefit of those affiliated with them.

Judge Douglas, continuing, said that Bonillas and De Negri had only recently told him about us, and that we had in our possession a large quantity of papers and documents regarding the activities of their Mexican revolutionary enemies. Judge Douglas then said, "I told Bonillas that it was very important to immediately have you come to Washington so that we could all thoroughly discuss these matters."

Douglas, Bonillas, my brother, and myself then fully discussed as to the chances of the Fall resolution being favorably reported by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Douglas and Bonillas were positive in their opinion that the resolution would be favorably reported.

At about 11.15 to 11.20 a. m. the butler of the Mexican Embassy called Mr. Bonillas out in the hall, and the ambassador then went away with the butler and returned in about five minutes to the parlor where Judge Douglas, my brother, and myself were sitting: and as he came in through the parlor door he had his arm around the shoulder of another gentlemen who, he said, as he introduced him to us, was Mr. Lincoln Colcord, "one of our greatest and best friends in Washington, and a man who has been of a great deal of value and assistance to me."

Evidently this was the first time that Douglas had met Colcord. Bonillas then said that Colcord on December 3 and 4, had seen several United States Senators, among whom were Senators Borah, Johnson, Knox, all of whom talked to him very friendly, and that Senator Borah had told him that his mind was open so far as any drastic legislation regarding Mexico was concerned. Colcord then said that he had told Senator Borah that he believed that if such men as Senator Borah talked to those who could tell him the truth about Mexico, that the Senator and others in the Senate would never favorably report the Fall resolution. He then said that Senator Borah had told him that he would be very glad to have the opportunity to talk to those who were disinterested regarding Mexican matters and who had no private axes to grind so far as Mexico was concerned.

Colcord continuing said, "I told him that I would have several parties come to Washington to present to him the truth about Mexico." Colcord then said, "It is necessary to have de Becker, McDonald, and other of our friends immediately come over to Washington and privately talk to Senator Borah and other Senators." Other plans were discussed at this time to bring influence to bear on various members of the Senate and House through Colcord, Douglas, and myself. I told Colcord that such men as de Becker and McDonald had been discredited already as propagandists for Mexico before the Fall committee, and that such men could hardly carry any weight with anybody due to the fact, if I understood the matter correctly, that they were known to be very close friends of Bonillas and others connected with the Mexican Government. I hoped in that way to be able to hear Bonillas, Colcord, and Douglas discuss names of other Americans who as yet had not been mentioned.

Bonillas then said that through certain other powerful friends of his he could, through these parties who had great influence, likewise have many other Senators and Congressmen seen who in turn would show the members of the Senate and House that adverse legislation should not be adopted against Carranza or Mexico.

Douglas then said to Colcord, "Do you know Robert Murray of the New York World?" Colcord told him that he did not. Douglas said, "Well, I have to go now. You come along with me and I will see that you meet Murray; and with you and Murray actively at work great results can be produced."

Before leaving, Colcord said to Bonillas, "It is most important to telephone our good friend Weller to immediately come to Washington, for he has the friendship and confidence of many Senators and can probably do more right at the present moment for us in preventing the Fall resolution from being adopted." He then emphatically said, "Telephone him immediately for you know what to say to him." Bonillas then said that he would immediately telephone to John S. Weller, at 915 Park Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Bonillas, later that afternoon, told us that Weller was general counsel for the Penn-Mex Oil or Fuel Co. with offices at Pittsburgh. Bonillas also at this time said that Weller was on very close and friendly terms with several powerful Senators who were members of the Foreign Relations Committee, and that his talking to these Senators might show them that it was not advisable to report favorably the Fall resolution. Bonillas at this time also said that it was most important to secure the ear of Senators, Congressmen, and others who had the confidence and friendship of Attorney General Palmer, Mr. Tumulty, and others who were very close to President Wilson.

The ambassador left the parlor and was gone about five minutes and upon his return said that the call had been put in for Mr. Weller, and that he expected to talk to him within a very short time. And then said, "I will tell Weller to leave on the first train for Washington for it is most important that he be in Washington to-morrow morning," which would be Saturday, December 6.

I then asked the ambassador as to who Colcord was, and he answered, "Mr. Colcord has been one of our best and most valuable friends, and has produced most excellent results for us." I understood from the ambassador at this time that Colcord was one of his confidential publicity representatives in Washington.

Regarding Colcord, I also understood he formerly was connected with the Philadelphia Public Ledger. That is what he told me when I asked him what newspaper experience he had. It is also said that Colcord was discharged by the Philadelphia Ledger for being a radical with extreme ideas. Whether or not he was employed by the Ledger I, personally, don't know.

Senator BRANDEGEE. When you say you understood from the ambassador that Mr. Colcord had been one of his best friends, just what do you mean by that?

Mr. JONES. When I used the words "I understood," that is just a phraseology of mine. The ambassador made the positive statement.

Senator BRANDEGEE. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. JONES. Colcord will probably be best remembered in Washington as the party at whose home or apartment Martens, the radical so-called red ambassador, was found, after having been searched for in Washington for five or six days by agents of the Department of Justice and the Washington police. It has been claimed that all during this time this red was hid out in Colcord's apartment.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you mean Colcord's apartment in Washington?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. This so-called red ambassador came over here to appear, I think, before a Senate investigating committee, and I notice according to the newspapers the authorities were after him and he disappeared entirely for about six days and nobody could find him. Finally, when the subpoena was served on him by the sergeant at arms, it was served in Colcord's apartment. I remember in the newspaper story published in Washington papers at the time, he admitted that for the time he had disappeared he had been hid in Colcord's room.

The CHAIRMAN. We will take a recess until half-past 2.

(Whereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., the committee took a recess until 2.30 p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

(At the expiration of the recess, the committee reconvened, Senator Fall presiding.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Jones.

STATEMENT OF MR. CHARLES E. JONES—Resumed.

Mr. JONES. After Colcord and Judge Douglas left, the ambassador, my brother and myself discussed with him the advisability of having various parties, whom he said were friendly to the Mexican Government, appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Saturday, December 6, and on the following Monday, December 8, Bonillas said that it was vital to endeavor to have this done, which he felt sure he could do, and through these friends impress on the committee that all agitation in regard to the Jenkins case and allied matters was simply shrewd propaganda on the part of the enemies of Mexico to force the withdrawal of recognition from Carranza or to cause intervention. The ambassador said, "In addition to this plan I have another one which will be of greater value than all others, and that will be to have you gentlemen appear before the Foreign Relations Committee and endeavor to prove to their entire satisfaction that Senator Fall and other members of the committee, his investigators, including Capt. Hanson, the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, and its principal backer, Mr. E. Doheny, and other enemies of Mexico, are behind the Fall resolution simply for personal reasons.

For the information of the committee, and due to the fact that it should be part of the permanent record of the committee, I closely questioned Bonillas as to the documentary proof he claimed to have in his possession, which he wanted me to spring before the Foreign Relations Committee, and which he positively and repeatedly had claimed to be able to turn over to me, in my effort to secure the same so that I could make photostatic copies of it for my own files, and later for a newspaper story. Bonillas, however, was never at any time able to produce any of the various papers, letters, documents, etc., that he claimed were in the possession of the Mexican Government. Furthermore, after many days of effort on the part of my brother and myself to secure from him and his associates some definite proof, in the end they were never able to produce anything, which conclusively proves that they had nothing, for if they had had even the slightest evidence which would have been detrimental to the committee and others mentioned hereinbefore, they certainly would have produced the same.

The butler at this moment came into the parlor and handed the ambassador a card; and he then said, "You will have to pardon me, a party that I have an engagement with is now here to see me." Bonillas then asked us to return to the embassy at 2.15 o'clock that afternoon.

I then asked the ambassador if he would have his butler telephone for a taxicab. He replied, "My automobile is at your disposal." My brother and myself left the embassy at 12.45 p. m. in the ambassador's car, and on the way to the hotel the chauffeur told me that the automobile, which was a Hudson, was owned by the ambassador and that he was chauffeur for the embassy.

I will file with the committee a statement regarding the loyalty of Judge Douglas, similar to my testimony concerning Mr. Leckie.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be printed in the appendix to your testimony.

Accompanied by my brother, I arrived at the stated time and was admitted by the ambassador's butler, who said the former was in a conference and would be with us in a few minutes. He entered the parlor at 2.35 p. m. and we renewed our discussion as to the plans and ways to "ruin" the parties he desired to discredit and to bring influence to bear to defeat the Fall resolution.

Bonillas seemed even more nervous and frightened than he had been that morning, due to the fact that he had learned that the Foreign Relations Committee, so he claimed, would "undoubtedly act on the Fall resolution on Monday, December 8." He added:

Whatever is to be done has to be done, necessarily, right now.

Bonillas reiterated that if it could be shown before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that Senator Fall and other members of the Fall committee, and Capt. Hanson and those interested in supporting the Fall resolution for the benefit of the United States, were "all archenemies of Carranza and Mexico," the Fall instrument would be defeated.

Declaring he had "proofs" in his possession, gathered from Mexican secret-service operatives, Bonillas expressed this desire:

I want you to gather additional proofs, correct or incorrect, to aid in the overthrow of the Fall committee's plans.

Saying he could "demonstrate" that he had such "proofs," he showed me a photographic copy of a letter purported to have been written by a Texas newspaper to Gen. Luis Terrazas, demanding "more money for revolutionary propaganda." He added that "other letters" and important proof were forthcoming from Mexico and from "good friends of ours in the United States" that would show a propaganda conspiracy against the Carranza régime. He went on:

With this information and with inside knowledge that you have, and if you can be persuaded to appear before the committee and attack Senator Fall, Capt. Hanson, and others, and try to discredit them, it will result in attention being withdrawn from the original inquiry.

He paused and added meaningly:

And for this you will be paid liberally.

He declared:

The attack on Fall and the others will so distract attention that the defeat of the resolution is almost certain.

I then asked him:

What will it be worth to you to have this work done?

He replied that he preferred to have me "put the price for this job." I told him it would cause a sensation, and therefore was "worth a great deal of money." He agreed:

Yes; it would be worth a great deal.

Thereupon, I informed him I thought $100,000 "only a fair price to take on a task of this magnitude." He thought a moment and said:

I will pay you $75,000, payable $50,000 in cash before you appear before the Foreign Relations Committee, and $25,000 after you have done the work to my satisfaction.

He elaborated, saying the work would entail:

The complete discrediting of the Fall committee's purposes and the check-mating of its plans and policies.

The Ambassador went on:

The best way to handle the matter will be to have some United States Senator, a member of the committee, either invite you or demand that you appear before the committee to tell them the real facts.

He explained that the facts must be those which coincided with his viewpoint, regardless of what the truth was, in regard to Mexican matters. He said if this was done and it appeared that I was before the committee by request that it would strengthen greatly "our proposed attack" on what he termed "the enemies of Carranza." He resumed:

You can arrange to have some member of the Foreign Relations Committee get you before the body, can't you?

I told him:

Surely, I can have this done easily.

He advised me:

If you are not able to arrange it, I can arrange to have you invited through a prominent and influential friend of mine here in Washington.

The ambassador at this time expressed deep hatred for the National Association for Protection of American Rights in Mexico, all of its officers and members, and declared:

Just wait! In one way or another, Mexico will make life unbearable for all these parties and we will get even with every one of them.

Press dispatches of March 16, 1920, confirm Bonillas's above statement, The Excelsior, a Mexico City newspaper, saying that orders had been issued and sent to Mexican consuls in the United States "to refuse to visé passports of all Americans belonging to the Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico" and all those who appeared before the Fall committee as witnesses. The association members, according to the Mexican paper, are all "listed" by the Mexican Government.

When I agreed to accept the "job" and in accordance to my preconceived plan, I endeavored to have Bonillas enter into a written contract covering the matter in detail. But the cagey diplomat said:

I prefer to have a gentleman's agreement between us. You will be perfectly safe in so far as the money is concerned, due to the fact that you will receive the $50,000 before you begin your assault on the Fall committee and on others that I am interested in thwarting.

I emphasized again the fact that this work on my part undoubtedly would prevent intervention or withdrawal of recognition of the Carranza rule. Bonillas then painted a vivid financial picture of the great commercial opportunities that would be opened to me in Mexico by the Carranza administration, if, as he put it:

If you are able to carry through these ideas and plans that I have outlined.

He promised that I would be employed immediately as chief of the Mexican secret service in the United States at a salary of $5,000 a month, out of which I was to pay necessary expenses incurred in handling the "work" and in special assignments to be given me by the ambassador in person.

Of course, I placed no confidence in these promises. I might explain that in my several thousands of reports to the Bureau of Investigation in the last several years, that in the interest of securing facts regarding several revolutions, I have been assured repeatedly by the various leaders of the movements and by Mexican officials as well, that when they "won out" they would make me a "banana king," "railroad king," a "power in the oil world," and various other types of monarch. All these "offers" were invariably contained in my reports to the Department of Justice and all I ever got out of the offers was information and a sound laugh, together with the satisfaction of blocking and interfering with their plots. All the real money paid me by Mexican sources was either borrowed back by the Mexicans and Central Americans or expended on them in entertainment.

When the ambassador became convinced that he had a ripe opportunity through me to "do the dirty work" that he longed for, he brightened perceptibly and I was enabled to open up several other lines of inquiry. Among the most important of these matters was my desire to learn of his plan to become president of Mexico and as to what I could pump out of him regarding the next Mexican presidential elections.

There had been frequent publicity given in the United States regarding Bonillas' candidacy for the presidency of Mexico. I asked him if it were a fact whether he was or would be a candidate. His explanation of this matter and of the Mexican election in general was as follows:

There is a most extreme and bitter personal, military, and political feeling between Gen. Pablo Gonzales and Gen. A. Obregon. Unless one or both these parties can be persuaded to withdraw as a presidential candidate, then, if they both go to the election, it will undoubtedly result in Pablo Gonzales being elected. If that comes, then I am very much afraid that Gen. Obregon with his friends and supporters throughout Mexico will immediately start civil warfare in Mexico.

If this happens, and I feel positive it will if Obregon is defeated, armed intervention by the United States will follow.

The ambassador qualified this statement in answering my question:

Why intervention, even if civil war does break out?

The United States never will stand for another such revolutionary movement as that which put Carranza in power. Nor will the European powers stand for it. All countries of the world will be in hearty accord with intervention, due to the fact that if civil war comes to pass in Mexico, following the election results, it will demonstrate to the world that Mexico can not control its own affairs, that Mexico can not govern itself successfully.

I am exclaiming this to you on account of the fact that I feel sure that neither Pablo Gonzales nor Obregon will withdraw as presidential candidates, unless a third candidate will enter the field; a candidate friendly both to Gonzales and Obregon.

I am an intimate friend of both these parties and enjoy their complete confidence. If I can show them that if they go to the elections there will result bloody civil war and later the armed intervention of the United States, I may convince them of a plan. This would include my convincing them that it is their duty as patriots to prevent this threatening warfare by both agreeing on a third candidate. This third candidate should be a civilian. Under such circumstances, I am willing to become a candidate for the presidency.

I expect during February or March to go to Mexico and explain fully these matters to Gens. Obregon and Gonzales, with an idea of persuading them to withdraw as candidates.

Our conversation branched off to a discussion of the Mexican policy of the United States Department of State. Bonillas said that in some of his interviews with Secretary of State Lansing he had been "severely talked to and grossly insulted" by the Secretary. He added:

It will be a godsend and a blessing to Mexico when Lansing turns back his portfolio and leaves the Wilson Cabinet.

I asked the ambassador:

Why, is Lansing going to get out?

He answered:

I have received reliable information from influential American friends of mine in Washington that the President did not approve of Lansing's Mexican policy and of many of his other activities. I hope and feel that Lansing will leave the Cabinet soon.

Apparently, from Bonillas's statement, he had advance information that Lansing was to go out of the Cabinet; likewise, that the President did not approve of the policies of Secretary of State Lansing.

Bonillas's remarks almost tempted me to say, and I was restrained from so doing by a desire to complete my "play," that the freedom and courtesies which Bonillas and all of Mexico's representatives in the United States always have had were sadly different from the restrictions and ill-treatment and discourtesies accorded the United States ambassador and our consular representatives in Mexico. I particularly remembered at the time that when President Carranza was inaugurated, and as Ambassador Fletcher passed in his motor car through the streets of Mexico City on the way to the ceremony, the hisses of the Mexican populace were continuous. Hisses and hoots also greeted the American minister as he entered the Chamber of Deputies. A few moments later the German ambassador, von Eckhardt, arrived at the chamber and the deputies arose en masse and applauded and cheered Carranza's close friend and adviser, the German ambassador.

I arrived at the Mexican Embassy again on Saturday afternoon, December 6, on request of Bonillas. The ambassador immediately resumed discussion of various matters touched on in our former meetings of that week. He informed me that he had gone over thoroughly with members of his diplomatic staff and other confidential friends in Washington his proposed plan to ruin members of the Fall committee and discredit others opposed to President Carranza's and the latter's policies. He added that some of these advisers had warned him to be "careful about this matter and consider seriously every phase of it before proceeding." He continued:

This is due to the fact that instead of helping the situation, a hasty move may prove reactionary. If it ever becomes known—this plan of mine—it will ruin me absolutely, and will ruin every other Mexican participating in these plans.

He also declared that he had learned it was exceedingly doubtful as to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reporting favorable the Fall resolution. His information to this effect, he said, had come from confidential sources in Washington, which sources had learned to turn the state of affairs from various Members of the House and the Senate. He explained:

These advisers and myself feel that the immediate danger is past. Even if the committee does report favorably on the Fall resolution, I learn from excellent sources that the administration will pay no attention to it.

He likewise stated that he had decided the most feasible and successful plan would be to have his friends and advisers work along the lines of least resistance. This he explained as follows:

These friends will have talk after talk with various Senators and Congressmen and prominent officials in other branches of the Government. In these talks they will point out that it would be a most serious mistake to withdraw recognition from Carranza or to intervene in Mexico.

That was Saturday afternoon, and he at that time asked me to call at the embassy on the following day, Sunday, at 2.30 p. m. We arrived there about 2.30 p. m. Sunday, and Bonillas then led up to a new proposition, which he said would be as profitable to me and produce as satisfactory results to him as his previous scheme would have been. He told me the new plan would stamp out the activities of enemies of Mexico and eliminate them forever. When I asked what the plan was he said, "It will not be reactionary. With the information in possession of the Mexican Government and the information which you claim you have been able to secure, we can, through friends of ours here in Washington, present the entire matter to the Attorney General of the United States. He will endeavor to prove to his entire satisfaction that there has been and is a conspiracy to cause the downfall of President Carranza and to force intervention.

If this can be done and can be worked out successfully, and I feel sure it can be, it will enable us to force the United States to act. And when this is done, it will ruin and discredit and also interfere with the purposes and plans of the Fall committee. It will ruin every other individual who dares to be opposed to President Carranza and his policies and foreigners who have investments in Mexico, for President Carranza is the best judge of what is good for Mexico.

The ambassador went on:

If this work can be done and you are willing to enter into such an arrangement, your remuneration will be as satisfactory as was my former proposition.

This work, I was told by the ambassador, in connection with information he said he had in his possession, and which he declared he could secure through his own spies and their secret service operatives in the United States and from influential American friends in Washington, New York, and elsewhere, would result in proving "to the satisfaction of everyone that a conspiracy against Mexico was in existence." He also told me:

This will end in the impeachment of several Senators and the arrest for conspiracy of many of those involved in propaganda against Mexico, likewise the arrest and imprisonment or deportation of Mexico's principal revolutionary enemies in America.

In discussing the proposed "scheme," a price was agreed on—$25,000 payable on the signing of the contract and a like amount after his "work" had been completed by me. In addition to this I was to receive a salary of $5,000 per month, which included expenses, for a period of not less than four months, at which time, if mutually satisfactory, the agreement was to be renewed.

As part consideration of this payment by the Mexican Government. I was to surrender to them all papers and documents in my possession pertaining to the activities of Mexican revolutionists in the United States and in Mexico and Central America. Likewise, I was to secure and hand over to Ambassador Bonillas information touching on the Fall committee, the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico and concerning many other individuals who, Bonillas said, he "proposed to ruin absolutely."

At this time the Mexican ambassador said that the Mexican Government had completed arrangements in Mexico for an extensive propaganda and publicity campaign throughout the United States.

Bonillas confided in me:

President Carranza has determined to spend a large amount of money to create sentiment in the United States favorable to Mexico and to the Carranza administration.

This propaganda, if we are able to cause the disgrace or impeachment of several Senators and Congressmen, will be aided immensely. The Democratic administration will take hold of it eagerly, and will dwell on the fact that the majority of the committee concerned in urging withdrawal of support from Carranza is formed of Republicans.

At a later date, through reliable sources, I learned that during January of this year Gonzales Roa, a member of the law firm of Gonzales Roa & Carbaljal, with offices at Gante No. 1, Mexico City, gave a luncheon, at which a widely known newspaperman of the United States was present.

At that time Gonzales Roa made the statement that he had completed arrangements whereby Carranza had appropriated $100,000 in gold as a preliminary fund for publicity and propaganda in the United States.

Gonzales Roa and his partner are the legal advisers for many of Carranza's governmental enterprises. Roa, it is said, is personal legal counsellor of Carranza.

At the luncheon, Roa said:

One of the reasons why President Carranza is more anxious at this time than ever to create sentiment in his favor in the United States is that Carranza and his close advisers have become worried in regard to intervention by the United States.

The position of publicity director was offered the newspaperman, who stated that he had refused the same. He told Roa that to conduct such a campaign in the United States and which would produce results would cost at least a quarter of a million dollars gold for one year's efforts. Gonzales Roa then remarked that President Carranza was willing to appropriate as much money as necessary if he could see even the "slightest result." The newspaperman told me that Carranza had placed in charge of the Mexican end of this propaganda work Senor Carpio, who was connected formerly with similar efforts of Carranza at New York City.

Roa, so I was informed, is the real fountainhead from Mexico for various propaganda and publicity schemes. It is a known fact that a publicity director in the United States has been approached with the offer to handle this campaign for Carranza and that the Mexican Government has conducted negotiations with and has considered several newspapermen along these lines.

About December 10 I was introduced by Bonillas to a Mexican by the name of Javier Favela. In several conversations with Favela at a later date, I learned from him that he was one of the confidential messengers between the Mexican consulate in New York City, the Mexican Embassy in Washington, and the Mexican Foreign Office. Favela was in Washington off and on until about January 15, 1920, and for some four or five days each week my brother and myself were in personal contact with him.

From Favela's remarks I learned that he was on the most close and intimate terms with Ramon P. de Negri, Mexican consul general in New York City, and that as a blind Favela operated a stamp and coin establishment in Room 203, at 79 Nassau Street, New York City, Telephone 6068 Courtland, and that he resided at 265 West Twenty-second Street, New York City.

During the time we were in contact with Favela, several times we discussed matters considerably, and whenever he did his extreme hatred for the United States, and for those who had opposed Carranza and his administration, was more pronounced than otherwise. In several of our conversation, was more pronounced than otherwise. he very frankly said, with innumerable vile and curse words, that he personally proposed to assassinate the publisher of a prominent New York newspaper, as he was more responsible for propaganda and publicity against Mexico than anybody else in the United States. The publisher of the newspaper mentioned was immediately warned, and by request I withhold his name from the committee, but if desired will give them this party's name in private.

Favela, during these conversations, likewise said that plans were on foot, and had been for quite awhile, to cause the assassination of Senator Fall and others, including Capt. Hanson. That was additional confirmation, as mentioned hereinbefore, of the statement made by Seguin and Ramon P. de Negri, Mexican consul general in New York, during November. The threats at that time, November, 1919, were promptly reported to Senator Fall and Capt. Hanson.

My negotiations with the Mexican Government continued as long as it appeared there was any chance to secure any additional information that would be of interest or value in the exposé of Mexico and Mexican affairs, which I had arranged to make in a series of newspaper articles. I felt at that time that I had secured practically all the information that I could. Therefore, on January 28, 1920, after having secured all the information I originally set out to obtain, I broke off negotiations with the Mexican Government, and they at that time paid me $2,000 in cash. That, together with other payments made to me for expenses, made a total of approximately $4,500. These payments were to cover, as Bonillas specifically stated, expenses and for the time I had given the Mexican Government.

During the early part of April, 1920, Gene Fowler of the New York American and myself were in a restaurant on Park Row in New York City, and Seguin, accompanied by an attaché of the Mexican consulate in New York, came in the restaurant, and happening to see me he walked over and said, "Hello, Jones." Of course, I spoke to him. Seguin at that time said it had been a fearful mistake on the part of Bonillas and De Negri and himself to have trusted me as much as they had, and that he was ———— sorry that they had done so. One word and another brought on a rather strained situation, and I very frankly told him to beat it, and he did.

I file with the committee a copy of a check for $920.60, on the Equitable Trust Co. of New York, Colonial Branch, 222 Broadway, dated January 13, 1920, signed by De Negri. That check was given to me in payment of expenses. I also file with the committee the personal card of Favela.

The check referred to follows:

The Equitable Trust Co. of New York.
Payable at Colonial Branch, 222 Broadway.

No. 16.

NEW YORK, January 13, 1920.

Pay to the order of bearer nine hundred and twenty and sixty-hundredths dollars ($920.60).

R. P. DE NEGRI.

During February, while I was securing the information from Gen. Salvador Alvarado, I suggested to Judge Francis Kearful, the attorney for the Fall committee, the advisability of Kearful running in on Alvarado some party connected with the committee, and talked with him over the telephone regarding this matter, and he answered by telegram as follows: "I can not go. See Wallace Thompson, Murray Hill." I file that with the committee.

(The original telegram referred to is filed with the committee.)

To complete the information regarding the negotiations and information I had secured from the Mexican Government, here is a telegram addressed to Capt. W. M. Hanson, care of Senator A. B. Fall, Sheldon Hotel, El Paso, Tex., dated January 28, signed "Charles E. Cresse," which was my old Department of Justice code name, which reads as follows:

JANUARY 28, 1919.

Capt. W. M. HANSON,

Care Senator A. B. Fall, Sheldon Hotel, El Paso, Tex.

All details regarding information sent forward to you some time ago now complete. Have also secured positive proof which completely involves their principal party here with having through lobbyists influenced and also interfered in matters regarding them before Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Also same party here and their principal representative in New York City, which completely proves their connection with reds. Many other of their plans and efforts, which are far reaching, also secured. Impossible to handle these matters, except personally and confidentially, with Senator Fall or yourself, on account of leaks or being uncovered. Therefore, important; meet me in Washington not later than Monday, February 2, so that investigation on account of important matters connected with same, which are now developing, can be completed. This matter, under no circumstances, is to be known to anyone except Senator Fall and yourself. Wire answer to Chas. E. Cresse, room 614, Hotel Washington.

CHAS. E. CRESSE.

Also, or or about this time, due to the absence of the chairman of the committee, Senator A. B. Fall, from Washington, I took the matter up with his secretary, Mr. Safford, who suggested immediately referring the entire matter to Senator Brandegee, which was done. At that time I suggested the advisability of the committee securing, by subpoena or long-distance phone, records as per details given them by me which would prove that the Mexican ambassador, Bonillas, telephoned at the times I have stated to Mr. Weller at Pittsburgh.

Here is the letter of introduction from Judge Douglas to Gen. Pablo Gonzales, that I introduced into the testimony, but due to the fact that something may come up later, it would be a good idea for me to keep it in my possession.

The CHAIRMAN. Just read it into the record now.

Mr. JONES. The letter which I refer to is written by Mr. Charles A. Douglas, and is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
November 4, 1919.

Gen. PABLO GONZALES,
Mexico City.

MY DEAR GENERAL: This will introduce to you Mr. Charles E. Jones of New Orleans. Mr. Jones is a newspaper man of fine standing, both as to ability and character. He has some business in Mexico City and wishes to have the pleasure of knowing you, and I am therefore very glad to give him this note of introduction to you.

I am, sincerely and cordially, yours,

CHARLES A. DOUGLAS.

Now, in connection with that testimony, I will hand the committee later a letter addressed to Senator Fall from the managing editor of the New York American, Mr. Rancke, which states and likewise proves that prior to any and all negotiations with the Mexican Government, as mentioned in my testimony as shown in detail hereinbefore, that I set out to secure, if possible, the information which I have shown in my testimony, and which all of these negotiations with the Mexican ambassador Bonillas and other Mexican officials developed. Mr. Rancke was duly informed of such developments, as was Gene Fowler of the American, who was cooperating with me in regard to that investigation. I have a letter from Mr. Rancke to that effect, which I now file with the committee.

(The letter is as follows:)

THE NEW YORK AMERICAN,
May 12, 1926.

DEAR SENATOR FALL: The series of articles on Mexico and signed by Mr. C. E. Jones, which recently appeared in the New York American was planned as long ago as last November. Mr. Jones laid all of his documents before us at that time. Also he outlined a series of operations by which we would be able to verify certain points not covered by the documents themselves. All of these operations were carried out in detail and with complete success before the first of the articles appeared in this newspaper.

Very truly, yours,

T. V. RANCKE.

The Hon. A. B. FALL,
Foreign Relations Committee United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Does it appear from this letter you are going to put in that you were subpoenaed before this committee at the request of Mr. Rancke?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Did you appear at your own request?

Mr. JONES. No, sir. I have appeared here at the request of Senator Fall. When I originally started on this investigation, as I have shown hereinbefore, I saw Capt. Hanson, at that time chief investigator, as I understand, of this committee in San Antonio. He was very anxious to have me cooperate with the committee and, as mentioned hereinbefore, asked me if I would consider handling the various border investigations with him for the committee. I told him that it was impossible but that at any time I could cooperate with the committee I would be very glad to do so, and at the proper moment would also appear before the committee with all the evidence that I might secure. At a later date, under the name of "Cresse," or "Charles E. Cresse," or my own name, "Charles E. Jones," I from time to time kept the committee advised, as undoubtedly the record shows, in person and both by telegrams and letters, as to certain of the plans and plots and intrigues of those that were endeavoring to discredit the committee, or any other facts that would be harmful to the interests of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. You were in personal communication with Mr. Rancke, of the New York American, and he knew that you were going to get in touch with the Mexican Government, through its ambassador here, and ascertain any facts that you could that might be of interest to the paper.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; even so far as arranging to have Gene Fowler (a reporter of the American) run in by me on the Mexican ambassador.

The CHAIRMAN. You had also known Capt. Hanson, and you met him in San Antonio and had this conversation with him to which you have referred.

Mr. JONES. In the early part of November, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, during your investigation it was understood by Mr. Rancke, but it was not known by any member of the committee that you were going to Mr. Bonillas or had any connection with him?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But in the course of your communications with Mr. Bonillas, which you have detailed, you ascertained certain things which you thought of such importance that you notified the committee, or some member of it, by telegram, or letter, or both?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you also saw Senator Brandegee at one time, in the absence of the chairman of the committee on the border?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And various communications passed between you and the chairman of the committee, and you were notified the committee would be very glad to have you come before it and make your statement?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that is how you came to appear before the committee?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This letter you propose to file from Mr. Rancke, addressed to the chairman of the committee, is simply to substantiate the statements which have been made by you in your testimony?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. Practically all during this investigation, and shortly after it started, I was in touch, either directly or indirectly, with either some member of the committee personally or some attaché of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. You were not, however, employed in any way by the committee to investigate Mr. Bonillas or make any discoveries concerning Mr. Bonillas?

Mr. JONES. The only proposition I ever received from the committee was through Capt. Hanson in San Antonio, who asked me if I would consider handling with him the border situation. I, of course, told him I could not on account of the fact that I had other things on hand, and it would be utterly impossible to do it.

I might add right here that I have never received a dollar from any concern or individual directly or indirectly interested for any service that I have ever rendered in completing the investigation and the exposé which I have made, although I had quite a number of offers from various parties that wanted me to accept such employment. I wanted to keep my hands entirely free to do just as I pleased, and for that reason I refused any and all offers of any connections whatsoever.

The CHAIRMAN. You expect to write a book in connection with Mexican affairs, do you not?

Mr. JONES. Probably.

The CHAIRMAN. In the meantime, you have been engaged in newspaper work for the American and possibly other papers?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. My reason for appearing before the committee at the present time is due to the fact that on May 11, 1920, I received a letter from Senator Fall that he would be very glad to have me come to Washington and appear before the committee, if it was convenient for me to do so at that time.

I might add something that I have forgotten, that at the time De Negri, Seguin, and others I mentioned in my testimony, said that Senator Fall and Capt Hanson and others would be assassinated, that I was never able to learn who were to do the work. I, however, at a later date, understood from Capt. Hanson that Favela followed the chairman of the committee, Senator Fall, and Capt. Hanson out to San Antonio, Tex., likewise to Los Angeles, Calif., and other points, and that Capt. Hanson secured from confidential sources other than myself information that it was Favela who was to assassinate Senator Fall and himself, Hanson.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you know Favela?

Mr. JONES. Quite well.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Has he the reputation of being a bad man?

Mr. JONES. Favela is a fanatic, and he is one of the few Mexicans I have ever known in all my life, which I can probably count on my fingers who, as we say sometimes, has really got the guts. I really believe that Favela has a screw loose, and if I personally saw Favela, after my testimony became public, and he started anything with me, I wouldn't hesitate a minute with him, because I consider him a bad actor.

Senator BRANDEGEE. You mean you would try to get the drop on him, do you?

Mr. JONES. I always let the other fellow have more than a fair chance, but if he started anything with me, I would hang a loaded cane around his neck immediately, and if he made a false move, of course, it would be him or me, and I guess it would be me producing first. If, as I said before, it ever comes to a showdown, and Favela ever gets a chance, he is the kind of a Mexican, the only one of the kind I have ever known, that would just as soon shoot Senator Fall or anybody else, and then bump himself right off. He has a nut loose.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Is it your idea that he is to receive any compensation for performing that patriotic service?

Mr. JONES. No; I don't think Favela could be bought to do that job. I think he is one Mexican, and I said it then and say it now and always will believe it, that is thoroughly 100 per cent patriotic. He is an absolute nut on the question, as he has shown in quite a number of cases time after time. He is a Mexican who said, with a string of oaths as long as a block, that as soon as the damned Americans put their foot on Mexico the plan in Mexico was to touch the oil fields off, set them on fire, and poison the rivers and creeks and wells and water; and that the Americans might think they could jump on Mexico, but when they did they would remember that for the last 10 years there had been half a million of men under arms, revolutionists, bandits, and others in Mexico, and there was not one of them, whether Carrancistas or Villistas, that would not, as he thought, ally themselves in any group against the Americans, and I believe that is absolutely so.

Senator BRANDEGEE. He seems to be a patriotic gentleman, but is it your idea that of his own volition he intended to do these things, or do you think somebody designated him for that purpose?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I don't think Favela ever dreamed that, probably due to the fact that long before I ever met him—I will qualify that, maybe two months or a month and a half—De Negri, due to a speech by Senator Fall, exposing his red connections, as I have shown in the testimony, with a like string of oaths, said they had the man that was ready to do this job, and he would do it. Seguin, also confirmed that statment, saying this fellow had plenty of guts.

Favela's office, or rather the place he occupied in the consulate in New York City, was in a back room, way back from all the rest of the consuls. Nobody would ever see him come in or go out. I have been in there a hundred times, and I never saw him there, although he told me where his room was in the back part. His stamp and coin office is a blind. There is no doubt in my mind, after Hanson told me what he did, that he is the man that was to do the job, although I never could definitely learn who it was.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What was his full name?

Mr. JONES. Javier Favela.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What consulate do you refer to?

Mr. JONES. The Mexican consulate, the Mexican consul general, on the nineteenth floor of the Tribune Building, New York City.

Senator BRANDEGEE. What is his business?

Mr. JONES. He is employed by the Mexican Government as confidential agent. He admitted he was a spy for Mexico, which, of course, meant Germany, all through the Balkans during the European war.

Senator BRANDEGEE. How old is he?

Mr. JONES. I should imagine that Favela is about 35, about 5 feet 7 inches high, weighs probably 210 to 225 pounds, rather fat, and speaks some 8 or 10 different languages. He was in love at that time with a German girl in New York City, whom he expected to marry on or about that time. He is a bad actor.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Has he ever had any experience in the Mexican Army, or has he any military rank?

Mr. JONES. That I don't know. He was connected with the Carranza revolution, and must have had. He was on exceedingly close terms with De Negri, but it was very little trouble to gain his complete confidence.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Is De Negri in New York now?

Mr. JONES. He is supposed to be confidential agent there for the Obregonistas. De Negri is probably the closest man to Gen. Obregon in the Mexican consulate service. I will introduce later a letter from Teodoro Friezies, former consul general for Carranza at Los Angeles, and later at Eagle Pass, Tex., written to Carranza, which I lifted off the desk of the Mexican consulate at Eagle Pass, outlining fully two years ago the Obregonista movement which later developed, in which Friezies exposed all of De Negri's plans in connection with Gen. Obregon. And the odd part of this whole situation, it seems to me, is that at the present time, here is De Negri in New York City, here is Alvarado, here is Favela, and everybody else, who were mixed up in all this dirty work against the subcommittee of the United States Senate and against United States Senators, against newspapers and everybody else, and they are now in this country representing the present new Mexican Government. What can you expect from them? They have not changed. They may have put on a different suit of clothes, but down underneath there is the same skin, the same heart, the same feeling.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do the State Department and the Department of Justice know of the facts which you have testified to before the committee?

Mr. JONES. When Mr. Bielaski resigned as chief, I was at that time handling cases in connection with a new Honduran revolutionary movement, which resulted in the overthrow of Francisco Bertrand by the revolutionary route. I wanted very much to quit when Bielaski got out, but was asked to continue that investigation, which I did, until it wound up last August, I think it was. From that time on the Bureau of Investigation nor the State Department received any information from me. Therefore, necessarily of course, they were not at all familiar with any of these matters, as far as I know.

Senator BRANDEGEE. The particular part of it that I referred to, I wanted to know whether it had ever been divulged either to the Department of Justice or State Department what Bonillas said or what De Negri had said about their getting somebody to assassinate Senator Fall?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I don't recall that there was any notice given to either one of them, for the reason that I had already notified them that they could no longer expect any reports from me.

Senator BRANDEGEE. But you did notify Capt. Hanson, did you not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. In November, 1919. Five days after De Negri made the positive threat that Senator Fall was going to be assassinated, and also Capt. Hanson, I almost sweat blood for five days trying to worm out of him the name of the man who would do the job, when, where, and how, but anybody who knows Mexicans knows that if you begin to prod them too close and display too much anxiety to learn something, you will kill the whole proposition. We handled it, I think, as scientifically as it could be, but couldn't get it. Then, when I knew I probably would not be able to get the name of the party, the only thing left for me to do was to immediately notify Capt. Hanson, asking him in turn to notify Senator Fall, and the manner of my notification, as I remember, was that Fall and Hanson should watch every Mexican, no matter where they were, and not let him get close to them, because it might be that Mexican who was to do the job.

Senator BRANDEGEE. How did you notify Hanson?

Mr. JONES. I notified Hanson by telegram on November 29, 1919, through A. C. Sullivan of the Department of Justice at San Antonio, Tex., as I did not know where Capt. Hanson was at that time. Hanson then telegraphed Senator Fall on December 1, 1919. I happened to know that, due to the fact that I asked Mr. Safford.

his secretary, whether Senator Fall had received Hanson's warning, and Mr. Safford told me that he had. I then learned later, from other parties who were friends of Senator Fall, that the superintendent of police here, Maj. Pullman, who recently died, was warned, and he in turn warned the superintendent of Capitol police, and assigned a city detective to constantly keep watch on Senator Fall.

Senator BRANDEGEE. When did Bonillas leave here to go to Mexico?

Mr. JONES. I do not remember the date. I can get it for you. I remember that I notified Senator Fall, either through Capt. Hanson or Senator Fall directly, that Bonillas would leave Washington on such a date to go to New York, which I believe was February 6, accompanied by his wife, who would sail on February 6. I believe, to visit her daughter in Italy, and Bonillas's plan, the last time I talked with him in Washington, was then to go to Nogales, Ariz., where he was to cross the border and see Gen. Obregon, who lived a short distance over in Sonora, across from there, in regard to persuading Obregon to pull out of the election.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Do you know who is in charge of the Mexican embassy in Washington now?

Mr. JONES. His name is Fernandez. I don't know him.

Senator BRANDEGEE. Was he here with Bonillas?

Mr. JONES. I don't think so. I think he came after Bonillas left. He had some special work; I don't know what it is.

I will file with the committee a carbon copy of my report of July 6, 1918, to the Department of Justice and State Department, under my department name of Cresse, in regard to J. S. Hess, of New York, calling at the Mexican Embassy, 1413 I Street N W., Washington, D. C.

Also my report of July 6, 1918, rendered to the Department of State and Department of Justice, under name of Cresse, my department code name, entitled "Attache of French Embassy in Washington."

Another report of July 8, 1918, the same name and heading, regarding various visitors at the Mexican Embassy in Washington.

A confidential report of July 8, 1918, to the Department of Justice and State Department signed Cresse and entitled "Regarding party by name of Heinemann," who appeared to be a German, calling at Mexican Embassy, Washington, D. C."

Also a carbon copy of my report of July 19, 1918, signed by Cresse, my department code name, entitled "Interviews with Ignacio Bonillas, Mexican Ambassador to the United States, at Washington, D. C., and ideas and plans suggested as a result of these interviews, which may help to offset Germany's strength in Mexico."

Also carbon copy of report of September 26, 1918, signed by Cresse, entitled "Break alleged to have occurred between Carranza and Gen. Obregon."

Also carbon copy of my report of July 19, 1918, signed by Cresse, my department code name, entitled "Plan proposed by me in regard to capturing German consuls, and German military spies in Mexican and Texas towns along the border."

Also carbon copy of my report of May 13, 1918, entitled "American Army officer stationed at El Paso, Tex., visiting the German consul three times in one week at Juarez, Mexico."

Also carbon copy of my report to Department of Justice under name of Cresse, dated July 1, 1918, entitle "Request for information from chief as to name of Germans in Mexico."

Also additional reports prepared by me for the Department of Justice to be filed for the appendix.

In one of the files here, known as file 2, is a letter from Japan, signed Luis G. Pardo, who was in charge of the Mexican Embassy in Japan for President Huerta.

The CHAIRMAN. That was in 1913?

Mr. JONES. It is dated August 27, 1913, and addressed to Gen. Felix Diaz in Paris, France. A brief summary of the letter is that it fully explains to Gen. Felix Diaz that the Emperor of Japan evaded for approximately two months receiving Felix Diaz as Huerta's special ambassador, and when pressed for a definite answer, very frankly came out and said that it was due to the fact that the Emperor felt it would not at that time do to receive a special ambassador from Mexico on account of the United States probably misunderstanding the matter. Pardo tells Felix Diaz that the press of Japan is very enthusiastic regarding an alliance between Japan and Mexico, and that if Diaz had arrived in Japan and the Emperor had refused to see him, it probably would have resulted in a revolution in Japan.

This file also contains on pages 7 to 9, photographic copies of powers of attorney given by Felix Diaz to Pedro del Villar, his accredited representative in the United States.

Page 19 of the same file contains a letter from T. W. Shannon at Chicago, dated February 7, 1917, addressed to Gen. Felix Diaz, in which Shannon informs Diaz regarding arrangements made to appoint as financial agent in the United States the vice president of one of the most prominent banks in Chicago, whose name is mentioned in the letter.

The file also contains powers of attorney from Felix Diaz to Shannon regarding that matter.

This file contains 127 pages of original and photostatic copies of correspondence passing between Gen. Felix Diaz and his various agents and associates.

Page 91 of the same file contains the Felicista junta agreement in New York City, signed by Pedro del Villar, C. L. Ocon, L. R. Acolea, brother-in-law of Felix Diaz, A. Blanquet, and others.

In file U, pages 39 to 44, is an extremely long letter written by Pedro del Villar to Felix Diaz regarding financial and other arrangements that Villar and his agents in the United States were arranging for the Villista movement.

In paragraph 2, page 43, of that file, the following appears in the letter:

The matter of the English. Remembering your idea of the necessity of a better understanding with England in the maintenance of peace and a strong government in Mexico, I have endeavored to approach the English interests. However, they have really never come out openly, due to the influence of Rabasa over them. But anyhow, I obtained, through Col. Robert, one of the secret agents of the English Embassy, who was present at our meeting, and we came to an understanding with Mr. Alfredo Curphey, and authority was given to draw up an agreement. I had several meetings with him and with Mr. Ellis Ashmead Bartlett, a member of the English Army. Gen. Blanquet was also present at some of these meetings. The final outcome was that the English Government will hand over to me, through the person or corporation which it deems the most fit, the funds necessary to bring about the absolute triumph of your movement, and as a first installment they will give £500,000, in the instance that the said officer Bartlett will inform his Government that you are standing back of my statement of a friendly understanding with the United States and our friendship for the Allies, and especially for England. He says that he believes you can count with the forces which I have outlined to him and which list I will show you. He trusts that you will listen to his suggestions, and that the government established by you shall be immediately recognized by all of them. The messenger has fullest power of authority, and I feel certain that you will come to an understanding, because that is a clear-cut proposition that suits you.

File Q contains 152 pages of original and photostatic copies of correspondence between the various Felicista revolutionary leaders that participated in the movement, and to and from others affiliated directly or indirectly with them.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the date?

Mr. JONES. They range all the way from July, 1916, up to the end of 1918, and run somewhat into 1919. Some of the 1919 matter pertains to Gen. Alvarez, who was executed at Vera Cruz.

Files J and K contain the Felicista codes, photostatic copies of the same, totaling 268 pages and over 500 photographs of the code.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean to say they had that many distinct codes?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. The Felicista codes, Senator, were arranged whereby, for instance, Castellanos, their agent in Havana, would have a code between himself and del Villar and Felix Diaz and other persons. His code was a separate and distinct one. Each of the various Felicistas, either generals or whatever they might be, had separate codes. It shows in this way: there is a code headed, "Felicista code regarding Cabrera."

Here is another code regarding Francisco Cardenas. Here is another one regarding Frederico Gamboa, and so on down the line. The codes are all carefully indexed, so if you want to find the name of one of them, for instance, Pedro del Villar, you simply have to turn to "P," under which his name is classified. The code name for President Wilson, which is found on page 153 of file J of the Felicista code, is "Mr. Meddler." The Felicista code name for former Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan, shown on page 153 of file J, is "Mr. Chump." The Felicista code name for Carranza, shown on page 153 of file J, is "Mr. Foxy." The Felicista codes are in file J and K. The code name of former Congressman William S. Bennett, of New York, is also found in a number of places in these codes. Bennett while a member of Congress, according to the statement of Del Villar and others connected with the Felicista movement, was the confidential adviser of del Villar in Washington. Bennett's code name, for instance, in file J, page 153, is shown as "Mr. Smith." His code name is also shown on page 167 of that file.

File O contains 136 pages of correspondence of Ygnacio Palaez, and pertains to many of the different parties directly and indirectly interested in what is known as the Palaez revolutionary movement.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was Ygnacio Palaez?

Mr. JONES. He was a brother of Manuel.

The CHAIRMAN. Manuel Palaez is the anti-Carranza leader in the Tampico oil region, is he not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This correspondence is with his brother?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. I first met his brother Ygnacio probably during the latter part of 1916, when he first arrived in New Orleans, and have known him from that time to this.

File T contains 144 pages and index, containing a large and various lot of miscellaneous correspondence pertaining to various Mexican Government officials, Mexican revolutionists, Americans, and others, shown in the correspondence. In this file is a letter of Teodoro Frezieres, former Carranza consul at Los Angeles, later consul of Carranza at Eagle Pass, Tex., and now a strong supporter of Gen. Obregon.

File R, containing 125 pages and index, has in it a good deal of correspondence of Guillermo Rosas, private secretary of Mrs. Felix Diaz, to and from many of those connected with the Felicista movement. This file also contains letters passing between Rosas and others regarding several armed expeditions to be operated out of the United States against Yucatan and other Mexican States. The letters of Rosas contain many extremely strong and insulting remarks against the President of the United States, Secretary of State Lansing, and show an extreme hatred for the United States.

File A contains 121 pages regarding the affairs of Guatemala, pertaining to matters that were of interest and value to the United States Government, and likewise many Mexican complications.

File B contains 115 pages of original and photostatic copies of letters and documents regarding Mexican revolutionary activities in Guatemala in connection with Estrada Cabrera, former President of that country.

File C contains the same matter as File B, 92 pages.

File F contains 100 pages and index regarding the revolutionary activities of Gen. Maximo B. Rosales, who was associated in connection with Carranza and other Mexican Government officials in substantiating the evidence, as shown hereinbefore, regarding Mexican and Central American intrigues.

File G contains 70 pages pertaining to correspondence of Pedro Grave de Peralta, a Central American revolutionist, in connection with his intrigue with the Mexican Government officials in their efforts to control Central America, as shown hereinbefore.

File H contains 100 pages regarding correspondence between Rosales and Peralta, regarding the Central American intrigue in connection with Mexican Government officials.

Files I and D contain 127 pages and index in detail showing many of the matters regarding Honduras and Salvador and the efforts of Salvador in connection with Honduras and Mexico to set up in Central America a centralized government to be dominated and controlled by the Government of Mexico.

File S contains 67 pages, original and photostatic copies, of letters and documents passing between Emilio Esponda, cousin of Emilio Rabasa, Alphonso Noyala, Ygnacio Pesquiria, and others, which cover the revolutionary activities and plans of the parties involved.

File X contains 131 pages regarding the correspondence passing between various Mexican revolutionists and others regarding the plans and activities of an unusually large number of Mexicans. This file also contains several of the signed agreements regarding various armed expeditions to be operated out of the United States.

File Y pertains to activities of the so-called Villa Mexican revolutionary party, 84 pages of correspondence, agreements, etc. This file likewise contains the code of the Villistas. On page 48 of this file is a proclamation from Gen. Villa, in part as follows:

Of course, you know that President Willson recognized Carranza against the will of the conscientious and honest Mexicans, who have considered the calling of the first chief as a threat, but notwithstanding that injustice I shall not make a treaty with the Germans, because it would be unpatriotic to use foreign elements against the United States. The moment has arrived when the President of the American union and the people will be convinced that Carranza is a traitor, and that he is ungrateful for all past favors, and that he can not see his way clear in international politics.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that not in the shape of a letter to one of his friends, preceding his proclamation, which letter sets forth his principles, or some of them, and refers to a meeting which he expects to have later with prominent Americans, Senator Fall and others, and that he hopes his friend Gen. Scott will also be present?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. That is included in the proclamation, which is in the shape of a letter addressed to Luis R. Alvarez, of El Paso, Tex.

File Z contains 121 pages pertaining to lists of various parties alleged to be affiliated with and in sympathy with various Mexican revolutionary activities. That contains what is said to be the most complete list of sympathizers and participants in practically all of the various Mexican revolutionary factions throughout the United States. There are 29 of the files, containing about 4,000 pages.

The CHAIRMAN. These files referred to by the witness and identified as he has been identifying them, are simply tendered by the witness for the use of the subcommittee temporarily for examination, and not to be printed in the record unless at some future time this is ordered by the committee, and the witness may withdraw the files now or at any other time. [The files are withdrawn by Mr. Jones and taken away by him].

Is there anything further you have to say, Mr. Jones?

Mr. JONES. There is the Morazan matter.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you wish to make a statement in regard to what is known as the Morazan matter, which is the plan for the establishment of a new republic to be composed of Salvador and Honduras in Central America?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And which testimony you desire to offer as being a history of the proposition in connection with the Mexican plans concerning Central America, to which you have been testifying heretofore?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. The plan of Carranza was to establish, as you have said, the consolidation of Honduras and Salvador into one country in Central America, to be known as Morazan.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You may proceed with your statement on the Morazan matter.

Mr. JONES. The utter collapse of two of Carranza's visions of power, his attempt to create in Central America a neutral league and his efforts to foment revolutions in Central American States and then foist on them his own iron rule found the bewhiskered Don Quixote of Mexico with yet another scheme, more insidious and more fanciful than either of the two plots, up his cunning sleeve.

The third and most amazing political windmill that this Don Quixote sallied forth to encounter is known as "the plot of Morazan."

How his plots and plans were routed by Americans; how his revolutionary movements, financed by himself and by German money, advanced through Von Eckhardt, the German Ambassador to Mexico, were forestalled; how his revolutionary protégés in the United States—Peralta, Rosales, and others—were caught in their intrigues; and how Carranza sought to array a host of Latin-Americans against the United States in the marts of trade, on the seas, and even on military fields, I will now show for the first time as far as the public is concerned.

So deep-rooted was his thirst for power that the wily President of Mexico and his officers, failing to see the handwriting on the wall of his palace of plots in his initial failures, evolved still another intrigue that if had not been blocked would have afforded Carranza the foothold he coveted and which he hoped would place Guatemala, Nicaragua, Salvador, Costa Rica, and Honduras again under Mexican control, as they had been in their union with Mexico in 1821 or 1822.

What is now Central America was ruled in the middle of the eighteenth century by a captain general of Spain. He had under his control in 1787 the Provinces of Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua, Salvador, Chiapas, Guatemala, and additional territories which constituted a total of 13 Provinces.

From 1818 to 1821 Central America broke away from Spanish rule. About this time Iturbide proclaimed the independence of Mexico. He had large ideas of all of Central America becoming a part of the Mexican domain. Even at that early date Mexican rule was beset by stormy seas, for between 1822 to 1825 the Central American federation broke away to set up a separate government, having endured 15 months' connection with Mexico. Central America was again in the position it had occupied at the time of the separation from Spain.

The first Central American Congress assembled on June 24, 1823, under the presidency of Jose Matias M. Delgado. The first constitutional Congress of the federation was installed on February 6, 1825. Mariano Galves was chosen president. From then on Central America's bloody revolutionary policy, with almost yearly upheavals, held forth.

During the early history of Central America there sprang into prominence Francisco Morazan. He was born in Honduras in 1799. His father was a French creole and his mother a Honduran. Morazan, according to historians, stands as the best and ablest man ever produced by Central America. He is described as a soldier, patriot, and statesman.

Enlisting the psychological suggestion aroused in Latin minds by the name and fame of Morazan, Carranza stroked his whiskers—one of the few things he possesses that are not false—and called his movement "Morazan."

In connection with his strong political ally, Salvador, Carranza began his third plot for power in 1917. The dominating idea was to form a new republic in Central America through the consolidation of the Governments of Honduras and Salvador and known as Morazan. Once this was done, the plan was to have Guatemala hemmed in on one side by the Mexican State of Chiapas and on the opposite confines by the Republic of Morazan.

With money provided by Mexico, civil war, accompanied by sporadic uprisings in Guatemala, would occur and simultaneously armed expeditions would set out from the State of Chiapas and from Morazan against Guatemala. Thus, attacked from without and contending with internal strife, it would have been impossible for Guatemala to stand against Carranza's plans.

With Guatemala beaten to her knees, the Carranza dream provided that a revolutionary leader, theoretically a patriot and native of Guatemala, but in fact a Carranza dupe, would be, under the consolidated force of arms of the entire movement, elected president. With this president, a whole Carranza slate would be placed in office in every branch of government, including the Guatemalan Congress, and apparently in legal balloting.

Shortly thereafter the Guatemalan Congress would vote to become a part of Morazan. This "legal" action would be approved by the President of Guatemala.

In the same way Carranza planned to include Nicaragua and Costa Rica, in the order named, in Morazan. Political intrigues and armed forces would compel these Central American nations to become part and parcel of the new republic.

Realizing that the United States would be opposed to such a plan and that armed American forces might be landed to thwart the scheme, Carranza began to extend secretly his propaganda against the United States dipping into affairs concerning various Latin-American countries. In this manner Carranza believed he could bluff the United States into not interfering with what appeared to be the unanimous desires of the Central Americans themselves to unite in a single Central American Republic.

The political situation then existing in Honduras and Salvador, with each of the Presidents of those nations endeavoring to keep control of their respective Governments in their own families, was the cue for Carranza to organize speedily and attempt to carry through the Morazan plot.

President Carlos Melendez, of Salvador, who died recently in New York City, had been Carranza's personal friend and supported his policies in Central America for some time prior to this plot. This is evidenced by warm speeches of Carranza, in which he extolled the virtues of Salvador's leaders and the constant friendship and cooperation existing between Salvador and Mexico. One speech before the Mexican Congress, on April 15, 1917, set forth the common ideals of the two nations and recounted the fact that Mexico had sent a commission to Salvador to present to that nation several airplanes, a wireless outfit, a large quantity of arms, ammunition, and war supplies.

Later Carranza sent to Salvador additional supplies of arms and ammunition and also many highly trained Mexican army officers, who immediately took charge of Salvador's troops at the direction of President Melendez. President Melendez, knowing that the constitution of Salvador prohibited him from succeeding himself as President, and notwithstanding the fact that the laws forbade anyone of his blood becoming his successor, and also with the knowledge that he was to become the first President of Morazan, laid plans to elect his brother, Jorge Melendez, President.

Carranza, as shown in my preceding testimony, with Rosales and Peralta and other Central American revolutionists, had plotted to overthrow President Francisco Bertrand, of Honduras, by revolutionary tactics. Notwithstanding his previous attempt to knife Bertrand, and which I have shown to have resulted in a failure, Carranza now extended to Bertrand the hand of friendship. Bertrand, sitting on a tottering chair, was ready for any intrigue that would tend to keep him in power. So he took the proffered hand, bloody and dirty though it was.

This union of two treacherous and grimy paws resulted in each of them agreeing to play the other's game. Bertrand at this time, the latter part of 1918, was contriving to remain in power at all hazards in open violation of the constitution of Honduras by endeavoring to elect his brother-in-law, Nazaro Serrano, to succeed him as President.

The constitution of Honduras forbids the election of any relative by blood or less than three times removed by marriage of the outgoing executive. It forbids also the election of a President to succeed himself.

Serrano was the willing tool of Bertrand. He entered enthusiastically into Carranza's plots. This enthusiasm later resulted in Bertrand and Serrano, in connection with Carranza's plot of Morazan, of throwing Honduras into one of the most gory revolutions in Central American annals.

Bertrand was the son of a Spaniard. He was born in Juticalpa, Honduras. He received a medical education. In 1902 he was appointed coroner of his native township. In 1904, President Bonilla dissolved the Honduran Congress, sending many members to jail. Bertrand was an ardent supporter of these tactics.

In 1906 Bertrand was made minister from Honduras to attend the Central American conference on board the U. S. gunboat Marblehead.

Constant revolutionary turmoil was the rule in Central America in those days. The United States, endeavoring to adjust matters amicably, sent Mr. Dawson, of the State Department, on the gunboat Tacoma to effect a friendly alliance between the various Central American powers.

Bertrand, as representative of Honduras, attended this meeting. He signed what is known in Central America as "The treaty of Tacoma." Honduras, immediately before this, had experienced one of its most virulent revolutions.

Following the signing of the treaty, Bertrand manipulated affairs whereby he became Provisional President of Honduras. As such he served until the middle of 1914, when he resigned and became a candidate (in violation of the Honduran Constitution) for the Presidency. He was successful in gaining office through a maze of manipulations and was inaugurated in 1915.

Carranza outlined his Morazan plans with meticulous care, sending Salvador Martinez Alomi to Salvador and Honduras as his special ambassador. Alomi's instructions charged him to lay the groundwork of the Morazan structure.

Alfredo Quinones, a native of Salvador, who was well known as one of the most active of Carranza's confidential agents in Central America, and who also was Von Eckhardt's (German ambassador to Mexico) close friend and confidant, was one of Alomi's principal lieutenants. Another was Gustavo Solano. The latter, for many years, has been one of Carranza's most trustworthy and efficient agents in various plots. He also was "close" to the German ambassador in Mexico. Solano is now private secretary to Espinosa Mirelles, governor of the Mexican State of Coahuila, and a "Carranza man" of prominence.

Alomi and his associates were received by the Honduran Government with marked honors. Alomi organized active juntas in Honduras and Salvador. These headquarters were established for the spreading of propaganda favorable to the merger of Salvador and Honduras into the proposed Central American Republic of Morazan.

Among Alomi's other lieutenants in Honduras and Salvador were Gen. Costillo Corzo and Francisco Lagos Chazaro. These men hitherto had been opposed to Carranza. They were "bought" easily by Alomi, who saw that German money received by him from Carranza, who in turn had obtained the funds from Von Eckhardt, fell into the hands of these aides.

Alomi, Quinones, and others associated with this mission, secured the enthusiastic support and large fiduciary contributions for their plan from some of the most widely known Germans in Honduras. Among the subscribers were the German consul general at San Pedro Sula, Gustavo Maier; Diederico Dreskel, banker and merchant of Amapala and Tegucigalpa; Frank Sierka, merchant and importer of Amapala and Chockuke; Max Roheme, M. Vess, and Theodore Beneke, of Salvador; and Ernesto Siercke, S. Cornelsen, Wilhelm Derde, and Alfonso Dreschel, of Tegucigalpa, and many others.

A season of rapid-fire changes in diplomatic personnel, involving officers of Mexico, Salvador, and Honduras to and from the various countries mentioned, was launched. The purpose of this was that officials of the three Nations desired that so far as possible every diplomatic officer installed should be favorable to the Morazan plot, and those opposed to it should be juggled out of their posts.

Atilio Peccorini was appointed by President Melendez as his representative at Tegucigalpa, the capital of Honduras. Peccorini recently was secretary of the Salvadorian legation at No. 1722 Massachusetts Avenue, Washington. At that time it is charged that Peccorini made monthly trips between Honduras and Salvador in the interest of the plot of Morazan, endeavoring to speed the proposition.

Bertrand's minister of war, Jeronimo Reina, was authorized as the former's confidential agent in the plot of Morazan. He was instructed to work out details of the plan with Peccorini. Reina always had been regarded as "pro-Salvador." He had participated in Central American revolutionary movements with Salvadorian support.

Bertrand's brother-in-law, Serrano, who was proposed as Bertrand's "dummy" successor in the presidency of Honduras, and who, on assuming office, had agreed to manipulate for Honduras the "legal" merger with Morazan, and was to use his presidential powers to this end and to act with the Congress that was to be placed in the legislative seats of the nation.

President Melendez, of Salvador, through his brother, Jorge, who was "booked" as his successor, was to handle affairs in Salvador along lines similar to those mapped out for Bertrand's brother-in-law in Honduras.

Enemies of Serrano claimed that the latter was not a native of Honduras, but was born in Salvador. It is known that Serrano lived in Salvador for many years, procuring his medical education and practicing as a physician in that country, leaving Salvador for Honduras in the early part of 1917.

On the organization of the preliminary plans of Morazan and on the eve of their being launched, a secret treaty was entered into between President Bertrand, of Honduras, and his proposed successor, Nazario Serrano, and President Melendez, of Salvador, and his slated successor, Jorge Melendez. This treaty was presented by Peccorini, representing Salvador, to Reina, the Honduran representative in this plot. It follows:

First. In the current year of 1919, both countries shall be united in a single Republic, Melendez being President of the new entity and Bertrand Vice President.

Second. The Honduran President shall resign and turn over the charge of the Presidency to the new President.

Third. San Salvador shall be the new capital.

Fourth. The new President shall, at his discretion, organize a cabinet from among the elements most agreeable to the new order; besides, the Vice President shall assume a ministerial portfolio if he so desires.

Fifth. The adoption of military measures in the premises remains in the hands of President Melendez, by ordering the garrisoning, with Salvadorian forces, of the western frontier and northern coast of the Republic.

Sixth. The expenditures for the mobilization shall be made by the Salvador treasury.

Seventh. Into the organized forces may be enrolled Hondurians commanded by Salvadorian or Honduran chiefs, graduates of the Salvadorian or Honduran military schools.

Eighth. To annul ipso facto the existing political constitutions of both countries.

Ninth. Whenever deemed most opportune, there shall be called a constituent assembly, which shall frame the constitution of the new Republic, the attendance of deputies being in proportion to the number of inhabitants.

It was understood by all parties concerned in framing the treaty, that if the instrument ever was made public, articles 5, 6, and 7 were to remain secret.

President Bertrand of Honduras, not being satisfied with the proposed treaty, which had been prepared largely by President Melendez of Salvador, submitted the following counter proposals:

First. Honduras and Salvador would constitute the Confederate Republic of Morazan with San Salvador as the capital, it being understood that both constitutions should be annulled, and after the coup d'etat, the President of the new nation would summon a constitution.

Second. Neither Melendez and Bertrand could be Presidents of the new entity, except if the constituent should select one of them. Melendez would act only as provisional President to supervise the elections.

Third. The Vice President of the Republic of Morazan would choose one of the portfolios in the cabinet and he would be substituted only if failing to win the constituent's confidence.

Fourth. Local presidential elections due in both countries should be stopped on account of the events.

Fifth. The provisional President should select a half of his cabinet among Salvadorian citizens and the other among Hondurans.

Sixth. The new President should control the military service in the northern coast of the Republic. It being agreed that Hondurans and Salvadorians would be, without discrimination, selected to lead garrisons and take command of ports. In all cases the preference would be given to men in uniform, who had finished their careers in Salvadorian military schools. Both countries would pay all public-service expenses and that of mobilization.

President Melendez then personally, together with Bertrand, arranged the final details of this treaty, which contained practically all of their proposals as outlined in the two documents. Shortly after this the United States Department of State received complete information of these intrigues.

The outcome of the plot was forecast if the plan were not interfered with. This resulted in the postponement of the Morazan plot for the time being.

Many of those implicated in the plot of Morazan were blamed by its principals with having "talked too much." It was accepted in higher circles that the United States was "wise" and that "too much talk" had occasioned the "wisdom." Among those credited with speaking too freely of the plot of Morazan was the Minister of War, Reina, who died "in a hurry," despite the herculean efforts of his Salvadorian physician. It was charged that he had been poisoned.

The Honduran minister of foreign affairs, Silverio Lainez, with unusual activity and, so it is said, as a precautionary move, tendered his resignation. It was said of him that he had been opposed to the Morazan scheme; therefore he needed no other spur to quit office than the warning of Reina's death.

Alverado Guerrero, President Bertrand's secretary, was immediately dismissed.

Col. Augusto Coello, who led a revolution with Salvadorian troops and arms in 1910, was appointed as Bertrand's private secretary.

Francisco Majia, the Honduran minister of interior, while calling at President Bertrand's palace, was taken violently ill. He died immediately on his arrival home. Bertrand's enemies accused him of having handed his minister of interior a "cocktail" on the latter's arrival at the palace.

Presidential "cocktails" in Central America, as a rule, have a dangerous "kick." Francisco Majia, having learned of the proposed Morazan plan, was an active enemy of the movement.

Dr. Alberto Membrano, vice president of Honduras, and minister of Honduras to Washington, through enemies of Bertrand, was "wised" to the Morazan plan and immediately protested to Bertrand. This resulted in Membrano becoming persona non grata with his executive and Membrano's friends warned him that his life would be in danger thereafter in Honduras.

At that time it became known that the Mexican ambassador, Ygnacio Bonillas, at Washington, had been the guardian, adviser, and close personal friend of the Salvadorian minister to Washington, Rafael Zalbivar. Membrano's friends charged openly that Bonillas then and now, for Carranza, participated actively in the Morazan plot.

Many of President Bertrand's officials were also accused of "leaking" regarding the Morazan plan. Those who did not die mysteriously or leave the country were thrown into jail. Among those were Eduardo Giullen, Romulo Carvajal, Jose Bonilla, and Nestor Mejia.

The Morazan plan for the moment being blocked, it was nevertheless manipulated under cover. Carranza, through his special representatives, demanded in certain terms that whether or not the plot was known to the United States "to go ahead and put it through."

After Bertrand had begun punishing those opposed to the Morazan plot, he appointed a new Honduran minister to Salvador, Miguel Angel Fortin. The latter, when presenting his credentials to President Jorge Melendez, said:

My Government, which loyally understands the Salvadorian ideals, is hoping that in the near future both brotherly countries shall march in a very close union to fulfill their social and historical destinies.

President Melendez said in reply:

The two countries are one and shall be one.

At that time Andrew Serrano, Bertrand's brother-in-law and proposed presidential successor, was a colonel in the Salvadorian Army Reserves. He ranked as a military adviser to the Salvadorian Army. Shortly thereafter he was appointed by Bertrand as minister of war in Honduras. Bertrand then appointed Dr. Ricardo Urrutia, who had been minister to Salvador, as a special minister and head of a Honduran mission, which he sent to Mexico to complete further plans regarding the plot of Morazan.

Dr. Miralda, who had started his political life in Salvador under the Regalade régime, was made consul general at New York City. Augusto Coello, a strong "pro-Salvadorian," was appointed consul general for Honduras at San Francisco. Leopoldo Cordova, who received his education in Salvador and who lived in that country for many years and married a Salvadorian, was appointed consul general at New Orleans.

Cordova, during the latter part of 1919, was murdered in New Orleans, and it has been said that his assassination resulted from Central American political intrigues.

Serrano, the Honduran minister of war, appointed Trejo Castillo, a Salvadorian lawyer, as assistant minister of that department. The Salvadorian general, Julio Salinas, was appointed commander of the Honduras Military Academy at Tegucigalpa. Another Salvadorian army officer, Col. Jose Leon Majano, was named chief of the Honduran artillery headquarters at Tegucigalpa.

Many Salvadorian army officers were stationed in and near the Honduran Capital. Among them was Gregorio Bustamente.

The Government of Salvador also changed several of its consulates in Honduras and appointed men who could be counted on to cooperate with Serrano. Among these was Dr. Arturo Zelaya, who was sent to Amapala. Dr. Carols Tinel was sent to Choluteca. Jose A. Membrano was placed at Siguatepeque. Antonio Lardizabel was assigned to Tegucigalpa.

Dr. Juan Bustillo Rievera, a strong pro-Salvadorian, was appointed minister to Mexico City by Bertrand. Dr. Secundino Turcois, also a firm believer in Salvadorian activities, was named minister to the United States by the President of Honduras.

Long before this, due to Carranza's money, arms, ammunition, and with Mexican Army officers training the Salvadorian army, that country was fully prepared to carry out the Morazan plot. In Honduras, however, Bertrand and Serrano, to put through their part of the Morazan scheme, had a harder row to hoe. It was necessary for them, before entering actively into the final stages of the plot, to oust from the Honduran army all officers who threatened to be opposed to the plan. As has been shown in the consular and other governmental changes, Bertrand had to renovate each and every department, making sure that only "pro-Salvadorians" or persons of Salvadorian nativity were in office.

All offices of importance in governmental and military circles were entrusted to the care of Bertrand's and Serrano's relatives, both of blood and marital relationship.

Through persons who were allied with Bertrand and Melendez in the Morazan plot, individuals who were among those who had "talked too much," it became known that both Honduras and Salvador were pledged unmistakably to the plan of Morazan. Bertrand openly declared that the supreme will of the people of Honduras would determine, on the election of Serrano as president, whether or not it was desired that Honduras and Salvador would unite in the new Republic. Secretly, however, this man assured Carranza, Melendez, and others in the "high circle," that the two countries would be merged, regardless of any sentiment expressed by the people of his nation to the contrary. He emphasized that with a "packed" congress as the tools of the plotters the merger would at once be "legal," speedy, and plausible; that it could not fail.

At the beginning of the Morazan plot, I had reported the complete plan to the Department of Justice and to the State Department. As events unfolded themselves and the plans of these conspirators advanced, I also, through a corps of confidential informants, who were allied with the various factions in Honduras and Salvador, was able to become conversant with all their schemes. I in turn allied myself with the political party in Honduras which was opposed to Bertrand and Serrano, acting as a secret sympathizer and friend of their faction. To cover the entire matter I procured an appointment as confidential agent of the Honduran foreign office. I worked my way into the confidence and won the friendship of Leopoldo Cordova, consul general for Honduras at New Orleans, and whose father, under Bertrand, was treasurer of Honduras.

I was enabled, as shown in my reports to the Department of Justice, to learn in advance of the plans and plots of Bertrand and Serrano. Cordova one evening, dining with me and becoming partially intoxicated, made the positive statement:

Central America will within the next two years be one big republic again, due to the consolidation of each of the Central American countries. As soon as Serrano is elected President of Honduras, the new republic will take root and within two months thereafter will burst into bloom. Cabrera will be forced out of power as President of Guatemala and that nation will then become a part of Morazan.

Cordova, boasting, continued:

My chief, Bertrand, and Serrano have fooled the United States and have hoodwinked Guatemala. They dropped apparently the Morazan plan.

I told Cordova that Bertrand and Serrano, with Melendez and Salvador, never would be able to "put over the Morazan plot." He became angry and retorted:

You know me, Mr. Jones. I am a man of my word. I swear to you by the bones of my grandmother, and I will bet you $100 that right after Serrano is elected Salvador and Honduras will merge in Morazan.

I declared that the United States "would not stand for this proposition." His answer was:

Honduras, Salvador, Costa Rica, and Mexico, with all our other friends throughout Pan America, are too strong for the United States. The United States will not be able to interfere further in our affairs. It is true we can not whip the United States physically, but when we cut off our commerce, which will go to England, Germany, and France, instead of the United States, watch the Americans howl!

Cordova then told me that when the new republic of Morazan was formed that he was to be its consul general in New York City. I learned from him then of the perfect understanding between Honduras, Salvador, and Mexico regarding the Morazan plot, and he reiterated his statements in later conversations with me. He added:

Carranza (with whom Cordova thought me very friendly) evidently doesn't understand why the delay had been and is being occasioned in failing to form the new republic of Morazan. Carranza is very impatient about the tardiness of action.

Cordova went on to say that much Mexican money had been advanced and spent by Carranza to those implicated in the Morazan plot.

As opposition in Honduras to the plans of Bertrand and Serrano developed, there was launched a reign of terror in Honduras. This resulted in the mysterious poisoning of many of those opposed to Bertrand and Serrano. Others were assassinated, and hundreds of Hondurans were cast into filthy and disease-infested prisons and penitentiaries. In addition to these, several thousands of prominent citizens, professional and business men, were forced to flee the country.

Dr. Alberto Membrano, vice president of Honduras and minister of the United States, was in Honduras during the reign of terror. He fled to save his life. T. Sambola Jones (no relation of mine), United States minister to Honduras, had been in that country only six or eight months when Bertrand's iron rule decreed an epidemic of death and persecution. Several months after his arrival he had married the 18-year-old daughter of Chief Justice Duron of Honduras. His father-in-law was opposed to the Morazan plot. The chief justice took refuge in the United States legation to escape Bertrand's persecution. The United States minister protested vigorously to President Bertrand regarding the reign of terror waged in open violation of Honduran laws and asked him to stop this outrage in the name of civilization. The protest served to increase Bertrand's activities along this line.

On the day following the American minister's protest, Bertrand penned a letter to Leopoldo Cordova, his consul general at New Orleans, and his enthusiastic supporter in the United States. In this communication, Bertrand recounted the words of Ambassador Jones and instructed Cordova to issue newspaper interviews immediately, "boosting" Serrano and Bertrand and endeavor to discredit in these articles the United States minister to Honduras. This was to be done by claiming that Jones had married into a Honduran family that was active in its opposition to the President of Honduras.

I talked Cordova out of this plan. I showed him that it probably would have a reactionary effect on Bertrand and Serrano, and also on himself. I asked him what Bertrand's opinions were regarding the protest of the American minister. His answer was:

Bertrand has said: "To hell with the United States!" Bertrand, having the friendship, financial and moral support of Salvador, and backed by Carranza, proposes to elect Serrano and then create the new Republic of Morazan, whether the United States approves it or not.

Later that day Cordova and I dined together and after he was in the process of drinking his usual quota of liquor I wormed out of him the fact that there was a secret treaty, offensive and defensive, between President Carranza, of Mexico, and Salvador and Bertrand and Serrano, of Honduras. He said proudly:

My chiefs, Serrano and Bertrand, are men of honor. Their word is gold. They have promised faithfully President Carranza his complete triumph in Central America; first, through the Morazan Republic, and then all the other Central American countries will be forced, for their own salvation, to become a part of the Morazan Republic.

In several interviews with Dr. Alberto Membrano, and also in conferences with Rafael H. Valle, who is now secretary of the Honduran border dispute commission at Washington, I learned that Dr. Membrano, then minister of Honduras at Washington, had attended several meetings of Pan American diplomats at the National Capital. The Mexican ambassador, Ygnacio Bonillas, and other diplomats were endeavoring at that time to form Carranza's Pan American league of neutral nations. Bonillas, Valle told me, was a leading advocate of the league formulation of these conferences.

Membrano claims to have been responsible for the defeat of the Bonillas proposals to establish such a league. His success in this respect, Valle told me, occasioned much disgust on Bonillas's part.

Membrano has been the storm center in Honduran politics for many years. About 25 years ago he became prominent in political affairs of his country. This was made possible by his friendship with Gen. Luis Bogran, then President of Honduras. Bogran appointed Membrano assistant secretary of public works.

Membrano was on a special mission to Spain from 1904 to 1907. Having returned to Honduras in the latter year, he was then forced to flee the country when President Zelaya, of Nicaragua, forced President Manuel Bonilla from office. Davilla was the successor to the presidency and Membrano resided in Mexico City as a political exile from 1908 to 1911.

When Gen. Bonilla regained office, he appointed Membrano as minister to Mexico, where Membrano served during the brief régime of Madero. Shortly after Madero's assassination Membrano was appointed minister to the United States. He acted in this capacity at Washington until the latter part of 1919.

Membrano was elected Vice President of Honduras in 1915, still retaining his office of minister. He always claimed friendship for the United States, but his political enemies charge him with being a supporter of American policies only when those policies benefited Membrano.

Germans have been strong in political and financial power in Honduras for many years. Particularly was the then German owned and controlled banking house of G. Amsinck & Co. active in Honduran affairs. This firm had its branches in all principal towns of Honduras and an American headquarters at Nos. 2 and 4 Hanover Street, New York City. The New York headquarters had acted for many years, it is said, on the instructions of Membrano, as financial agents in the United States for the Honduran Government. It is a known fact that during the time it so acted the firm received the funds and remittances from various Honduran consulates in the United States.

In July, 1919, the reign of terror instituted by Bertrand and Serrano in Honduras and which was caused solely by Carranza's Morazan intrigue came to a head. It had resulted in the assassination of scores of prominent persons opposed to the ring leaders of the plot; the imprisonment of hundreds of others; the exodus of thousands more from Honduras to escape the poisoned chalice or the dagger thrust in the back.

One of the principal opponents of the Carranza-Melendez-Bertrand-Serrano plot of Morazan was Gen. Rafael Lopez Gutierrez. Gutierrez had been prominent for many years in Honduran political and military affairs. With Bertrand's "unseen hands" reaching for his throat and with a whispering of threats of imprisonment reaching his ears, Gutierrez escaped from the capital and, together with Gen. Francisco Carbone, rallied others who were "in the same boat."

Thus was launched a civil-war movement in Honduras which culminated shortly thereafter in that country being aflame. Bertrand and Serrano, backed by Carranza's money and supplied with large quantities of arms and ammunition provided by Carranza through Salvador, and with many Mexican Army officers training Salvadorean troops, the latter officers transferring themselves to the Honduran colors, endeavored to cope with the situation. Bertrand and Serrano resisted the movement until the early part of September, 1919.

Irrespective of repeated and encouraging messages from Carranza and his allies in Salvador that he would support them to the limit, Bertrand and Serrano, together with their principal friends and supporters, began their plans to flee. They knew they had "had enough."

Bertrand and Serrano slipped out of their country, escaping from Amalpa, the principal port of Honduras on the Pacific. From there they went to Panama, and early in October, 1919, reached New Orleans. The two defeated plotters were enthusiastic over Carranza's way of doing business when they arrived in America.

They lost little time in launching a plot to begin a counter-revolutionary movement against Gen. Rafael Lopez Gutierrez, who had become President of Honduras. The Bertrand-Serrano movement was scheduled to start from Mexico and Salvador. It was to be supplied liberally with money, arms, ammunition, and boats. Mexican Army officers were to be present in the forces in large numbers.

Thus was revived Carranza's ancient plan to attack Guatemala and other Central American countries. The Department of Justice had blocked all his former attempts, but the archconspirator of Mexico was not dissuaded from his system of intrigue and until his death several weeks ago was actively engaged in perfecting the plans for Bertrand and Serrano's movement.

President Estrada Cabrera, of Guatemala, fearful of Carranza's present plan—the attack from Chiapas and Salvador—sent one of his officials to the United States, who arrived in New Orleans about the same time that Bertrand and Serrano reached that city. Cabrera's representative was instructed by his chief to try to bring influences to bear on the United States through the Guatemalan legation at Washington to defeat the plans of Carranza.

This representative told me during September of 1919 that the financial backing, war equipment, etc., of the contemplated movement against Guatemala had been supplied by the Mexican Government and from large German interests in Mexico. The latter, he said, were prominently identified with activities against the United States during the World War.

Gen. Antonio M. Monterrosa, one of the best-known soldiers in Central America, and a commanding general in the army of Honduras, confirmed what the Cabrera representative told me. He said on September 8, 1919, that the Government of Mexico from the Mexican States of Chiapas and Tabasco was cooperating fully with the revolutionary movement that was being organized then against Guatemala. He said it was and is the opening move of Carranza's fourth attempt to dominate Central America by extending his dictatorship beyond the confines of Salvador, which he dominates as thoroughly as if he held office in that country.

The committee now has in its possession a signed statement secured by me from Gen. Monterrose which provides further confirmation of the declarations made by Cabrera's representative.

During February and March, 1919, Carranza acted in concert with his old-time circle of Central American conspirators to combine German money with Mexican hatred of America in a fourth attempt to control Central America.

My reports to the Department of Justice, from the start of each of the three Central American intrigues to their conclusion, covered all facts set forth in my testimony before the committee. Rafael H. Valle, secretary of the Honduran Boundary Dispute Commission, recently substantiated all my claims regarding the Morazan plot in the presence of Gene Fowler, a reporter for the New York American.

Morazan, Carranza's third dream, failed without occasioning any serious backfire that might singe the moth-proof beard of Mexico's President. Now comes his fourth attempt, with Carranza sitting at the gaming table, eager and ready to deal marked cards to all who may play with him. The fourth dream will be followed by a fifth and sixth if this Mexican monstrosity is not checked for once and all time in his mad gallop for power across the length and breadth of Latin-America.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further, Mr. Jones?

Mr. JONES. That about covers it, with the exception of Cantu.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you know about Cantu?

Mr. JONES. I will have to get that file for you.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the governor of Lower California?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been understood generally by the public that he is acting somewhat independently of the Carranza Government.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; he always has.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe we will not go into that at this time. I think of nothing further to ask you, Mr. Jones. The committee thanks you very much for your testimony.

APPENDIX TO TESTIMONY OF CHARLES E. JONES.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS,
DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
January 13, 1919.

To whom it may concern:

It affords me pleasure to state that I have known the bearer, Mr. Charles E. Jones for the past year or more. During that period, he has been connected with the Department of Justice, and has been of great assistance to other agents of the department in this section of the country, and has furnished us with very valuable information.

Mr. Jones is thoroughly posted on Mexican matters, a man of good judgment and extraordinarily resourceful, and I recommend him without reservation.

Very truly, yours,

H. E. BRENNIMAN,
Division Superintendent.

GONZALEZ ROA, CARBAJAL & LECKIE,
ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS AT LAW,
EDIFICIO DEL BANCO DE LONDRES,
MEXICO, D. F., May 20, 1918.

HON. IGNACIO BONILLAS,
Mexican Ambassador, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: This will introduce you to Mr. Chas. E. Jones, of New Orleans, who is a newspaper man of wide repute, and is one of the hardest working, most energetic, and resourceful men it has ever been my fortune to know. Whatever he undertakes I have the best of reason to believe he will carry through on a scale of 100 per cent. He has a matter of business, the nature of which I am not familiar with, that he wishes to take up with you, and I bespeak for him your consideration and if possible your aid in the business he has on hand.

With much respect and hoping to see you in person some time in July, I am,
Very cordially, yours,

ADAM LECKIE.

CONSULADO DE MEXICO,
New Orleans, La., junio 17 de 1918.

Sr. ING. YGNACIO BONILLAS,
Embajador de Mexico, Washington, D. C.

MUY ESTIMADO Y FINO AMIGO: El portador de la presente es el Señor Charles E. Jones, quien me permite presentar a Ud.

El Sr. Jones va a esa con el propósito de hablar con Ud., y he de agradecerle se sirva atenderlo.

De Ud. atento amigo afmo., y S. S.,

R. E. MUZGUIZ.

TRANSLATION.

June 17, 1919.

MY DEAR FRIEND: The bearer of this, Mr. C. E. Jones, you will permit me to introduce.

Mr. Jones goes to Washington with a proposition to talk over with you which will benefit you to give attention.

Your firm friend and servant,

R. E. MUZGUIZ.

Mr. Jones has a special commission from the Secretary of Relations, which he has permitted me to tell you. I believe Mr. Jones is sufficiently informed in the matter he is handling and no doubt it is a very good remedy.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
IMMIGRATION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF INSPECTOR IN CHARGE,
Los Angeles, Calif., October 15, 1918.

Mr. H. P. L. BECK,
Inspector in Charge,
Tia Juana, Calif.

DEAR BECK: This letter will be presented to you by Mr. Charles E. Jones, of the Washington office of the Department of Justice. He is engaged on confidential investigation in Mexico, and it is desired that you issue him a permit card and waive the attachment of photograph. In the event that Mr. Jones desires to have any other persons accompany him please issue cards for the necessary permits to depart.

You should extend all possible courtesies to Mr. Jones and treat the matter strictly confidential.

JOSEPH A. CONATY,
Acting Inspector in Charge.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
Washington, September 17, 1918.

C. L. KEEP, Esq.,
Federal Building, Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR SIR: This note will introduce to you Mr. Charles E. Jones, who is in Los Angeles and vicinity on a confidential investigation regarding Mexican revolutionary matters. Please render him all proper assistance.

Very truly, yours,

A. B. BIELASKI, Chief.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
San Antonio, Tex., October 3, 1918.

H. B. MOCK, Esq.,
Department of Justice, Tucson, Ariz.

DEAR SIR: This will introduce to you Mr. Charles E. Jones, who operates with this department in connection with the New Orleans, La., office.

Mr. Jones is making a special trip along the Mexican and Arizona borders on department business, during the course of which he may have occasion to stop over in your city.

You will find Mr. Jones very thorough in his work, particularly conversant with the lines upon which he specializes and, withal, a courteous and likeable gentleman. Any assistance you may be disposed to afford him, in connection with the aims of this service, will be appreciated by me.

Yours, very truly,

C. E. BRENNIMAN,
Division Superintendent.

SERVICIO CONSULAR MEXICANO,
CONSULADO GENERAL EN EL PASO, TEX., P. O. BOX 528.
El Paso, Tex., Agosto 6, de 1918.

Mr. CHAS. E. JONES,
New Orleans, La.

DEAR MR. JONES: I am in receipt of your esteemed favor of the 27th of July last, contents of which I have noted.

Your suggestion is, as you say, important, and I am transcribing your letter to the department of foreign relations so they can give the Mexican consuls the necessary instructions.

Yours, very truly,

ANDRES G. GARCIA.

SERVICIO CONSULAR MEXICANO,
CONSULADO GENERAL EN EL PASO, TEX., P. O. BOX 528.
El Paso, Tex., August 6, 1918.

Re Leaks.

Mr. CHAS. E. JONES,
New Orleans, La.

DEAR MR. JONES: I beg to refer to your favor of the 31st of July last and to state that I have taken notice of its contents and that your reports in the future will be signed Pedro Diaz and Godchaux number 10.

With best personal regard, I remain,

Yours, very truly,

ANDRES G. GARCIA,
Mexican Consul General.

SERVICIO CONSULAR MEXICANO,
CONSULADO GENERAL EN EL PASO, TEX., P. O. BOX 528.
El Paso, Tex., Agosto 5, de 1918.

Sr. CORONEL TIRZO GONZÁLEZ,
Jefe de las Armas, Matamoros, Tamps., Mex.

MUY ESTIMADO Y FINO AMIGO: El portador de esta es el Senor Chas. E. Jones que está comisionado por la Secretaría de Relaciones Exteriores de nuestro Gobierno para vigilar y procurar contrarrestar los trabajos que los enemigos del mismo Gobierno desarrollar conspirando en este país.

Por lo anteriormente expuesto me permito suplicar a usted se sirva prestar su valiosa ayuda al citado Senor Jones para el mayor éxito en la comisión que se le ha conferida, y, no dudando que se servirá atender mi recomendación, aprovecho esta oportunidad para repetirme con todo gusto su muy afectísimo amigo y atto, S. S.

ANDRES G. GARCIA.

[Translation.]

EL PASO, TEX., August 5, 1918.

Sr. CORONEL TIRZO GONZALES,
Chief of Arms, Matamoros, Tamps., Mex.

MY DEAR FRIEND: The bearer, Mr. C. E. Jones, has been commissioned by the secretary of foreign relations of our Government to watch and counteract the work of the enemies of the same Government who are plotting in this country.

On account of the foregoing permit me to ask you to lend your valuable help to the aforementioned Mr. Jones in the completion of the task assigned him, and not doubting that you will give attention to my request I take the opportunity to repeat to you with much pleasure my sincere regards.

Your servant,

ANDRES G. GARCIA.

[Telegram.]

OCTOBER 1, 1919.

Señor PESQUERIA,
Consul General of Mexico, New Orleans, La.:

Please telegraph me at once, my expense, care Washington Hotel here, telegrams of introduction to Consul General Denegrie at New York; also similar telegram of introduction to head of financial agency, New York. Greatly appreciate receiving these immediately.

CHAS. E. JONES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE A FEW REPORTS FROM SEVERAL THOUSANDS IN MY FILES THAT MAY BE OF INTEREST.

These reports are signed Cresce, which was code name of Chas. E. Jones at the Department of Justice.

Confidential report by Cresce to Department of Justice re letter written by Mexican Consul Teodora Frezleres at Eagle Pass, Tex., to President V. Carranza, of Mexico:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 13, 1918.

On May 3, while at the office of Teodora Frezleres, Mexican consul general at Eagle Pass, Tex., we were talking about Gov. Cantu, of Lower California.

Frezieres said he had enough information regarding Cantu to have President Carranza hang him, and had written Carranza a long letter about Cantu, but was afraid Carranza's private secretary, who was a friend of Cantu's, had held his letter up and that Carranza, therefore, he felt sure, had not received same.

Frezieres then showed me carbon copy of the letter, and I told him, why, I can arrange it so that letter could be personally handed to Carranza by a good friend of mine in Mexico City, namely, Mr. Adam Leckle, who was on very friendly terms with Carranza. I then said, "Sure I can do that for you," and put the consul's carbon copy of that letter in my pocket. At that moment he had a long-distance telephone call to attend to, and apparently forgot all about the letter. I then left, and before I returned to the consulate made a copy of the letter. When I returned to the consulate, Frezieres began to yell for his letter and I told him I had put it in my pocket by accident and then handed it back to him. He said nothing more about sending copy of it by me through Leckle to Carranza.

On May 4, when I returned to San Antonio, handed the copy of this letter, which was in Spanish, to Ed. T. Needham, of your San Antonio office, to have English translation made of same. Needham, I understand, on May 6, made report on this letter, and sent copies of same to Maj. Barnes, your Eagle Pass office, San Antonio office, and yourself.

The letter is as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., April 25, 1918.

MR. PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC,

HON. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA,

Mexico, D. F.

MR. PRESIDENT: I am just in receipt of instructions to return to my consulate at Eagle Pass, Tex. My separation from the consulate at Los Angeles, which I represented for a period of 40 days, became imperative when all the reactionary element, under the leadership of Col. Esteban Cantu, formed a combination to avoid my taking notice of the grave situation created by the following:

The group of deathly enemies of the Government which is organized by ex-Federals, namely, Attorney Jorge Vera Estanol, Orcl, Generals Luis E. Torres, Refugio Velasco, Hernandez. The group organized by Zapatistas whose official agency will be managed in this city by Dr. Atl, Attorney Octavio Paz, and Attorney Jacinto Barrera, actually Government secretary from the northern district. I wish to note that Mr. Barrera, who is a colleague of the aforesaid gentlemen, and Octavio Paz were at the head of the government of the northern district of Lower California in 1911, and they now wield a large amount of influence over the men of the lower category who number about 30,000 and reside in this city.

There is another group organized by the son-in-law of Gen. Otis, now proprietor and director of the Times, whose legal adviser is Jorge Vera Estanol. It may be added that in this connection Otis is associated with D'Oheney, owner of the petroleum wells in the region where Pelaez, the rebel, is operating. And it appears that Pelaez is supported by D'Oheney himself through the instrumentality of Gen. Garcia Naranjo. Garcia Naranjo was recently in this city to hold a conference with D'Oheney and Vera Estanol, the former having left soon afterwards for Washington.

There is another group organized by Col. Esteban Cantu. Cantu is one of the directors of these groups, and he is said to have the support of Mr. Jacinto Barrera, secretary of the government. It is also said that they maintain steadfast relations since they served under Gen. Gordillo Escudero in the administration of the northern district of Lower California.

The aforementioned Barrera came here with the group of which Cantu is the head, a group composed of "Huertista" generals, "Villistas," "Felicitas," and of other men who do not profess friendship to the Government generally. Also it is composed of consuls who maintain amicable relations with Cantu. As a matter of fact the consuls unconditionally are under Cantu's subjection.

It may not be out of place to add further that the consul who is supposed to be actually on duty at San Diego spends the greater portion of his time in Mexicali, Lower California, which is 200 miles apart from his post. When I assumed charge of the consulate at Los Angeles I found that the consul who was stationed here, J. M. Carpio, was in Mexicali. These details indicate that the nucleus of our political difficulties is to be found also among this element. Moreover, it is clear that to give way to the policies of our enemies is the same as capitulating; to shut our eye and turn our ear from that which is going on is the same as allowing ourselves to be overrun by fatality.

Now, it would occur, if I should surrender this place, that the enemies of our Government will proceed with their machinations fearless that these would come to your notice. I must say plainly that Col. Esteban Cantu is at the head of one of these groups. He carries on continuous correspondence with our enemies in New York, who represent Felix Diaz. He also steadily corresponds with Zapata, Villa, and especially with Pelaez, which may be gathered by noting that the element which represents these factions maintains with him close relations.

If the reaction is carried on with success, its nucleus will be in Lower California, toward the northern district. The very men sent here to represent the Government, with but rare exceptions, become "Obregonistas," or reactionary, or else they are ardent followers of Cantu. So it appears that the Federal Government loses $2,000,000 annually which it could raise by means of taxation and revenues in the northern district of Lower California and in Sonora. In other words, if the Government saw fit to organize economically these political divisions, and at the same time set upon them such standard of organization as would justify the revolution, these revenues would then be possible. Therefore, by eliminating Cantu we shall have eliminated one-half of the revolutionary propaganda against our Government, as Cantu, to be sure, is especially dangerous because he is far out of the reach of the action of our Government, and in addition he commands such funds and resources as are necessary to win the good will of his followers. He is especially dangerous because he has always been insubordinate to the Government with impunity and because he is protected by the shield of legality (?)

To justify his disloyalty to the Government, he styles himself "Obregonista."

The following are "Obregonistas": Gen. Manuel Perez Trevino; Col. Zertuche, the secretary of the Government; Attorney Jacinto Barrera; Ex-consul Jose Maria Carpio, now in Mexicali; Consul General Ramon P. de Negri, of San Francisco; Vice Consul Seguin, who will assume charge of this consulate; Samuel Vasquez, Mexican consul in San Diego; and the ex-chief of the Mexican secret service, J. M. Arriola, who has recently left for Mexico, accompanied by Jose Cantu.

I have observed that those who came to represent this consulate are persons who look indifferently upon the interests of the revolution and who are moved by selfish interest. Another thing, they seem to lack social and political qualifications. The Government needs its eyes, its brain, its heart right in this place. This mass of people who embrace such dissimilar views is susceptible of a proper discipline under the leadership of men whose attitude and capabilities are beyond question. I mean men such as Attorney Vera Estenal, who is directing the affairs of Cantu in conjunction with other rebels. (Literally this passage is contradictory.)

The reactionary element carries on its propaganda by means of the Times, the Examiner, the Tribune, and El Herald Mexicano, in which appear day after day editorial items attacking our Government. These newspapers have the cooperation of brainy men of high rank, who are in constant mutual communication, and they pay salaries to a list of men from the consuls down to the last employe in the northern district of Lower California.

To express it all in a nutshell, I may say that "Obregonistas" are all those from Sonora who reside in these parts, and I may name in particular Consul General de Negri and Vice Consul Seguin, who is to take charge of this consulate. I regret frankly to add that there seems to be around here no one whom I may properly call your adherent. This the test of time shall prove.

It is not my province, of course, to suggest by what easy means we could bring about a new state of things, eliminating Cantu. However, I may observe that the critical weakness is to be found amid our political enemies. Yet it is important that this man should not continue at play with the Government dictating arbitrary laws in Lower California, appointing justices at pleasure, establishing onerous taxation, so that the thirty commercial establishments owned by Mexicans in Ensenada have been reduced in number to two, which scarcely merit the name of "stores," one of which is owned by a Chinaman and the other by an American.

The works in the mines have been suspended entirely.

For nearly two months there have been no means of communication between Ensenada and Tijuana owing to the poor condition of the roads. These are country places, and if the people in Mexicali are able to subsist at all it is because that country is irrigated by foreign enterprises for the purpose of cultivating cotton, owing to the war. Mexicali has become an exception to the total misery suffered in this district, as two or three syndicates are speculating upon grain, and livestock, and are directing the bank established by Cantu. They also control the wheat market.

A tour through the northern region of Lower California, starting from Mexicali, gives one the view of a collection of rude things, things which are referred to as "The progress of Lower California."

Withal, this would be excusable if there prevailed any degree of loyalty. And yet these enemies are not so dangerous as those who you have in Mexico, because those are attacking you directly while these hide themselves under the veil of hypocrisy.

I understand the secretary of agriculture and the interior is soon to visit here. He must have caused the speedy surrender of my post as consul in Los Angeles, brought about by the underhanded schemes of Cantu's emissaries in Mexico. It seems plain to me that these gentlemen must have feared that in the field of facts I might endeavor to satisfy Secretary Rouzix as to the grave state of affairs which prevails in the Northern District of Lower California, as well as to the political intrigues of Cantu.

May I be promised that you will consider this expose in the light of my tested sincerity and especially of my personal affection and adherence? And may I not assure you that my support will be yours now and always?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

TEODORO FREZIERES.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

(For the information of the committee Frezieres is now one of the strong supporters of Obregon and from the start of the Senora revolt was most active in same.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Antonio Villavicencio, suspected German spy at Laredo, Tex.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 14, 1918.

While in Laredo, Tex., was introduced to Villavicencio at the Hotel Bender by T. Piniero, superintendent of the Mexican Railway System terminating at Nueva Laredo. I met Piniero some time ago through Adam Leckie, of Mexico City and Washington, with whom Piniero is very friendly.

Learned that Villavicencio was alleged to be on friendly terms with two Germans in Nueva Laredo, who are supposed to be the head of the German secret service work in that territory, namely, Capt. Hinsch and Herman Ruckheim. Both of these Germans at Nueva Laredo are said to be very active in the interest of their country.

Villavicencio, I understand, has a night and day pass or permit, which allows him to cross from Laredo into Nueva Laredo, and if he so desires to then return to Laredo. If my information in regard to him having such a pass is correct, then in that event respectfully recommend that he not be allowed to have this privilege.

Villavicencio at one time was chief of police at Mexico City under President Diaz, and when Huerta was President of Mexico Villavicencio was his chief of police at Mexico City.

It seems to be a well-established fact among Mexicans and Americans in Laredo, Eagle Pass, and San Antonio that Villavicencio has been inclined to be pro-German in his statements and sentiments. His reputation is such that I feel sure if there was any German money in sight for Villavicencio he would immediately put his hands on same.

I again met Piniero and Villavicencio in San Antonio on May 6 and 7. Understand they returned to Laredo on the night of May 7. Was told by Andres Garcia, Mexican inspector of consulates, that Villavicencio was working under cover for the Mexican secret service.

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Piedras Negras, Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 13, 1918.

On the morning of May 2, through letters of introduction from the Mexican foreign office, I met Teodoro Frezieres, the Mexican consul at Eagle Pass, Tex., and through him was requested to give myself the honor of going to Piedras Negras, Mexico, that afternoon to meet Gen. Peraldi, the Mexican military commander general of the Piedras Negras district.

At 2 p. m. on May 2 the consul took me to Piedras Negras and I was introduced to Gen. Peraldi, who told me he was the nephew of President Carranza, of Mexico. He likewise asked me if I was not the well-known revolutionary participant in the affairs of the Felicista party. I told him that was my general reputation, but that my connection with the Felicista party had been due entirely to in that way allow me the opportunity to secure all of the inside story of their activities, so that I could along these lines have the correct information which I proposed to use in connection with my newspaper business.

The consul and he seemed to be anxious to secure my cooperation, and of the newspapers supposed to be represented by me, in regard to helping the Carranza Government from a publicity standpoint.

I, of course, damned the Felicista revolutionary party and all others of the same class to Gen. Peraldi, stating they were a bunch of bums and everything of that kind, and apparently toward the end of my interview with Gen. Peraldi secured his confidence to a certain extent, and if such was not the case then in that event he must have been drunk, for he talked very frankly in regard to his plans, hopes, etc., for the Carranza Government. He also said the revolutionary leaders or anybody else opposed to his Government were due for a great surprise if they ever jumped into his territory, for everybody thought he had only 200 men in his military district, when, as a matter of fact, he has over 800 well-armed and equipped soldiers, and likewise was bringing up over 1,000 more soldiers, which he proposed to hide out in the mountains back of Piedras Negras.

Gen. Peraldi endeavored to the best of his ability to convince me of the fact that he was strongly pro-American, and wanted at all times in every way to cooperate with the military and other Government officials on the American side of the river.

As a matter of fact Gen. Peraldi, I understand, has but very little use for America or Americans, but at the same time has accumulated during the last year or so a very hearty respect for the power of this country. This has resulted in him apparently at all times cooperating with Col. Day, the American military commander on the American side of the river. Col. Day always being honorable and in the open, but Gen. Peraldi, on the other hand, while apparently in every way cooperates with Col. Day and other American officials, has under cover and behind their backs been double-crossing them to the best of his ability at every opportunity.

It likewise seems to be a well-known fact in Eagle Pass that Gen. Peraldi has in his command at or around Piedras Negras two Germans, who have had military experience either as officials or noncommissioned officers in the German army. These two Germans are said to have some military rank in Peraldi's forces.

It is also a well-known fact in Eagle Pass that Gen. Peraldi has harbored and assisted some 40 or 50 draft dodgers who have slipped over the river into Piedras Negras and surrounding territory.

Gen. Peraldi, so it is said, readily extends his cooperation and everything of that kind to Col. Day, but Mexican style, and when Col. Day calls for the cooperation it is so long arriving that it becomes a forgotten proposition. This is illustrated by the fact that on April 20 to May 1, 1918, four or five head of horses or mules were stolen from a ranch near Eagle Pass and run over the river into the territory controlled by Gen. Peraldi. It was said in Eagle Pass that as a matter of fact some of Peraldi's own soldiers were the ones who stole the horses or mules. The day after these horses or mules were stolen Col. Day telephoned Gen. Peraldi, telling him he wanted these horses or mules back, and Gen. Peraldi told Col. Day he would be sure and deliver them on the American side of the river the next day at noon. Some four or five days went by and the horses and mules up to the last I heard of the matter, on May 7 or 8, were not returned.

This resulted, so it is alleged, in Lieut. Hamby, of the United States Army Intelligence Bureau at Eagle Pass on May 7 or 8, making two or three trips to Piedras Negras to see Gen. Peraldi regarding these horses and mules.

Would respectfully recommend that it is a bad practice for American Army officers, whether in uniform or not, to cross into Mexico on business of this kind, for in the end it will probably result in some half-drunken Mexican taking a shot at the United States officer or something of that kind, which would cause serious international difficulties.

At my conversation with Col. Day at his headquarters, as mentioned in my report of this date regarding conditions at Eagle Pass, Tex., he told me that Gen. Peraldi had only 200 or 300 men in his military command. This shows that Gen. Peraldi has deliberately misinformed Col. Day regarding the number of men he had.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re general conditions in Eagle Pass, Tex.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 13, 1918.

Col. R. F. Day, in command of the Third United States Infantry, at Eagle Pass and also for considerable distance up and down the Rio Grande River, I understand, has only Infantry in his command, therefore is not in a position to thoroughly guard the river on the American side in his district.

Mr. Beverely, your special agent in Eagle Pass, at 10 p. m. May 2, at Col. Day's headquarters introduced me to him, and I found Col. Day very well posted regarding the Mexican-border situation. He is decidedly enthusiastic at all times in regard to cooperating with your department. He is on very friendly and intimate terms with Mr. Beverely, who has been able to win his confidence, therefore is likewise securing for your department the full cooperation of Col. Day, who also seems to be in charge of the military intelligence work in that district.

Prior to my introduction to Col. Day, Beverely told me it was unfortunate that Col. Day was a great believer in the honor and integrity of the Carranza general on the other side of the river, namely Gen. Peraldi, but that he (Beverely) hoped to be able to convince Col. Day of the fact that Gen. Peraldi, and all of the Carranza government officials in Eagle Pass and Mexico were constantly double-crossing him.

Col. Day has in every way been honorable and fair in all of his transactions with the Carranza officials, and they, as the average Mexican always will do, in turn, at every opportunity, have double-crossed Col. Day.

The river at Eagle Pass and for many miles up and down the river from there can be crossed at almost any point; and according to the statement of my informant there, likewise the Carranza consul at Eagle Pass, this has resulted in large quantities of goods of almost every description being smuggled into Mexico from the United States daily. The same applies to goods being smuggled from Mexico into the United States and to Mexicans and Americans crossing the river at will. Beverely and my informant there also made the statement that large quantities of foodstuffs, which are prohibited by the War Trade Board from being exported into Mexico, are daily smuggled over the river at or around Eagle Pass.

The situation regarding the activities of the smugglers at or around Eagle Pass are not due to the lack of hard work of the customs guards or other Government efforts there, or the military patrol, but seems to be due to the fact that they have not a sufficient number of guards on the river there.

While at Eagle Pass learned it would be a good move to have a national bank examiner examine the national banks at Eagle Pass, and that such an examination would result in your department securing information of value, and the same applies to other United States Government branches regarding considerable quantities of German money and other investments which are being handled by the national banks of Eagle Pass.

The Western Union Telegraph Co. office at Eagle Pass is alleged to be full of leaks, and as soon as any Government messages reach there its contents are generally known to those who may be interested in same.

The head censor, Mr. Bolleter at Eagle Pass, from all I could learn seems to stand very high, and is in every way conscientious and fully performs his duties. It is alleged that Mr. Lanthrop, the assistant censor at Eagle Pass, occasionally becomes intoxicated and then talks too much about the affairs pertaining to his censorship duties.

Apparently at Eagle Pass many of the city, county, and State officials, bankers, and other business men, employees of the telephone, telegraph, railroad, and express offices are said to be lined up one way or the other either with the Mexican Government or the Mexican revolutionary leaders.

T. H. Beverely, special agent in charge of your Eagle Pass office, is exceedingly active, a hard worker, and while there noticed he put in on an average of from 12 to 14 hours per day. He has the entire situation well in hand at Eagle Pass, and with the difficulties he is handicapped with on account of local conditions there, Beverly has, in my opinion, done remarkably well, for with few exceptions there is hardly a man, woman, or child in Eagle Pass, with the exception of the military and Government officials, that at any time can be trusted, or that would give to the United States Government, through Beverly their cooperation. He has made for your department and himself many friends there, who, however, as stated, when it comes to affairs pertaining to the Government can not be trusted.

Beverly is also badly handicapped because he has not the necessary file cases and other equipment of the same kind to safely preserve the records of your department there.

Whatever successes I may have had in regard to securing information sent forward to your department in my several reports regarding the situation at Eagle Pass, and the activities of the Mexican Government and revolutionary leaders there, were secured by me largely through the extreme cooperation extended to me by Beverly and through him by my informant there.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re my negotiations with Mexican Government to become chief of their secret service in the United States.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 25, 1918.

As mentioned in my previous letters and reports, likewise my several conversations with you in person, I have always had the idea as you know of eventually endeavoring to form a connection with the Mexican Government to handle their publicity department, likewise secret-service work in the United States.

When Mr. Adam Leckie passed through New Orleans in January, 1918, I at that time discussed the proposition with him, and he said he would take the matter up direct with President Carranza, also with Gen. C. Aguillar, Mexican minister of foreign affairs.

During April, 1918, this matter came to a head through the consul general of Mexico at New Orleans, who is said to be a relative of President Carranza. Through him received the request to go over the entire proposition with Andres Garcia at El Paso, Tex., inspector general of Mexican consulates, and who is also the chief of the Mexican secret service.

While in El Paso on April 19 and 20, 1918, I went into this matter very fully with Garcia, and at that time received proposition from him which he however stated was entirely at a later date subject to the approval of Gen. Aguillar, minister of foreign affairs for Mexico.

Garcia's proposed proposition was that I would become chief of the Mexican secret service in the United States, receiving a total of from $3,000 to $5,000 per month to operate their secret-service work in the United States, and additional funds whenever same were shown to be necessary.

Furthermore, that with a few exceptions their present secret service force in the United States would be turned over to me and under my orders. I at that time learned they have five men at El Paso, five at San Antonio, two at Del Rio, three at Laredo, three at Eagle Pass, three at Brownsville, four at New Orleans, two at Washington, five in New York, five in Los Angeles, three in San Francisco and others scattered out in smaller places. They are paying these men from $100 to $150 per month, and with the exception of railroad transportation, their men pay their own expenses. I asked Garcia what my work would consist of and he said handling any and everything that would be of interest and value to the Mexican Government.

Another part of his proposition was that the Mexican Government would pay me also a total of $40,000, making bank guarantee for that amount, to be paid to me in installments of $10,000 each, as I succeeded in producing results for them in regard to eliminating revolutionary expeditions from the United States into Mexico.

I told Garcia, and the same also applies to other Carranza officials that I later came in contact with, whose names will be mentioned hereinafter, that it would be utter foolishness for me to consider such a proposition unless conditions between Mexico and the United States changed, I explaining to him I meant by that it would be necessary for Mexico to give to the United States a greater volume of cooperation.

Furthermore, gave them to understand it would be useless for me to accept their proposition unless I could produce results for them which if conditions as far as Mexico is concerned still continued to exist.

In answer to his question as to what I meant then told him it was impossible as I understand it to do anything at all with any of the Mexican revolutionary parties on the American side, unless the United States Government had the proof regarding their activities, which I knew the United States did not have. Furthermore, that I felt sure even if our Government did have such proof nothing could be done with it unless all of the authorities up and down the Mexican border felt the Mexican Government was giving to the United States Government a fair deal regarding the German situation in that country, and the same applied to the activities of the Mexican bandits and Mexican regular troops.

Then told Garcia I could not accept such employment in their Government unless it was with the complete intention on their part to enable me to secure from the Mexican Government cooperation in regard to eliminating German spies and German propaganda work up and down the Mexican border.

Garcia took this proposition very well, and said that in so much as he was inspector general of consulates he therefore had gradually replaced the different consuls on the border who were inclined to be unfriendly to the United States, therefore he felt sure with the different consuls he now had on the border, provided I could render the service I claimed to be able to do, that the Mexican Government through its consulates on the border would be very glad to give the greatest amount of cooperation.

I had the same conversation along these lines with the consul general of Mexico at Eagle Pass, also with Gen. Peraldi, who is said to be a nephew of President Carranza, also the military commander for the district of Piedras Negras, also with the Carranza consul general at New Orleans, who is said to be a relative of Carranza.

All of these parties readily saw my point, and appeared to take it very well, and said if I could secure the right kind of cooperation from the authorities up and down the border on the American side they felt sure the Mexican authorities would also give me complete cooperation in regard to eliminating German spies and propaganda work on the Mexican side of the river. This matter at the present time is still being negotiated as per telegrams shown hereinafter. Of course, you know this is Mexican bunk.

I expect to be in Washington during the week of June 3. So that I may have the opportunity of personally discussing the entire matter with you, likewise blending this proposed plan entirely along the lines your department or the Department of State may deem necessary.

Feel sure that if the plans I have in mind meet with the approval of your department and then can be successfully carried out by me, that it may probably enable me to secure a certain volume of support from the Mexican Government which in the end may be valuable in regard to improving the general situation on the border, likewise to a certain extent result in the elimination of some of the German spies and propaganda work in Mexico.

Believe that it will also result in me being in position whereby I will be able to secure a great deal of advance information regarding different matters in Mexico which in the end will be of value to the United States.

At the present time, and the same applies to the last year and a half, the revolutionary activities of the different Mexican groups in the United States has been a deep thorn in the side of the Mexican Government, and being thoroughly informed regarding the activities of all of the Mexican revolutionists in the United States, and the same applies to the situation as far as the Mexican Government is concerned, am absolutely convinced of the fact that it will be a serious mistake for the United States Government when the activities of the Mexican revolutionists are now so painful to Carranza, for the United States to do anything at all for the Mexican Government in regard to eliminating the different Mexican revolutionary groups in this country, unless the United States in turn receives some consideration and cooperation regarding the German situation in Mexico, and the same applies to the cooperation which the United States should have from Mexico on the border.

Mr. Adam Leckie has been handling to the best of his ability my part of these negotiations with the Mexican minister of foreign affairs, Secretary C. Aguillar, who is a son-in-law of Carranza. This has resulted so far in the Mexican Government making me an offer as is shown by the telegrams mentioned hereinafter of $2,000 per month for my services.

When in San Antonio, Tex., on May 4 to 9, 1918, mentioned to Mr. Breniman, superintendent of your San Antonio division, that the Mexican Government had made me an offer to become chief of their secret service in the United States. likewise made me an offer of a large sum of cash, provided I was able to produce results for them.

My entire plans and intentions regarding the service I hope to be able to render to the United States from this proposed connection with the Mexican Government may result in a failure, due to the fact that every Mexican I have ever known promises anything in the world, but when it comes to the time of delivery their promise is not fulfilled.

However, feel that I at least have more than a fair chance to render at this time a service which if my plans and ideas even in part can be successfully carried out will result in some benefit to our Government.

My proposed proposition and plans with the Mexican Government, of course as you know, are subject entirely to the wishes and orders of your department, and my final acceptance or rejection of the Mexican Government proposition will rest entirely with the wishes or instructions of your department.

The $40,000 is to be paid as stated hereinbefore when I produce the results agreed upon with the Mexican Government, regarding the elimination of the various Mexican revolutionary groups in this country. At the time I enter into the agreement with them regarding the $40,000, I also at that time according to Garcia's proposition am to be paid $10,000 in cash, this payment to be for the plans that I have regarding the different Mexican revolutionary groups now operating in this country.

The following telegrams regarding this proposition passed between Garcia and myself:

(Creese code name for Jones.)

MAY 1, 1918.

ANDRES GARCIA,

Room 58, Hotel Hamilton, Laredo, Tex.

Frezlierez yesterday and to-day said to be at San Carlos ranch. He may and then may not return to-morrow, so the consulate tells me. Shall I see the vice consul. My address here. Room 222, Hotel Eagle.

(Signed) PEDRO.

(Pedro. Mexican code name for Jones.)

NEW ORLEANS, LA.,
May 11, 1918.

ANDRES GARCIA,

Care of Mexican Consulate, Brownville, Tex.

(If necessary please forward.)

Party you mentioned did not go to Mexico. Saw him here to-day. Learned on my arrival here of some vitally important developments pertaining to the business. Expect hear from you definite on or before May 15, so I can therefore be in position to act one way or other. Regards.

(Signed) PEDRO.

(Pedro. Mexican code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresce to Department of Justice re plan to capture Gen. Felipe Musquiz Castillo, Mexican border bandit.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 26, 1918.

As mentioned in my report of May 16, 1918, entitled "Gutierrez Brothers and Felicista revolutionary movement against the Mexican State of Coahuila," I reported at that time, in paragraphs one and two of that report, some of the activities of Felipe Musquiz Castillo.

This party is the leader of a band of Mexican bandits, who have been very actively operating from his headquarters in the Burro Mountains. Last week members of his band, supposed to have been under his active leadership, raided the Piedra Blanca ranch, and at that time captured Nat Malone, who is foreman of that ranch, which is said to be owned by W. E. Weathersbee. Malone was held by these bandits for a $5,000 ransom.

Felipe Musquiz Castillo and his band also at that time raided the San Miguel Ranch, and captured Sam Barksdale, foreman of that ranch, which is said to be owned by Miers & Rose. Barksdale, I understand, was held for a $800 ransom.

The dispatches state that Gen. Peraldi sent 25 mounted troops in pursuit of Felipe Musquiz Castillo, likewise that Gov. Mireles, governor of the Mexican State of Coahuila, likewise promised at that time to put a large body of troops into the field to capture Felipe Musquiz Castillo.

As far as the promises of Gen. Peraldi and Gov. Mireles are concerned, not much confidence can be put in their statements in regard to this matter, for Felipe Musquiz Castillo has been actively operating for nearly a year now, out of his headquarters in the Burro Mountains.

Felipe Musquiz Castillo, as per my previous reports at that time, was held to be responsible for the murder of the several members of the Hillcote family, an English family who lived 50 or 60 miles from the border in Mexico, and who were murdered during the early part of May. The family consisted of Hillcote, his wife, his son, and his sister-in-law. The leader of the bandit band, who murdered the Hillcote family, was Col. Chavez, an old Villa colonel. I understand that Felipe Musquiz Castillo was supposed to have been an intimate friend of the Hillcote family, and did not know that the Hillcote ranch was to be attacked by Chavez, and that when he (Castillo) learned of the murder of the Hillcote family that he and Chavez had a bitter row about it, which resulted in a split between them.

Felipe Musquiz Castillo, I understand, has visited Kerville and San Antonio, Tex., since the Hillcote murder.

I understand that he crosses the river at Langtry, and from there works his way to Kerville, Tex., where his wife resides.

My information is that at least once every month or six weeks he in this way visits his wife at Kerville, Tex.

I also understand that he constantly receives supplies, and, from time to time, ammunition from his friends and supporters at Langtry. His principal friend in Langtry is a Mexican who is a proprietor of a restaurant, whose name I have not, as yet, secured.

Believe, provided you will give me the authority to do so, at Kerville or Langtry, on the next trip of Felipe Musquiz Castillo, through Langtry on his way to Kerville, or at Kerville, I will be able to pick this Mexican up. I am in a position to secure the approximate time that he expects to make his next trip to Langtry or Kerville, and if this party can be picked up it will, in the future, save many other murders and raids up and down the border.

(Creese code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresce to Department of Justice re Col. Tirzo Gonzales, commander of the Mexican garrison at Matamoros, Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 15, 1918.

On August 9 I was introduced to Col. Gonzales at his military headquarters in Matamoros, Mexico, by the Mexican consul general of Brownsville, Tex., Señor Garza.

Previous to my visit to Col. Gonzales's headquarters had learned from the consul that he was supposed to have in his command approximately 250 Mexican soldiers. Learned from Col. Gonzales, however, that he has, as a matter of fact, in his military district, which extends to opposite Rio Grande City, approximately 600 Mexican soldiers.

At the time I visited Col. Gonzales's headquarters he had in the headquarters and on the street outside of same over 50 Mexican soldiers, who were armed with thirty-three carbines and rifles and with a few Mauser rifles and carbines. All of them seemed to be plentifully supplied with ammunition. Also noticed at his military headquarters five boxes of thirty-three cartridges, which had not been opened.

I had extended conversation with Col. Gonzales in regard to conditions on his side of the river, and learned from him, in answer to my questions, that there was, as a matter of fact a large number of Mexican bandits and cattle thieves apparently in his territory who regularly steal cattle on the Mexican side of the river, run it over to the United States side and also steal cattle from the American side of the river and take it over to Mexico.

Col. Gonzales claimed to be pursuing these bandits to the very best of his ability, but said it was very hard to wipe them out. He is a good listener, but a very poor talker, and it was a rather hard matter to dig any information out of him.

Learned from the American Consul Woodward at Matamoros, likewise from other American officials at Brownsville, that Col. Gonzales at times seemed to be willing to cooperate to a certain extent with the American authorities whenever the necessity for same arose. He, however, like all Mexicans, is strictly out for No. 1, and is undoubtedly, as the majority of all other Mexicans are, anti-American.

(Creese code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Creese to Department of Justice re Alfonso Bennevendo, Mexican vice consul at Brownsville, Tex., alleged to be pro-German and suspected of Germany propaganda and spy work.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 19, 1918.

On the morning of August 1, when I called at the Mexican consulate in Brownsville Tex., as per my previous reports, Jose Garza, Mexican consul at Brownsville, introduced me to his Vice Consul Alfonso Bennevendo.

During the time I was in Brownsville had several conversations with Bennevendo. He speaks English, is exceedingly shrewd, well posted, and apparently is open at any time to a proposition in which there is any cash.

I learned from Mexican Consul Jose Garza that Bennevendo is unmarried and is a very liberal spender. Also learned from Consul Garza while we were at lunch at Matamoros, Mexico, and while Garza was feeling pretty good from the wine he had drank, that he did not think very much of Bennevendo, due to the fact Bennevendo was getting nearly as much money as he, the consul, was, likewise had a fine automobile and did but very little work, while on the other hand he, the consul, had all of the responsibility, did nearly all of the work and got but very little more money than the vice consul. Told Garza I found that very strange and asked him why such a condition existed and he said apparently Bennevendo had a great deal of influence with the administration at Mexico City or had strong friends around President Carranza.

The consul also said that Bennevendo was very fond of women and chased around after them a great deal and was likewise a very liberal entertainer. I then said to the consul, Bennevendo must have a considerable amount of money and he said, no, Bennevendo's family had practically no money, and I then said, Bennevendo must be a good poker player and in that way keeps in funds, and the consul said, no, he thought Bennevendo had friends in Mexico City who forwarded him money.

Also at that time learned from the consul that Bennevendo some two or three months ago went to Mexico City and when he returned to Brownsville, he did so via an automobile which he claimed to have purchased in Mexico City. I saw this car in Matamoros, driven by Bennevendo, and it is a large, heavy, and up-to-date model roadster Jordan car, painted red, and I understand with its fittings said to be worth in excess of $2,000.

It is also alleged that Bennevendo has a brother by the name of Alberto Bennevendo, who lives in Matamoros, Mexico, across from Brownsville, who is alleged to be extremely pro-German and is said to have made many vicious remarks in regard to the United States and that he hoped and believed and wanted Germany to win the war. Also that he had been helping and proposed to help Germany in every way he possibly could.

Also understand that Bennevendo, the vice consul at Brownsville, has a sister who is the wife of a German Army officer and who is now in Germany.

Alfonso Bennevendo, the Mexican vice consul at Brownsville, was formerly secretary to Juan Burns, Mexican consul general at New York, and who I now understand is Mexican consul at Hamburg, Germany.

Roberto Bennevendo, a brother of the vice consul, likewise another one of his brothers, I understand, were educated in Germany and the entire Bennevendo family are said to be in every way and at all times straight from the shoulder pro-German.

It is likewise alleged that the father of the Bennevendo family was a German who upon his arrival in Mexico changed his name to Bennevendo and who, shortly after his arrival into Mexico, married a Mexican woman. If this information is correct in that event the Bennevendo brothers are half German.

On my next trip to Brownsville, during the early part of September, I expect to cultivate Bennevendo, with whom I became friendly, and in that way hope to be able to secure sufficient proof of his pro-German sentiments and activities, which will thereby give the State Department opportunity to ask the Government of Mexico to remove him as vice consul at Brownsville.

I also at that time will be able to suggest to the Mexican ambassador at Washington, which I will be able to do on account of my connection with the Mexican Government, that on account of the feeling at Brownsville and in that territory regarding Bennevendo it would be policy to secure a complete cooperation from the various officials in that territory in regard to helping to eliminate and prosecute Mexican revolutionists to remove Bennevendo as his vice consul at Brownsville.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Mexican conditions at and around Bonillas.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 17, 1918.

Understand that Juan Sada and Van Kaufman have a store at Boquillas and have been during the last several months disposing of an unusually large quantity of miscellaneous goods, which according to my informant must evidently go into Mexico, as there is very few people on this side of the border who, I understand, would purchase such large quantities of goods as these two parties have been buying.

Juan Sada, I understand, recently skipped out of the United States and has gone into Mexico on account of being implicated in smuggling goods from the United States into Mexico which were prohibited by the War Trade Bureau.

Would respectfully recommend that Sada and Kaufman be checked up by the proper officials and that they be made to show what has become of the alleged large quantities of goods which they have purchased during the last several months.

Monroe Payne, a negro renegade, has a ranch near Boquillas and is one of the most noted smugglers on that part of the border. Payne is likewise said to be at the head of a bunch of Mexican bandits who are operating in that territory and who have made a constant practice of stealing cattle from the American side of the river and running them over into Mexico.

Benino Menchaca, who is originally from Musquiz, Mexico, but is now at the Boquillas del Carmen mine, in Mexico, which is about 8 miles from the border, is the revolutionary representative in that territory and is in constant communication with Pablo de la Garza, of Eagle Pass.

Menchaca told my informant that their plans were now complete in regard to starting their revolutionary movement, and that during September they expected to be able to throw all of that part of the border into a general uproar, which would cause Carranza a world of trouble and likewise show the United States that the revolutionists were the only ones who should receive the support of the United States to accomplish anything in Mexico.

Menchaca also told my informant that they had a liberal supply of guns, horses, and saddles, but at this moment they were short of ammunition. However, expected at an early date to secure an ample supply of same.

Due to the recent arrest, likewise the searching of many of the Mexicans at Del Rio, Eagle Pass, and other places on the border by the military authorities, this has resulted in the Mexican revolutionists becoming very careful in regard to what they say they are going to do.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Col. Tomos Pinarro, a Mexican at Laredo, Tex.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 17, 1918.

Col. Tomos Pinarro has resided in Laredo, Tex., to my knowledge since December, 1917, at the Hotel Bender in that city. He is an official connected with the Mexican railway system which ends at Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, across the river from Laredo, Tex.

Pinarro has apparently always been exceedingly pro-American in his sentiments and statements, although he is on the most friendly terms with another Mexican who resides at the Bender Hotel at Laredo whose name is Villavicencio, and whose activities have been fully covered in my previous reports.

Villavicencio is supposed to be pro-German, likewise implicated in German propaganda and spy work.

Pinarro recently was a candidate for the Mexican congress or senate from the Mexican State of Durango and at the Mexican election in that state, which was held in July, 1916, Pinarro claims to have been elected. He also made the statement to A. M. Leckie at Laredo, Tex., on August 3, 1918, that he was afraid Carranza would cut him out in the elections, this being due to the fact that he (Pinarro) was a very warm personal friend and supporter of Pablo Gonzales who is to be one of the Mexican presidential candidates in the Mexican elections during September, 1920.

Pinarro then told Leckie, apparently it was the policy of Carranza to eliminate all congressmen and senators who were now being elected and who were in favor of Pablo Gonzales or Gen. Obregon this being due to the fact that Carranza by not having any congressmen or senators at the Capitol of Mexico who were friendly to anybody but himself, to in that way endeavor to work some scheme to succeed himself.

Pinarro then told Leckie that if Carranza endeavored to cut him out, in that event he (Pinarro) would personally start a revolutionary movement against Carranza in the state of Durango.

Pinarro is exceedingly shrewd, talks very freely, and is in every way very active. He is about 5 feet 7 inches in height, dark olive complexion, black hair with but very little gray in it, brown eyes, very neat dresser, and wears a mustache which is extremely noticeable on account of it being turned up so it is typically a German Army officer's mustache. He speaks English and seems to have a good many friends among Americans.

Also understand that Pinarro is endeavoring to assist Eractuasa C. Gonzalez, a money broker who lives at Laredo and who is trying to import $400,000 or $500,000 worth of silver from Mexico into the United States and secure gold in return for same. Pinarro has been very active in regard to assisting Gonzalez along these lines.

While in Laredo during May, 1918, constantly saw Pinarro and Villavicencio at the Bender Hotel together; likewise again saw them at San Antonio, Tex.

On letterhead of the St. Anthony Hotel Mr. Leckie gave me letter of introduction, dated August 6, 1918, to Pinarro as follows:

AUGUST 6, 1918.

MR. TOMOS PINARRO,
Bender Hotel, Laredo, Tex.

MY DEAR PINARRO: This will introduce to you Mr. Charles E. Jones, of New Orleans, who is a thoroughly live wire, interested in the purchase of some cattle in Mexico, and in all probability he will have to arrange for getting accommodations on the railroad for shipping them to the border and I have told him that you would be the ideal man to aid him in this work, and I will appreciate it very much if you will render him such assistance as may be in your power.

The first opportunity you have please be good enough to write me at 817 Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

Very cordially, your friend,

ADAM LECKIE.

When I reach Laredo during the latter part of August I expect to cultivate Pinarro and hope to be able to secure considerable information from him which may be of value.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re American Consul G. C. Woodward at Matamoros, Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 19, 1918.

While in Brownsville, Tex., on July 31, August 1 and 2 I had the opportunity of meeting Consul Woodward several times.

Learned in Brownsville, Tex., and at Matamoros, Mexico, that Consul Woodward for the last several months has received several anonymous letters containing threats, likewise these letters expressed the contempt and hatred of the Mexican people for Consul Woodward, also for America and Americans. I also understand several of these letters stated Consul Woodward would be assassinated.

In checking up this matter feel sure these letters have originated from German or German sympathizers, whose activities Consul Woodward has interfered with. It is also possible these letters may likewise have originated from Mexicans, who Consul Woodward has refused passports to on account of their smuggling activities or on account of being pro-German.

Understand Consul Woodward lives at Matamoros, Mexico, with his family and that due to the cutting of telephone connections between Matamoros and Brownsville, the consul is therefore entirely cut off from any connection with Brownsville provided any emergency may arise at his consulate.

Would respectfully recommend that the Mexican Government be officially advised as to these threats and anonymous letters which Consul Woodward has received through the Mexican mails, and that the Mexican Government be also officially requested to see that Consul Woodward and his family at all times have the necessary protection.

Due to my connection with the Mexican Government as mentioned in my previous reports, I have likewise stated to them that it is good policy on the part of the Mexican Government to see that any party or parties who are implicated in sending threatening letters to Consul Woodward be apprehended and prosecuted. I did not have time when I was in Matamoros to run this matter down, but propose on my next visit to the Brownsville territory during the early part of September, to spend several days in and around Matamoros and in that way may be able to uncover the originators of these letters and if so, believe I will then be able to have the Mexican Government prosecute these parties.

Due to Consul Woodward's activities in fully and at all times protecting the interest of the United States and its citizens at his post, he has therefore created ill-feeling of the majority of the Mexicans in Matamoros and at Brownsville. This also applies, I understand, to many Americans, who for the sake of a few dollars believe Consul Woodward should allow suspected German sympathizers and likewise a large number of Mexicans to come and go into Brownsville from Mexico at their pleasure.

It is likewise alleged by many of the business men, so I was told at Brownsville, that they thought Consul Woodward was apparently too anxious at all times to prohibit the issuing of passports, and that formerly approximately 80,000 Mexicans from Matamoros and surrounding territory visited Brownsville each month prior to the time Consul Woodward had practically put regulations into effect which to a very great extent eliminates Mexicans from entering Brownsville from Matamoros and vicinity.

As far as that complaint is concerned, if every American consul on the border attempted to perform his duties as well as Consul Woodward apparently has done, then in that event there would be less smuggling activities and German propaganda and spy work on the border.

From every available source of information secured by me, am convinced of the fact that Consul Woodward is in every way and at all times more fully complying with his duties, than even the State Department expects of him, and that he is, without doubt, one of the hardest working, most practical and successful American consuls that we have ever had on the border. Believe he has and will at all times to the best of his ability cooperate with every department of the United States Government in his territory.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Mexican Consul Cosme Bengoechea at Presidio, Tex.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 20, 1918.

Understand that the Mexican consul at Presidio, Tex., Cosme Bengoechea, has had installed for some time a private telephone wire running from Presidio, Tex., across the river to Ojinaga, Mexico. It is also alleged that this telephone wire has repeatedly been used to the detriment of the United States.

Respectfully recommend that this matter be checked up and if this telephone wire in reality does exist, that it should be immediately cut.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re E. Schreck, Mexican consul at Port Arthur, Tex., alleged to be of German extraction and suspected of German activities and sentiments.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 24, 1918.

Prior to my visit to Brownsville on August 5, 6, and 7, I had heard from other parts of the border that the Mexican consul at Port Arthur, Tex., was either a German or of German extraction, likewise had a large number of relatives who were said to be exceedingly pro-German living at Matamoros, Mexico.

When I was in Matamoros, Mexico, on August 9, with Jose Garza, Mexican consul at Brownsville, Tex., also with other Mexican officials of Matamoros, we visited the saloon operated by the Schreck family at a Matamoros, and at that time was introduced to one of the Schreck boys, who is typically German in appearance.

According to Consul Garza, the Schreck boys, of which there are several at Matamoros, while of German extraction, nevertheless, so he claimed, have never been proven to be pro-German. As a matter of fact, A. Schreck, a brother of the Mexican consul at Port Arthur, Tex., who is operating a saloon and restaurant at Matamoros, Mexico, across from Brownsville, Tex., is known to be very pro-German, and it is also said his saloon is the headquarters for all of the Germans in and around Matamoros.

Also understood while in Matamoros that American Consul Woodward had taken up the Mexican passports of all of the Schreck family, thereby stopping them from visiting Brownsville, Tex. This has resulted in a great deal of ill feeling being caused at Matamoros, Mexico, from the Schreck family, their friends and associates in that territory. It also may be possible that the Schreck family or their friends may have been implicated in sending, or causing to be sent, the several threatening anonymous letters which Consul Woodward has received, as mentioned in my previous reports.

Understand that the grandfather of the four Schreck boys was a German, and after arrival in Mexico married a Mexican woman.

Due to the short time I was in and around Matamoros did not have sufficient time to make a careful investigation of this matter; however, on my next trip to Matamoros during the early part of September, will carefully check these matters up.

Due to my connection with the Mexican Government, as mentioned in my previous reports, I expect to suggest to the Mexican ambassador at Washington, also to Andres Garcia, inspector general of Mexican consulates, that it is a mistake to have Schreck, their consul at Port Arthur, continue in his office, because of his German extraction, and his family at Matamoros, Mexico, who are alleged to be exceedingly pro-German; therefore, for the reasons mentioned, their consul at Port Arthur, to a very certain extent, is offensive to the people in that part of Texas, which does not enable him to give to Mexico successful representation at Port Arthur. This may be productive of results, and I hope in this way to cause the removal of Schreck, as Mexican consul, from Port Arthur.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Chico Cano, Villista bandit visiting United States Army Camp at Cadelario.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 20, 1918.

Understand that Chico Cano, a noted member of the Villista Mexican revolutionary factor and likewise one of the best known and most successful Mexican bandits, and who is said to have been one of the leaders in the Bright ranch raid sometime ago, is now said to be located in Mexico across the river from Cadelario.

On or about August 5 to 12 Cano crossed the river and visited the United States military camp at Cadelario and talked to the United States military officer in command at that camp.

If my information regarding this visit is correct, the United States Army officer should have detained Cano, for it is well known in that territory that he has been an active participant in several raids out of Mexico against ranches on the American side of the river.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Mexican Government opening up 17 new consulates in South and Central America, likewise Mexican Government making arrangements to change many of their present consuls and other matters regarding their foreign policy.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., September 3, 1918.

On the afternoon of August 30, Mexican consul general at New Orleans, La., Rafael E. Mugquiz, told me that Mr. Cabrera, Mexican minister of finance, would arrive in New Orleans on the evening of September 2 or the morning of September 3 and that he wanted to introduce me at that time to Mr. Cabrera. Hope to be able to secure some information that may be of value from Mr. Cabrera when I meet him. Mr. Cabrera has not yet arrived in New Orleans.

The Mexican consul also told me the Mexican Government was now making arrangements to open up 17 new consulates at various cities in South and Central America and that from now on the foreign policy of Mexico was to be in every way more aggressive. I asked him what he meant by being more aggressive, and he said President Carranza and his cabinet expected by opening up new Mexican consulates in South and Central America, to in this way place Mexico from a diplomatic standpoint on the level with any other country no matter how large it may be and he further said this was only the beginning and that within the next 12 months Mexico would open up a much larger number of new consulates throughout the world.

I of course expressed to him my enthusiasm in regard to such a plan, and then learned from him that Mexico hopes to create for herself a position diplomatically in South and Central America, whereby she in this way intends to try and become a strong factor in South and Central America in regard to creating friendship for herself and her policies throughout that country.

The consul general then told me he was just in receipt of a confidential letter from an official in the Mexican foreign office telling him that there was to be a big shake up in the Mexican consulate force throughout the United States. He also stated that he had received official notification to the effect that he was not to remain as consul general at New Orleans, and expected within a few weeks to leave for Mexico.

I asked the consul general who his successor would be and he stated the present vice consul would, as he understood it, succeed him as consul general at New Orleans.

The consul general also stated that the Mexican policies in regard to their foreign relations with other countries from now on would become more aggressive and in that way they hoped and believed that Mexico very shortly would begin to stand as she ought to, as far as other countries are concerned.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re President Carranza's close personal and political adviser, who is exceedingly pro-German.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., September 4, 1918.

When I met Leckie in San Antonio, Tex., between August 3 and 6, he at that time told me that Carranza's closest personal and political adviser was the present Mexican minister of interior. Leckie also said that Carranza had more confidence in this party, paid more attention to what he said than he did to anybody else.

Leckie then said the Mexican minister of interior was noted as being one of the most active pro-German sympathizers in Mexico and that Leckie likewise knew him to be exceedingly anti-American.

Leckie is of the opinion, as mentioned my previous reports rendered in 1917 and 1918, that the majority of the higher Mexican Army officials are still in the pay of the German ambassador to Mexico and that Germany will continue to feed the majority of the ranking Mexican officials money until Germany no longer needs them. Leckie, however, seems to believe it is a debatable question as to whether or not Carranza himself has been bought by Germany or has taken any German money.

It is well to remember, however, that it would be a miracle of God alone if there was any German money loose in Mexico that Carranza has never in that event taken any of it. If he has not, he in no way, then, is a typical Mexican, for all of them, irrespective of who they are, will take anybody's money and their great national game is trimming an American.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re participation of Mexican Government in smuggling narcotics out of Mexico into United States, and ammunition from the United States into Mexico, via Mexican mail coaches and in Mexican mail bags.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., September 24, 1918.

Through one of my informants on the border who lives at ———, ———, namely, ———, understand from him that the Mexican Government is alleged to actively be participating through its officials at Piedras Negras, Mexico, and with the knowledge, consent, and assistance of the Mexican consul general at Eagle Pass, in smuggling opium and other narcotics out of Mexico and ammunition, pistols, and other firearms out of the United States into Mexico by a system alleged to have been successfully conducted by them for some time, which is as follows:

My informant tells me that the Mexican Government mail coaches which carry the mail from Piedras Negras, Mexico, to Eagle Pass, Tex., and then return from Eagle Pass to Piedras Negras via the international bridge across the Rio Grande River, contain mail pouches which, when they leave Piedras Negras, Mexico, are brought over to the United States. These mail sacks presumably contain mail, and when the mail coaches come across the bridge into Piedras Negras again instead of going direct to the post office and unloading the Mexican mail, that the mail coaches are very frequently seen driving around to various Mexican stores.

My informant also states that after the Mexican mail coach receives the Mexican mails at the post office in Eagle Pass, that instead of going direct to the international bridge the mail coach drives around to various Mexican stores and, presumably, from some of these stores arms and ammunition are secured, which is brought in the mail sacks and carried across to Piedras Negras, Mexico.

The mail coaches, as stated, are never searched by the United States guards on the international bridge and, if such is the case, it is certainly a very simple matter for those involved to smuggle into the United States or out of the United States into Mexico whatever they may so desire to use.

Would respectfully recommend that hereafter the Mexican mail coaches or any other method of transportation used by Mexicans coming into the United States be carefully searched; likewise, that when such outfits cross into Mexico at Eagle Pass that they also be searched.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Continuation confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re presidential candidates in the next Mexican presidential elections and the serious Mexican situation which will arise from same at that time.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 14, 1918.

My report of July 16, 1918, under the heading mentioned above fully covers the situation at that time, also to a very great extent at the present time regarding the serious difficulties which are rapidly approaching a climax, which is being caused by jealousy between the various candidates for the Presidency of Mexico in the next Mexican presidential elections, which I understood are to be held in Mexico during July, 1920.

As stated in my report of July 16, 1918, I fully covered at that time, on pages 2, 3, and 4 the various combinations that Gen. D. Aldaro Obregon has arranged in regard to securing support for himself in the next Mexican presidential elections.

When I was in El Paso, Tex., on October 4 and 5, also on October 24, 1918, I had several extended conversations with Andres Garcia, inspector general of Mexican consulates and consul general of Mexico at El Paso. Garcia is strictly an Obregon man, and likewise said that the majority of the present Carranza officials were either avowed supporters of Obregon or favored him.

Garcia further stated that fully 75 per cent of the present Mexican Army, and practically all of the veterans who had served under Obregon, many of whom were now scattered from one end of Mexico to the other as civilians, were strictly Obregon men and would rise at his call. Garcia also said that Gen. Obregon had and would control practically all of the Yaqui Indians.

Garcia, in answer to my questions regarding Pablo Gonzales, said that he was an utter impossibility as a presidential candidate and could never be elected President of Mexico. This also applies to Gen. Alvarado, ex-governor of Yucatan.

Garcia was inclined to be rather guarded in his statements about the alleged break, or difference of opinion, which is said to have occurred between President Carranza and Obregon, likewise regarding the fact that President Carranza had planned and was intending to do all he could, officially and otherwise, to place some other man in as President of Mexico. I finally wormed out of Garcia the admission that there had been some difference of opinion between Carranza and Obregon, and that Obregon intended to be the winning candidate in the next Mexican presidential elections, irrespective of whether he had the support and friendship of Carranza.

Also learned from Garcia at that time, which I later confirmed from other sources, that Gen. Obregon has and is perfecting his political and military machine, whereby he proposes to make a strong effort to become President of Mexico either via being elected or by the revolutionary route.

Obregon, at the present time, I understand, is making arrangements to establish Obregon juntas in Los Angeles, El Paso, San Antonio, and at practically all other points containing a large Mexican population along the border. His plans, I also understand, will result in him establishing at San Antonio or El Paso, Tex., a weekly newspaper, which will be published in his interests.

When I was in El Paso, Tex., on October 4 and 5, 1918, at that time Andres Garcia gave me a letter of introduction to Gen. Obregon, who was then at Nogales, Ariz., or across in Mexico from that town. I expected to see Gen. Obregon on my return from California, but was unable to do so on account of the fact that I was called to New York due to the serious sickness of my brother.

I am convinced of the fact from the constant and careful observations I have had the opportunity to make during the last year that Obregon will win in the next Mexican presidential elections, and if he is counted out, or the election is stolen from him, he will immediately start the most thoroughly organized and strongest revolutionary movement that Mexico has yet seen.

Feel sure of the fact that one way or the other Obregon, irrespective of any difficulties that may be placed in his way, will succeed Carranza. Furthermore, if Carranza resigns, or is forced out, or is assassinated before the next Mexican elections, Obregon will immediately start his fight to succeed him. Therefore if I can work my way in with Obregon and by chance secure the opportunity to privately or publicly represent his interest or campaign in the United States, I will in that way be able to probably render service that no one else can.

As mentioned in my report of July 16, 1918, Obregon had prior to his visit to the United States last year, been inclined to be exceedingly pro-German in his sentiments and statements. However, after he returned to Mexico, it is said of him, that his sentiments were completely changed, due to the fact that he fully realized it might be necessary for him, when he becomes a presidential candidate, to have the friendship of the United States.

As far as Obregon personally is concerned, he, as all other Mexicans, at heart is absolutely anti-American and but very little belief as to his responsibility or friendship for the United States could be placed in him, than in any other Mexican. However, if I can succeed in winning his confidence and direct, to a certain extent, his activities throughout the United States, I may be able to shape his ideas and opinions to a certain degree that might be friendly and favorable to the United States. If I could succeed in doing this, the service I could thereby render, would be well worth while.

My report of September 26, 1918, under the heading of "Confidential report re break alleged to have occurred between Carranza and Gen. Obregon," will give you considerable information regarding the alleged difficulties which have arisen between Carranza and Obregon.

I will undoubtedly hear from Garcia in answer to my letter mentioned hereinbefore, and if he accepts the suggestion made by me in regard to personally seeing Gen. Obregon, in that event, unless otherwise so instructed by you, will proceed to El Paso and there endeavor to have Garcia accompany me to Nogales to personally discuss the matters outlined in my letter to Garcia of November 13 with Gen. Obregon.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

(For the information of the committee: This report, which was one of several, shows that as far back as 1918 the United States was warned in my reports of the present Mexican revolution.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re participation of Col. Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California in Mexican revolution activities.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Sept. 4, 1918.

As mentioned in my previous reports, F. R. Betancourt, Mexican revolutionary leader, according to positive information which I have secured, and likewise forwarded in previous reports to your Department, has been on very close and intimate terms and in constant correspondence with Col. Estaban Cantu, governor of Lower California.

Betancourt, George Warden, and Ignacia Pelaez have also several times told Godchaux that Governor Cantu had given them financial assistance.

During April and May, 1918, while Godchaux and myself were in San Antonio, I reported at that time through information secured by Godchaux that Ignacia Pelaez, who is the brother and active agent in the United States for Gen. Manuel Pelaez, George Warden, Betancourt, Garcia Naranjo, and other prominent leaders of the Mexican revolutionary group in the United States were on friendly and intimate terms and in constant correspondence with Jose Cantu, of Mexico City, who is a brother of Estaban Cantu, governor of Lower California.

Betancourt and Ignacia Pelaez told Godchaux that Governor Cantu had agreed to help the revolutionary leaders associated with Betancourt and particularly those Mexican revolutionary leaders in Sonora.

At my suggestion Godchaux asked Betancourt and Pelaez what was the reason of Cantu giving his cooperation to himself (Betancourt) and the other Mexican revolutionary leaders, likewise in regard to assisting the Mexican revolutionary movement in the State of Sonora. Betancourt's answer was that in this way Carranza who really wanted and hoped to be able to do so never could operate, if he decided to do so, an expedition out of the Mexican State of Sonora against Governor Cantu of Lower California.

Betancourt also stated that Cantu for the last year and a half had been making practice of financially backing the different Sonora revolutionary parties for the reasons mentioned.

From correspondence that Godchaux has seen to and from Jose Cantu, and Governor Estaban Cantu addressed to Betancourt I feel sure of the fact, as mentioned in my previous reports that the Mexican revolutionists have and are still receiving assistance and cooperation from Governor Cantu.

Continuation confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice September 4, 1918. Re participation Col. Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California, with various Mexican revolutionary leaders, likewise plans of the revolutionists to secure complete cooperation of Gov. Cantu.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., September 27, 1918.

As mentioned in my previous reports Col. Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California, for the last 8 or 12 months has been actively cooperating with all of the various Mexican revolutionary leaders. For full details regarding this matter refer you to my report of August 28, 1918, entitled:

"Trip of F. R. Betancourt, Mexican revolutionary leader, of New Orleans, to Mexicala, Mexico, where he is to arrange plans with Gov. Estaban Cantu to smuggle arms and ammunition out of the United States to Mexican revolutionists in Sonora. Likewise pertaining to alleged participation and activities of Gov. Cantu with Mexican revolutionists."

During November, December, 1916, and also during the early part of January, 1917, Miguel Tarriba, care of F. C. Brauet Co., Welsh Building, 244 California Street, San Francisco, Calif., had several conferences with Col. Estaban Cantu and his representatives in regard to securing the support of Cantu for the Felicista revolutionary movement in the Mexican State of Sonora.

When Alfonso Hoyola, of 35 Kennedy Street, Tucson, Ariz., got into trouble at New Orleans during May, 1917, at that time helped him out and incidentally secured from him many important papers and documents pertaining to the revolutionary movement in the Mexican State of Lower California.

This also applies to Ignacio Pesquera, of 629 North Seventh Avenue, Tucson, Ariz., who was also in trouble at New Orleans. From Pesquera and Noyola I secured many papers, likewise a great of information, all of which was forwarded at that time in reports to your department.

Learned from them at that time that Gov. Cantu, of Lower California, acting through Miguel Tarriba, care of F. G. Brauet Co., Welsh Building, 244 California Street, San Francisco, Calif., had cooperated with the revolutionary party in Sonora.

Pesquiera's and Noyola's statements regarding Cantu's participation in their revolutionary movement in Sonora was that Cantu wanted to control the State of Sonora, so that in this way Carranza would never have the opportunity to send troops from the Sonora coast over the Gulf of California against him (Cantu) in Lower California.

The revolutionary leaders in Sonora at that time dissipated all of the money raised for their movement. Also several of their leaders about that time were arrested and prosecuted in the United States courts.

During March, 1917, Miguel Tarriba wrote a 12-page letter to Gen. Felix Diaz reviewing the entire revolutionary movement and other matters pertaining to same. This letter was taken by Noyola and Pesquiera to Guatemala to be forwarded by them from there to Gen. Felix Diaz. They, however, failed to get it through to Gen. Diaz, and when they returned to New Orleans the letter fell into my possession. That part of his letter to Gen. Diaz referring to Cantu is as follows:

* * * * *

"CONFERENCIA CANTU:

"Vd. recordars, Senor, Terriba sometio a su consideracion un proyecto para apoderarse en su nombre de la Baja California; todo marchaba bien y sin autorizacion no acuerdo de Don Miguel para decirselo a Vd. de su pecullo personal estuvo expensando los gastos hast llegar las cosas a su madurez, y es equi donde no teniendo el ya elementos propios tuvo que atenerse a las ofertas de Nueva York; estas desgraciadamente no fueron complidas y sobrevino la delacion de estos asuntos por una de los conjurados, y naturalmente la parision de la mayoria d los Jefes y oficiales que mandaban las fuerzas de Cantu.

"Bajo este estado de animo de este Sr. para nosotros no es posible contar con su ayuda de una manera francs; pero su instinto natural de conservacion le indica la conveniencia de pro tegar la proteger la rebellion en Sonora. Ocultan-dole por necesidad la amistad que me liga al Sr. Tarriba y garantia dondole expresa de no atentar contra la estabilidad de su gobierno, obtuve de el una conferacia en virtud de la cual estoy segurode que nos prestara su ayuda, a facilitandonos aramento, municiones y dinero y permitiendole que nos organicemos den tro de su territorio, sin astentacione si ni imprudencias que le compromentan; pero hay que tartar con el con plena autorizacion de Vd. pues naturalmente pretende la consolidacion futura de sus actos, si nosotros llegamos a un exito, y en cao contrario no verse arroydao por nuestros fracasos Este Vd. seguro de que si llegamos a un entendimiento en este punto, la conquista de Sonora sera un hecho, pues la Baja California es un punto verdaderamente estrategico donde puede organizarse un verdadero ejercito, y el tiene elementos en abundancia para ayudarnos, Para llegar al fin de que me permito hablarle, seria indispensable que Vd. me acreditara ante el como su enviado para obtener de us parte su ayuda. Esta autorizacion deberia ser de caracter politico y en este orden lo suficientemente amplia para que el, sin retimencias, formulara sus proposiciones, las cuales para su aceptacion deberian estar sujetas a la aprobacion de Vd. El manejo de los fondos que en tal virtud proporcionara quedaria bajo el controll de los hombres de capital que al acuerdo con nosotros en Sonora estan obrando y obran en el futuro, lamentando no poder indicar a Vd. a Don Miguel en este caso por el antecedente y expresado; pero podia Vd. expedir un nombramiento a tal efecto en favor del Ignacio Pesqueira a quien su patrimonla personal pone fuera de sospechas Es conveniente en mi homilde concepto y salvo sumejor parecer, que el nombramiento que Vd. haga enmi favor y en el cual me autorice para tratar las bases politicas hajo hajo las cuales el Sr. Cantu preste su apovo al felicismo, se haga notar que enmanera alguna tales arreglos podran ser del dominio del ningun comitte directivo o politico signidicado que pudiera usar de este secreto. Digo a Vd. esto proque asi me lo indico muy claramente."

* * * * *

NOTE.—Copy of the entire letter of Tarriba to Gen. Diaz was forwarded by me at that time in my reports to your department.

Likewise, as mentioned in my previous reports, Los Angeles, Calif., apparently is now rapidly becoming the headquarters of all of the various promiment leaders of each of the Mexican revolutionary parties in the United States and Mexico.

Betancourt is already on his way to Los Angeles, to make his home, so he claims, in that city; Narno Dorbecker told Godchaux that he expected to be in Los Angeles, Calif., within the next month or six weeks; Gen. S. R. Gral Don Francisco de P. Alvarez, has also stated he will be in Los Angeles within the next 60 days, and thereafter will make Los Angeles his headquarters.

Betancourt also told Godchaux that from now on Gov. Estaban Cantu, who has for the last year been carefully arranging his plans along these lines, will in the future, in a quiet and confidential manner, be the real directing head of the entire revolutionary movement throughout Mexico and the United States.

A great many of the strong, well-known, active, and popular leaders and supporters of the Felicista revolutionary movement in Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, and California during the last several months have been seduced away from the Felicista party by Betancourt, Gen. Alvarez, and other active supporters of Gov. Cantu.

Betancourt also told Godchaux that Gen. Juan Almazan, the Mexican revolutionary leader in the State of Tamaulipas, with all of his officers, soldiers, supporters, and friends throughout that part of Mexico, are pledged to cooperate with Gen. Pelaez and Cantu.

This also applies to the forces of Gen. J. Andreu Almazan, Gen. Caballero, Gen. Zaragosa, and all other Mexican revolutionary leaders in Tamaulipas, Coahuila, and other Mexican border States, all of whom have received assistance during the last year from Gen. Manuel Pelaez.

Betancourt also claims that many of the strong Villista revolutionary leaders have likewise pledged their support to the Cantu-Pelaez combination.

Betancourt also claims that the Gutierrez brothers' revolutionary combination as mentioned in my confidential report of August 12, 1918, entitled "The Gutierrez brothers and Felicista revolutionary combination against the Mexican State of Coahuila," have likewise pledged the support of all members of their party to the Cantu-Pelaez movement.

Continuation confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice of September 4, 1918, re participation of Col. Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California, in Mexican revolutionary activities, and his connection with Pablo Dato, sr., alien enemy and real power and brains behind Cantu.

NEW ORLEAN, LA., October 23, 1918.

As mentioned in my previous reports, Godchaux, through F. R. Betancourt and E. Calzado, had made arrangements with these parties to meet Gov. Cantu, and negotiate with him for the purchase of military arms and ammunition.

Godchaux and Calzado, on October 18, arrived at Mexicali, Mex., from Los Angeles, Calif. Upon their arrival at 10.30 a. m., Godchaux was introduced to Jacinto Barrera, secretary of state for Lower California, whose office is an anteroom of Gov. Cantu, and a few moments later Calzado and Godchaux were taken into Gov. Cantu's office, where they saw Ramon Guerrero, private secretary of Gov. Cantu, who Godchaux had previously met on his first visit to Mexicali, with Betancourt. Godchaux was then introduced to Gov. Cantu by Barrera.

After a conference of about two hours Gov. Cantu, who was very much interested during that time in the arms and ammunition proposition told Godchaux that he could use 10,000,000 7-mm. cartridges, also 1,500 rifles or carbines, and from 15 to 25 automatic rapid-fire guns. Cantu during this conversation told Godchaux that he intended to head the largest Mexican revolutionary movement Mexico ever had, and that he had gradually been perfecting his plans for the last year along these lines, and through his combination with Manuel Pelaez in the south, Villa in the center of Mexico, and with a complete perfected organization along the border, when he, Cantu, started his movement, that he would sweep everything from one end of the border to the other and then on into Mexico.

Cantu gave Godchaux to understand that he had positive assurances through his intimate friends and associates, who were powerful American business men, that the United States State Department would favor him; likewise the same parties had told him the United States secret service people would close their eyes and not interfere with the revolutionary activities of his associates and himself. In a very proud manner he at that moment, as an illustration of his power with the United States officials, said, "Why they even have allowed me many times to secure arms and ammunition out of the United States."

Godchaux then asked how he expected to get such a large quantity of arms and ammunition into Mexico, and Cantu said, "I want this equipment in carload lots; and inasmuch as I know the United States guards at Calexico and they will do anything in the world for me, and also I am not going to be interfered with by the United States authorities, therefore those carload lots of equipment could be shipped to me through Calexico into my territory in Mexico, chaux that he could use 10,000,000 7-mm. cartridges, also 1,500 rifles or carbines, and from 15 to 25 automatic rapid-fire guns. Cantu during this conversation told Godchaux that he intended to head the largest Mexican towns across from the American towns mentioned our revolutionary leaders in those localities will at the same time be prepared to seize these towns."

Godchaux spent considerable of his time while in Calexico and Mexicali with Barrera, Guerrero, and one of Dato's boys, also had lunch and dinner with these parties.

On the afternoon of October 18, Godchaux, Calzado, Guerrero, and another Mexican by the name of Antonio Elosue went riding in a seven-passenger Packard auto, driven by the youngest son of Pablo Dato. They drove out to a cotton plantation owned by the Dato family about 5 miles from Mexicali, in Mexico. This cotton plantation follows a little canal or water ditch close to the international dividing line between California and Mexico. This ditch or canal was shown to Godchaux as they passed where Calzado said he and other friends of Cantu had several times during the last year sent over the border quantities of ammunition for Cantu.

Calzado, while talking to Godchaux on the train en route to Calexico, also when returning to Los Angeles, said that Cantu had the United States officials hypnotized into believing that Cantu was willing to do everything he possibly could to cooperate with the United States. Godchaux asked him how Cantu had worked it, and Calzado said the United States believes that all they have to do is to ask Cantu for any slacker or deserter or German spy in his territory and that whatever party the United States wanted or asked Cantu for would then immediately be sent up to the American border and turned over to the United States.

Calzado then boastfully and in a laughing manner further said, "Yes, Cantu is a very wise one, and the only ones he ever kicked out of Lower California back into the United States that the authorities on this side of the river wanted were a few bums that could never be of any use to Cantu."

While Godchaux was in Mexicali, Mexico, and Calexico, also while on the train from Calexico to Los Angeles, Calif., he learned from Calzado and Jacinto Barrera, secretary of state for Lower California, and from Ramon Guerrero, private secretary of Cantu, likewise from information obtained from Betancourt and Martin de Leon, which shows from all of these available sources of information that all of them, likewise Cantu's other friends and followers consider him to be personally a nice fellow, but they admit or state that he has been made entirely by his father-in-law, Pablo Dato, sr., likewise that Pablo Dato, sr., has been and always will be the brains and executive leader behind Cantu, furthermore, that every move irrespective of its importance or not that Cantu makes, same is fully discussed, agreed upon, or planned by Pablo Dato, sr., and that if Dato does not approve such plan or movement then in that event Cantu drops same. It is also the consensus of opinion among the parties mentioned hereinbefore that to get anything out of Cantu it is first necessary to win over Dato to their side.

Calzado, Betancourt, and De Leon, due to leading questions suggested by me, and skillfully put to these parties by Godchaux, regarding Dato, secured information from these parties that Dato and all of his family have always been exceedingly pro-German, likewise have been the actual heads of all real German propaganda and spy work that has been conducted on that part of the border before and since the United States entered the war.

Such being the case as will be shown hereinafter, furthermore on account of the fact that Cantu and all of his officials and supporters have always been fully aware of the fact that Dato is a German alien enemy, and very active in his efforts for Germany, in that territory, therefore no other conclusion can be drawn but that all of the activities of Dato and his many German associates in Gov. Cantu's territory (Lower California), has been at all times done with the knowledge, consent, approval, and undoubtedly with the assistance of Cantu and his associates.

Pablo Dato, sr., is known to be a German alien enemy, and if necessary can furnish your department positive proof to that effect. He was born in Grossner, Germany, June 11, 1840. On December 18, 1865, he was appointed acting German consul in Paris, France. On May 30, 1868, he was notified that his Majesty the Prussian King, had conferred on him the Imperial Order of the Crown of the fourth class. On August 9, 1897, Dato registered with the German consul at Guaymas, Mexico, and again on August 25, 1897, Dato registered as a German subject with the German consul at Acapulco, Mexico; Dato also in China, was a German consul general for Germany. Dato before the United States entered the war and also since, has been the head of the German information bureau in Lower California, and gave financial assistance to many German agents in Mexico, who were engaged in securing and sending information from the United States to the German ambassador at Mexico City.

It is also a known fact that Pablo Dato for several years has claimed to be a naturalized American citizen. As a matter of fact he never has become an American citizen. Godchaux also learned while in Mexicali and Calexico, that Dato is in direct and constant communication with German consuls at Guaymas, and other Mexican towns, and with the German ambassador at Mexico City.

In 1863 Pablo Dato served for over a year as a volunteer in the German Army. I understand that Pablo Dato married a Mexican woman and that they have six children, Fred, William, Gustave, Anna, Paul, and Adolph Dato.

Also understand that each of his sons have always been pro-German, and were likewise active with their father in his German activities.

Pablo Dato has been and is on very intimate terms with Adolph Garcia, who is said to be a German agent at Mexicali. Garcia is known to have received telegrams and letters from the German consul at Guaymas in regard to remittances of money to him from the German consul at that place and has likewise had in his possession at Mexicali drafts and checks in his favor from Rademacher, the German consul at Guaymas, who is a member of the firm of Rademacher-Muller & Co. at Guaymas.

Pablo Dato, sr., as mentioned hereinbefore, has always been the absolute directing power behind Gov. Cantu, and has controlled Cantu in all of his activities in the past, as he will continue to do in the future. Closely cooperating with Pablo Dato, sr., Manuel L. Lugan, Cantu's legal adviser and his personal intimate friend, also his secretary of state for Lower California. Jacinto Barrera.

It will be well for the United States when considering the advisability of centralizing their hopes on Cantu as a probable solution of the Mexican question, or even as a friendly hitching post in time of trouble with Mexico, in the future to seriously consider before so doing the fact that his father-in-law, Pablo Dato, sr., and many other Germans who are closely affiliated with Dato are the ones who absolutely control Cantu, now and for the future, and such being the case Germans, as they have been and always will be, therefore the United States as it looks to me will have but very little chance for an even break as far as the Dato-Cantu combination is concerned regarding future Mexican affairs in which the United States may be expecting to use the friendly interest of Cantu.

All of my reports to your department has contained information just as I find it whether for or against friends or enemies, likewise whether favorable or unfavorable regarding myself. Several years ago I secured the original leads, worked them out, and broke up the transaction which showed at that time, that ——— had secretly agreed to accept employment as attorney for the Felicista Mexican revolutionary party at Washington, and that the principal part of his work to be done for them was to endeavor to seduce the opinions of Mr. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, Cone Johnson, of the State Department, and other United States officials as to the benefits the United States would receive by recognizing or giving their support to the Felicista Party.

I later secured and sent forward to your department photographic copies of letters passing between Gen. Felix Diaz and his wife and others closely allied with him, which showed his utter contempt and hatred for the United States, and his intention if war occurred between the United States and Mexico to fight side by side with Carranza against this country, irrespective of the fact that even at that moment Pedro del Villar, his representative in the United States, was assuring the State Department of the great friendship of Felix Diaz, and that he would also support the United States if our Army went into Mexico.

I likewise secured and sent forward to your department several hundred original letters passing between Carranza and many of his prominent officials, to and from each of the revolutionary leaders in all of the Central American countries with the exception of Costa Rica, which showed, as I had previously reported over a year, that Carranza, as I now know it to be so, was financing with German money various revolutionary movements in Central America. These original letters and reports covering a period of over two years to a certain extent prevented Germany through Carranza from obtaining a strong foothold in Central America, likewise broke up practically all of these revolutionary movements.

I have likewise in times past secured and sent forward to your department original and photographic copies of many important letters, contracts, documents, etc., which showed the affiliations and connections and plans of many prominent Americans, financiers, and others with Mexican and Central American revolutionary affairs.

I fully realize that I am making some very strong statements regarding these matters, particularly so as I believe the State Department may be inclined to have some confidence in Cantu, due to certain representations that have been made to them in regard to the ability and friendliness of Cantu to the United States.

However, I am willing to risk the reputation I believe I have made during the last several years with your department regarding the accuracy of my reports pertaining to Mexican and Central American affairs, and which Chief Bielaski during September, 1918, personally told me that the State Department considered my reports regarding Mexican and Central American affairs the best they received. Many of such reports at the time they were rendered appeared to be pipe dreams, which later were substantiated by documentary evidence or by information secured by other parties for your department.

I mention the foregoing facts to qualify my statement to the effect that sooner or later your department will secure from other available sources confirmation of the information given herein and my statements to the effect that the Americans who are alleged to be backing Cantu are also alleged, simply for the profits they can make, have and are endeavoring to secure the assistance of the United States for Cantu and his other revolutionary associates.

If this is ever accomplished then in that event the United States will have to face the fact that if Cantu is ever President or dictator of Mexico that his every move will be made only on the advice or by the suggestion of his father-in-law, Pablo Dato, sr., a proven German alien enemy, and one who will always be bitter in his thoughts, plans, and actions toward the United States.

INFORMATION REGARDING PABLO DATO, GERMANY'S CONFIDENTIAL AGENT IN LOWER CALIFORNIA, AND ALONG THE ARIZONA, NEW MEXICO, AND CALIFORNIAN BORDER.

Paul Dato, alias Pablo Dato, as shown in the file regarding this party, was born on June 11, 1840, at Grossen on der Oder, Prussia, and served as a volunteer in the German Army. For over a year he was in the German diplomatic service in China, and for about a year and a half, as shown in detail herein-after, served as acting consul general for Germany at Paris, France. He arrived in the United States via steamship Percire from Germany at the port of New York on the 22d day of August, 1869.

He is the father-in-law of Gov. Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California.

During August of 1874 he left San Francisco, Calif., for Guaymas, Mexico, and in a few months thereafter went to Muleje, Lower California, where he was supposed to have been the secretary of the Lower California Lead & Silver Mining Co. He remained there until the latter part of February, 1875, and in March, 1875, returned to San Francisco, and he remained there for two months and then returned to Guaymas, Muleje, Mexico, and remained in that part of Mexico until 1883.

Shortly after his return in Mexico he married a Mexican woman in Providencia in 1881, whose name was Donaciana, and who was a native of Sonora. On July 13, 1882, his oldest son, Fred, was born at Sonora, Mexico.

During 1883 he returned to San Francisco and remained about 10 days, and then returned to his home in Lower California. On March 17, 1886, his second son, William, was born at San Jose de Guaymas. In 1888 Gustave, his third son, was born at Guaymas, and on May 6, 1891, his daughter, Anna, was also born at Guaymas. On June 1 Paul Dato, jr., was born in Sonora, Mexico, and on February 24, 1897, his fifth son, Adolph Dato, was born in Sonora, Mexico. Therefore all of his children were born in Mexico.

For a good many years in the past, Pablo Dato repeatedly claimed that he was a naturalized American citizen, and that all of his children were Americans and had been born in the United States. This is a deliberate falsehood. His record also shows since 1906 and up to including 1918 that he was a regular voter in all of the city, county, State or national elections at Calexico, Calif., where he has maintained his home since 1906. Each time he voted as an American, and when he did so knew that he was not a citizen of the United States.

When Germany declared war on the Allies Pablo Dato appeared before Perry Windener, the German consul at Los Angeles, Calif., and registered as a German subject.

At the start of the European war, inasmuch as Pablo Dato represented himself as an American citizen he therefore was able to come and go with his sons across the border, this being due to the fact that he had secured as an American citizen an immigration card permit to come and go over the border.

Several years ago his daughter, Anna, or Anita, married Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California. Cantu is decidedly a weak character, and is extremely susceptible to flattery or suggestions made by any one in whom he has even the slightest amount of confidence. Therefore Pablo Dato and his sons, and others who were strictly pro-German that Pablo Dato drew around him, have always been, and still are, the directing power behind Cantu.

At the outbreak of the European War, Pablo Dato immediately took charge of all of the spy and propaganda work for Germany in Lower California and in the United States along that part of the border of Arizona, New Mexico, and Lower California, and as directing head of all of the German spy and propaganda systems in that section, so it is said of him, secured greater results for Germany in every way than any other German was able to secure along the border.

His son-in-law, Gov. Cantu, of Lower California, from 1916 up to and including October, 1919, carefully followed out all instructions of his father-in-law, Pablo Dato, in regard to helping Germany's cause in Lower California. During this time Cantu did everything in his power to convince United States officials in that part of the country and likewise of Washington, that he, Cantu, was the true and firm friend of the United States.

And in the end, so it is alleged, Cantu was able to convince the State Department that he was really friendly with the United States. This enabled Cantu on account of his presumed friendship for the United States to secure many favors and practically operate along that part of the border with a free hand. Therefore on account of the belief that the United States had in him, Cantu and his father-in-law, Pablo Dato, with his German spy and propaganda system was able to operate same up to October, 1918, almost with a free hand, and which resulted in him after the United States entered the war in rendering service to Germany along these lines that from a standpoint of its value to Germany could never be estimated.

During that time Pablo Dato resided at Calexico, Calif., which is across the border from Mexicali, Lower California. He was during this time on close and intimate terms with the officials of the Calexico national bank which was alleged to be a pro-German institution. Dato was likewise a heavy depositor in that bank, and in their safety deposit vaults held three safety deposit boxes in his name. Among the intimate friends at Calexico connected with this bank was F. Cloake, as president, and William Guttmann, as cashier. All of his sons likewise when on the Mexican side of the border were extremely pro-German and likewise participated in all of the German spy and propaganda plans of their father.

During 1917 Fred Dato was convicted in the United States courts on a charge of conspiracy in an attempt to take arms and ammunition to Mexico. For this offense he was sentenced to serve 10 months imprisonment and to pay a fine of $10,000. The United States Government, however, are alleged to have allowed his case to drag along due to the fact that they did not want to offend his brother-in-law, Gov. Estaban Cantu.

During 1917 Pablo Dato and all of his sons constantly carried out of Santiago and Calexico into Mexico, many thousands of dollars worth of farm machinery and food products, likewise handled so it is said several hundreds of dollars of gold which they carried into Mexico. This resulted in a charge being made in the United States courts against Fred Dato in 1917 on a charge of violation of the espionage laws for illegally taking into Mexico without the proper licenses, certain farm machinery and food products from the United States. This charge was also held up so it is alleged, by orders from Washington, due to the fact that it might offend his brother-in-law, Gov. Estaban Cantu, if the case was pushed.

After the United States authorities woke up to exactly what the Dato family were and realized that Gov. Cantu's friendship for the United States meant nothing, it then resulted in the United States authorities during October or November, 1918, forcing Fred Dato to end his cases in the courts, and which resulted in Fred Dato paying a fine of $5,000.

The three safety deposit boxes of Pablo Dato, at Calexico National Bank were numbers 54, 87, 99. When these were opened by United States authorities they contained positive proof regarding Pablo Dato, sr.'s German citizenship, also regarding his German spy and propaganda system along the border.

Pablo Dato during the war repeatedly signed checks or indorsed notes for Mexicans who were known German operatives on the Mexican side of the border.

Pablo Dato maintained at Calexico an underground clearing house which resulted during 1916, 1917, and 1918 in many Germans being able to leave the United States by Calexico, San Diego, Calif., or at other various border points in California, Arizona, and New Mexico.

He secured from Von Eckhart, the German ambassador at Mexico City, the necessary funds to erect at Mexicala a powerful and fully equipped wireless station, which was in constant operation and which was at all times in direct and constant communication with the German consuls at Guaymas and Mazatlan and from those towns relayed to the German Embassy at Mexico City. Messages all during this time were constantly sent and received through these channels which enables them without any interference to freely have the opportunity for the transmission of information from the United States to the German Embassy at Mexico City, and to do so by this wireless was a simple and immediate matter. Pablo Dato is known to have repeatedly boasted that wireless messages had been sent from Mexicala by Guaymas and Mazatlan to Mexico City and an answer received within from an hour and a half to two hours.

It is also a known fact that Pablo Dato was the active paymaster along that part of the border for Von Eckhart, the German ambassador to Mexico City, and that prior to the start of the European war Pablo Dato and all his sons, also Gov. Estaban Cantu were all at times from a financial standpoint exceedingly hard up; after the war broke out it became an extremely noticeable fact that all of the Dato boys, their father, and Gov. Cantu were extremely well fixed financially. They then became owners of three expensive automobiles and the Dato boys began spending each day large amounts of money.

Many of the Mexican officials of the Cantu administration also became financially well fixed at that time. Names of these Mexicans will be mentioned hereinafter.

On the night of the day that the news was received in Mexicala that the Lusitania had been sunk by German submarines there was held at Gov. Cantu's house a banquet which was given in honor of the naval power of Germany; Pablo Dato and all of his sons were there, likewise a large number of Gov. Cantu's officers and several Germans.

At the time Pablo Dato's bank accounts, property, and safety deposit boxes were seized by the United States officials in Calexico during April or May of 1918, $8,000 was found to the credit of Pablo Dato, $4,000 of which was in a savings account, and $4,000 in a checking account. A few days prior to the time the property was seized it was said that he and his sons drew out of the bank at Calexico, and from other banks in San Diego and Los Angeles, Calif., in excess of $75,000 gold.

Another account at the Calexico National Bank it is alleged, stood in the name of Carlotta T. Dato, by Pablo Dato, agent. This account is said to have been in excess of $5,000, and Carlotta is a sister of Pablo Dato and resides in Germany.

In and within a few miles around Mexicala there are from 20 to 25 Germans employed on farms. At one time on the Becker Ranch, which is leased by Martinez, there were said to have been quite a number employed, as high as 20 at one time. All of these Germans were constantly in conference with Pablo Dato, Gov. Cantu, or the various Dato boys.

All during 1917 and 1918 there were from 10 to as high as 25 itinerant Germans in Mexicala, who invariably upon their arrival there immediately got in touch Pablo Dato. Such Germans were going and coming all the time, and whenever necessary were said to have been financed by Pablo Dato or Adolph Garcia, and were then sent south to Guaymas or to Mexico City.

Among those known to have been active participants in German spy and propaganda work at Mexicala, and Guaymas, Lower California, Calexico, San Diego and Los Angeles, Calif., also at other border points, who at all times were acting under orders and instructions of Pablo Dato, sr., are the following: Gov. Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California; Paul Dato, jr., Mexicala, Lower California; Gustave Dato, Mexicala, Lower California; William Dato, Mexicala, Lower California; Jacinto Barrera, secretary of state for Lower California, Mexicala, Lower California; Gen. Cordillo Escudero, Mexicala, Lower California; Ramon Guerrero, Mexicala, Lower California; Gustave Bulnzo, Nogales, Ariz.; Paul Krause, an Austrian living for a time in San Diego, Calif., and while there operated a livery car which was supposed to have been furnished him by the Dato boys. Krause knows the Dato boys, as they were schoolmates together; Fred Dato, Mexicala, Lower California; Adolph Dato, Mexicala, Lower California; Rafael Cantu, Mexico City, Mexico, and Mexicala, Lower California; M. Guerrero, private secretary of Gov. Estaban Cantu, Mexicala, Lower California; and Col. Cerduche.

The following Germans and Mexicans were very active in German spy and propaganda work under the direction of Pablo Dato, and the German consuls in Lower California and along the border: Gustavo Bulnzo, Nogales, Ariz.; G. Hans, Mazatlan, Mexico; Roberto Still, Mazatlan and Guaymas, Mexico; L. Constancia, Guaymas and Mexicala, Mexico; A. Rademacher, German consul at Guaymas, Mexico; Col. Jose T. Cantu, Mexico City and Mexicala, Mexico, a brother of Gov. Estaban Cantu; Gen. P. Elias Calles, secretary of commerce and industry in Carranza's cabinet, also ex-governor of Sonora; Lathor Witehe (alias Pablo Wabirski), operated in and across the border from Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, and Lower California, now in military prison at San Antonio under court-martial, sentenced to death; Fernando Gregoir, Mazatlan, Mexico; C. R. Lings, Mazatlan, Mexico; Max Cohen, Guaymas, Mexico; ——— Muller, of Guaymas, Mexico; W. R. Reachy, one of the secretaries of Gov. Cantu, Los Angeles, Calif., Calexico, Calif., and Mexicala, Mexico; Gen. Carlos Plank, Mexican military commander in northern Sonora; Capt. Calles, commander thirty-fourth detachment of Mexican troops on the Colorado side in the State of Sonora.

One of Pablo Dato's most successful agents at Mexicala, Mexico, and Calexico, Calif., and along the Sonora border, was Adolph Garcia, who after the United States entered the war was actively engaged in various German spy and propaganda efforts in behalf of Pablo Dato. Garcia keeps a general store at Mexicala and has a large warehouse in the rear. He employs two Germans, both of whom are clerks in his store; neither one of these parties were but very seldom in Mexicala and are alleged to have acted as messengers for Pablo Dato between Mexicala and various towns and cities in Mexico. One of these parties is a tall, slim fellow, pale complexion, and about 44 years of age, and is known as Gustavo. The other is young (about 25 years of age), red faced and apparently a sailor, very strongly built, and is known by the name of Christian.

During the latter part of March, 1918, Garcia, while intoxicated, exhibited a wireless telegram received at the local wireless station in Mexicala from the German Embassy at Mexico City. The telegram read:

"Am instructing consul in Guaymas to remit to you. Will send more later."

Garcia then endeavored to have a draft cashed which came from Herman Rademacher, the German consul at Guaymas, who is a member of the firm of Rademacher-Muller & Co., at Guaymas. The draft was for $800.

Part of this money, it was understood, was to repay Garcia for having advanced something in excess of $300 to five men who had been sent south by Garcia. These five men were Germans and are said to have been the same men who were captured on board The Alexander Agassiz. These five men left Mexicala during February, 1918, proceeded eastward and crossed the Colorado River near Monument 204. They were guided by the German clerk of Garcia, Christian. Upon reaching the Sonora side they were met by Capt. Calles, of the Mexican Army, who is in command of the Thirty-fourth detachment of troops on the Colorado side in the Mexican State of Sonora. Calles furnished guides and burros for these five men and sent them eastward across the Sonora desert to some point where it was presumed they would connect with the railroad south of Guaymas.

Garcia during the early part of 1918 was very jubilant over the German advances that at that time were being made in France. During March he deposited in bank $500 gold, which was in the form of postal money orders from Herman Rademacher, the German consul at Guaymas.

Garcia repeatedly during 1917 and 1918 borrowed several different amounts of money at the Mexicala Bank. These amounts ranged from $200 to $1,000, all of which he is said to have repaid. His notes were always indorsed by Pablo Dato.

Adolph Garcia is said to be an extremely well-educated man, speaks English, French, Spanish, and German. He is by no means such a man as would engage for his living as a regular business in a small mercantile establishment such as he was operating in Mexicala, and which is said to be simply as far as the business is concerned a blind.

He is a heavy drinker and gambles, and his gambling losses have always been very heavy. He always carried with him, so it is said, from $500 to $1,000 so that he will be able to supply traveling Germans on the way to Mexico City or other places in Mexico with funds.

BIRTH CERTIFICATE OF PABLO DATO, CONFIDENTIAL GERMAN AGENT IN LOWER CALIFORNIA.

The following is translation of an original document in the German language:

This birth certificate also shows that in 1863 Pablo Dato served as a one-year volunteer in the Prussian Army.

"Birth certificate of Adolph Paul Dato:

"In the respective register of the Church of Grossen, there was entered on the 21st day of June, 1840, the following:

"Adolph Paul, born June 11, 1840, mother, Caroline Frederike Dato; father, Carl Frederich Dato; baptized this date.

"This certificate is extended without charge.

"Given at Grossen March 8, 1858.

"GEMBER,

"Supt. and High Pastor of the City."

NOTIFICATION FROM THE COUNT SOLMS, THE GERMAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AT PARIS, FRANCE, TO PABLO DATO, REGARDING CREDENTIALS OF PABLO DATO TO WEAR THE GERMAN DECORATION, THE ROYAL CROWN.

To Mr. PAUL DATO, Associate of the Mission Duchemin, Ducasse et Cie, Paris.

[Printed letterhead Prussian Embassy in France.]

PARIS, August 6, 1868.

SIR: Referring to my letter of June 18, to-day I take pleasure in inclosing the proper credentials authorizing you to wear the order of the Royal Crown of the Fourth Class.

Accept assurances of my highest consideration.

The chargé d'affaires:

COUNT SOLMS.

Mr. PAUL DATO,

Paris, No. 10 Rue de Engtien.

CITATION FROM THE GERMAN EMPEROR DECORATING PABLO DATO WITH THE IMPERIAL ORDER OF THE CROWN.

The following is translation from the original in the German language:

"On orders from his majesty, the King, the general commission in charge of the royal Prussian orders, hereby attests that his majesty has gracefully conceded to the merchant, Paul Dato, of Paris.

"The imperial order of the crown of the fourth class and it herewith extends the proper credentials bearing our seal and signature.

"General commission of the royal Prussian orders:

"COUNT SOLMS."

BERLIN, May 30, 1868.

NOTIFICATION FROM THE GERMAN "CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES" AT PARIS, FRANCE, TO PABLO DATO REGARDING DECORATIONS PRESENTED TO HIM BY THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

The following is translation from the original document, which was written in French:

[Printed letterhead, Prussian Embassy in France.] *

"PARIS, June 15, 1868.

"Sir: The King, my august master, has conferred upon you his order of the Royal Crown of the fourth class (cross of a knight), you so well deserved.

"By handing you this high distinction I request you to acknowledge receipt and the proper credentials will be extended to you.

"Receive, sir, my congratulations and the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

"For the Ambassador of Prussia.

"The Chargé d'Affaires:

"COUNT SOLMS."

COPY OF THE APPOINTMENT OF PABLO DATO AS ACTING GERMAN CONSUL IN PARIS, FRANCE.

The following is the correct translation from the original document, written in the German language:

"STUTTGART, December 19, 1865.

"YOUR HONOR: Yours of the 14th instant I have received and had the honor to inform myself that the Royal consul, Mr. Glaenzer, during his absence has appointed you to act in his place and that you gracefully accepted.

"I hasten to express to you my approval of the decision of the Royal consul and hereby express to you at the same time my high appreciation for having accepted the representation of this consulate, and it would afford me pleasure to enter into official relations with you.

"WAMBULLER."

His Honor, the representative of the Royal consul at Paris.

Mr. Paul Dato, whose direct address is not known to me.

CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRATION OF PABLO DATO AS A GERMAN CITIZEN, BEFORE THE SUBPREFECT AT MULEJE, LOWER CALIFORNIA.

The following is correct translation of the original written in the Spanish language:

"To the subprefect of the Center Part, Muleje, Lower California.

"Pablo Data, a German citizen, a resident of Santa Rosalia, Lower California, appears before you and respectfully states:

"Having acquired real estate property in the port of Santa Rosalia, being married to a Mexican woman, who now is the mother of two children, in accord with the provisions contained in Article I, Capital V of the law governing the naturalization of foreigners, dated May 2, 1886, and being inside the limit of time set in referred to article, hereby express my desire to conserve my German citizenship.

"In virtue whereof I beg that this, my expressed desires, be admitted and that a certified copy be furnished me.

"I swear that I proceed in good faith.

"SANTO ROSALIA, November 15, 1886.

"Two stamps of 50 cents each duly canceled.

"On the margin a seal—Mexican coat of arms, reading, 'Subprefecture of the Center Part of Lower California.'"

Muleje, November 18, 1886, presented under this date the above petition, note has been made in the respective book. Return original to petitioner. Approved and signed by the subprefect of the Center Part of Lower California, in presence of the official clerk.

J. YGNACIO ARIO,
RAMON MERIBO, Clerk.

"The original has been delivered as ordered, after due entry had been made in the respective book."

DATA REGARDING THE ORIGINAL GERMAN ORGANIZATION WHICH IN MEXICO HANDLED THEIR ECONOMICS AND WAR PROPAGANDA.

Pablo Dato, sr., was very active in this organization.

It was known as the Verband Deutscher Reichsangerhoriger (Union of Subjects of the German Empire) with headquarters in the Boker Building, Mexico City, and has branches and agents as follows:

Mexico: — Krause, Julio Blumenkow, Augustin Grosset, Ernest Grether, Hans Muller, Karl Janke, head of German secret service in Mexico; E. Von Lubek, Boker Building; Theodo Reh Schumacher, Box 1388; Hugo Marquardt, 2a San Agustin 56; Franz Boker, Mexican Hardware Co., Box 149; Dr. Emil Boese, S. Pedro los Pinos Avenue 16 No. 2315, care of Ketelson & Degetau.

Chihuahua: Max Fishbaum, Herman Kreigsmann, Otto Brelefeld, Herman Pless, — Von Keik.

Ciudad Juarez: Frederlets Reuther, German consul at Juarez; S. Blancas.

Durango: Rodolfo Schommer, — Peters.

Guadalajara: Paul Hansen, Hans Deeke, Karl Paulsen.

Guaymas: Max Cohen, L. Constancla, Gustave Iberl, A. Rademacher, German consul; Hnos. Muller, partner of Rademacher.

Mexicala: Frederick, Gustave, Adolph. Pablo, jr., Williams, W. R. Reachy, and Pablo, sr., Dato.

Mazatlan: Fernando Gregoir, G. Himback, G. Hans, C. R. Lings, Robert Stoll, Melchers Suers.

Merida, Yucatan: W. Dirks, Maurice Galler, Adolphus Struck, Augustine Lewels, Kumm Heller, Emil Moller, Consul F. Guckler.

Monterey: R. A. Bremer, J. Cram, L. Langstruth, Adolf Schefold.

Parral: Edgar Koch, K. Stallforth, Eduardo Koch.

Puerto Mexico: G. C. Souffront, care of Hamburg American Line, Box 72.

San Luis Potosi: Consul George Unna, — Ozuna.

Tampico: Carl Heynan, K. Eversbusche.

Tepic: Z. Guzman, Julius Dellus.

Torreón: Julian Lark, — Normehren.

Vera Cruz: Arturo Arrieta, Pedro Basaner, Rudolph von Lubek, Guillermo Busing.

Zacatecas: Herman Reimers.

Montezuma: Joseph Korn.

Matormois: H. Eschreck.

Nuevo Laredo: Capt. K. Hinsch, German Army officer: Herman Ruckheim.

Nogales, Ariz.: Gustave Buinzo, H. J. Woodl.

The public head of this society is R. von Lubek, who lives at 28 Calle, Berlin, and has offices in Boker Building, Mexico City. He is a retired merchant, formerly of the firm of Robert Boker & Co., one of the leading hardware companies in the City of Mexico. Fritz Sommer, son of B. Sommer, one of the leading jewelers in Mexico City, traveling throughout Mexico organizing and furthering the work of this society.

There is also a committee organized under Von Lubek for active work in the Mexican Army. The German Army officer in charge of this work is Capt. Ricardo W. Schwlerz, who worked through some 40 German officers in that body. This committee also works through Col. José del Campo, Corps of Engineers, Mexican Army; Cuatro Ciénegas and Saltillo, Capt. Herman Rueckheim, Nuevo Laredo, Cal. Carlos Plank, of Sonora; Gen. P. Elias Calles, of Sonora; and a Spaniard named Gurdioh, editor of La Regeneracion, of Saltillo.

The society furnishes inspiration and financial backing for the following papers in Mexico City: Boletin de la Guerra, Informaciones en las Americas, Cronica Alemana, Deutsche Zeitung von Mexico, and all has subsidized the following dailies: El Democrata. In Monterrey it subsidizes the following: El Heraldito Europeo. It also furnishes pro-German news for Mexican papers, and, in connection with La Sociedad Ibero Americana de Hamburg and Transocean, of Berlin, publishes and distributes pamphlets on the German side of questions. It encourages business men to advertise in Mexican newspapers and thereby gains their interest and assistance in spreading pro-German news and kultur. It publishes posters, which are seen throughout the leading cities of Mexico, and provides lectures on various subjects. It has organized societies of Boy Scouts to drill and train in German fashion. The influence is felt throughout the department of public schools, as shown by their training, which includes the "goose step." Another committee of this society arranges for free courses of German in the schools; another is charged with providing a hospital.

During the strained times with the United States the Germans throughout Mexico showed most lively sympathy with the Mexicans, and promised them active aid in case of war between Mexico and the United States. Recently Von Lubeck wired all German consuls in Mexico of the enthusiastic reception awarded the German minister, and of the hissing and anti-American sentiment shown the American ambassador at the opening of Congress, and requested them to see that same was published in Mexican towns and papers.

The following letter covers the organization and intentions of the society:

APRIL 15, 1916.

From: Verband Deutscher Deichsangehöriger, Box 1221, Mexico City.

To: Deutscher Wirtschaftverband, Central and South America, 28 Potsdamer Str., Berlin, W-35.

This is to advise of the organization in this society as far back as June 16 last. As your association is occupied in Latin-American countries, our society will pursue the same course here. It is not practical for us to aid Germany by force of arms, so our main intention will be to aid all possible in an economic manner.

The society was founded June 16, having 164 members, and the first committee was chosen October 12, at which time the propaganda was circulated in the capital and throughout the interior, and at the same time 245 Germans of the empire joined in the capital and 113 from the interior, making a total of 522.

As you can readily see from reading our statutes, we will accept none as members save native-born Germans, and their nationality must be proven beyond doubt. That proscription also permitted the imperial authorities to recognize the nationality of 60 Germans. Moreover, there is a great number of Germans who for various reasons "by not observing the ancient regulations lost their nationality," have regained their standing as Germans and have been rehabilitated under the new liberal rules of the association, and it is to be hoped that excellent results will emanate from this source.

Up till the present a great number of publications on the war have been circulated in the cities and throughout the country dealing from the German viewpoint, by the Ausschuss für Verteilung von Aukklaruns Material who have been working for three months, and a great number of Mexicans have been convinced that we are in the right, in the methods of conducting the war and our spirit of German culture. Also the following technical works and serials have been distributed: "The Great War in Description." "The Actual War," "The Discourse of the Chancellor of September 12, 1915," "The War and the Right of Dr. Ed. Llorens." The stories contained in the Herald, of Hamburg, received here in December met with great approval.

The circulation of propaganda will be assured by means of 20 local committees and other members throughout the country, and we are hopeful of the greatest results.

Free courses in German have been instituted in the German schools by Mexican instructors without special effort on the part of our association, although a part of the general plan of the committee, and has been received with great approval by the public, and adds to our propaganda. By this means the public will be given to understand Germany and to receive the true communications of our general staff on happenings of the war, and the public will be disposed to accept our announcements.

It is desired to begin the immediate construction of a German hospital, which will be a great impulse to our colony and will demonstrate to our following, the power of German science, German ability, and the German spirit of organization. If the Empire approves and will give aid it will be a great point for our propaganda. A committee of physicians has this matter under study from the scientific point of view.

The colony of Germans of the Empire here is relatively small, and the economical setbacks of the country for the past five years have greatly hindered our spirit of enterprise against the economical strength of our enemies.

Address the correspondence for the president to Ad., Christliebssan, Apartado 58, Mexico, or to the secretary, Hugo von den Steinen, Apartado 1221, Mexico.

Continuation confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re trip of F. R. Betancourt from New Orleans to Los Angeles, to make arrangements with Gov. Cantu of Lower California regarding arms and ammunition to be run out of the United States.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 23, 1918.

My report of September 23, 1918, will give you full information regarding negotiations between Betancourt and Godchaux regarding the proposed arms and ammunition transaction with Gov. Estaban Cantu of Lower California.

Betancourt left New Orleans as mentioned in my report of September 23, at 7.30 p. m. Saturday, September 21. He arrived in San Antonio, Tex., 1.30 p. m. September 22, and registered at the Menger Hotel that city.

Godchaux left New Orleans September 23, via Southern Pacific Railway. He arrived in San Antonio September 24 and registered at the Menger Hotel that city, room 122. Prior to his arrival in San Antonio he wired Betancourt the date of his arrival, and Betancourt was waiting for him in the Menger Hotel lobby. By previous arrangements Betancourt and Godchaux were to leave San Antonio immediately upon the arrival of Godchaux in that city. Betancourt, however, wanted to wait around in San Antonio until his lover, Mrs. V. Lorie, met him there.

My confidential report of November 27, 1918, entitled "Re F. R. Betancourt alleged to have transported Mrs. V. Lorie for immoral purposes from New Orleans to San Antonio and from there to Los Angeles, Calif.," will give you full information regarding why Betancourt laid around San Antonio for about a week waiting to get in touch with Mrs. Lorie and have her meet him in San Antonio.

Godchaux, from September 24 to September 28, at San Antonio, was constantly in the company of Betancourt, Antonio Magnon, George Warden, and many other Mexicans who are affiliated with Mexican revolutionary activities in that city. Godchaux, while in San Antonio, made his headquarters at 402 Brady Building, which is the office of Warden and Magnon.

During this time Betancourt several times suggested to Godchaux that he start for Los Angeles and that he (Betancourt) would follow him on the next train. Godchaux stalled Betancourt along regarding this matter until he had communicated with me, and at that time also told me the probabilities were that Betancourt might try to cross over the border into Mexico without a passport. I therefore requested your New Orleans office to telegraph the following instructions to Godchaux through your San Antonio office. The telegram mentioned was as follows:

"Tell Godchaux who is at Hotel Menger, and who expects to leave San Antonio to-night, not to leave Betancourt for a second, and to positively go with him wherever Betancourt goes, and if Betancourt crosses into Mexico without passport, also do the same. Agent Keep, at Los Angeles, will arrange your permit card to get into Mexico. Also instruct Godchaux to telegraph Kale Jones, at Hotel Paso del Norte, El Paso, Tex., when Godchaux arrives in Los Angeles and his exact route from Los Angeles, and to positively go with Betancourt to see Cantu."

NOTE.—It is important in your telegram to the San Antonio office to caution them about seeing Godchaux, for he is with a bunch of Mexicans there, all of whom know the majority of the men connected with the San Antonio office.

Mr. Sullivan, of your San Antonio office, on September 27 telephoned Godchaux, and when none of the Mexicans were around Sullivan then called at the Menger Hotel and gave Godchaux the instructions mentioned in the above telegram.

On September 27 Betancourt told Godchaux he was ready to leave for Los Angeles but that it would be very unwise and not safe for him (Betancourt) and Godchaux to leave San Antonio on the same train, because the secret-service people were watching him (Betancourt), and if they saw him leave San Antonio with Godchaux it would make them more suspicious than they already were. He insisted upon Godchaux leaving San Antonio the next day, and said he would follow on the next day. Godchaux therefore left San Antonio on September 28, fully expecting Betancourt would follow him on the next train.

Godchaux, on the night of September 27 wired my office manager as follows: "Leaving for Los Angeles Saturday, noon; stop Hotel Alexandria. Anxious see Kate before leaving here. Will try see her at depot if she is on train arriving 1 o'clock otherwise will stop El Paso on Sunday to see her. Resume trip same night, get Los Angeles Monday evening. Do not answer; left hotel.

"PAUL."

NOTE.—Kate is code name for Cresse.

In answer to Godchaux's telegram of the 27. I immediately wired him at Sanderson, Tex., and El Paso, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., September 28, 1918.

Dr. P. M. GODCHAUX,

Sanderson, Tex. (Please try and deliver this message to him on S. P. train to El Paso during the next 24 hours):

Kate not at El Paso and won't be there until next Wednesday of Thursday; likewise will not arrive Los Angeles until next Sunday or Saturday; therefore not necessary for you to stop at El Paso and you can continue your trip without stopping off at El Paso.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., September 28, 1918.

P. M. GODCHAUX,

Hotel Paso Del Norte, El Paso, Tex.

Kate leaving home to-morrow and won't arrive El Paso until next Tuesday or Wednesday, as she is stopping off to make other visits; very important for you not to see any of the family at El Paso, or attend to anything there; also keep away from everybody else. Likewise suggest stop at all times with Court and complete trip with him. Kate expects to arrive Los Angeles on October 4 or 5.

NOTE.—Court is code name for Betancourt.

Godchaux, therefore, did not stop off at El Paso, and proceeded direct to Los Angeles, arriving there September 30.

I left New Orleans via Southern Pacific Railway October 1, at 7 p. m. After the train left the depot I noticed, in the sleeping car that I was in, Mrs. V. Lorie, who is the lover of Betancourt. I knew her by sight, but feel sure she, up to my arrival the following day in San Antonio, did not know me.

When I arrived in San Antonio at 1.30 p. m., October 2, was very much surprised to see Betancourt meet Mrs. Lorie at the depot, for up to that moment felt sure he was on his way to Los Angeles with Godchaux, for at that time had heard nothing from Godchaux regarding him leaving ahead of Betancourt.

Betancourt saw me at the depot in San Antonio, rushed up to me and was apparently very glad to see me, which, of course, I knew was nothing but hypocritical on his part, due to the fact that in times past I had several run-ins with him, as will be mentioned hereinafter.

I told Betancourt I was passing through San Antonio, and then got into a taxicab and went to the St. Anthony Hotel. As I was registering Mrs. Lorie walked into the lobby of the St. Anthony Hotel and likewise registered. I had expected to leave San Antonio that night, but due to the fact that Mr. Breniman, superintendent of your San Antonio division, expected to go to El Paso the following day, I therefore waited over and Mr. Breniman and myself left San Antonio for El Paso at 1.30 p. m., October 3. We had a drawing room on that train, and I had made arrangements to meet Mr. Breniman in the drawing room.

When I arrived at the depot, saw Betancourt and Mrs. Lorie there. They at once saw me and I, of course, stopped and spoke to Betancourt, who at that time introduced me to Mrs. Lorie. He asked me where I was going and I told him over to El Paso, and he said he likewise was going to El Paso. I knew, however, he was lying, for I had overheard him tell Mrs. Lorie in Spanish the exact time he would arrive in Los Angeles.

I saw Betancourt once or twice on the train and had very little conversation with him and he at no time saw me with Mr. Breniman.

On the morning of October 4 I arrived in El Paso. Betancourt went to Los Angeles. I had wired Godchaux from San Antonio asking him why Betancourt was not with him, and suggested that he telegraph Warden. The telegrams I received from Godchaux were as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., October 1, 1918.

KALE JONES,

Hotel Paso del Norte, El Paso:

Your telegrams here received. Wanted to see you before leaving El Paso, but arranged matters myself. Everything fine; customers here treated me royally. Wire me where and when you be here. Want to see or write you before going away. Will advise what town I make next. Folks send you regards.

HENRY.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., October 3, 1918.

KALE JONES,

Paso del Norte Hotel, El Paso:

Friend wired he be here Saturday. Received wire later confirming his departure. Doubtful whether we leave before Monday to see party unless decide go immediately upon arrival Saturday. Wired you El Paso October 1. Have everything fine shape. Necessary I see or communicate with you before returning south, account expenses. Regards.

HENRY.

Godchaux, as per my instructions to him by telegraph, wired Warden at San Antonio regarding Betancourt as follows:

LOS ANGELES, October 3, 1918.

GEORGE WARDEN,

402 Brady Building, San Antonio, Texas:

Waiting for Betancourt. When can expect him? Answer.

P. M. GODCHAUX.

In answer to the above telegram Warden wired Godchaux as follows:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., October 3, 1918.

P. M. GODCHAUX,

Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, Calif:

Left to-day at noon.

GEO. B. WARDEN.

In the meanwhile had received telegram from Mr. Sullivan of your San Antonio office while en route to El Paso, as follows:

C. E. JONES,

Drawing Room A, Car 59, care of Conductor No. 101, Hondo:

I have your coat. Redhead still here. Will cover and wire you. Blackhead went on train.

SULLIVAN.

NOTE.—Blackhead refers to Betancourt; redhead to Mrs. Lorie.

Also received the following telegram at El Paso from Mr. Sullivan regarding Mrs. Lorie, as follows:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

C. E. JONES,

New Hotel Rosslyn, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Your overcoat left here 1.20 train October 8, addressed Eugene Jones, care New Hotel Rosslyn. Trace Wells Fargo there for San Antonio. Waybill No. 1, October 8; baggage, 6 pounds; 74 cents prepaid; value, $30; mailed letter regarding same October 7.

SULLIVAN.

Before I left San Antonio, felt sure that Mrs. Lorie would follow Betancourt on the next train. Am convinced of the fact that Betancourt got Godchaux out of San Antonio as mentioned hereinbefore so he could meet Mrs. Lorie and then travel with her to Los Angeles, but after she arrived in San Antonio he probably thought that in some way it might be dangerous for him to make the trip from San Antonio to Los Angeles with Mrs. Lorie, therefore had her follow him the next day.

I then wired Godchaux from El Paso as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., October 4, 1918.

P. M. GODCHAUX,
Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Party left San Antonio same train I did yesterday. He should arrive Los Angeles Friday morning. When he arrives, rush business with him; also urge that he start immediately. See those parties. Very important successfully push that business through. I expect arrive Los Angeles Sunday or Monday night. Will wire exact arrival.

KALE.

Godchaux in the meanwhile had received the following Western Union telegram from Betancourt:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., October 3, 1918.

P. M. GODCHAUX,
Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Arriving Saturday morning.

F. R. BETANCOURT.

I left El Paso on the afternoon of October 5 and arrived in Los Angeles October 6. Immediately got in touch with Godchaux, and much to my surprise learned from Godchaux when he met me in my room, 738 New Rosslyn Hotel, that Betancourt and Mrs. Lorie had registered on October 6 at the New Rosslyn Hotel as Mr. and Mrs. Lorie, San Antonio, Tex., and were in room 836, which was directly over my room.

On October 7 I ran into Betancourt in one of the elevators of the New Rosslyn Hotel and he nearly dropped dead with surprise at seeing me. He wanted to know how long I had been there, when I was leaving, etc. Told him I was leaving for Tucson and Phoenix, Ariz., in a day or so. After that day Betancourt never saw me again in Los Angeles, although I several times saw him.

Betancourt when he arrived in Los Angeles, October 5, registered at the Hotel Alexandria, room 870. All of that day and evening he spent with Godchaux and Martin de Leon planning to leave at an early date for Calexico to see Gov. Cantu. He said nothing at all to Godchaux regarding Mrs. Lorie, or her expected arrival in Los Angeles, nor did he ever thereafter mention Mrs. Lorie to him.

Godchaux on the morning of October 6, while endeavoring to secure a copy of one of the New Orleans daily newspapers, was going from one news stand to another in several of the Los Angeles hotels, and for that reason was in the lobby of the New Rosslyn Hotel, when he saw Betancourt come in with Mrs. Lorie. Godchaux immediately disappeared and Betancourt and Mrs. Lorie went to their room. Godchaux then went to the register and learned what room they were in, and a few moments thereafter he telephoned their room and asked in a disguised voice for Mr. King, and Betancourt answered the telephone. Godchaux in that way knew that Betancourt was in the room. Godchaux then told Betancourt to excuse him, for he undoubtedly had been connected with the wrong room.

On October 1 or 2, Godchaux called at your Los Angeles office and introduced himself to Mr. Keep, and was then introduced to Mr. Conaty, immigration inspector at Los Angeles, who gave him letter to Mr. Musgrave, his inspector at Calexico, instructing him to issue to Godchaux temporary citizen's permit card to cross into Mexico.

Godchaux on October 7 was told by Betancourt that he was leaving the Alexandria Hotel, and he thereafter would be at room 523, Hotel Hayward. Betancourt secured this room at the Hotel Hayward simply as a blind and to receive his mail from his family and associates, for thereafter he spent all of his time with Mrs. Lorie and was but very seldom in his room at the Hotel Hayward.

At the time Betancourt met Godchaux in San Antonio he assured Godchaux that he would have no trouble at all in regard to securing his passport to cross into Mexico. After Betancourt arrived in Los Angeles he told Godchaux he had been unable to secure his passport and would have to wait 30 days for same. Godchaux then said, probably Mr. Poole, due to his political influence, would be able to arrange to have a temporary permit card issued in Betancourt's favor. Therefore Godchaux sent Mr. Poole the following phony telegram:

LOS ANGELES, October 9, 1918.

S. J. POOLE.

Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, New York City:

Must have interpreter arrangement at Washington for Betancourt; permit immediately.

P. M. GODCHAUX.

Through the cooperating of Mr. Keep, of your Los Angeles office, at my request Godchaux received the following phony telegram from Mr. Poole:

NEW YORK, N. Y., October 9, 1918.

P. M. GODCHAUX,

Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Replying your telegram, have arranged through Senator friend to have immigration department grant three-day permit card for interpreter; necessary instructions, so I am advised, have been telegraphed regarding the matter to immigrant official at Los Angeles and Calexico; see them immediately.

POOLE.

On October 10 Godchaux took Betancourt to the office of Mr. Conaty, immigration inspector at Los Angeles, who at that time per previous arrangements made with Mr. Conaty by me wrote a letter to his inspector at Calexico to issue a temporary permit card to Betancourt to cross into Mexico from Calexico.

Betancourt prior to that time had asked Godchaux to secure some positive letter of authority from Mr. Poole which would show that Godchaux had full power to complete the negotiations for the arms and ammunition with Cantu. Godchaux therefore wrote a telegram showed it to Betancourt, who thought this phony telegram was sent to Mr. Poole.

Through the cooperation of Mr. Keep of your Los Angeles office at my request Godchaux received the following phony telegram from Poole.

NEW YORK, N. Y., October 7, 1918.

P. M. GODCHAUX,

Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Your letter September 13 received. Can handle order for any amount of goods for immediate delivery. Do not think necessary for me to again confirm by letter your authority, as this will serve the same purpose as I have given you full power to act as my representative of which your parties are fully aware and familiar with now. Understand that I am placing full responsibility and confidence in you and can not accept any business only upon cash basis as previously arranged with your parties and agreed upon. Goods now in your possession should be disposed of before any further shipment made. Wired you last Tuesday regarding tug and barges.

POOLE.

Betancourt and Godchaux had planned to leave Los Angeles on the night of October 10 for Calexico, but Betancourt, however, postponed the trip until the night of October 11 and then again to the 12th. Finally he and Godchaux left Los Angeles at 11.30 p. m. on the night of October 13 for Calexico. They arrived there at 7.45 a. m. October 14 and both registered at the Calexico Hotel in rooms 120 and 122.

Godchaux got away from Betancourt for a short while, and went to see Mr. Musgrave, Immigration Inspector in charge at Calexico, and told him that Betancourt and he would call within a short time to secure Betancourt's temporary permit card. Mr. Musgrave had also received confidential letters from Mr. Keep and Mr. Conaty which were written at my suggestion, in regard to issuing the permit card to Betancourt. Godchaux and Betancourt about noon of that day went to Mr. Musgrave's office and there secured their temporary passports.

They then returned to the hotel and Betancourt told Godchaux it was best for him to first go over into Mexcala and have a private preliminary interview with Cantu. Betancourt then immediately left for Mexcala and about 3 p. m. the same day returned to Calexico and told Godchaux that Cantu was sick and could receive no visitors that day, but he had made an engagement for Godchaux and himself to meet Gov. Cantu the following day, October 15, at noon.

Betancourt then told Godchaux that Gov. Cantu's private secretary, Mr. Ramon Guerrero, had accepted an invitation to eat dinner with them that evening. Guerrero promptly kept his engagement, and at that time was introduced to Godchaux by Betancourt. At dinner Guerrero, Betancourt, and Godchaux arranged between themselves to secure a large additional profit on all arms and ammunition that they sold to Cantu. Guerrero then told Godchaux he would see him the next day at Gov. Cantu's office in Mexicala, and that there was no doubt but that they all would make a great deal of money out of these deals.

On October 15, at about 8.30 a. m., as Betancourt and Godchaux were coming out of the Hotel Calexico dining room, Betancourt said to Godchaux, wait a minute there is an old-time friend of mine and then went up to a Mexican, who Godchaux learned afterwards was Emilio Gonzales. Betancourt and Gonzales moved over to a corner of the lobby of the hotel, sat down and started a conversation which extended well over an hour. During that time Godchaux was watching them and noticed Betancourt was becoming very much excited and exceedingly nervous and that Gonzales was talking to Betancourt in a most earnest manner.

Betancourt after his conversation with Gonzales returned where Godchaux was waiting and told Godchaux that Gonzales had just told him (Betancourt) that all of their plans were fully known to the police and secret service people; furthermore, that Gonzales had positively told him a secret service friend of his (Gonzales') had stated the secret service even had photographic copies of all of the correspondence, contracts, etc., pertaining to the Godchaux-Betancourt arms and ammunition proposition.

Godchaux states Betancourt looked like a dead man at that time and was in every way in his actions, opinions, and conversations entirely a changed man from what he had been prior to his conversation with Gonzales. Godchaux tried to assure Betancourt of the fact that Gonzales' statements were absolutely incorrect and that it was utterly impossible for the secret service people to be aware of their negotiations for the arms and ammunition.

Betancourt, however, could not be reconciled as to their safety and said, "No; Gonzales knows what he is talking about and we are all going to get into serious trouble," and then said to Godchaux it will never do for you and I to be seen together at Calexico, therefore, you stay away from me and I will meet you later in my room.

Godchaux then asked him what about their engagement with Gov. Cantu for noon of that date, and Betancourt said, "That's off for to-day."

Later that day Betancourt met Godchaux in his room and asked him to telephone Calzado at Los Angeles that he, Godchaux, was leaving Calexico that night for Los Angeles. Betancourt then said, "Upon your arrival in Los Angeles explain the entire situation to Calzado and have Calzado come back to Calexico with you the following night, and then the three of us will go over to Mexicala and close the entire proposition up with Cantu."

Godchaux therefore telegraphed Calzado at follows:

CALEXICO, October 15, 1918.

EUSEBIO CALZADO,
1343 Albany Street, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Betancourt advises wait for me. Leaving to-night. Important see you.

P. M. GODCHAUX.

Godchaux also from Calexico, telegraphed me as follows:

CALEXICO, CALIF., October 14, 1918.

MIKE BROWN, No. 715,
Care New Hotel Rosslyn, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Received letters; expect see customers to-day; will advise further to-morrow.

PETE.

NILAND, CALIF., October 15, 1918.

CHAS. E. JONES,
Care New Rosslyn Hotel, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Partly sick, unable to see him; important be Los Angeles to-morrow morning.

KATE.

Godchaux left Calexico that night and arrived in Los Angeles on the morning of October 16. My report of November 23, 1918, entitled "Re Eusebio Calzado, Mexican revolutionary leader, at Los Angeles, Calif., which shows his connections with Col. Estaban Cantu and Gen. Pancho Villa," will give you full details regarding Godchaux's conversation with Calzado after he arrived in Los Angeles.

Godchaux states he feels fully satisfied of the fact that Betancourt simply wanted him to get out of Calexico as quickly as he could, notwithstanding the fact that Betancourt assured Godchaux of his being there upon his (Godchaux's) return to Calexico, and that Betancourt had fully made up his mind at that time as soon as Godchaux left he would take the next train out of Calexico, which as a matter of fact he did.

When Godchaux returned to Calexico on the morning of October 18, with Calzado, they found much to their surprise that Betancourt had left Calexico on the night of October 17 for Los Angeles and had arrived there on the morning of October 18.

My report of November 23, 1918, entitled "Confidential report re Rusevilo Calzado, Mexican revolutionary leader at Los Angeles, Calif., which shows his connections with Col. Estaban Cantu and Gen. Poncho Villa." On pages 5 to 10, inclusive, of that report will give you full particulars regarding all of the matters which happened after Calzado and Godchaux arrived in Calexico on the morning of October 18.

After Godchaux returned to Los Angeles and went to his hotel room, he telephoned Betancourt at room 523, Hayward Hotel, and made an engagement with him to meet him at Calzado's office as has been previously arranged with Calzado for 12.30 p. m., that day. Betancourt asked Godchaux at that time if Calzado was at his office or residence at that moment, and Godchaux said presumably at his residence.

Godchaux therefore at noon on October 20 met Betancourt and Calzado at Calzado's office, 838 Title Insurance Building. Calzado told him he had seen Betancourt at 10.30 a. m. that morning and that he and Betancourt had a very extensive conversation in regard to the arms and ammunition proposition, likewise in regard to their negotiations with Cantu.

Godchaux then immediately realized that Betancourt had thoroughly impregnated Calzado with the same fear that he (Betancourt) had regarding the fact that the secret-service people were after Betancourt and Godchaux as per information given to Betancourt regarding this matter by Emilio Gonzales, who had told Betancourt at Calexico that a secret-service friend of his (Gonzales) had told him they knew all about the entire Betancourt-Godchaux negotiations and even had seen photographic copies of a great deal of Betancourt's correspondence regarding these matters.

Godchaux could see at that moment that Calzado was a changed man and was exceedingly nervous and apparently very much frightened over the entire situation and repeatedly walked up and down his office and said: "My God! this is dreadful: it will simply ruin everything we have planned."

Godchaux states that Calzado had a most extreme case of nervousness and fright regarding this matter, and closed up like a clam regarding the entire matter and said: "We will have to drop this matter for the time being; furthermore, all of us if we are brought before the authorities must swear there is absolutely nothing in this matter and we have never discussed arms and ammunition." Calzado then said: "I am going to deny to the bitter end that I ever went to Calexico."

Godchaux then made an engagement to see Betancourt and Calzado that evening and later took Calzado and his lover at 8.15 p. m. to the Victor Hugo restaurant. Godchaux at that time for over two hours attempted to ease Calzado's mind in regard to their being any danger and furthermore told him it was utterly impossible for Emilio Gonzales to have ever received such information as he in turn had passed on to Betancourt regarding the secret service people being fully aware of their plans, etc.

Godchaux at that time asked Calzado who Emilio Gonzales was, and Calzado told him Gonzales was a very prominent Mexican lawyer, who had many influential friends and there was no doubt in his mind but that if Gonzales told Betancourt he had received information through a secret service friend of his that they were thoroughly familiar with the entire Betancourt-Godchaux-Cantu proposition, that he, Calzado, could bet his life that Gonzales was absolutely correct in regard to the information he had given to Betancourt.

On October 21 at 10 o'clock a. m., Godchaux met Calzado, and Betancourt at Calzado's office for a definite answer in regard to the entire arms and ammunition proposition. Godchaux states that Calzado at that meeting was as much frightened and nervous about the entire matter as he previously had been, and that Betancourt was in every way all together different in his actions, talk, and opinion regarding the arms and ammunition matter. Betancourt then said, "Remember all of us have to stick together and deny forever that any such a deal existed."

Godchaux then fully realized that due to the fright which had been thrown into Betancourt by Emilio Gonzales at Calexico regarding the fact that the secret service people and the United States knew about the entire matter, that Betancourt therefore had made up his mind to, if possible, sacrifice everybody else and save himself, and that Calzado who in turn had been badly frightened by Betancourt likewise intended to do the same. They also said, we have to take to cover now and drop this deal forever.

Betancourt also at the start of the conversation treated Godchaux in a very cold manner, and seemed to blame him for the entire matter. Godchaux then asked Betancourt where do you suppose I am going to get off regarding this matter with my principals? Furthermore, you have dragged me around the country for about six months on this deal promising this, that, or the other thing, and you have never complied with any parts of your proposition, and in addition to that, if you are involved with the authorities, so am I.

Godchaux states his idea in making that remark to Betancourt was to learn positively if Betancourt and Calzado were really sincere in regard to their changed ideas and attitude regarding their arms and ammunition deal.

Betancourt then said to Godchaux: "It is true I am not complying with my agreements, but after having received that information from Gonzales it looks like jail for me, and I am going to save myself irrespective of who else gets saved or not." He then said to Godchaux: "Where are all of the contracts, papers, documents, etc., pertaining to these deals which I have signed and which are in your possession?" Betancourt then also said: "I want all of those papers and contracts back, for I would not be able to sleep any more as long as I knew they were out of my hands." Godchaux told him they were in his possession in a safety deposit box at the Alexandria Hotel. Betancourt and Calzado then said: "Let's go over to the hotel and get those papers at once."

Godchaux said: "No, that can't be done, for these are papers and documents that belong to my principals and I am not going to give them back to you until I am so authorized to do so by Mr. Poole." At that moment when Godchaux refused to surrender these papers, Betancourt, so Godchaux states, had a brain storm, jumped up and yelled out, he would get those papers if he had to choke them out of Godchaux, and started over to Godchaux, who then got out of his chair, backed into a corner, and told Betancourt, "You try to put your hand on me and I will kill you."

Godchaux realizing that everything was up as far as Betancourt and his associates were concerned, and nothing more could be done with them, so he tells me. He then backed out of Calzado's office and told both Calzado and Betancourt: "Go to hell; if you try to start anything with me, I will bump the pair of you off." Betancourt at that moment started toward the door, so Godchaux states, and Godchaux lifted his coat, which allowed Betancourt to see he had a gun in each hip pocket, and told Betancourt: "You can't bluff me; try jumping on me and you will get hurt."

Godchaux then left the building and late that afternoon Calzado telephoned him and said: "Old man, you are not sore at me, are you, for its not my fault," and also said that Betancourt was crazy, and he and Betancourt would be willing to give Godchaux $600 for the papers and contracts, and made an engagement to meet Godchaux at his, Calzado's office, at 3.30 that afternoon. Godchaux, however, at my suggestion, did not keep his engagement with Calzado.

On October 22 Calzado telephoned Godchaux at the Alexandria Hotel, and at that time told him it was the best thing for everybody to settle the entire matter amiable and for Godchaux not to stay mad at him. Calzado then told Godchaux, "We will pay all of the expenses you have had in regard to those negotiations," and asked Godchaux what it amounted to. Godchaux told him about $1,200, and Calzado said: "All right, we will arrange that, and you will turn all of Betancourt's papers over for that amount." Godchaux said only after he had put their proposition up to Mr. Poole.

At about 2.30 p. m. October 23 after I had checked out of the New Rosalyn Hotel and went by the Alexandria Hotel to get Godchaux to go to the depot as we had intended to leave Los Angeles that afternoon at 4.00 p. m., and just as I got into Godchaux's room the telephone rang and I answered it and found that Mr. Dennison was on the telephone. He told me a very important matter had come up and asked me to immediately come down to Mr. Keep's office. I told Godchaux to wait for me in the lobby of the hotel, jumped into a taxicab and went to Mr. Keep's office and found Mr. Dennison waiting there for me.

He told me that about an hour before he telephoned me he had received a request from Assistant United States Attorney Palmer to come to his office, and that when he (Dennison) arrived there he found Mr. Palmer in consultation with Betancourt, Calzado, and Ben Hunter, who said he was their attorney. Mr. Palmer introduced Dennison to these three men and stated that Betancourt had entered into a contract with P. M. Godchaux for the delivery of arms and ammunition, which he did not know was illegal, and that his attorney, Mr. Hunter, told him it was, and recommended to him that he confess to the authorities regarding the entire matter and by doing so gain immunity for himself.

Mr. Dennison called Mr. Palmer out of the office and explained Godchaux's connection with this proposition.

Mr. Dennison's report of October 24 regarding Calzado and Betancourt will give you additional information regarding this matter.

After I arrived at Mr. Keep's office, Mr. Dennison, Mr. Keep, and myself conferred with Assistant United States Attorney O'Connors and Assistant United States Attorney Palmer. I explained to these gentlemen the entire circumstances in regard to Godchaux's connections with this case, and they asked me what should be done in regard to Betancourt and Calzado. I then suggested that Mr. Dennison make complete reports to your department regarding the entire matter up to that moment and thereafter as these matters developed.

Likewise told them regarding what should be done with Betancourt, Calzado, and their associates I believed was a matter that should be passed on by Chief Bielaski or the Attorney General's Office at Washington, due to the fact that no prosecution against these Mexicans should be started on account of other matters which might interfere with the ideas of the State Department regarding various Mexican revolutionary affairs. It was therefore agreed between all of us to let the case against these Mexicans rest pending instructions from Washington regarding same.

I then suggested to Mr. Dennison that he immediately get in touch with Betancourt and Calzado, and dig out of them all of the additional information he could secure, and made arrangements to meet Mr. Dennison at Godchaux's room at the Alexandria Hotel between 4.30 and 5.00 p. m.

Then returned to Godchaux's room at the Alexandria Hotel. He told me that in the meanwhile Betancourt and Calzado had seen him and asked him to call at Calzado's office around 5 o'clock that afternoon, for they wanted to give Godchaux twelve or fifteen hundred dollars for the papers and contracts pertaining to the expenses caused by arms and ammunition contract deal.

Mr. Dennison in the meanwhile arrived at Godchaux's room, and we agreed that it would be best for Godchaux to keep his engagement at Calzado's office. While Godchaux was waiting for them in the hallway outside of Calzado's office Betancourt showed up, and Godchaux asked him what he meant by turning him (Godchaux) up to the authorities. Betancourt indignantly denied that he had seen the authorities and claimed to know nothing about it; likewise said Calzado had done nothing of the kind. He assumed at that time a most friendly and cordial attitude toward Godchaux, and again told him he wanted to buy the papers and would meet him (Godchaux) the next morning around 10 o'clock.

Godchaux then returned to his room at the Alexandria Hotel, where Mr. Dennison and I were waiting for him. I then suggested to Mr. Dennison that he telephone Calzado and Betancourt, get them together, and secure from them any additional information he could. Later that evening Mr. Dennison got in touch with Betancourt and Godchaux and had an interview with them, which lasted for several hours, and secured from them the statements and information mentioned in his report of October 23, 1918, entitled "Re Fiacro Betancourt and E. Calzado, Mexican Revolutionary Activities."

Mr. Dennison returned to Godchaux's room at the Alexandria Hotel at midnight and related to me all of the information he had secured from Betancourt, including the personal remarks expressed by Betancourt regarding myself, likewise the information he had secured from Betancourt in regard to the statement made by Emilio Gonzales about having received information from secret-service friend of his as to Betancourt's and Godchaux's revolutionary activities; also regarding the statement made by Betancourt in regard to the cooperation extended to him and his associates by Mr. Breniman and Maj. Barnes, of San Antonio, Tex.

I suggested to Mr. Dennison that he immediately render complete reports to your department regarding all of these matters and continue to follow the case up until completed.

It was then decided between Dennison and myself that, irrespective of the positive willingness of Betancourt and Calzado, as they expressed same to Mr. Dennison in regard to them paying Godchaux twelve or fifteen hundred dollars for the arms and ammunition contracts and papers, that it would be best for Godchaux not to accept same, likewise not to turn loose to them.

Godchaux, on the morning of October 24, did not keep his appointment with Betancourt at the Citizen's National Bank Building for 10 a. m., at which time Betancourt was to have paid Godchaux the money for the papers. Godchaux, however, telephoned Betancourt on or about that time and told him that if Betancourt wanted the papers, then in that event write him at New Orleans, or have his attorney do so in regard to this matter.

In Mr. Dennison's report of October 23, regarding Betancourt and Calzado, I noticed remarks made by Betancourt to Mr. Dennison regarding myself. He, however, when Mr. Dennison nailed him down to facts, could not remember names, dates, or places regarding various Mexicans whom Betancourt stated I had taken advantage of.

When Mr. Dennison first told me that Betancourt knew I was in Los Angeles, and that he had taken a pass at me in his conversation, I then requested Mr. Dennison to pin Betancourt down to facts, and if possible get him to give complete statement in regard to myself, which Mr. Dennison apparently did as per his report.

The original feeling of bitterness between Betancourt and myself goes back to May 21, 1917, which arose at that time, due to the fact that Guillermo Castillo Najera was the right-hand gunman for George Warden, Betancourt, and their crowd. Najera was arrested with Ramon Diaz and three or four other Mexicans by agents of your department when they arrived at the port of New Orleans May 21, 1917, on the steamship Surname. They were placed in the immigration station, and a few days after they arrived here, each of them, as mentioned in my reports at that time, became suspicious of each other and they all finally paired off, each pair fighting the other.

Insomuch as it was my work to stick in with Ramon Diaz and Alfonso Noyola I therefore did so and took up their side of the factional fight, which had arisen between the Mexicans mentioned. This resulted, as my reports show at that time, in Guillermo Castillo Najera and all of his friends and associates becoming sore at me, among which were Betancourt and Warden.

You will remember from my previous reports that when Najera was interned at the immigration station a very stiff fight was put up at Washington by a Mr. Chambers, his attorney from San Antonio to secure his release, and due to the fact that Najera had stated he proposed to kill Ramon Diaz and myself just as soon as he got out of the immigration station and as Diaz was afraid of him, and to please Diaz, also rather than have me kill him when he did get out, I took the Najera case up with several Congressmen and Senators at Washington as an offset with the Immigration Department to oppose the request of several other Congressmen and Senators whom Chambers had brought into the case. These Congressmen and Senators whom I had were simply asking at my request that the immigration authorities comply with the law regarding Najera's case. This was finally done and Najera was ordered deported. He, however, was allowed to remain in this country under a $2,000 surety bond, guaranteeing his deportation at the end of 12 months.

It was Betancourt, Warden, and other associates of Najera who at that time were trying to start the Rudolfo-Reyes Mexican revolutionary movement, who employed Chambers who formerly was a member of the law firm of Watson, Chambers & Reyes of San Antonio, Tex.

During the time this fight was going on over Najera I told both Warden and Betancourt that I had heard they were also interested in getting even with me for fighting Najera and that they better keep their hands out of that affair. They both denied they were mixed up in helping Najera, and assured me of their friendship, which I, of course, knew was a lie.

Betancourt from that time on while on the surface at all times was friendly, nevertheless he has been ever since then very bitter in his ideas and remarks about me.

My reports of May, June, July, and August, 1917, regarding Ramon Diaz, Guillermo Castillo Najera, and others will give you full information regarding this matter.

On page four of the testimony of the immigration board of special inquiry held at the immigration station, New Orleans, La., July 23, 1917, the following sworn testimony was given by Charles M. Chambers of San Antonio, Tex., in the interest of Najera:

"Q. Do you know Mr. Jones?—A. No; only I have heard of him since being employed in the case of Guillermo Castillo Najera.

"Q. Do you know what business he is in?—A. I do not know Mr. Jones personally, nor do I know his business, except from information received by letter from Hon. Eugene Black, Member of Congress, now in Washington, of date July 17, 1917, who stated to me in said letter that he ascertained from the commissioner that a man by the name of Jones was taking the leading part in insisting he (meaning Najera) be deported and that the commissioner said Jones was a newspaper man.

Your department is in possession of complete official copy of the above-mentioned testimony, which I sent forward at that time.

The testimony of Najera, Chambers, and of all of their own witnesses show that they attempted to have Ramon Diaz deported on account of his moral and revolutionary reputation.

If Betancourt or any of his associates could say more than has been said about me by Mexicans and Central Americans, and some Americans whose plans I have helped to spoil, in that event it would be necessary for them to have the vocabulary of Webster.

Irrespective of knowingly putting myself in a false position, criticisms, knocks, false statements, or many threats to assassinate me that your department is aware of, I have, as your department knows, at a considerable personal financial loss to myself, always gone the limit to produce results in my work regarding Mexican, Central American, and other affairs for your department.

I personally feel about such matters as President Lincoln must have, when he said:

"If I were to try to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business. I do the best I know how, the very best I can, and I mean to keep on doing it to the end. If the end brings me out right, what is said against me will not amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, 10 angels swearing I was right would make no difference."

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Eusevio Calzado, Mexican revolutionary leader at Los Angeles, Calif., which shows his connections with Col. Estaban Cantu and Gen. Pancho Villa.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 23, 1918.

On October 14 I asked Mr. Keep, special agent in charge of your Los Angeles office, if he had any information pertaining to Calzado. He told me his office had no file or information pertaining to this party.

Prior to my arrival in Los Angeles, Calif., on October 6, 1918, had heard a great deal about Calzado and his activities with various Mexican revolutionary parties during the last several years on various parts of the border.

At the time I was active and friendly with many of the leaders of the Villista revolutionary movement several years ago, at that time first heard of Calzado. Up till October 8, 1918, I however, had never seen Calzado, and he likewise to this date personally does not know me.

On October 8 at about 2 p. m. Martin de Leon, ex-Mexican revolutionary agent at Tampico, Mexico, who has been mentioned in my previous reports, accompanied by Betancourt and Godchaux, called at the office of Calzado and Godchaux was at that time introduced to Calzado. From that time on I keep in very close touch with the activities of Calzado through Godchaux, as is fully covered in my report of October 23, under the heading: "Continuation report re F. R. Betancourt and his Mexican revolutionary activities."

On October 14 at about 2.30 p. m. I was at the office of Mr. J. A. Conaty, immigration inspector in charge at Los Angeles, who pointed to a Mexican standing in an outer office, and said, "Do you know that party?" and I told him I did not. Conaty then said his name was Calzado and that he (Calzado) had just presented to him (Conaty) a telegram signed Bielaski, which Calzado had endeavored to use on Conaty to force him to issue a temporary permit card so Calzado could cross into Mexico.

Conaty then told me that Calzado had told him he was a warm personal friend of Bielaski's; furthermore had and was doing confidential work for Mr. Bielaski on the border, and at and around Los Angeles. I questioned Conaty very closely regarding the statements he said Calzado had made as mentioned, and Conaty stuck to his statement about what Calzado had said. I then asked Conaty if Calzado from his talk and action had given him the impression that he was a confidential representative of Mr. Bielaski or of the Department of Justice, and Conaty said he certainly did.

In so much as I had previously asked Mr. Keep if he knew of Calzado, or anything about him, and Mr. Keep said he did not; therefore felt sure of the fact that if Calzado was a confidential informant or representative of Mr. Bielaski that Mr. Keep would know of it. Therefore suggested to Conaty that he take Calzado into another office, and detain him in conversation until I telephoned Mr. Keep's office regarding this matter.

Immediately then telephoned Mr. Keep's office, and got Mr. Dennison, Mr. Keep's assistant, on the telephone, and asked him to step down to Conaty's office for a moment. Dennison immediately came down to Conaty's office, and I explained the situation to him; likewise in the presence of Conaty repeated to Dennison the statements Conaty had said Calzado had made to him and Conaty confirmed Calzado's remarks to Dennison.

Mr. Dennison, then asked me what ought to be done, and I suggested to him to immediately wire Mr. Bielaski explaining the entire circumstances regarding Calzado, and the claims he had made. Mr. Dennison then telegraphed Chief Bielaski, and on October 16 Mr. Dennison showed me copy of Chief Bielaski's wire to Mr. Keep regarding Calzado, which proved, as I already had known, that Calzado's statements to Conaty were simply the customary Mexican lies.

Calzado in his several conversations with Conaty endeavored to use Chief Bielaski's name, and the telegrams he had received from him; likewise his alleged employment as a representative of Chief Bielaski to intimidate Conaty into issuing him a temporary permit card to visit Mexico.

Calzado was born on October 14, 1875, at Saltillo, Coahuila, Mexico. His mother, Mrs. Santos Barrero Calzado, is now living at Galveston, Tex. Calzado entered the United States during October, 1914, at El Paso, Tex., and in 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, and to date 1918 claims to have resided at Los Angeles, Calif., with the exception of about six months during 1916, when he lived at Galveston, Tex.

He claims to be 42 years of age, in height is about 5 feet 8 inches, weighs 125 to 130 pounds, eyes hazel in color, hair black, complexion dark, clean shaven, has a square chin, face and nose regular, but face thin and cheeks inclined to be sunken, has false teeth in front showing gold bands on bridge.

He is the lover and is alleged to be living with the divorced wife of a chocolate manufacturer of San Francisco, Calif., whose marriage name is alleged to have been Mrs. Gerribelli. Calzado lives at the same house this woman does, located at 1343 Albany Street, Los Angeles, Calif.; telephone 21486 or 65275. She is a small blonde, blue eyes, scars on lower part of throat, dresses fashionably and in an extremely loud manner, is a loud talker, and drinks and smokes in public.

Calzado's office is at 838 Title Insurance Building, Los Angeles, Calif., and he represents himself as being a mining engineer and oil operator. His office is very poorly furnished and has but very little office equipment in same.

Understand that Calzado's attorney and close associate is alleged to be O. D. Bennett, Security Bank Building, Los Angeles, Calif. He is likewise alleged to have a friend in James Spence, one of the minor officials of the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank.

At my request Mr. Dennison, of your Los Angeles office, after I had learned where Calzado banked, secured for me the following report from the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank regarding Calzado:

"Called at the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank and find that up until October 10 subject's account did not amount to much, never more than a few hundred dollars, but on October 10 subject deposited a draft signed by _____, on _____, New York, payable to himself for $10,000. Subject at once drew a draft for $5,000, to whom the bank was unable to state at this time, but will try to ascertain for us.

"On October 11 subject drew another draft of $2,550, payable to Santos Calzada. He, subject, has had an account in this bank for about four years. He is thought to be in the mining business in Lower California. He was introduced to the bank by the State Bank & Trust Co., of San Antonio, Tex., and was also introduced by Mr. A. F. Naftsgger, of Riverside, Calif.

"Checks with which he opened this account were drawn on the _____.

Mr. Naftsgger, in introducing subject to the bank, stated that he had known him long and favorably; that he was interested in large financial operations in Mexico, and that at some future date his account would be a profitable one. So far as the bank records show, the checks they have on hand drawn by this subject are all in rather small amounts, nothing over $150, and payable to various merchants about the town, the telephone company, etc., and a number of $25 checks to himself."

In checking up Calzado through Godchaux, who had for a period of nearly two weeks many conversations with Godchaux, who likewise lavishly entertained him and his lover and other friends of his, and who likewise, on my instructions, flattered him in regard to his importance as a Mexican revolutionary leader, secured for me in that way a great deal of information from Calzado regarding himself and other Mexican revolutionists. Calzado apparently is exceedingly vain as to his own ability, standing, etc., in Mexican revolutionary affairs.

As mentioned hereinbefore, Godchaux was first introduced to Calzado by Martin de Leon and Betancourt, at Calzado's office, 848 Title Insurance Building, on October 8, and at that time Godchaux told Calzado that he himself was also an oil operator, and that his several principals in New York would be very much interested in the possibilities of oil investment opportunities in Mexico. Calzado, thinking he undoubtedly had a live fish on his line, immediately began opening up to Godchaux regarding his (Calzado's) importance and influence with many prominent Mexicans and Americans.

Godchaux was constantly with Calzado from that time on. Godchaux, on October 11, with Betancourt, Martin de Leon, and Calzado, were to go to San Diego by automobile with Samuel Vasquez, Mexican consul of San Diego. Vasquez, however, was unable to make the trip, and it was therefore postponed.

On October 13, 1918, Godchaux went to Calexico with Betancourt, and on October 15, 1918, as fully covered in my report of October 23, 1918, entitled: "Re F. R. Betancourt and his Mexican revolutionary activities," Godchaux returned to Los Angeles, at Betancourt's request, to get Calzado and have him return to Calexico with Godchaux.

In so much as it was part of the arrangements between Godchaux and Betancourt to have Calzado go to Mexicali, Mexico, to see Gov. Cantu with them, and in so much as Calzado had not been able to secure a temporary permit card to cross the border, I therefore, on October 14, arranged, with the assistance of Mr. Keep and Mr. Conaty, to have it appear as if Godchaux, through the influence of Mr. Poole at New York, had fixed things at the State Department whereby the State Department had wired Conaty to issue a temporary permit card for Calzado. This was done and seemed to make quite an impression on Calzado in regard to the influence of Godchaux and his principals.

After Godchaux reached Calexico with Betancourt on October 14, 1918, he immediately, as mentioned in my report of October 23, 1918, regarding Betancourt, requested Godchaux to telephone Calzado at Los Angeles that he, Godchaux, was leaving there for Los Angeles to see Calzado. Godchaux, however, telegraphed Calzado from Calexico via Western Union Telegraph as follows:

CALEXICO, October 15, 1918.

EUSEBIO CALZADO,

1343 Albany Street, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Betancourt advises wait for me. Leaving to-night. Important see you.

P. M. GODCHAUX.

Godchaux then left Calexico on October 15 at 7.30 p. m. and arrived in Los Angeles at 7.45 a. m. October 16. He immediately telephoned Calzado at his residence and made engagement to meet him at his office at 10 a. m. Godchaux then fully explained the situation which had arisen at Calexico regarding the statements made by Emilio Gonzales to Betancourt about the United States Secret Service being wise to the entire Betancourt transaction, and which had greatly frightened Betancourt, as fully covered in my report of October 23, 1918, under the heading of "Confidential report re F. R. Betancourt and his Mexican revolutionary activities."

Calzado at that time seemed to be very much put out about Betancourt ever having gone to Calexico to take the arms and ammunition deal up with Gov. Cantu without he, Calzado, having been with them. Calzado then opened up and spoke very frankly about his entire revolutionary connections and ability to handle any and all revolutionary matters, and told Godchaux that he, Calzado, was in reality one of the most successful Mexican revolutionists that Mexico had ever known from the original Madero revolution to date.

Calzado at that time also told Godchaux that he, with Raul Madero, Gen. Angeles, Diaz Lombardo, and a few others, had been and was even to this day the real brains behind the Villa movement. He also told Godchaux that he, Calzado, had been Villa's chief of transportation, and even to this date was on close and intimate terms with Villa and his various leaders, and always had been and would be a Villista. Likewise he was thoroughly familiar with all of Villa's present plans, etc. He then showed Godchaux several photographs of himself with some of the Villistas.

He then explained to Godchaux that he knew all along about the Poole-Godchaux transaction, which first started in April and May, 1918, and that he, Calzado, had made a special trip to San Antonio, Tex., during May, 1918, to see these contracts and to fully discuss the entire proposed transaction with Betancourt, Warden, and others of their associates. Godchaux also learned from Calzado at that time that he, Calzado, had been largely instrumental, so he claims, in influencing Gen. Estaban Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California, in entering into a combination consisting of nearly all of the different Mexican revolutionary factions, whereby Cantu was to head the movement to overthrow Carranza.

Godchaux asked Calzado at that time if Cantu was friendly with Gen. Obregon, and Calzado said Cantu was playing with Obregon but at heart has no use for him and at the proper time would double-cross him and throw the hooks into him in every way he possibly could.

Godchaux at this conversation learned from Calzado that he and several of his associates had been assured of the support of the United States from Chief Bielaski of the Department of Justice and others connected with the United States Government at Washington, and this support in every way possible would be extended to Cantu, Calzado, and their associates whenever they were ready to strike in their attempt to overthrow Carranza.

Godchaux states that Calzado then patted himself on the chest, and gave him to understand that he, Calzado, would be the biggest man in Mexico because he had negotiated things in Washington for Cantu and their revolutionary movement.

Godchaux flattered Calzado along at that time about his importance, ability, etc., all of which he scientifically ate up. Godchaux likewise learned from him that inasmuch as Calzado did not care for anything except money he could make for himself and associates out of any Mexican affairs, and that he, Calzado, as a matter of fact, did not care whether they ever could or would do anything of importance for the United States or not, and they really only expected to use the good offices of those with whom they have talked in Washington to benefit their own plans. Calzado said to hell with everybody but ourselves, and while we promised much to the officials in Washington, nevertheless, what we promise and what they get is altogether a horse of a different color.

Calzado at this time stated Betancourt was a nice fellow, but egotistical, had no guts, and had never been cut out for a leader, irrespective of the fact that Betancourt has and was endeavoring to consider himself a leader, and that as far as Gov. Cantu and other Mexican revolutionary leaders were concerned, they all knew Betancourt, and none of them took him seriously. Furthermore, that Betancourt was a woman chaser, and in the end, if given plenty of rope, always balled everything up.

Inasmuch as Calzado had fallen down in his attempt to secure a permit card to cross into Mexico at Calexico, through Chief Bielaski or from Comaty as mentioned in paragraphs 5 and 6, page 1, of this report, and as it was necessary for Godchaux to have Calzado in Mexicali when he saw Gov. Cantu, therefore, Godchaux told him that possibly Mr. Poole could, through his political influence, secure a permit card for him.

Godchaux, therefore, on October 16, after Calzado had read same, sent via Western Union the following telegram to Mr. Poole:

LOS ANGELES, October 16, 1918.

J. S. POOLE,

Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, N. Y.:

Had to return here this morning to secure advice and services experienced mining engineer, who is absolutely necessary to use to successfully handle business, therefore important. Immediately request State Department issue temporary permit card for at least four days in name Eusebio Calzado to visit Mexico from Calexico. Dislike very much to bother you again regarding permit, but absolutely necessary to do so. Want permit card be issued if possible not later than October 17.

P. M. GODCHAUX.

Through the cooperation Mr. Keep, at my suggestion Godchaux received via the Western Union on October 17 the following phony telegram:

NEW YORK, N. Y., October 17, 1918.

P. M. GODCHAUX,
Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Replying your night lettergram October 16, have arranged through Senator friend who has advised me that the State Department has wired immigration officials at Los Angeles instructing them to immediately issue permit card to mining engineer mentioned your telegram. Again refer you to my telegram October 16 regarding New Orleans merchandise.

When the above telegram was shown to Calzado it seemed to make quite an impression on him.

I then saw Conaty, explained the matter to him, and at my request he issued a temporary permit card to Calzado.

Calzado then arranged with Godchaux for them to leave for Calexico on the night of October 17. Godchaux and he left Los Angeles on that date at 7.45 p. m. and arrived at Calexico at 7.30 a. m. October 18, and registered at the Calexico Hotel.

On the morning of October 18, after Calzado and Godchaux arrived at the Hotel Calexico, they learned that Betancourt had left Calexico on the night of October 17 for Los Angeles, and therefore had not waited in Calexico for the arrival of Calzado and Godchaux, as per previous arrangements.

At this time Calzado told Godchaux not to let Betancourt or any of the others know that he (Calzado) had secured a temporary permit card to cross into Mexico through the influence of Godchaux, for he wanted his Mexican acquaintances to believe he had secured this permit card through his own personal influence at Washington.

On October 18 at 10 a. m. Godchaux and Calzado left Calexico for Mexicali. Upon their arrival in Mexicali Godchaux was introduced to Mr. Barera, secretary of state for Lower California, whose office is an anteroom of Gen. Cantu's, and a few moments later Calzado and Godchaux were taken into Gov. Cantu's office, where they saw Mr. Guerrero, the private secretary of Gov. Cantu, who Godchaux had previously met on his first visit to Mexicali with Betancourt. Godchaux at 10.30 a. m. was then introduced to Gov. Cantu, and at that time presented the arms and ammunition proposition, through Calzado, to Gov. Cantu.

After a conference of about two hours Gov. Cantu, who was very much interested at all times in the arms and ammunition proposition and who told Godchaux at that time he could use from one to ten million 7 mm. cartridges, also 1,500 rifles or carbines and from 15 to 20 automatic machine guns at the prices mentioned in Godchaux's phony letter of September 30, 1918, to Mr. Poole, which was shown to Gov. Cantu. This letter was prepared in advance and was as follows:

Letter addressed to Washington, D. C., and New York City, respectively.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1918.

Mr. J. S. POOLE.

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: Have just arrived in Los Angeles, after spending a few days at San Antonio to talk over business matters with my friends there.

They have suggested that, in so far as the volume of business that can be done here and in Lower California will be very large, I give them by way of a letter from you in which some guaranty as to my ability and likewise your assuredness of being able to sell them the following goods f. o. b. Lower California, as per listed price and quantity: 10,000,000 30.30 cartridges, at $50 per thousand; 10,000,000 7-mm. cartridges, at $54 per thousand; 3,000 30.30 Winchester rifles (carbine), at $16 each; 10 or more 7-mm. Colts machine guns, at $1,000 each.

Immediately upon receipt of this letter kindly advise me accordingly.

I feel certain that these gentlemen now mean business and that with my cooperation can see no reason why we should not close some satisfactory deal.

I will write you fully concerning the past transactions relative to the goods on hand, and assure you that by not having consummated same it has been a great loss to both you as well as them. Am writing somewhat in haste, wanting this letter to leave to-day, therefore pardon briefness.

Believe me, as ever,

Yours, very truly,

P. M. GODCHAUX.

Cantu told Godchaux he intended to head the largest revolutionary movement Mexico ever had had and that he had gradually been perfecting his plans for the last year along these lines, and through his combination with Manuel Pelaez in the south, Villa in the central of Mexico, and with a complete perfected organization along the border, that when he, Cantu, started his movement within the next three to six months they would sweep everything from the border down on into Mexico.

Cantu then gave Godchaux to understand that he had positive assurances from prominent American friends of his that the United States Government would corporate with him to the extreme limit, and at no time would the United States Secret Service interfere with his revolutionary activities. As an illustration of his power with the United States Government officials he said "Why they have even allowed me many times to secure arms and ammunition out of the United States."

Godchaux then asked Cantu how he expected to get these arms and ammunition into Mexico and Cantu said, "I want the goods in car-load lots, and inasmuch as the United States guards at Calexico are my friends and for me and as the United States is also for me, therefore in car-load lots these goods can be brought into my territory via Calexico and I will then ship them from Mexicala, in bond back to the United States, to Mexican towns across from Eagle Pass, Laredo, Brownsville, and El Paso, Tex., and by the time these goods reach the Mexican towns across from the American towns mentioned our revolutionary leaders will at the same time be prepared to seize these towns."

When it came down to the question of terms and conditions regarding payment of these goods Cantu told Godchaux, that the entire details would be in the hands of Mr. Barera and Mr. Guerrero, and they in turn would handle their negotiations with Godchaux and Calzado. These three parties then assured Godchaux of the fact that they had and could get any amount of money they wanted to purchase these goods.

Prior to Godchaux's introduction to Cantu, Calzado told him he would have to arrange to fix the matter up as far as profit and graft was concerned so Barera and Guerrero could get this.

On October 18 Calzado, Barera, and Godchaux had supper together in a Mexican restaurant, and at that time it was agreed between the three of them that they would stick an extra profit of $5 per 1,000 on the cartridges, and the same price on each rifle and carbine for themselves on all such goods sold to Cantu or his associates, also that Godchaux and Poole were to let Calzado and Barera in on their profits.

After Godchaux's first conference with Cantu, and the other parties mentioned hereinbefore, it was agreed that during the following week they were to return to Calexico to consummate the deal or at least part of same.

On the afternoon of October 18, Godchaux, Calzado, Barera, Guerrero, and another Mexican by the name of Antonio Elosua, of San Diego, Calif., went riding in a seven-passenger automobile driven by the youngest son of Pablo Dato, who is the father-in-law of Gov. Cantu. They drove out to a cotton plantation belonging to the Dato family about 5 miles from Mexicala, in Mexico. This cotton plantation follows a little canal or water ditch close along the international dividing line between California and Mexico. Several points along this ditch or canal was shown to Godchaux as the places where Calzado said he and other friends of Cantu had several times during the last year run over quantities of ammunition for Cantu.

On October 19 Godchaux and Calzado again went to Mexicala, and Calzado told him that it was best for he, Calzado, to have a private talk with Cantu. Godchaux therefore waited for Calzado in the outer office of Cantu's place, and after Calzado came out of Cantu's office they then returned to Calexico. Calzado stated Cantu was very much impressed with Godchaux's proposition and his ability to handle arms and ammunition deals for them.

Calzado, when he first arrived in Calexico, on the morning of October 18, learned that Betancourt had returned in the meanwhile to Los Angeles. He was very much put out about it and was in a deathly hurry to get back to Los Angeles to see Betancourt. Therefore on the night of October 19 Calzado and Godchaux left Calexico at 7.30 p. m. and arrived in Los Angeles at 7.45 a. m. October 20, and registered at the Alexandria Hotel.

On the trip up to Los Angeles on the night of October 19 Calzado was very much elated over their prospects, and said if they stuck together that he and Godchaux could make several hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the revolution by becoming purchasing agents for all of Cantu's arms, ammunition, and other supplies.

Godchaux at that time, as previously mentioned herein, lead Calzado on regarding Cantu, and Calzado said Cantu was a very good fellow, but had very little ability and would never have amounted to a dam if it had not been for his father-in-law, Pablo Dato, and that in reality Pablo Dato was the entire brains behind Cantu. Furthermore, that Dato had planned with him, Calzado, and his other associates, practically all of the revolutionary movements, and that Dato was the man they not only had to fear but to please, and that if any man ever controlled another man Dato certainly had Cantu and everybody around him under his thumb. He also said that he (Calzado) was on very intimate and friendly terms with Pablo Dato, who had a great deal of confidence in his, Calzado's, ability.

Godchaux on this trip to Calexico secured from Calzado and others a great deal of valuable information regarding Cantu, Dato, and others, which is fully covered in my report of November 23, entitled: "Continuation report September 4, 1918, re participation of Col. Estagan Cantu, Mexican governor of Lower California, in Mexican revolutionary activities, and his connection with Pablo Dato, sr., alien enemy and real power and brains behind Cantu."

After Calzado and Godchaux arrived in Los Angeles on the morning of October 20 Calzado up to that moment when Godchaux told him good-bye, and made an engagement to meet him at his office at noon of that day. Calzado could not, so Godchaux states, have been more friendly, intimate, or frank regarding the plans, etc., of the revolutionists.

After Godchaux arrived at his hotel he telephoned Betancourt at Room 523, Hayward Hotel, and made an engagement with Betancourt to meet him at Calzado's office as previously arranged with Calzado for 12.30 p. m. that day. Betancourt asked Godchaux at that time if Calzado was at his office or residence at that moment, and Godchaux said presumably at his residence.

Godchaux therefore at noon on October 20 met Betancourt and Calzado at Calzado's office, 838 Title Insurance Building. Calzado told him he had seen Betancourt at 10.30 a. m. that morning, and that he and Betancourt had a very extensive conversation in regard to the arms and ammunition proposition, likewise in regard to their negotiations with Cantu.

Godchaux then immediately realized that Betancourt had thoroughly impregnated Calzado with the same fear that he (Betancourt) had regarding the fact that the secret-service people were after Betancourt and Godchaux as per information given to Betancourt regarding this matter by Emilio Gonzales who had told Betancourt at Calexico that a secret-service friend of his (Gonzales) had told him that they knew all about the entire Betancourt-Godchaux negotiations and even had seen photographic copies of a great deal of Betancourt's correspondence regarding these matters.

Godchaux could see at that moment that Calzado was a changed man and was exceedingly nervous, and apparently very much frightened over the entire situation and repeatedly walked up and down his office and said, "My God, this is dreadful; it will simply ruin everything we have planned."

Godchaux states that Calzado had a most extreme case of nervousness and fright regarding this matter, and closed up like a clam regarding the entire matter, and said, "We will have to drop this matter for the time being; furthermore, all of us, if we are brought before the authorities, must swear there is absolutely nothing in this matter, and we have never discussed arms and ammunition." Calzado then said, "I am going to deny to the bitter end that I ever went to Calexico."

Godchaux then made an engagement to see Betancourt and Calzado that evening, and later took Calzado and his lover at 8.15 p. m. to the Victor Hugo restaurant. Godchaux at that time for over two hours attempted to ease Calzado's mind in regard to there being any danger, and furthermore told him it was utterly impossible for Emilio Gonzales to have ever received such information as he in turn had passed on to Betancourt regarding the secret-service people being fully aware of their plans.

Godchaux then said to Calzado, "I don't understand this proposition at all. You, Betancourt, Cantu, and all the rest of you have repeatedly told me that the United States Government, likewise its Secret Service people, had assured you of their support, and now you come in and display the greatest fright in regard to them knowing anything of this deal." Calzado said, "You don't understand, Mr. Godchaux, for we were to let the United States Government and authorities know about everything we proposed to do and then secure their permission to do so, but as I have told you before, we would be damn fools to let them know everything, and we never intended to do so; therefore, if they now learn about this deal they will know we have not kept faith with them." He further said if this thing comes out it will land every one of us in jail.

Godchaux states Calzado was so nervous, frightened, and worried over the situation that he could not eat his dinner.

On October 21, at 10 a. m., Godchaux met Calzado and Betancourt at Calzado's office for a definite answer in regard to the entire arms and ammunition proposition. Godchaux states that Calzado at that meeting was as much frightened and nervous about the entire matter as he previously had been, and that Betancourt was in every way altogether different in his actions, talk, and opinions regarding the arms and ammunition matter. Betancourt then said, "Remember, all of us have to stick together and deny forever that any such a deal existed."

Godchaux then fully realized that due to the fright which had been thrown into Betancourt by Emilio Gonzales, at Calxico, regarding the fact that the Secret Service people and the United States knew about the entire matter; that Betancourt therefore had made up his mind to, if possible, sacrifice everybody else and save himself, and that Calzado who in turn had been badly frightened by Betancourt likewise intended to do the same. They also said, we have to take to cover now and drop this deal forever.

Betancourt also at the start of the conversation treated Godchaux in a very cold manner, and seemed to blame him for the entire matter. Godchaux then asked Betancourt, "Where do you suppose I am going to get off regarding this matter with my principals? Furthermore, you have dragged me around the country for about six months on this deal promising this, that, or the other thing and you have never complied with any parts of your proposition, and in addition to that, if you are involved with the authorities, so am I."

Godchaux states his idea in making that remark to Betancourt was to learn positively if Betancourt and Calzado were really sincere in regard to their changed ideas and attitudes regarding their arms and ammunition deal.

Betancourt then said to Godchaux, "It is true I am not complying with my agreements, but after having received that information from Gonzales it looks like jail for me and I am going to save myself irrespective of who else gets saved or not." He then said to Godchaux, "Where are all of the contracts, papers, documents, etc., pertaining to these deals which I have signed and which are in your possession?" Betancourt then also said, "I want all of those papers and contracts back for I would not be able to sleep any more as long as I knew they were out of my hands." Godchaux told him they were in his possession in a safety deposit box at the Alexandria Hotel. Betancourt and Calzado then said, "Let's go over to the hotel and get those papers at once."

Godchaux said, "No; that can't be done, for those papers and documents that belong to my principals, and I am not going to give them back to you until I am so authorized to do so by Mr. Poole." At that moment, when Godchaux refused to surrender these papers, Betancourt, so Godchaux states, had a brain storm, jumped up and yelled out he would get those papers if he had to choke them out of Godchaux, and started over to Godchaux, who then got up out of his chair, backed into a corner and told Betancourt, "You try to put your hand on me and I will kill you."

Godchaux realized that everything was up so far as Betancourt and his associates were concerned, and nothing more could be done with them, so he tells me. He then backed out of Calzado's office and told both Calzado and Betancourt, "Go to hell; if you try to start anything with me I will bump the pair of you off." Betancourt at that moment started toward the door, so Godchaux states, and Godchaux lifted his coat, which allowed Betancourt to see that he had a gun in each hip pocket, and told Betancourt, "You can't bluff me, try jumping on me and you will get hurt."

Godchaux then left the building and late that afternoon Calzado telephoned him, "Say, old man, you are not sore at me, are you, for it's not my fault," and also said that Betancourt was crazy and that he and Betancourt would be willing to give Godchaux $600 for the papers and contracts, and made an engagement to meet Godchaux at his, Calzado's office, at 3.30 that afternoon. Godchaux, however, at my suggestion, did not keep his engagement with Calzado.

On October 22 Calzado telephoned Godchaux at the Alexandria Hotel and at that time told him it was the best thing for everybody to settle the entire matter amicably and for Godchaux not to stay mad at him. Calzado then told Godchaux "we will pay all of the expenses you have had in regard to those negotiations," and asked Godchaux what it amounted to. Godchaux told him about $1,200, and Calzado said, "All right, we will arrange that, and you will turn all of Betancourt's papers over for that amount." Godchaux said only after he had put their proposition up to Mr. Poole.

Godchaux from that time on until he left Los Angeles saw no more of Calzado.

The report of Arthur C. Dennison, of your Los Angeles office, of October 23, 1918, under the heading of "Regarding Fiacro R. Betancourt and E. Calzado, Mexican revolutionary activities," will give you complete details regarding additional information pertaining to Calzado and Betancourt in regard to the further developments of this case.

Your attention is called to pages 6 and 7, 8, 11, and 13 of Mr. Dennison's report in regard to the alibi Calzado was attempting to fix up for himself regarding these matters with Mr. Dennison. Likewise the fact that Calzado, as shown on pages 7 and 8 of Mr. Dennison's report, deliberately lied to him in regard to him, Calzado, having gone to Calexico with Godchaux.

As mentioned hereinbefore, it was Godchaux who obtained through me the permit card for Calzado to cross from Calexico to Mexico. The immigration official, Mr. Ellis, at Calexico, issued the permit card to Calzado after having been introduced to him by Godchaux. This in itself shows how deliberately and consistently he lied in his statements to Mr. Dennison.

Mr. Dennison as mentioned in his above report handled all of the matters mentioned in his reports. At my suggestion dug out a great deal of information from Calzado and Betancourt from suggestive leads I gave him to ask these parties. Mr. Dennison's work in handling this entire matter was skillfully and exceedingly well done, for as his reports show regarding these parties, he was dealing with two of the most skillful liars he probably has ever come in contact with and who at one hour made to him a certain statement or claim and at the same hour the next day would repudiate it or change their previous statement.

This is fully illustrated in Mr. Dennison's report of October 28, entitled "Regarding Fiacro R. Betancourt and E. Calzado, Mexican revolutionary matters." In this report Mr. Dennison states that Betancourt changed his statement of the previous day regarding what Gonzales had told him about the secret service, people, etc.

Mr. Dennison's report of November 2, entitled "Re Fiacro R. Betancourt and E. Calzado, Mexican revolutionary activities," also shows that when he questioned Emilio Gonzales regarding the statement made by Betancourt as to what Gonzales had told him about the secret-service people knowing all about his arms and ammunition deals with Godchaux. That Gonzales flatly denied to Mr. Dennison he had ever mentioned such a matter to Betancourt.

On pages 1 and 11, of Mr. Dennison's report of October 23, Calzado stated that Betancourt had entered into all of these contracts with Godchaux and his principals innocently, not knowing that his act was a violation of the neutrality laws. Your department is in possession of letters written by Betancourt and many of his associates, warning them to be careful in regard to using the mails, due to the fact that many of their letters were being censored, and likewise they were in danger of being caught.

On page 13 of Mr. Dennison's report, of October 23, he fully gave the cause for the ending of the Betancourt-Calzado-Godchaux matters, as follows:

"It is apparent that the turning point in the entire negotiations between Godchaux and Betancourt came about in Calexico when Betancourt was warned by Emilio Gonzales against Godchaux."

Summing up all of the information that I have been able to secure from every available source regarding Calzado, am fully convinced of the fact that he has been and is a go-between for many Mexican revolutionary leaders with Americans who have or want to obtain large profits out of Mexican revolutionary affairs.

He also has, and is using to the extreme limit, the alleged assurances which he claims to have received from Chief Bielaski, and to Godchaux, Mr. Conaty of the immigration service at Los Angeles, and even to Mr. Dennison, used the name of Chief Bielaski just as if they were brothers, and, invariably to all of these parties, with the probable exception of Mr. Dennison, gave them to understand that Chief Bielaski intended to do everything he could at any time for Calzado, all of this, of course, was the usual Mexican lie.

As far as Calzado's general reputation is concerned, even among Mexicans, he is known to be very shrewd, a deliberate liar, and unscrupulous to the core, and yellow as far as his personal nerve is concerned. Mr. Dennison's report of October 23, entitled "Regarding Flacro R. Betancourt and E. Calzado, Mexican revolutionary activities," conclusively proves that he deliberately lied to Mr. Dennison regarding practically all of his statements.

If I may be permitted to suggest, it is important, in my opinion, to have Mr. Keep or Mr. Dennison, of your Los Angeles office, instruct Calzado to call at their office and then emphatically warn him if they ever hear again of him (Calzado) using in any manner the name of Chief Bielaski or of any other United States official, in that event Calzado will be slapped into jail.

I make this suggestion due to the fact that Calzado, from all I can learn, as mentioned hereinbefore, has used Chief Bielaski's name to promote his own business and personal propositions not only with Mexicans but with Americans.

The telegram Chief Bielaski sent to his Los Angeles office in answer to the one mentioned hereinbefore proves that all statements made by Calzado to be the usual Mexican lie. The telegram is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 16, 1918.

KEEP,

Federal Building, Los Angeles, Calif.:

Telegram of yesterday. Calzado called on me several times concerning his plans for revolution against Carranza to be headed by Cantu. Was encouraged to give details of his plans for information of this Government. Understand his reputation among Mexicans not good. Desired me help him secure passage across border. Only telegrams which I have sent him states that he should apply to immigration inspector, and second one advising him not practicable to waive regulations in his case. Secure all possible information concerning his activities, but do not take any action except in emergency without conferring with department.

BIELASKI, Bureau of Investigation.

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re statement made by F. R. Betancourt to agent of your Los Angeles office that Emilio Gonzales had received from a friend in the United States Secret Service full information regarding Betancourt's Mexican revolutionary activities.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 27, 1918.

On October 15, 1918, as mentioned in my report of November 23, 1918, entitled "Continuation confidential report September 23, 1918, re trip of F. R. Betancourt from New Orleans to Los Angeles to make arrangements with Gov. Estaban Cantu, of Lower California, regarding arms and ammunition to be run out of the United States," Betancourt claimed that Emilio Gonzales, in the lobby of the Calexico Hotel, at Calexico, Calif., told him that a secret service friend of his (Gonzales) had warned him to the effect that the secret service people were thoroughly familiar with all of the Betancourt-Godchaux revolutionary activities.

Mr. A. C. Dennison, of your Los Angeles office, in his report of October 24, 1918, entitled "Re Flacro R. Betancourt and E. Calzado Mexican revolutionary activities," stated in that report that Betancourt told him he had met on October 15, in the lobby of the hotel at Calexico, an old friend of his whom he had not seen in 17 years, a Mexican attorney named Emilio Gonzales. I quote from the report of Mr. Dennison, as mentioned hereinbefore, as follows:

"A Mexican attorney named Emilio Gonzales: He stated that Gonzales was an attorney for the large cotton company in the Imperial Valley, the name of which company he could not remember. (This is the Globe Milling Co.) Betancourt stated that Gonzales had asked him if he knew a young Frenchman, who was staying at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles, whose name he could not remember, but which he believed began with "G." Betancourt inquired if he meant Godchaux. Gonzales replied, "Yes; that is the name." Gonzales asked if Betancourt had had any dealings with Godchaux, and Betancourt replied that he just knew him slightly. Gonzales then warned him against Godchaux, stating that he (Gonzales) had a friend in the United States Secret Service, Department of Justice, who had informed him that Godchaux was being trailed by detectives, who followed him from New Orleans, and who were opening and photographing all mail and telegrams which were received by Godchaux. Betancourt claimed that Gonzales did not tell him the name of the man who had given him this information. Betancourt stated that this terrified him so that he was unwilling to take Godchaux to see Col. Cantu, and he returned to Los Angeles, leaving Godchaux at Calexico. Betancourt stated that he did not know how long Godchaux remained in Calexico or what success he had in his attempt to see Col. Cantu or sell him the arms and ammunition which he had in New Orleans."

You will notice in the above statement of Mr. Dennison's report that Betancourt lied to Mr. Dennison when he stated that he had left Godchaux in Calexico; as a matter of fact he requested Godchaux to go to Los Angeles to get Calzado, as is fully covered in my report of November 23, 1918, entitled, "Re Eusevio Calzado, Mexican revolutionary leader at Los Angeles, Calif., which shows his connections with Col. Estaban Cantu and Gen. Poncho Villa." In that report on page 4, paragraph 6, likewise on page 5, paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, you will find full information regarding this matter.

When Mr. Dennison repeated to me what Betancourt had told him regarding Gonzales, as mentioned on page 12 of Mr. Dennison's report, I suggested to Mr. Dennison that he immediately have Betancourt reduce his statement to writing regarding Gonzales, also that he get in touch with Gonzales and force him to divulge the name of his secret-service friend, who had given him the information Betancourt had mentioned.

Mr. Dennison's report of November 7, 1918, entitled "Re Flacro R. Betancourt and E. Calzado, Mexican revolutionary activities," I quote from the above-mentioned report of Mr. Dennison as follows:

"Referring to my report for October 24, in the above-entitled matter, Emilio Gonzales to-day called at this office at my request. I asked him what he knew about a young man named Godchaux, who had recently been at the Alexandria Hotel. He replied that he had met Godchaux in Calexico some time during the week of October 14 in company with an old school friend of his, Betancourt. He said that he had never heard of Godchaux until the morning when he arrived in Calexico and looking over the hotel register he saw Godchaux's name written either just below or just above the name of Betancourt.

"I questioned Gonzales for some time, but could elicit no information other than this. I then told him briefly the story which Betancourt had told of his being warned against Godchaux by Gonzales, as outlined in my reports of October 23 and October 24. Gonzales branded this statement of Betancourt as an absolute falsehood, reiterating the fact that he had never heard of Godchaux until he had seen the name on the register with Betancourt's. He stated that he had heard rumors for some years past of Betancourt's revolutionary activities and upon meeting him in Calexico assumed that he was there in some such connection with Col. Cantu. He said that he had warned Betancourt in a general way that the Government officials were active in their investigation of such matters and that if he were in this part of the country in connection with any Mexican revolutionary plot it behooved him to be very careful. He strongly and specifically denied that part of Betancourt's statement in which it is alleged that Gonzales had said that he had been informed by a friend that the secret service was intercepting mail and telegrams addressed to Godchaux. Gonzales was unable to state the name of the person who had given him information in regard to Betancourt's past activities, but was under the impression that he had perhaps discussed the matter with Jose Trevino, who is attached to the staff of Col. Cantu.

"Gonzales, owing to his connection with the Globe Mills, is anxious, I am sure, to keep in the good graces of this Government, and I do not believe that his friendship for Betancourt would be sufficient cause for his falsifying in order to afford Betancourt protection."

The above report of Mr. Dennison shows that Betancourt or Gonzales, one or both of them, lied regarding this matter.

Betancourt, up to the moment he met Gonzales in the lobby of the hotel at Calexico, was very enthusiastic in regard to the prospects he and Godchaux had regarding the arms and ammunition deal and the big profit they were to make out of it. Also, up to that very moment Betancourt could not have been more friendly, intimate, or frank in his conversation and actions with Godchaux.

As stated in my report of November 23, 1918, regarding Betancourt, from the moment he finished his conversation with Gonzales at Calexico he was altogether a changed man, and was not only badly scared but avoided at all times and in every way Godchaux from that moment on, as has been fully covered in my report of November 23, entitled "Re Esuevio Calzado, Mexican revolutionary leader at Los Angeles, Calif., which shows his connections with Col. Estaban Cantu and Gen. Pancho Villa."

Mr. Dennison's report of October 24, entitled "Re Flacro R. Betancourt, E. Calzado, Mexican revolutionary activities," page 15 of that report, fully gave the cause, as I see and understand it, for the ending of the Betancourt-Calzado-Godchaux matters as follows:

"It is apparent that the turning point in the entire negotiations between Godchaux and Betancourt came about in Calexico when Betancourt was warned by Emilio Gonzales against Godchaux."

Knowing Betancourt and all of his associates as I do, irrespective of the statement made by Gonzales, as is fully covered in Mr. Dennison's report of November 7, mentioned hereinbefore, that he never mentioned any such matter to Betancourt. I am nevertheless convinced of the fact that Betancourt did receive at Calexico the information he claimed Gonzales gave him regarding his Secret Service friend.

On October 15, over a week before the final breakup occurred between Godchaux and Betancourt, Godchaux received the information about what Gonzales had said, then a few days later Betancourt repeats to Mr. Dennison the same information he had given Godchaux. Therefore I see no reason for Betancourt to out of a clear sky have manufactured that story at Calexico. I feel absolutely sure that Gonzales did make the statement to Betancourt at Calexico that Betancourt claims he made.

Gonzales, in his statement to Mr. Dennison, realizing that he was probably up against it, flatly denied every having made any such statement to Betancourt. I believe it was necessary for Gonzales to do so to protect the source of information from his Secret Service friend which he claimed to Betancourt he had secured.

In so much as the information Gonzales gave Betancourt at Calexico was entirely responsible for ruining the inside source of information that your department has had regarding activities of Betancourt and all of his associates through Godchaux, which up to that moment had been of a great deal of value to your department, therefore strongly recommend that this matter be closely watched, and if possible worked out whereby it will be shown how and through whom the leak to Gonzales originated.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Samuel Vasquez, Mexican consul general, San Diego, Calif.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 30, 1918.

When Godchaux was in Calexico, Calif., he was at that time introduced to Vasquez. Later he met Vasquez in Los Angeles through Martin de Leon, who told him that he was a lifelong friend of Vasquez and that Vasquez was for Cantu first, himself second, and for Carranza third.

De Leon, on his personal card, sent the following to Vasquez by Godchaux.

"Ya se lo presentare y tal vez podamos hacer algo con el.

"M. DE L.

"AMIGO SAMUEL: Mi amigo el Sr. Godchaux que esta en este Hotel en el cuarto No. 573 desea con mucho interes un minero del San Diego Union sivece dejarle en la Adsalonon de este Hotel un numero. Gracias el Sr. Godchaux es hombre de negocias."

Vasquez recently established a Mexican monthly magazine at San Diego, which De Leon said was to be published in the interest of Cantu. De Leon also told Godchaux that Vasquez had received from Cantu and his friends financial backing to establish a printing plant and to operate the publication.

De Leon also said that the purpose of the publication was to develop and spread propaganda for Cantu as a candidate for the Presidency of Mexico.

Vasquez is well educated, exceedingly shrewd, and has a strong following among the Mexican population in Lower California and around San Diego and Los Angeles.

As mentioned in my confidential report of November 23, 1918, under the heading "Eusevio Calzado, Mexican revolutionary leader at Los Angeles, Calif.," which shows his connection with Col. Estaban Cantu and Gen. Pancho Villa. Vasquez is the close personal friend of Cantu; likewise is alleged to be his principal purchasing agent.

(Cresse code name for Jones.)

Confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Mexican Government having secured arms and ammunition from United States, likewise now making inquiries for large additional quantities of same and mistake I believe United States Government will make by allowing arms and ammunition to go into Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 15, 1919.

Understand that during the later part of March the Mexican Government exported from El Paso, Tex., into Juarez, Mexico, 5,000 Winchester 30.30 rifles and carbines, likewise several hundred thousands 30.30 cartridges. Mr. J. Krakauer, who is a member of the firm of Krakauer, Zork & Moye's Sucs., wholesale hardware dealers of El Paso, Tex., was in New Orleans on April 7 to 10, and at that time told me his firm had purchased these rifles and carbines from the Winchester Arms Co., of New Haven, Conn., and in turn sold them to the Mexican Government, also the large quantity of 30.30 cartridges the Mexican Government exported to Mexico with these rifles were cartridges the Mexican Government had previously purchased, and in this lot of cartridges were a large quantity which had been taken over by the United States Government when the embargo was put on by this Government.

Mr. Krakauer called to see me when he arrived in New Orleans, in answer to one of the circular letters I had sent out to a large number of wholesale and retail dealers offering various lots of arms and ammunition, and which have been fully covered in my previous reports of March 20, 26, and 29 entitled "Suggestion in regard to securing lists of various military arms and ammunition being offered for sale throughout the United States."

He at that time told me his firm was in the market for all the 30.30 cartridges they could purchase, likewise several thousand 30.30 rifles and carbines. He also told me that these goods which his firm were getting lined up were being secured for the Mexican Government.

From his conversation understood that the Mexican Government either has secured permits from the State Department to export into Mexico large additional quantities of arms and ammunition, or are intending to request such additional permits from the State Department.

IRRESPECTIVE OF CONDITIONS IN NORTHERN MEXICO, AND I BELIEVE INVESTIGATION BY YOUR DEPARTMENT WILL CONCLUSIVELY PROVE MY SURMISE CORRECT, WHICH IS THAT IT IS THE ABSOLUTE CONSENSUS OF OPINION AMONG EVERYBODY IN ALL OF THE VARIOUS BORDER STATES, EXCEPT THOSE WHOSE OPINIONS ARE INFLUENCED BY FINANCIAL PROFITS TO THEMSELVES. THAT IT IS A SERIOUS MISTAKE FOR THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO ALLOW THE MEXICAN GOVERNMENT AT THE PRESENT TIME TO SECURE ANY ARMS AND AMMUNITION FROM THE UNITED STATES.

The Mexican Government claims to need such arms and ammunition to eliminate Villa and other bands. As a matter of fact, Villa and all of his supporters and friends on both sides of the border are very glad to see arms and ammunition coming into Mexico from the United States.

For it enables the Villistas to replenish their own supplies of arms and ammunition; first, by capturing such equipment from the Mexican soldiers, and secondly, inasmuch as rifles, carbines, and cartridges are standard currency in Mexico, therefore the Villistas and other revolutionists have and will continue to secure large quantities of arms and ammunition from the Mexican soldiers by purchasing same from them.

Those who really know how things are worked in Mexico would consider it a safe bet that the Villistas, the Felicista, and other Mexican revolutionists will within the next four months have possession either by capture or purchase at least one-fourth of the last lot of arms and ammunition the State Department has just allowed the Mexican Government to import into Mexico.

I KNOW THE ARMS AND AMMUNITION BUSINESS AND I LIKEWISE KNOW THE MEXICAN SITUATION, AND CONSIDER IT IS MY DUTY TO EMPHATICALLY RECOMMEND THAT UNTIL THE PRESENT MEXICAN GOVERNMENT SHOWS ITS ABILITY TO CONTROL THE MEXICAN SITUATION THAT IT IS A SERIOUS MISTAKE FOR THEM TO HAVE THE RIGHT TO SECURE ARMS AND AMMUNITION FROM THIS COUNTRY. (Cresse code name for Jones.)

Continuation confidential report by Cresse to Department of Justice re Mexican Government having secured arms and ammunition from the United States; likewise, now making inquiries for large additional quantities of same. and mistake, I believe, United States Government will make by allowing arms and ammunition to go into Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 26, 1919.

As mentioned in my report of April 15, 1918, under the above heading, have received information from several of my informants on the border, who are on friendly terms with many of the revolutionists, that all of them are glad to see the United States allow arms and ammunition to go into Mexico, these revolutionists claiming either by purchase from the Mexican soldiers or capture that they will soon be in possession of large quantities of such arms and ammunition, horses and other equipment the United States has allowed the Mexican Government to export from the United States into Mexico.

I understand the Villistas have already captured from Mexican troops between 250 and 300 of the cavalry horses and some of the firearms and ammunition the Mexican Government recently secured from merchants in the United States.

As an illustration of this, ———, one of my informants, who lives at ———, Tex., on April 18 wrote me as follows:

"I notice the Mexican Government secured permission to cross a large amount of guns and ammunition, also 1,000 cavalry horses, at El Paso, Tex., and they have also secured permit to cross a large amount of ammunition at Laredo. In conversation with an officer of the Carranza Army in Chihuahua, he tells me the campaign against Villa has been a failure and in every way a farce, and that Carranza could not get troops in Chihuahua that would be loyal and could be depended on to capture or combat Villa. The crossing of ammunition at this time is very bad, as most of it if not all will fall in the hands of the rebels, either by capture or they will be able to buy it from the Carranza troops. For money, any of the Mexican troops will sell their rifle or any quantity of cartridges at any time. We have a case now where the private coachman of Maj. Velard, commanding officer of Piedras Negras, Mexico, who has been crossing people across the river at night; these people are Syrians and other foreigners, and they generally charge $50 to $100 per head to put them over. You can take Velard, and for money could put over any crooked deal."

Having spent a great deal of time for the last four years in Mexico and on all parts of the border from Brownsville to Los Angeles, likewise probably having more than the usual opportunity to know the inside facts regarding all of the various Mexican revolutionary parties and being able at any time to pass up and down the Mexican side of the river, therefore am absolutely convinced of the fact. AS I HAVE MENTIONED IN MY PREVIOUS REPORTS REGARDING THIS MATTER, THAT IT IS A MOST SERIOUS MISTAKE ON THE PART OF OUR GOVERNMENT TO ALLOW ARMS AND AMMUNITION AT THIS TIME TO BE EXPORTED FROM THE UNITED STATES INTO MEXICO.

Your department is in a position to have this matter checked up by your special agents along the border, all of whom are unusually capable and thoroughly posted regarding Mexican border conditions, and I feel sure such investigation will show it is the consensus of opinion among disinterested business men at all border points, that within from one to four months from 25 to 50 per cent of the large quantity of arms and ammunition shipped from merchants in the United States to the Mexican Government will within the time mentioned be in possession either by capture or purchase of the Villistas or other Mexican revolutionary factions.

Instead of the United States assisting as they believe they are in helping the Mexican Government to put down and kill off the Villistas and other similar bandits and revolutionists, in reality as it appears to me the United States is to some extent in the end unintentionally helping these Mexican bandits and revolutionists to continue their activities by making it possible for them to secure by purchase or capture from the Mexican troops the arms and ammunition necessary for such revolutionists to continue their activities.

— for many years lived in Mexico, and at border points in Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico. He married a Mexican woman and probably has as much experience with Mexicans and knows as much regarding them and their activities as any other white man on the border. His information during the last year and a half has always been valuable, and with the exception of two occasions never found any of his information incorrect. I have in nearly every instance checked up his information and found it absolutely straight.

He is friendly with many of the Mexican officials, likewise with various Mexican revolutionists. Since he went to work for me over a year ago, at my suggestion he has to the best of his ability given Mexican Government officials and revolutionists the impression that as far as he was concerned the United States could go to hell, and in this way has been able to secure considerable information of value.

From the reports of Cresse to the Department of Justice regarding

CARRANZA'S CENTRAL AMERICAN REVOLUTIONARY PLOTS.

[Referred to on p. 5622 of testimony.]

Immediately after Carranza received from the United States de facto recognition as first chief of Mexico he began carrying out his Pan American ideas to become dictator, not only of Mexico, but, as he hoped, of Pan America. He had these plans in mind even at as early a time as he was a revolutionist.

The one paramount idea often reiterated by Carranza and his officials was to nullify the Monroe doctrine by putting in its place Pan-Americanism. He wanted to array Latin America against the United States economically and politically, not to mention his military ambitions. He sought to establish the approximately 100,000,000 people of Pan America and Mexico against America's millions in the marts of trade and on the fields of war.

In public address and through diplomatic channels in South and Central America, Carranza always has been and is active at present in his advocacy of anti-Americanism. In a speech to the Mexican Congress on April 15, 1917, Carranza said:

"There has been developed a vigorous feeling of approximation and fraternity by and between all the Latin-American nations, with whom Mexico is closely related, by reason of origin, ideals, and common interests. These nations and their respective Governments have cooperated with pleasure, and even with enthusiasm to the work, from which the best results for the benefit of all are to be expected. For this reason, this Republic has increased the personnel of its diplomatic corps, as well as the number of its legations.

"It is a pleasure for me to state that the manifestations of consideration and sympathy, which have developed in our relations with our sister Republics have been eloquent and significant, and with an emphatic tendency toward drawing these Republics and Mexico closer together.

"In this connection I take satisfaction in making special mention of the mutual proofs and demonstrations of deep esteem and sincere fraternity which have been mutually exchanged between the people and the Governments of Salvador and Mexico.

"The Government, under my charge, presented to the Government of Salvador a biplane, built at the aviation factory in this capital (Mexico) and a complete wireless installation. Both were delivered by commissions sent to Salvador.

"The Mexican commissioners were received with noticeable courtesy. Decorations were bestowed upon the commissioners by the President of that important Republic, which has conducted itself toward Mexico and its Government in a manner which displayed deep sympathy and high esteem, all of which emphatically call for national gratitude."

The Mexican mission arrived at Acapulco, Salvador, on a Mexican gunboat. The gunboat returned to Mexico and then made another voyage to Salvador with a large contingent of Mexican military officers. They were at once put in charge of training troops of Salvador. Much ammunition also was supplied Salvador by Mexico at this time, together with arms. My reports to the Bureau of Investigation at that time fully covered these activities.

To realize his mad ambition of becoming dictator of Latin America Carranza seized on the cooperation of Salvador and Mexico, which he frankly admitted in his address was a fact, to gain an opening. That Von Eckhardt, the German ambassador to Mexico, financed Carranza's Latin-American dreams, will be shown later by complete documentary evidence which I have put in possession of the New York American.

Carranza, whose principal disciple in his Latin-American ambitions was Louis Cabrera, whose celebrated trip during 1918 through South America was to spread Carranza's doctrine of anti-Americanism and pro-Latin-Americanism, planned to have the Central and South American countries come out openly in favor of Germany. When they found that this could not be accomplished, they then decided to put through their scheme for the League of Neutral Pan American Nations, which was headed by Mexico.

Warned far in advance of these plans, the United States was able to block them successfully.

Nevertheless, it is notable that Salvador during the World War remained neutral and on every occasion coincided with Mexico's most remote dictates and policies. Also, Salvador sided wholeheartedly with Carranza in opposition to the Monroe doctrine. Along this line Carranza declared in his message to the Mexican congress on September 1, 1919:

"As the question of the acceptance of the Monroe doctrine was taken up at the Paris peace conference, the Government of Mexico found it advisable publicly to declare and officially to inform friendly governments that Mexico had not and would not recognize that doctrine, because, without the consent of all the people of America, it established a criterion and a situation about which they had not been consulted. Therefore, that doctrine attacks the independence of Mexico."

Several months ago Salvador made an official request on the United States as to an official definition of the Monroe doctrine. This was a ruse on Carranza's part, using Salvador as a catspaw to gain this definition for his own usage. Already Salvador is dominated by the dictator of Mexico.

In my report of July 19, 1918, to the Bureau of Investigation and headed "Confidential report, re Interview with Ignacio Bonillas, Mexican ambassador to the United States at Washington, and plans suggested as a result of these interviews which may help to offset Germany's strength in Mexico," and based on an interview with the ambassador on July 1, I pointed out:

"I asked Bonillas a point-blank question as to why Mexico had not and would not declare war on Germany. Likewise, as to why President Carranza appeared, so it was said, to interfere constantly in the affairs of other Latin-American countries. Likewise, if it were not a fact that a majority of the army officers of the Mexican Government were in the pay of the German ambassador to Mexico City or of other interests who were friendly to Germany. The ambassador answered:

"It seems to be the policy of the United States to interfere more in the affairs of Mexico and Central American than Mexico does in the affairs of the United States. It is President Carranza's own affair as to where and in what way Mexico extends her power throughout Pan-America."

"He also said that undoubtedly some of the Mexican army officers had taken money from Germany, but, as a whole, he did not believe that the majority of Mexican army officers were in the pay of Germany."

"I then said to the ambassador, 'If my supposition is correct, that the majority of your army officers are in the pay of Germany and President Carranza decided to declare war on Germany, what effect would it have as far as those army officers in the pay of Germany being able to attempt the overthrow of President Carranza?'

"The ambassador said that if such a condition really existed and President Carranza declared war on Germany, provided the majority of the army officers were in the pay of that nation, it would result in the present Mexican Government being overthrown by the army."

At the time of this interview with Ambassador Bonillas I was in the employment of the Mexican foreign office as one of its confidential agents. As a matter of fact, President Carranza had been charged with "feathering his nest" financially with more German money, all of which he is said to have "salted away" carefully in banks outside of Mexico than any other 10 Mexicans.

Carranza's plans to become dictator or leader in all of Pan America through his league of neutral nations having been successfully blocked by efforts of the United States, with the exception of the Government of Salvador, he then attempted, with money provided by Von Eckhardt and which he procured from other German interests, to plot to secure control of all of Central America by surrounding himself with the leading revolutionary chieftains from each of the Central American nations.

This was known as Carranza's Central American revolutionary plot, and the facts for the first time, backed up by documentary evidence, will be shown in this series. Likewise, it will be demonstrated how, through the efforts of the Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice, this entire scheme of Carranza to extend his dictatorship throughout all Central America was broken up.

Through Carranza's representatives in the United States, he approached each of these Central American revolutionists who he knew were at that time political exiles and would be available in fomenting several revolutionary movements. Among these revolutionists were Gen. Maximo Rosales, of Honduras; Pedro Grave de Peralta, of Honduras; Dr. Julian Irias, of Nicaragua, and Gen. Jose Castillo, of Guatemala.

Carranza's principal representatives, who he used to open up negotiations to start simultaneously a revolution in Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Honduras, were Carlos Felix Diaz, Mexican consul general at Belize, British Honduras, and F. R. Villavicencio, consul general of Mexico at New Orleans, La.

The following letter from Villavicencio to Peralta shows that the former instructed the latter to call at Villavicencio's office; the translation of the original, herewith reproduced, and dated April 19, 1916, reads:

"I would thank you to come up to my office at any time that should be convenient to you; telephoning me, however, before you come, so that I may wait here for you, since I have to speak to you about a matter that will interest you."

On March 27, 1916, Carlos Felix Diaz wrote Pedro Grave de Peralta as follows:

"The undersigned is here, and has taken advantage of all the means that are within his reach, working in connection with the revolutionary movement which is springing up in Guatemala. On account of my position, I established relations with some rebels from Honduras who arrived here in a bad fix, and whom I helped out.

"I suppose you are aware of the fact that between the despotic Governments of Guatemala and that of Bertrand (the then President of Honduras), which is of the same sort, there exists strong ties of friendship and defense, and it seems to me that it would be a prudent and logical thing for the two revolutionary parties to do to come also to a common understanding.

"The junta over there, whose worthy secretary you are, should also be represented in the Republic of Mexico and should come to a working agreement with the revolutionaries in Guatemala.

"Tapachula would in my opinion be the right place, once that Cabera (the President of Guatemala) is out of the way. Bertrand then will fall by his own weight. In case that the honorable junta should think the same way, then I would write to Dr. Toledo, the chief of the revolution in Guatemala, and would communicate this plan to him, and, if you find it convenient, then you could communicate it to Gen. Maximo B. Rosales.

"In the meanwhile, you may count on me in any matter that is connected with your movement. There are a good many revolutionaries from Honduras here, but since they have no resources, they are swelling the ranks of the revolutionaries from Guatemala, hoping, of course, they will be able to fall over Bertrand as soon as Estrada Cabera has been disposed of. I am waiting to hear from you, and in the meantime I will keep on writing and do whatever I can to obtain the freedom of Honduras and Guatemala, which no doubt will be of some help."

The above letters, which indicated the launching of the revolutionary plan, were hardly dry until I became actively engaged in investigating the scheme. It may be a source of surprise to the parties to the plan to know now, for the first time, that I, who had "worked in" on the entire scheme as a personal adherent and coconspirator, also almost daily reported their plans and movements to my government and aided in blocking the intrigue. Unknown to the plotters, I had had them under surveillance in their own "camps" shortly after they had set foot on American soil.

Peralta immediately referred the proposition, which he had received from Villavicencio and from Carlos Felix Diaz regarding Mexico's plans to make Rosales revolutionary president of Honduras, to Gen. Rosales. The latter, who for many years has been known as "The Stormy Petrel of Central America," with unlimited political ambition, bit immediately at the bait offered in the way of cooperation by Carranza.

Dated February 22, 1916, Rosales, then in San Francisco, wrote Peralta, in part, as follows:

"You must attend to the Mexican business well, for I have been informed reliably that Carranza, in order to change things in Central America, and for that reason he would like to come to an understanding with the foremost politicians of each country. It is of the utmost importance, and as soon as you have matters fixed up over there, then go to Mexico.

"Be careful that nobody learns of your trip to Mexico. I inclose you a personal letter of recommendation from his (Carranza's) representative here, who at that time was Ramon P. Ienegn."

On March 2, 1916, Rosales wrote Peralta:

"Did you receive my letter of credentials for Gen. Carranza? I hope that Irias has prepared something and that he will take the field, because the political situation in Central America makes me believe that they will not fight the revolutionaries, and that the American Government will not intervene, on account of grave political affairs in their own country. The German situation is very grave, as well as other matters, and they are not ready now to attend to small governments.

"For such reasons, we have to take advantage of these opportunities and see which way we will get the best of the bargain. You may be sure, my friend, that in Central America something is going to happen and that we shall be victorious."

Under date of March 4, 1916, Rosales wrote Peralta, as follows:

"I have become convinced that a great change is going to take place in Central America.

"The Mexican situation is beginning to look serious, and on that depends largely what will happen in Central America. Therefore, immediately make your secret trip to Mexico so that our understanding with Mr. Carranza will be perfected."

On March 11, 1916, Rosales, in a letter to Peralta, states:

"The situation in Mexico is getting more serious every day. He (Carranza) has now decided to shake up Central America. Do not fail to continue our affairs with the Mexican representatives, but without letting anybody know about it, not even Jones (meaning myself) or any of his friends.

"When you go to Mexico keep it quiet, and you may tell Jones that you are going to Washington. I inclose you my personal letter (to Carranza).

"I knew already of the appointment of Refael Lopez Gutierrez. He is an old degenerate and the Government does not gain anything by that. Bertrand keeps him satisfied after having fooled him with the vice presidency.

"I hope that you are right about Nicauragua and that the bomb will explode there. I am sorry they caught the 200 cases of rifles that were shipped to Costa Rica."

Rosales, having become so enthusiastic regarding Carranza's revolutionary plans, outlined fully in the same letter his ideas of how their various armed expeditions could be operated against Honduras and Guatemala. His letter continued:

"The armed expeditions could be easily organized and leave Mexico. Once that we have organized the expeditions there, our expedition from New Orleans can leave immediately, and this boat can be cleared for Mexico and she can land on some point on the Yucatan coast, in conjunction with the expedition that is to leave from Belize, and which is supposed to capture Tela, landing on an obscure spot near Tela (Honduras).

"During the night they can make a surprise attack on Tela, beat off the garrison, organize again and take the townships near La Ceiba, and then make a surprise attack on La Ceiba before people arrive who could defend it, then organize again and take Trujillo. After that has been done form a column under the command of Gen. Isaula and let him march on Yoro and Juticalpa, together with Gen. Teofilo Rosales; after, we can form another column and march on Progreso and San Pedro.

"All this can be done while we land with the other expeditions. The first expedition, under Soriano, can notify the firm of Perdomo Bros., in Belize (the capital of British Honduras in the West Indies), whom you know are our agents there. They can again notify us in Yucatan through prearranged messages, so that we may not suffer any disappointment."

On March 12, 1916, Peralta wrote Rosales from New Orleans, La., as follows:

"Mr. Perdomo came here directly from Belize to have a talk with us, but it looks like he wants to swim without getting wet. He tells me that he is with Carranza now, and that he is going directly to him in order to get money from him, which in turn he will hand over to us and our cause."

(On March 22, 1916, Rosales wrote Peralta from San Francisco:

"The governor of Yucatan (Salvador Alvaredo) is an important person, and he is interested in the affairs of Central America. It would be well to take up the matter of Yucatan in a private way with the counsel, Villavicentio, and you could make a trip there with a letter of recommendation from him.

"I have an offer here for four pieces of artillery, for which I can settle after my triumph with artillerymen and which helps a good deal. From Yucatan, as well as from over there (New Orleans) we can ship these goods as machinery, consigned to Perdomo Bros. for the expedition from Belize, which will be headed by Soriano (one of their dendis in Honduras), and which will be our advance guard from that country.

"Do not fail to make the trip to Yucatan, which is important. And I repeat to you that you must be very reserved about this trip."

Peralta did secure the letter Rosales requested, introducing him to the governor of Yucatan, Gen. Salvador Alvaredo. The English translation of same is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 12, 1916.

MY ESTEEMED AND FINE GENERAL: This letter will be handed to you by Mr. Pedro Grave de Peralta, the legal representative of Gen. Maximo Rosales, chief of the Liberal Party of Honduras, and he goes to our Republic in order to arrange some matters of the highest importance.

I have no doubt that you will assist Mr. Pedro Grave de Peralta in every possible way as soon as you know of his affairs.

Thanking you very much, I remain, as always,

Your good friend and partisan,

F. R. VILLAVICENTIO.

On March 24, 1916, from San Francisco, Rosales wrote Peralta again stating:

"The governor of Yucatan is very much interested to assist a move against the allied governments of Central America, especially those that are protected by the Guatemalan Government.

"I have told you several times the planned combination, with the movement which I have prepared from the south, coming from Nicauragua, and from the east.

"Be careful of the Judas and the spies and remember the mayor of La Celba, who approached you as your friend, and who was undoubtedly sent there to pump you and lay a trap for you."

On April 1, 1916, from San Francisco, Rosales wrote Peralta at New Orleans as follows:

"The pieces of artillery, which I have been offered, are cannons and can be shipped as machinery. Do not forget to take this matter up with Perdomo when he goes back to Mexico, so that he can serve as our agent in Belize.

"Fix up a code with him for ordinary letters, as well as for cable communications. All will go well with sufficient calmness."

From Belize, April 20, 1916, Carlos Felix Diaz wrote Peralta at New Orleans:

"MY DEAR FRIEND AND PARTISAN: I had the pleasure of receiving and carefully reading your favor of the 6th instant. I want to state to you that my initiative was born out of my enthusiasm and my sympathy for the freedom of nations.

"I am convinced that the government of Bertrand is a despotic government, which is based on fraud and brutal force, and that is my reason for helping you openly, but only myself in person am responsible for what I am doing for you. I can not approach the first chief officially in this matter. I have written him and have transcribed your letter under the guise of friendship as well as to other prominent men among the Constitutionallistas.

"Of course, I have done it in such a way that no responsibility can be placed upon them, besides the one that it has occurred to me to write to them. You will see clearly what I intend to say in these lines.

"You can count on the chief of the territory of Quintana Roo (a territory of Mexico close to British Honduras and which is under the military control of the governor of Yucatan, who at that time was Alvaredo), Gen. Carlos A. Vidal, as if he were myself.

"I have gathered some men in Payo Obispo, Maradiagua, Matute, and others. (All of which are towns in Quintana Roo.) It would be too late to receive the arms which you want, even if they should give them to us. I agree with you that Tapachula is not the right point for a junta, with all they possess in Payo Obispo.

"I want to tell you that Gen. Carlos Vidal is a young man of noble ideals, and you can write to him in my name. He tells me to get something definite, which is up to you. The fact is that we can count on Payo Obispo as a place to unload our arms. We can make it appear as if the arms were consigned to Gen. Vidal through my conduct. In this manner you will have a safe point where to ship your war equipment and to form your expedition for the taking of La Seiba, Puerto Cortez, Tela, and other points. (These are towns in Honduras.)

"I am waiting for your answer and for your further disposition, and in the meanwhile I will attend to anything that may help our cause."

The arms were to be shipped from Mexico ostensibly for the use of the Mexican Army forces in Quintana Roo, but in reality, as shown in the above letter from the Mexican counsel, they were to be employed for the several armed expeditions from there against the Central American Republics.

At about this time the Government of Honduras became partially aware of the revolutionary plot, which resulted in them sending to New Orleans for repair the Honduran gunboat Barahona. Rosales in one of his letters from San Francisco to Peralta at New Orleans wrote as follows:

"We have to blow up the steamer Barahona."

Peralta, in answer to Rosales's suggestion in regard to blowing up the Honduran gunboat, wrote the latter:

"What you tell me about the blowing up of the gunboat Barahona would be a fine thing, but very dangerous at the same time for the man who does it, and we would have to give him a goodly something so that he could make his escape and live in peace wherever he may choose to go."

Rosales, in reply to Peralta, corresponded as follows:

"You must fight the enemies with all means at your disposal, as they will do the same thing to you. You must therefore get together with Mr. Jones, and as the first thing blow up the gunboat Barahona. Any nigger or some other fellow will attend to that job for a few dollars; but, of course, you must be careful."

Due to proper authorities having been warned in my confidential reports, the gunboat was carefully watched, and I likewise showed to Peralta the inadvisability of attempting this deed. The scheme was abandoned.

On April 21, 1916, Peralta from New Orleans wrote to F. R. Villavincencio, Mexican consul general there:

"I have shown you several letters from Gen. Maximo B. Rosales, the chief of the Liberal Party of Honduras, ordering me to leave immediately for Mexico and to get in touch there with President Carranza."

Dated April 24, 1916, from No. 3428 Canal Street, New Orleans, Peralta corresponded with Rosales at San Francisco:

"Mr. Villavincencio, the consul of Mexico here, has shown an interest again of seeing me, in order to tell me that it is of the highest importance that either you or I should go to Mexico to come to an understanding with Mr. Carranza. He assures me that our trip would bring sure results, and that I should not hesitate in going there.

"No; I was surprised by another letter from the consul of Belize (British Honduras). And I have no doubt that he is doing so under orders from his Government. He has got for us precisely the place that I wanted in Yucatan, Payo Obispo, on the frontier of the colony from where Manuel Bonilla organized his first expedition."

This refers to an expedition which resulted in a revolution which placed Bonilla in the presidency of Honduras. The letter continued:

"Gen. Vidal, of whom he speaks, is a downright brute, without any fear, and we can send the pieces of artillery that you have there to him. Study this letter well. If he would not have been authorized he would not have talked to us like he did. Who knows what his Government (Mexico) wants? But I will get it out of him. We must not lose any time."

On April 24, 1916, from the same address on Canal Street in New Orleans, Peralta, as secretary general, wrote Carlos Felix Diaz, at Belize, as follows:

"I have read the contents of your letter of the 20th of this month with pleasure. And I have transcribed it to our general in command, Maximo B. Rosales. You will understand how your important cooperation in our affairs is of the greatest value, since you are with us heart and soul.

"I respectfully ask that you come to a definite understanding with the first chief and with Mr. Alvarado, the governor of Yucatan, who would be more convenient, to my thinking. The consul of Mexico here already has written his Government, showing real zeal and energy.

"I deem it necessary to sign a defensive and offensive treaty with Gen. Carranza now through Mr. Alvarado, of Yucatan, by means of your mediation. We appreciate your activity on our behalf very highly, especially what you have done for us in regard to Payo Obispo and our good friend, Gen. Vidal, and we would thank you to keep after him and find out what we could do for the protection of our chief (Rosales) when landing on the coast.

"Anyhow, study well what I have said before, and be satisfied about one thing: It is that a beautiful future awaits you. Consider me your friend and let us fight side by side. It may be that my country is not as large as yours, but we have a lot of room there for friends like you."

On April 25, 1916, from New Orleans, Peralta wrote Gen. Rosales at San Francisco:

"I am writing now to Perdomo Bros. and to the Mexican consul at Belize, so that they will send Punta Gorda, who is now in Belize, to me here. Roman Diaz is free now and we ought to send him to Payo Obispo, and I do not know where he is at the present.

"Whatever you say goes. I believe that Isaula, Soriano, Euceda, Maradiaga, Manutle, and the Mungulas could pull off a first-class invasion that would have a sure and successful result without a shadow of doubt. This, my friend, is not open counting on Elvir, Mauricio Ramirez, Roman Diaz, Gen. Teofilo, Rosales, Gen. Purificacion Zelaya, Col. Ballesteros, Fuentes, Cruz, and others, who are waiting on you; and each of them counts with his bunch of followers; then there are Ceferino Delgado and others whom you have in the south.

"With Isaula and the men that he has picked out, we could take Trujillo, and with the arms which we find there we could outfit our recruits from Trujillo, Guaimorete, Betulla, Balfate, Rio Estevan, Neuva Armenia, and the other nearby townships; these points are between Trujillo and Celba.

"Soriano and the men he takes along could attack Telja and could arm with whatever he finds there. Colfado and the railroad line and this port; it would be easy to unite about 2,000 men between these points and enough silver to make ourselves solid; the flower of the coast would be with us.

"I deem it of the highest importance that one of them should go to see Carranza and Alvarado in Yucatan."

On April 27, 1916, from San Francisco, Gen. Rosales wrote Peralta at New Orleans as follows:

"MY DEAR FRIEND: I have your letter of the 19th instant. Also the letters exchanged with the counsel of Mexico, Villavicentio, and the answer that you have given him has my absolute approval. I have written to the consul in Belize, and I have told him that I have sanctioned your communications and that I hope that all of these actions will have good result.

"It seems, and it is clear to me that they would like to come to an understanding with us. We should take advantage of it. Your clear intelligence, your prudence, and your necessary reserve should do all that can be done to push these matters along.

"We have to be very political and very reserved in whatever we undertake. We will be there and stand back of our compromises. You must not make Jones angry."

I at that time, to procure additional information concerning plans of these parties, had told them that it appeared to me as though they never would be able to carry through their schemes and that I thought they must have been "handling me a bunch of hot air." I appeared as if I were mad and ready to "throw up the job." The letter went on:

"You must appease him in some way, by raising fresh hopes in him. Tell him that I am not asleep. Tell him that I am a fighting man and that a few failures don't bother me. Tell him that I am constant and that I go on ahead until I fulfill my ideals.

"If Consul Villavicentio receives a favorable reply (this was in regard to Peralta having informed Mexico through Villavicentio that Rosales and his associates were willing to enter into the plan of Carranza to overthrow the Central American Governments) then you should make up your mind to go to Mexico.

"Aside from the letters of recommendation that have been offered you, you should ask them for one from the governor of Yucatan, in which manner we can organize an expedition from there. This is the most proper point, and you should take this matter up with the governor of Yucatan in the manner that you think best."

Dated May 6, 1916, Peralta wrote from New Orleans to Gen. Rosales at San Francisco:

"I have seen the consul (Villavicentio) and the admiral again, as well as the former minister of Madero, who is now vice admiral of the Mexican fleet (this party whom Peralta refers to as the admiral was Hilario Rodriguez Malpica) and who desired that we should go to Mexico together. They are certain that our mission will meet with success and that the first chief (Carranza) will give us what we want, and I myself believe that he will."

Peralta wrote from New Orleans on May 8, 1916, to Rosales, at San Francisco:

"I inclose you an official letter from the consul of Mexico in Belize, of which I could not make a copy on account of too much work, but which I shall be able to answer in the next mail.

"We must make him (Carlos Felix Diaz) believe that the war equipment from them is merely a second consideration for our people, and that we have all that we need in the interior of our country.

"Bertrand (then President of Honduras) is getting old and sick; in regard to the handbill he says:

"Look here, friend Vasquez, I did not kill Salamanca; I may have killed somebody else, but I did not kill Salamanca."

"Alvarado Guerrero (a Government official of Honduras) treats Chico Mejia (another official under Bertrand) like a good-for-nothing, and tells him:

"If you did have any honor at all, you would have resigned long ago, because you were dismissed as minister of war so that you could resign, and you have not done so because you have no honor; Membreno (Honduran minister to Washington) took Juan Bustillo from Liverpool, and the people shout for Rosales (Maximo B.); they are up in arms from Puerto Cortez, Choloma San Pedro, La Pimlenta, Sta Barabara, Comayague, Tegucigalpa, on that side, and on the other side is La Cebal, Tela, Trujillo, Opanchito, Yoro, and Copan. Salvador J. Garcia is in Copan.

"Sugusto Coellois is in Tibueo; Ariti is in Puerto Cortez; Cobar is in Yoro; the bandit Williams is in Choluteca; Faustino Calix is in Trujillo; Mejia Juarez is in the Comayagua; El Aplicanos is in Julicalpa, and in Belize there is a colony of Rosalistas, a hundred strong, ready for work.

"I sent $150 to Isaula through Perdomo Bros.; he is likely to come here, but I told him to remain there until he heard from you, and you should write to him through Perdomo Bros. You have everything that you can ask for in Honduras. All it needs is to put the match to the powder and let the whole business blow up in a hurricane."

Peralta at this time was active in completing his plans, as pointed out heretofore, to leave for Mexico City to see Carranza and other prominent officials of the Mexican Government. He secured from F. R. Villavicentio, Mexican consul at New Orleans, a letter of introduction, which follows, translated into English:

[Lic. Jesus Ocuna, Secretario de Estado y del Despacho de Gobierno, Mexico.]

May 12, 1916.

VERY ESTEEMED AND FINE FRIEND: The present letter will be handed to you by Mr. Pedro Grave de Peralta, who is going to that capital in order to arrange a matter of high importance, asking him to assist him kindly in every way possible, I beg to remain always,

Your good friend and partisan.

The understanding between Peralta and the Mexican consul, Villavicentia, was that he, Villavicentio, by one of his confidential couriers, several weeks prior to this time had sent full instructions to President Carranza; Gen. A. Obregon, Mexican minister of war and marine; Gen. Candido Aguilar, Mexican secretary of foreign affairs, and other prominent officials advising them of the fact that Villavicentio's preliminary negotiations with Rosales and Peralta had reached the point where these Central American revolutionists were willing to become the tools of Carranza. Through them Carranza's plans to start his revolutionary movements in Central America, according to the understanding, could be carried out successfully.

The admiral of the Mexican Navy, Hilario Rodriguez Malpica, who was to accompany Peralta on his mission to Mexico, however, changed his plans and left New Orleans for Mexico City several weeks before Peralta started thither. Admiral Malpica was likewise to assure Carranza and his officers that their efforts through Rosales and Peralta and their other associates could be carried out successfully.

On May 17, 1916, Peralta in New Orleans, wrote Gen. Rosales in San Francisco as follows:

"I am leaving on Saturday, the 19th, for Yucatan and Mexico. I am taking along with me letters to Gen. Carranza, Gen. Candido Aguilar, the Mexican minister of foreign affairs; Lic. Louis Acuna, the Mexican Secretary of State; and for the Governor of Yucatan, Gen. Salvador Alvarado."

The letters Peralta tells Rosales he has, were from Villavicentio, the Mexican consul general at New Orleans, and from Carlos Felix Diaz, the Mexican consul general at Belize, British Honduras. It was also a known fact to the United States Government at this time that all plans involved herein, which had been secured by me, had been heartily concurred in by the Mexican ambassador to the United States. The letter continued:

"I would have left with Gen. Melpica, the admiral of the Mexican fleet, but he left by rail through the port that is infested with the adherents of Villa, and I was afraid to fall into their hands with the correspondence I carry.

"Admiral Malpica arrived there all right and is waiting for me now. I have great hopes to do something this month—be it with Carranza or any other devil.

"Dr. Alberto Membreno (at that time Honduran minister to the United States) comes via Panama directly to New York, and a handbill sent by Mr. Wright (Samuel B. Wright, who, as will be shown by correspondence in this series, was on apparently friendly terms with Peralta) to the Department of State (of the United States) which would show Membreno as a friend of Bryan's.

"We must do something that is sure, if you care to eat the fruit that is ripe now. I am going to try my luck now in Yucatan and in Mexico. Wait for my correspondence from Mexico."

Peralta, before leaving New Orleans, also procured letters from strong friends and supporters of President Carranza and his officials who were at that time in this country. Among them was Dr. Tos Garcia Lopez, a personal friend and supporter of Louis Cabera, Carranza's right-hand bower. A translation of this letter reads:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 16, 1916.

LIC. LOUIS CABERA,
Mexico.

MY ESTEEMED AND FINE FRIEND: It gives me great satisfaction to have this opportunity of introducing to you by means of this letter, the bearer, Mr. Pedro Grave de Peralta, the representative in Washington of the Liberal and Constitutional Party of Honduras, who is going on an important mission to our first chief (Carranza) which is also of the most vital importance for the interests of our party.

Your friends and partisans, who are residing at present in this great Republic, respectfully ask in his behalf that you assist him on his mission, and in all that he is going to tell you.

Peralta, on May 19, 1916, slipped out of New Orleans for Havana, Cuba. Just before taking his departure, he told me that one of his relatives was dangerously ill at New York City and that he was leaving for there, he being unaware of the fact that I was thoroughly familiar with all of his plans in regard to his trip which was taking him to Mexico.

He went from New Orleans to Havana and from there Peralta took a steamer to Vera Cruz. Estrada Cabera, President of Guatemala, who is known as the "political fox of Central America," long before this time had become cognizant of Mexico's plans in connection with Rosales, Peralta, Gen. Jose Castillo, Dr. Toledo, Dr. Julian Irias, and others to enter into the Carranza plot to effect the downfall of Cabera's government and other administrations of Central America through revolutionary moves.

Cabera, having the most powerful and extensive spy and secret-service system in Central America, and which extends throughout the United States, was endeavoring to keep close scrutiny on the activities of these Central American revolutionists. The day after Peralta sailed for Havana, a celebrated woman spy of Cabera's force, left from New Orleans direct for Vera Cruz. This woman was known as Sonora Concho. Being familiar with her activities and being acquainted personally with her, I devised a scheme for "working in" a Central American, an assistant of mine and a source of valuable information, on this woman.

She became infatuated with him, as I had hoped she would do, and while partially intoxicated she divulged to him the plan of her trip to Mexico. She said she had been personally ordered by President Cabera to join Peralta and procure all information possible from him for the benefit of Cabera.

Senora Concho made her trip and managed in Vera Cruz to flirt with Peralta in a restaurant. She claimed that he became deeply attached to her, and by careful scheming she obtained from him many of his plans and the full story of his mission. When Peralta returned to Vera Cruz this woman spy procured complete details as to the success of his mission to Carranza and the latter's officials.

The woman then returned to New Orleans, where my spy, professing renewed love for her and plying her with wine, gained the entire story from Senora Concho. In my work I always kept four or five lines laid for information. In case one or two "fell down" I was able to turn to reserve sources to check and countercheck reports.

Peralta, upon his arrival in Mexico City, established elaborate apartments at the Hotel Iturbide, suite 55. From this hostelry, on June 7, 1916, he wrote to Admiral Hilario Rodriguez Malpica. The English translation follows:

MY DEAR GENERAL: I suppose that by now you know what my mission is to the government of Gen. Carranza, when I am counting on your precious and important offer, which you made me in the United States.

I do not doubt that it would help me materially in my work, since you are one of the most prominent members of the constitutionals.

The impressions which I have received up to now are so highly satisfactory that I would like to tell you about them privately, so that you may give me your opinion about this matter. I would thank you, therefore, to let me know which time would suit you best for me to see you, since my stay in Mexico will only be a matter of days, as I have to return to the United States as soon as possible.

I remain, your friend,

In handling all affairs, even the most intimate and personal, the Latin Americans and Mexicans are extraordinarily formal and particular as to etiquette, as is shown by letters which I have turned over to the New York American.

The admiral answered Peralta's letter as follows:

[Secretary of War—Navy Department—Private correspondence.]

MEXICO, June 8, 1916.

DR. PEDRO GRAVE PERALTA,
Hotel Iturbide, 55, City.

DEAR MR. PERALTA: I see by your nice letter of yesterday that you would like to come to see me and tell me about the good impression that you have gained.

Kindly call to-morrow, the 8th instant, at this office of the department of navy, where I shall be waiting for you at 6 p. m.

Your friend,

H. RODRIGUEZ Y MALPICA.

Peralta wrote from Mexico City on June 7, 1916, to Gen. Candido Aguilar, Mexican secretary of foreign relations, translated as follows:

"MY DISTINGUISHED GENERAL: I have just arrived here from the United States on a mission of highest importance for the party of the constitutionals, of which you are such a prominent member, as well as for the general interest of the party which I represent in Mexico and in Washington, and I beg of you very respectfully to grant me kindly an hour or so that I may hand you a letter that I bring with me and also to speak about its contents with you.

"You will pardon me when I ask you to attend to this right away, since I am in a hurry to return to the United States, where our political affairs demand our presence in an urgent manner."

Peralta, on the same date, sent exactly the same letter as quoted above to Lic. Jesus Osuna, minister of government.

From Mexico City, Peralta, in a letter dated June 7, sent a communication to Carranza, the translation of which follows:

MR. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA,

*First chief in charge of the executive power of the Nation,
City, D. F.*

HIGHLY DISTINGUISHED SIR: A mission of vital importance for the Constitutionalists, whose worthy chief you are, as well as for the political party to which I belong and which I represent in Mexico and in Washington, has brought me to this country to comply with the wishes of those whom I represent. I have the honor of soliciting a private interview with you at the time you deem it convenient for your interests, and my return to the United States depends only on this audience with you and the members of the Constitutionalists.

I beg to repeat to you my highest consideration, and I am,

Very respectfully,

PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA.

The above letters, among other things, illustrate the typical Latin-American and Mexican manner of "camouflage." All these elaborate announcements and prayers for audiences were made despite the fact that Peralta, all along, knew that Carranza's representatives in the United States had "cooked everything" and had arranged long before for the interviews.

From Mexico City, on June 8, 1916, Carranza wrote Peralta, in answer to his letter of June 7. The first chief's communication was made on official stationery which bore the Mexican eagle of the Republic of Mexico. Under the eagle is the inscription "First chief of the Constitutionalist Army." The English translation follows:

MR. PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA,

Hotel Itrubide, Apartment 55, City.

ESTEEMED SIR OF MY CONSIDERATION: I have your attentive favor of yesterday, and in reply I beg to state that if you will call to-morrow afternoon at 4.30 at the Palace, I shall give myself to the satisfaction of receiving you.

I am, dear sir, respectfully,

V. CARRANZA.

The above letter was dictated to Carranza's stenographer, "M. C. R."

The English translation of Peralta's letter, dated Mexico City, June 8, 1916, to Mr. Charles Hammocken, Oliver Building, same city, follows:

MY DISTINGUISHED FRIEND: I am very sorry that I could not have the pleasure of seeing you when you called on me, but, as you know, I had some very important interviews to attend to. It is very necessary that we should meet as soon as possible, and I shall phone you to find out the best time for us to have a quiet talk by ourselves.

I remain your friend.

On June 10, 1916, Peralta wrote the following letter from Mexico City to Gen. Alvaro Obregon, Mexican minister of war and marine:

"MY DISTINGUISHED GENERAL: I want to express to you my sincere thanks for the honorable distinction extended to me in preparing the important interview with our worthy Gen. Carranza.

"I have come to the conclusion in consequence thereof that the most prominent members of the Constitutionalists, whose main representative you are, do no longer look with cold indifference at the fact that the Liberal Party of Central America is about to be enslaved, which party should form one great and solid body with the Mexican Constitutionalists.

"Grave and important matters are calling for attention and they are shaping up in a good many ways. As a partisan of the great cause that you stand for, I feel that it is my duty to denounce this matter before you.

"Mr. Ricardo Carrascosa has arrived recently from Chiapas (a Mexican State adjoining Guatemala, Central America) and he is the bringer of some very important news which should not escape your knowledge. This news is a great help to the plans which I have submitted to you and to Gen. Carranza, in case that they will be verified as well as those which I have brought from North America, and which have been supplied by our most prominent leaders.

"It would be well for you to have this Carrascosa to come up to your office."

Carrascosa was a leader of the Carranza party in Chiapas. He is now said to be one of Carranza's military commanders in that State. The letter concludes:

"I want to tell you, distinguished General, that you have made the deepest impression upon me, which I shall communicate among the 800,000 liberals of Central America, and I shall tell them that the bell which shall announce the freedom of the Central American isthmus shall be rung by the orders of generals such as Carranza and Obregon. I deem it the highest honor to be bearer of such good news, and I await impatiently the resolve which will give us either life or death."

Peralta's reference to the "800,000 liberals" of Central America refers to those members of what is known as the Liberal Political Party of the five Central American countries: Costa Rico, Nicaragua, Honduras, Salvador, and Guatemala. Peralta admits in this letter that he, in connection with Gen. Rosales and their other revolutionary associates, is perfectly willing to carry through the plans of Carranza and the first chief officials to extend their dominating power through all of Central America.

On June 13, 1916, Peralta received a letter from Gen. A. Obregon, translated as follows:

[Private correspondence of the Secretary of War and Navy.]

MR. PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA,
Hotel Iturbide 55, City.

MY DEAR FRIEND AND SIR: In answering your attentive letter of the 10th instant, I am glad to express to you my appreciation of your sentiments, expressed therein, and to tell you at the same time that it would be well for Mr. Carrascosa to come to this office in order to let me have the information of which you speak, and which I shall be glad to hear, so that I may make use of it in the best manner possible.

Thanking you again for your kind expressions, and always gladly at your orders, I am,

Your servant,

GEN. A. OBREGON.

Through Carlos Felix Diaz, the Mexican consul at Belize, and through Gen. Carlos Vidal, the Mexican military commander at Payo Obispo, Peralta had arranged with Carrascosa to take active charge of an armed revolutionary expedition out of the Mexican State of Chiapas against Guatemala. This was to be launched at a time when other expeditions were to attack Guatemala at the Atlantic ports of Livingston and Puerto Barrios.

On June 16, 1916, Peralta wrote at Mexico City to Carranza. The English translation follows:

Gen. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA
(Personal).

HIGHLY HONORED SIR: Our distinguished friend, Gen. Gandido Aguilar, as well as the Hon. Mr. Ugarte, have communicated to me your precious and important resolution in favor of the political interests which I have the honor to represent before your distinguished person, interests which I consider firmly identical with those of the constitutionalists of Mexico.

I am bound, sir, to return to the United States in as short a time as possible, taking with me the valuable contingent of our worthy chief, Gen. Carranza, who may count on the unconditional service of the entire army of the liberators of Honduras, so that your Government will grow stronger every day. In a way that will be most convenient and useful for our interests.

Believe me, that it is really very important that I should return without delay, and I am anxious to comply with the orders of Gen. Rosales, who only waits for my arrival in order to start his campaign.

I therefore beg of you respectfully to get me ready by this week, since it is very difficult at the present time to get any steamers that are going north on account of the irregular itinerary. You may be sure that wherever you hear the name of Gen. Maximo B. Rosales mentioned you will have a sincere and true representative of Gen. Venustiano Carranza, and I assure you that I, as a true admirer of your political creed, will be the same as he.

Necessity forces me to ask you for my answer, so that I may be enabled to act immediately.

Attention is called to the fact presented in the above letter that the Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs, Candido Aguilar, and Derzayn Ugarte, Carranza's private secretary, had communicated to Peralta word that Carranza had assured them the first chief had decided in every way, through Peralta, Rosales, and other of their associates, to gain control of the several Central American countries.

I have found that the Mexican mind, as well as that of the Central American official, thirsts for publicity. I often played on this psychological trend to advantage. Peralta had been led to believe, through me, that "we" could control publicity in a large number of newspapers, and with this belief uppermost he boasted to Carranza of the "great publicity power he wielded."

Carranza asked for a demonstration of Peralta's power in the American press. I was not supposed to know where Peralta was, but to call Carranza's turn he was compelled to cable me. This resulted in the following correspondence between Peralta and Candido Aguilar, Mexican Secretary of Foreign Affairs, the English translations of which are as follows:

MEXICO CITY, June 19, 1916.

Gen. CANDIDO AGUILAR
(Confidential).

MY DISTINGUISHED SIR AND FRIEND: I beg of you very respectfully to tell me whether you and the first chief will allow me to send the following cable message to Washington, which letter, translated, reads as follows:

"CHARLES JONES,
"Washington:

"Call on Senators and press associations immediately in order to avoid international difficulties created by political speculators of both countries. The United States and Mexico should remain united in order to repel the European aggression. Public opinion is with Carranza.

"PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA."

Our object is to place at the disposal of Gen. Carranza our lawyers in Washington, since they are persons of political influence in that country. I would appreciate your answer highly, since I am very anxious to send this cable to-day.

I remain your friend.

Aguilar's answer to the above letter was as follows:

MEXICO CITY, June 19, 1916.

Mr. PEDRO GAVE DE PERALTA,
Hotel Iturbide, Room 55, City.

MY DISTINGUISHED SIR AND FRIEND: I take pleasure in replying to your kind letter of this date and beg to state to you that the message which you want to send to Washington is very appropriate. And I would that you let me have the exact translation (Spanish) of same. Of course I shall communicate to the First Chief (Carranza) these noble actions which you have taken for him and in his favor.

Highly appreciating the interest which you are taking in the affairs of this country, I beg to remain as always,

Your servant and friend,

C. AGUILAR.

Peralta then supplied to Gen. Carranza and Obregon at Mexico City the transcription of the message requested by Aguilar, which was as follows:

GENS. CARRANZA Y OBREGON.
Mexico City.

Puedo disponer 200 periodicos aqui y todo el pais, puedo entablar campana favor Carranza y su partido soberbia. Contesteme inmediatamente si trato asunto deseo series util, Estoy Hotel, Harrington.

PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA.

The translation of the above into English is:

I can have 200 newspapers at my disposal here and in the whole country can start a campaign in favor of Carranza and his party that will be first class. Answer immediately whether I shall take advantage of the offer.

The following letter from Peralta to Carranza, written on June 19, 1916, testifies to the bitter hatred of Peralta and his clique for America and his eagerness to join Carranza and all their supporters in each of the Central American countries with their armies and revolutionary groups "at any time Carranza so ordered" to defy the United States. This is openly expressed, despite the fact that Peralta, Rosales, and other plotters had and were enjoying with their families safe refuge in America. The communication reads, translated:

HIGHLY ESTEEMED MR. CARRANZA: Well acquainted as I am with the Machiavellian politics of Estrada Cabrera in Central America, I deem it my duty to warn your distinguished Government against all fakes, traps, or political acts which he employs to surprise the Mexican Government when he now uses his power and makes the Government of Honduras protest against the Yankee intervention in Mexico.

President Cabrera is employing dangerous means in fooling you, and he is hiding the fact that he has made an alliance secretly with Honduras as well as with Salvador to the effect that they must support him for the assistance he renders the two incumbents for their respective reelection.

The Liberal Party, whom I have the honor to represent here and in the United States is ready unconditionally to place their army at the exclusive orders of Gen. Carranza to fight the American colossus or any other enemy of his Government, and it all depends on you for us to prove what we say, especially under the present circumstances. I, in person, as the special representative of that great group, bring you their last word in this matter.

Estrada Cabrera has found out that he can not fool this great Republic any longer, and now he is going to employ politics against you.

Respectfully,

PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA.

Peralta at this time was engaged in creating a profound impression in the minds of Mexican officials regarding his ability to spread propaganda throughout the United States favorable to Mexico. The following letter illustrates this:

HOTEL ITURBIDE, 55.

Mexico City, June 20, 1916.

SUBSECRETARY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,

Palace of Communications, City.

DEAR SIR: You will pardon me for taking up your valuable time with the object in view to have you ask our distinguished Gen. Aguilar whether I could send my cables to Washington free of charge in the respective departments, so that I can stir up the sympathies in favor of this great Republic (Mexico) which is unreservedly at our disposition.

I deem this of highest importance for our patriotic labors, as it will serve at the same time the cause of Latin America. It is understood that I will only make use of this for any messages that concern our actual political moves, but that under no circumstances will I do so for my own personal affairs.

Believe me, Mr. Secretary, a firm friend of your Government, and you may count unreservedly on my humble services whenever they may be of any use to you.

Respectfully,

PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA.

The following letter, written by Peralta in Mexico City on June 23, 1916, to Aguilar, secretary of foreign relations, and marked "confidential," further demonstrates the complete willingness on the part of Peralta, Rosales, and their associates in Central America to place their countries at the disposal of Carranza, provided they could overthrow the existing Central American Governments by revolutions, as planned in the United States by Carranza's representatives:

DISTINGUISHED AND HONORED SIR: Since I have not had the honor of hearing from you up to this present time in regard to my affairs, which brought me to Mexico, and since I have received superior orders to get ready to leave in consequence of the pressure that is getting stronger every day among our partisans and in our country. I beg of you most respectfully to give me an hour, if possible, to-day, so that I can have my last meeting with you and finish the mission for Gen. Carranza which brought me here.

You will understand that my party wants to know whether or not I have been successful in my mission to the fathers of the Mexican liberalism. To lose any further time without getting any practical results would prejudice my cause, precisely since the people of Honduras are anxious to see Maximio B. Rosales, the chief of the Liberal Party, return to his country, and who is waiting for me before he starts on this campaign.

UNDER SUCH PRESSING CIRCUMSTANCES I SIMPLY WILL HAVE TO GIVE UP MY MISSION AND LEAVE RIGHT AWAY, TAKING ALONG WITH ME THE LAST WORD, WHICH WILL DEFINE COMPLETELY IN CENTRAL AMERICA THE ATTITUDE AND OPINION OF GEN. CARRANZA TOWARD THE LIBERAL PARTY, WHICH NO DOUBT WILL AFFECT POLITICS IN SOUTH AMERICA.

IT IS USELESS THAT I SHOULD REPEAT ALL THAT I HAVE SAID; HOW GEN. CARRANZA, FOR POLITICAL AND STRATEGICAL REASONS, NEEDS A BASE IN CENTRAL AMERICA IN ORDER TO DISLodge ANY GOVERNMENT WHO AFFORDS AND GRANTS AN ASYLUM TO HIS ENEMIES, WHO ARE MOVING RAPIDLY AND STRONGLY, AND WHO ARE CREATING THIS DIFFICULT SITUATION IN MEXICO TO-DAY IN ORDER TO CHANGE THE ORDER OF THE ACTUAL STATE OF AFFAIRS.

Neither do I have to repeat the solemn compromise of the Liberal Party in Honduras, whose chief Gen. Rosales is, to consolidate it with the government of Carranza through blood and fire, or anyway that it suits him, and I think that if Gen. Carranza looks upon all these grand propositions and great opportunities with cold indifference, then he should, later on, hold nobody to blame for this.

We came here with an open heart and have offered ourselves unconditionally in order to give more life, stability, to your cause in those regions (Central America).

Furthermore, you must readily see that the political machiavellian monster (meaning Estrado Cabrera) is getting busy against the constitutionalists and is looking for connections with other nations to that effect, but Gen. Carranza is not doing anything at all to cut the same from the bad.

This is precisely the work that we want to take upon our shoulders, and we want to attack this matter as a deadly poison to the Liberal Party.

Delay brings danger, and a step well taken in time is worth that come too late. Believe me, General, to be your sincere friend, who appreciates you.

Peralta's letter to Gen. Aguilar contains a note of anxiety. This is precisely what Carranza aimed at, the latter having coached his officials to "drag Peralta along" and not seem overanxious. The purpose of this was to dissuade Peralta from demanding more money than Carranza and his aides proposed to give him. His letter, however, on the afternoon of the same day brought results in so far as the matter of finances for a Central American movement was concerned, as shown by the following letter:

[Secretary of Foreign Relations, Mexico.]

MEXICO CITY, June 23, 1916.

Mr. PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA,
Hotel Iturbide, City.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to the fact that Lic. Louis Cabrera already has instructions in regard to your affairs, and that you come up here to see him to-morrow at 12 o'clock. I am, sir,

Your servant,

JOSE PEREZ Y CARBONELL.

The following letter from the private secretary to Peralta acknowledges receipt of Peralta's several letters to Carranza, as quoted heretofore, and confirms the fact that Carranza had given the necessary instructions to Louis Cabrera, Mexican minister of finance, and GEN. A. OBREGON, MEXICAN MINISTER OF WAR AND MARINE, REGARDING THE FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR PERALTA, AND ALSO THE ARMS AND AMMUNITION AND OTHER SINEWS OF WAR THAT THE CENTRAL AMERICAN REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS WERE TO RECEIVE FROM MEXICO.

The English translation of the letter, which was written on Carranza's official stationery, bearing the eagle of the Mexican Republic, and dated Mexico City, June 23, 1916, follows:

Mr. PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA.

MY ESTEEMED AND FINE FRIEND: This office has received the letters which you sent to the first chief of the Constitutionalist Army in charge of the executive power of the nation, as well as those which you have written to me, and Mr. Carranza has read them carefully.

You will understand that the delicacy of our present situation has loaded up with work all of our offices, and for that reason I have not been able to answer your letters, although I have continued to look after your matters, which, as you know, have my fullest support.

THE FIRST CHIEF (CARRANZA) ALREADY HAS GIVEN OUT HIS WILLINGNESS IN THE MANNER IN WHICH YOU WILL HAVE TO BE DISPATCHED. (THIS REFERS TO FINANCES, ARMS, AND AMMUNITION FOR THE CENTRAL AMERICAN MOVEMENTS.) AND IT WOULD BE VERY WELL FOR YOU TO COME UP HERE TO-DAY AT 6 O'CLOCK AND TO SEE LOUIS CABRERA, SECRETARY OF FINANCE, SO THAT HE MAY TELL YOU OF THE INSTRUCTIONS WHICH HE HAS ALREADY.

If you would not mind coming up to my office to-morrow at 12 o'clock, I shall be glad to receive you, and we may bring matters to a satisfactory end then. I am, sir, with all consideration and esteem,

Your sincere friend,

GERZAYN UGARTE.

The following letter shows that Gen. Alvaro Obregon, Mexican secretary of war and marine, as well as all other members of Carranza's so-called cabinet at that time, were cooperating fully with the Central American revolutionary movements. These movements originated, as has been pointed out in correspondence, through Carranza's general consuls at New Orleans and at Belize, British Honduras:

"MEXICO CITY, June 27, 1916.

"Gen. ALVARO OBREGON,

"Secretary of War and Navy, National Palace, City.

"MY DISTINGUISHED GENERAL: I am about to leave for the United States, from where I came, bidding farewell to this great and beautiful country (Mexico), where I have been treated so well and kind.

"I have come a true friend of yours, and the impression which I take away with me of you is so great that the press of the country (the United States) where I am going will soon have something to say about you."

"In saying good-bye to you, I again want to express to you that I have become a true and sincere friend of yours from sympathy and admiration, and wherever I MAY BE YOU CAN COMMAND ME AND MY SERVICES UNCONDITIONALLY. I ASKED DR. LOUIS FELIPE OBREGON YESTERDAY TO GO TO SEE YOU IN PERSON IN ORDER TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF SPECIAL RECOMMENDATION FOR ME WELL EXPLAINED [THIS LITERAL TRANSLATION REFERS TO GEN. OBREGON GIVING THE NECESSARY MILITARY ORDER TO THE MEXICAN COMMANDERS TO CO-OPERATE WITH THE CENTRAL AMERICAN REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS] FOR OUR PARTISAN. GEN. CARLOS VIDAL, MILITARY CHIEF OF PAYO OBISPO, IN THE TERRITORY OF QUINTANO ROO, WHERE THERE ARE A GOOD MANY OF OUR FRIENDS WHO ARE GOING TO TAKE ACTIVE PART IN THE DEVELOPMENTS WHICH ARE GOING TO TAKE PLACE SOON IN CENTRAL AMERICA UNDER THE LEADERSHIP OF GEN. MAXIMO B. ROSALES, CHIEF OF THE LIBERAL PARTY IN THAT SECTION OF THE CONTINENT.

"If you will honor me with such a letter, I ask that you kindly send it to-day, to Hotel Iturbide, room 55.

"Respectfully,

"PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA."

One of Carranza's widely known military leaders, Gen. C. Green, wrote to Antonio Hernandez Ferrer from Mexico City on June 27, 1916, to Havana, translated as follows:

"I have the pleasure of introducing to you through this letter my good friend, Pedro Grave de Peralta, a distinguished partisan of ours. He has arranged in a satisfactory manner some highly important matters, which brought him here to our dear Mexico. He is returning home now in order to give an account of his mission, taking with him the highest opinion of all of us, the real revolutionaries.

"I trust that you will treat him as he deserves by placing your unlimited confidence in him. From the many talks that he and I have had about you, he knows you very well; and I hope that the same friendship that has united us will exist between the both of you.

"Without any further news for to-day,

"I am your friend."

Peralta wrote Aguilar on June 27, 1916, a letter marked "confidential" in Mexico City, to wit:

"MY DISTINGUISHED FRIEND: After having been dispatched in such a highly satisfactory manner by the first chief, Mr. Venustiano Carranza, as well as by you, I want to express my sincere thanks to you; and I feel certain that the Liberal Party of Honduras and Gen. Maximo B. Rosales will see in your distinguished personality one of the strongest supporters of our cause.

"I beg of you to express to Gen. Carranza our most sincere appreciation and impress upon his mind that our political group will only act on personal orders from him in the manner which I explained in my last letter.

"I am leaving for the United States, where your Government will have in me a true partisan and defender of the cause, and I beg of you always to consider me a true friend of yours."

Peralta, on June 28 or 29, 1916, left Mexico City for Vera Cruz. On his arrival there, according to Sonora Concho on her return to New Orleans, she having awaited Peralta in Vera Cruz as a spy for Cabrera, the latter, bubbling over with enthusiasm and champagne, poured into Sonora Concho's eager ear the entire story of his negotiations with Carranza and other officials in Mexico City.

Peralta told the woman spy that Carranza had placed at the disposal of Gen. Rosales and the Central American movement $50,000 in gold, likewise arms and ammunition, boats, and other supplies for the several expeditions that were to start out of Mexico territory.

After "pumping" Peralta, Sonora Concho arrived in New Orleans a week in advance of Peralta and received attentions again from the Central American agent in my employ. She also "bubbled over" with enthusiasm and wine and relayed Peralta's story to our spy.

Consequently the United States Government, as covered in my report on this episode, received confirmation of plans which I had submitted long before concerning the proposed Central American movements as plotted by Carranza's own officials under his personal supervision.

Señora Concho's story to our agent was repeated again under peculiar circumstances. To be sure that our agent had obtained a correct narration, we devised that he should pick a quarrel with the woman, leave her, and give way to another spy, this time a Villista revolutionist. Not only did he pay ardent attentions to her, but he went so far as to marry Señora Concho. He did this much to our surprise, as we knew he had one wife already in Mexico.

Through this new husband of Señora Concho, who is now in Habana, we confirmed the woman's statements as told the Central American agent. I learned much other important news during the one week of their stormy honeymoon, and then the woman ran her husband out of the country. She then came to New York and met here a former husband from whom she was divorced, and who, up to this time, had been an active friend and supporter of Gen. Rosales and Peralta.

From her he learned of Peralta's flirtation with his wife in Vera Cruz, and she repeated to him the entire story regarding the plans and combination proposed by Peralta, Rosales, and Carranza. From this man I procured further details confirming the entire affair. Due to his feeling against Peralta, I was also able to procure additional plans.

After Peralta, arriving at Vera Cruz, Mexico, from the Hotel Diligencias Annex, on July 3, 1916, wrote the following letter to Gen. Venustiano Carranza, Mexico City:

"MY DISTINGUISHED GENERAL: I am now about to take a steamer for my point of destination, which you know is being done in order to smooth over the international political storm which has broken out between the United States and Mexico, and this will show you more than all my promises and all that I have told you before I left Mexico City.

"I feel proud that I have been able to foretell all these matters, and I do not doubt that I shall be able to gain your complete confidence in consequence thereof, which I want to do, as your sincere friend and ardent supporter.

"I feel certain that I shall be very useful to you in Washington as well as in New York, precisely at this time, when all your true friends ought to stand by you. I shall keep you posted about everything that I am doing, so that you will be able to appreciate fully our capabilities.

"Our mutual friend, Dr. Guillermo Zalazar, is leaving for Mexico City from the seat of operations in Chiapas and Campeche with some very valuable information for you, which you no doubt will appreciate."

Peralta above refers to organization of revolutionary movements, armed, equipped, and financed by Carranza and Mexico against the Government of Guatemala, in connection with the revolutionary leaders, Dr. Toledo, Gen. Jose Castillo, and other associates. Peralta's letter concludes:

"I also have looked into this information thoroughly, in order to denounce Estrada Cabrera (President of Guatemala), at the Department of State (United States), as a protector of hoodlums who try to alter the public order. I shall also denounce him as a fakir for having spread the news about that there exists a treaty offensive and defensive between him and the United States, which is absolutely false.

"I shall be able to prove this assertion of mine absolutely by means of a certified statement, which I will send you from Washington, and which you may use wherever convenient for your political interests.

"I have nothing further to say in addition to what I have told you already and what I have written to you, but I would feel honored by your further instructions and dispositions for the week that I shall remain here.

"Believe me to be, your most sincere friend."

Peralta, before leaving Mexico City, has made arrangements with various Mexican Government officials to have the arms and ammunition for the Central American revolutionary expeditions shipped from Vera Cruz, Mexico, into Yucatan, Quintana Roo and Campeche, also that a certain number of Mexican officers and soldiers were to be supplied by the Mexican Government to participate in the various expeditions.

The following letter shows that a party connected with the Mexican Government was to inspect the arms and ammunition supplied by Mexico for Peralta. The English translation follows:

HOTEL DILITENCIA ANNEX,
VERA CRUZ, MEXICO, July 5, 1916.

MR. ROBERTO DE LA ROSA,
Mexico, D. F.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Kindly do me the favor to go at receipt of this letter to all the persons that you have ready for the expeditions [referring to the revolutionary movements in Central America] which we have talked about and tell them to get ready without any further delay.

I also ask you to inspect the rifles and ammunition carefully and in person so that no ulterior difficulties may arise later on. Please also attend to what I have to say at the foot of this letter and let me know of everything that you have done so that I may take the matter up with our distinguished friend (Gen. Rosales) whom you know already, in conformity with what you think will be convenient.

I shall remain here six days longer and trust that in the meanwhile I shall hear from you with favorable reply, as the time slips away and the matter is pressing.

I am, your friend,

PEDRO GRAVE DE PERALTA.

Particular attention is called to the following letter, in which is shown that Peralta's visit to Mexico and his conferences with Carranza at the National Palace and with other of Carranza's leading officials had been as successful as the Mexican generals at New Orleans and at Belize, British Honduras, had assured Peralta they would be. The English translation of this missive is as follows:

VERA CRUZ, MEX., July 5, 1916.

Sr. Gen. CARLOS VIDAL.
Quintana Roo, Confidential.

MY DISTINGUISHED SIR AND FRIEND: Aside from the valuable matters submitted by you to Consul Carlos Felix Diaz, for the purpose which you understand I now have the greatest honor or communicating to you and that my mission to the National Palace of Mexico has been fully successful and that I shall sail shortly to your territory with a group of patriots and also will bring you a letter from the minister of war (Gen. A. Obregon).

You must know that myself as well as our distinguished chief, Gen. Maximo B. Rosales, the head of the Liberal Party of Honduras, wants to express to you our most sincere thanks for your important work in favor of our cause. I would appreciate it very much if you would wire our friend, Carlos Felix Diaz, in code, and let him know of our political triumph in Mexico, so that he may, in an indirect manner, instill fresh hopes in the hearts of our friends who are now in the British Colony.

